It is a general rule not to convict unless the corpus delicti can be established, that is, until the fact that the crime has been actually perpetrated has been first proved. Hence, on a charge of homicide, the accused should not be convicted unless the death be first distinctly proved, either by direct evidence of the fact or by inspection of the body; Best, Pres. § 201; 1 Stark. Ev. 575. See 6 C. & P. 176; 2 Hale, P. C. 290; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 324. Instances have occurred of a person being convicted of having killed another, who, after the supposed criminal has been put to death for the supposed offence, has made his appearance alive. The wisdom of the rule is apparent; but it has been questioned whether, in extreme cases, it may not be competent to prove the basis of the corpus delicti by presumptive evidence; 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 234; Wills, Cir. Ev. 105; Best, Pres. § 204; 3 Greenl. Ev. 30. In cases of felonious homicide, the corpus delicti consists of two fundamental and necessary facts: first, the death; and secondly, the existence of criminal agency as its cause; Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 472. A like analysis would apply in the case of any other crime. When the body of a murdered man was mutilated and burned beyond recognition, testimony that a piece of charred cloth found in the ashes with the body were like the trousers that a certain man wore, and that a slate pencil found there was identical with one he carried about him, was competent evidence to establish the identity of the body; State v. Martin, 47 S. C. 67, 25 S. E. 113.

The presumption arising from the possession of the fruits of crime recently after its commission, which in all cases is one of fact rather than of law, is occasionally so strong as to render unnecessary any direct proof of the corpus delicti. Thus, to borrow an illustration from Mr. Justice Maule, if a man were to go into the London docks quite sober, and shortly afterwards were to be found very drunk, staggering out of one of the cellars, in which above a million gallons of wine are stowed, "I think," says the learned judge, "that this would be reasonable evidence that the man had stolen some of the wine in the cellar, though no proof were given that any particular vat had been broached and that any wine had actually been missed." Dears, 284; 1 Tayl. Ev. § 122. In this case it was proved that a prisoner indicted for larceny was seen coming out of the lower room of a warehouse in the London docks, in the floor above which a large quantity of pepper was deposited, and where he had no business to be. He was stopped by a constable, who suspected him from the bulky state of his pockets, and said, "I think there is something wrong about you;" upon which the prisoner said, "I hope you will not be hard upon me;" and then threw a quantity of pepper out of his pocket on the ground. The witness stated that he could not say whether any pepper had been stolen, nor that any pepper had been missed; but that which was found upon the prisoner was of like description with the pepper in the warehouse. It was held by all the judges that the prisoner, upon these facts, was properly convicted of larceny.

The corpus delicti in arson consists in proof of the burning and of criminal agency in causing it; Spears v. State, 92 Miss. 613, 46 South. 166, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 285.

A confession alone ought not to be considered sufficient proof of the corpus delicti; Springfellow v. State, 26 Miss. 157, 59 Am. Dec. 247; People v. Hennessey, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 147; Bines v. State, 118 Ga. 320, 45 S. E. 376, 68 L. R. A. 33. It may be proved by circumstantial evidence; Dimmick v. U. S., 135 Fed. 257, 70 C. C. A. 141; State v. Gillis, 73 S. C. 318, 53 S. E. 487, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 571, 114 Am. St. Rep. 93, 6 Ann. Cas. 993.

CORPUS JURIS CANONICI (Lat. the body of the canon law). The name given to the collections of the decrees and canons of the Roman church. See CANON LAW.

CORPUS JURIS CIVILIS. The body of the civil law. The collection comprising the Institutes, the Pandects or Digest, the Code, and the Novels of Justinian. See those several titles, and also CIVIL LAW for fuller information. The name is said to have been first applied to this collection early in the seventeenth century. See BASILICA; CANON LAW.

CORRECTION. Chastisement, by one having authority, of a person who has committed some offence, for the purpose of bringing him into legal subjection.

It is chiefly exercised in a parental manner by parents, or those who are placed in loco parentis. A parent may therefore justify the correction of the child either corporally or by confinement; and a school-master may justify similar correction; but the correction in both cases must be moderate and in a proper manner; Com. Dig. Plead-er, (3 M.) 19; Hawk. c. 60, s. 23, c. 62, s. 2, c. 29, s. 5; Johnson v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 253, 36 Am. Dec. 322; State v. Pendergrass, 19 N. C. 365, 31 Am. Dec. 416; Cook v. Neely, 143 Mo. App. 632, 128 S. W. 233. See ASSAULT; WHIPPING.

The master of an apprentice, for disobedience, may correct him moderately; 1 B. & C. 469; Cro. Car. 179; Mitchell v. Armitage, 10 Mart. O. S. (La.) 38; but he cannot delegate the authority to another. A master has no right to correct his servants who are not apprentices; Matthews v. Terry, 10 Conn. 455; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 97; see ASSAULT for cases of undue correction. A master may be found guilty of murder for whipping a servant so that he dies, although he has a right to inflict the punishment, and the instrument is proper, if the punishment is so prolonged and barbarous as to indicate malice; State v. Shaw, 64 S. C. 566, 43 S. E. 14, 60 L. R. A. 801, 92 Am. St. Rep. 817.

Soldiers were formerly liable to moderate correction from their superiors. For the sake of maintaining discipline in the navy, the captain of a vessel, belonging either to the United States or to private individuals, might formerly inflict moderate correction on a sailor for disobedience or disorderly conduct; Ab. Sh. 160; Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Sampson v. Smith, 15 Mass. 365; Flemming v. Ball, 1 Bay (S. C.) 3; Aertsen v. Aurora, Bee 161, Fed. Cas. No. 95; Thorne v. White, 1 Pet. Adm. 168, Fed. Cas. No. 13,989; Moll. 209; Turner's Case, 1 Ware 83, Fed. Cas. No. 14,248. Such has been the general rule. But flogging and other degrading punishments are now forbidden in the army, navy, merchant service, and military prisons; R. S. §§ 1342, 1624, 4611, 1354.

The husband, by the old law, might give his wife moderate correction; 1 Hawk. P. C. 2. But in later times this power of correction began to be doubted; and a wife may now have security of the peace against her husband, or a husband against his wife; 1 Bla. Com. 444; Stra. 478, 875, 1207; 2 Lev. 128. See MARRIED WOMEN.

Any excess of correction by the parent, master, officer, or captain rendered the party guilty of an assault and battery and liable to all its consequences; Com. v. Randall, 4 Gray (Mass.) 36. See ASSAULT. In some prisons, the keepers are permitted to correct the prisoners.

The King's Council, in the minority of Henry VI. authorized a subject to chastise the king "when he trespasseth or doth amys." 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 356.

CORREGIDOR. In Spanish Law. A magistrate who took cognizance of various misdemeanors, and of civil matters. 2 White, New Rec. 53.

CORREI. In Civil Law. Two or more bound or secured by the same obligation.

Correi credendi. Creditors secured by the same obligation.

Correi debendi. Two or more persons bound as principal debtors to pay or perform. Ersk. Inst. 3. 3. 74; Calvinus, Lex.; Bell, Dict.

CORRUPT AND ILLEGAL PRACTICES. A British act of 1883 and supplements forbid certain acts in connection with Parliamentary elections, chiefly bribery, treating, undue influence and personation. Such acts are made criminal offences and may be ground for the loss of the seat if brought home to the candidate personally or through his agent. If by bribery, etc., it appears that the electorate did not really express its will, the election may be declared void. Certain practices are declared illegal, such as payment for the conveyance of electors to or from the polls, paying an elector for the use of his property, paying agents other than those specified in the act, and making a false statement as to the personal character or conduct of a candidate. In certain cases the penalty to the candidate may be disqualification forever from serving for the constituency in question, and, for seven years, from serving for any other constituency. 2 Steph. Com. (15th ed.) 463, 476.

This subject has more recently attracted much attention in the United States, and acts are being passed on the subject, but it cannot be said that the ground is fully covered. Among such acts are those requiring candidates to file, immediately after election, a statement of expenses incurred.

In some states, the state treasury assumes certain nomination expenses. See State Assumption of Expenses, 23 Yale L. Journ. 158, by Simeon E. Baldwin.

CORRUPTION. An act done with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others.

It includes bribery, but is more comprehensive; because an act may be corruptly done though the advantage to be derived from it be not offered by another. Merlin, Rép.

Something against law: as, a contract by which the borrower agreed to pay the lender usurious interest. It is said, in such case, that it was corruptly agreed, etc.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD. The incapacity to inherit, or pass an inheritance, in consequence of an attainder to which the party has been subject. Abolished by stats. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23; 1 Steph. Com. 446.

When this consequence flows from an attainder, the party is stripped of all honors and dignities he possessed, and becomes ignoble.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, n. 2, declares that "no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted."

The act of Congress of July 17, 1862, for the seizure and condemnation of enemies' estates, with the resolution of the same date, does not conflict with this section, the forfeiture being only during the life of the offender; Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 339, 19 L. Ed. 696; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 268, 20 L. Ed. 135; Day v. Micou, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 156, 21 L. Ed. 860; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 163, 21 L. Ed. 872; Wallach v. Van Kiskwick, 92 U. S. 202, 23 L. Ed. 473.

So far as it prevented descent being traced through a felon, the doctrine of corruption of blood was abolished in England in 1834; the whole law of escheat for felony, together with the king's year, day and waste, was abolished in 1870.

CORSE-PRESENT. In Old English Law. A gift of the second best beast belonging to a man at his death taken along with the corpse and presented to the priest. Stat. 21 Hen. VIII. cap. 6; Cowell; 2 Bla. Com. 425.

CORSNED. In Old English Law. A piece of barley bread, which, after the pronouncement of certain imprecations, a person accused of crime was compelled to swallow.

A piece of cheese or bread of about an ounce weight was consecrated with an exorcism desiring of the Almighty that it might cause convulsions and paleness, and find no passage, if the man was really guilty, but might turn to health and nourishment if he was innocent. Spelman, Gloss. 439. It was then given to the suspected person, who at the same time received the sacrament. If he swallowed it easily, he was esteemed innocent; if it choked him, he was esteemed guilty. See 4 Bla. Com. 345.

CORTES. The name of the legislative assemblies of Spain and Portugal.

CORVEE. In French Law. Gratuitous labor exacted from the villages or communities, especially for repairing roads, constructing bridges, fortifications, etc.

Corvée seigneuriale are services due the lord of the manor. Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 3 Low. C. 1.

COSBERING. In Feudal Law. A prerogative or seigniorial right of a lord, as to lie and feast himself and his followers at his tenants' houses. Cowell.

COSENING. In Old English Law. An offence whereby anything is done deceitfully, whether in or out of contracts, which cannot be fitly termed by any especial name. Called in the civil law Stellionatus. West. Symb. pt. 2, Indictment, § 68; Blount; 4 Bla. Com. 158.

COSINAGE (spelled, also, Cousinage, Cosnage). A writ to recover possession of an estate in lands when a stranger has entered and abated after the death of the grandfather's grandfather or of certain collateral relations. 3 Bla. Com. *186.

Relationship; affinity. Stat. 4 Hen. III. cap. 8; 3 Bla. Com. 186; Co. Litt. 160 a.

COST. The cost of an article purchased for exportation is the price paid, with all incidental charges paid at the place of exportation. Goodwin v. U. S., 2 Wash. C. C. 493, Fed. Cas. No. 5,554. Cost price is that actually paid for goods. Buck v. Burk, 18 N. Y. 337. See ACTUAL COST.

COST-BOOK. In English Law. A book in which a number of adventurers who have obtained permission to work a lode and have agreed to share the enterprise in certain proportions, enter the agreement and from time to time the receipts and expenditures of the mine, the names of the shareholders, their respective accounts with the mine, and transfers of shares. These associations are called "Cost-book mining companies," and are governed by the general law of partnership. Lindl. Partn. *147.

COSTS. The expenses incurred by the parties in the prosecution or defence of a suit.

They are distinguished from fees in being an allowance to a party for expenses incurred in conducting his suit; whereas fees are a compensation to an officer for services rendered in the progress of the cause. Musser v. Good, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 248.

No costs were recoverable by either plaintiff or defendant at common law. They were first given to plaintiff by the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I. c. 1, which has been substantially adopted in all the United States.

The ultimate power to impose costs must be found in a statute. This may be granted by the legislature in general terms to the courts who may then establish a fee bill. This grant has been made by congress; Jordan v. Woollen Co., 3 Cliff. 239; Fed. Cas. No. 7,516. This was before the Revised Statutes but the fee bill of 1853 which was then under consideration by that court does not differ in any important respect from the appropriate sections of the Revised Statutes; Tesla Electric Co. v. Scott, 101 Fed. 524. The cases are collected in Kelly v. Ry. Co., 83 Fed. 183, and the various statutes are cited in Hathaway v. Roach, Fed. Cas. No. 6,213; Costs in Civil Cases, Fed. Cas. No. 18,284; The Baltimore, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 388, 19 L. Ed. 463.

Statutes which give costs are not to be extended beyond the letter, but are to be construed strictly; 2 Stra. 1006, 1069; 3 Burr. 1287; Com. v. Tilghman, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 129; Farry v. Thomson, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 4.

Bouv.—44

They do not extend to the government; and therefore when the United States, or one of the several states, is a party they neither pay nor receive costs, unless it be so expressly provided by statute; Irwin v. Commissioners of Northumberland County, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 505; U. S. v. Barker, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 395, 4 L. Ed. 271; U. S. v. Boyd, 5 How. (U. S.) 29, 12 L. Ed. 36; Collier v. Powell, 23 Ala. 579; State v. Kinne, 41 N. H. 238; State v. Harrington, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 44; and in actions of a public nature, conducted solely for the public benefit, costs are rarely given against public officers; Casady v. Trustees of Schools, 94 Ill. 589; Clare County v. Auditor General, 41 Mich. 182, 1 N. W. 926; Avery v. Slack, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 50. This exemption is founded on the sovereign character of the state, which is subject to no process; 3 Bla. Com. 400; McKeehan v. Com., 3 Pa. 153. But in Missouri v. Illinois, 202 U. S. 508, 26 Sup. Ct. 713, 50 L. Ed. 1160, it was said: "So far as the dignity of the state is concerned, that is its own affair. The United States has not been above taking costs." U. S. v. Sanborn, 135 U. S. 271, 10 Sup. Ct. 812, 34 L. Ed. 112. Rule 24 of the Supreme Court of the United States provides that no costs shall be allowed to or against the United States in equity. The king neither receives nor pays costs; (1785) T. R. 86.

The right of the state to costs on conviction in criminal cases is generally declared by statute.

In many cases, the right to recover costs is made to depend, by statute, upon the amount of the verdict or judgment. Where there is such a provision, and the verdict is for less than the amount required by statute to entitle the party to costs, the right to costs, in general, will depend upon the mode in which the verdict has been reduced below the sum specified in the act. In such cases, the general rule is that if the amount be reduced by evidence of direct payment, the party shall lose his costs; but if by set-off or other collateral defence he will be entitled to recover them; 8 East 28, 347; 2 Price 19; 4 Bingh. 169; Cooper v. Coats, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 308, 1 L. Ed. 150; Bunner v. Neil, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 457, 1 L. Ed. 222; Stewart v. Mitchell's Adm'rs, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 287.

When a case is dismissed for want of jurisdiction over the person, no costs are allowed to the defendant unless expressly given by statute. The difficulty in giving costs, in such case, is the want of power. If the case be not legally before the court, it has no more jurisdiction to award costs than it has to grant relief; Burnham v. Rangeley, 2 W. & M. 417, Fed. Cas. No. 2,177; Bank of Cumberland v. Willis, 3 Sumn. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 885; Clark v. Rockwell, 15 Mass. 221; Banks v. Fowler, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 332; Eames v. Carlisle, 3 N. H. 130; Paine v. Commissioners, Wright (Ohio) 417.

In equity, the giving of costs is entirely discretionary, as well with respect to the period at which the court decides upon them as with respect to the parties to whom they are given.

In the exercise of their discretion, courts of equity are generally governed by certain fixed principles which they have adopted on the subject of costs. It was the rule of the civil law that victus victori in expensis condemnatus est; and this is the general rule adopted in courts of equity as well as in courts of law, at least to the extent of throwing it upon the failing party to show the existence of circumstances to displace the prima facie claim to costs given by success to the party who prevails; 3 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1515.

In patent cases in equity costs will not be allowed a plaintiff where some of the claims are withdrawn at the argument and some adjudged invalid, though others are sustained; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. R. Co., 71 Fed. 886.

An executor or administrator suing at law or in equity in his representative capacity is not personally liable to the opposite party for costs in case he is unsuccessful, if the litigation were carried on in good faith for the benefit of the estate; Gratz v. Bayard, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 47; Callender's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 23 Pa. 471. But the rule is otherwise where vexatious litigation is caused by the executor or administrator, and where he has been guilty of fraud or misconduct in relation to the suit; 1 Wms. Exec. 451; Show v. Conway, 7 Pa. 136, 137.

Costs, when recovered, belong to the client; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Chandler, 27 Fed. 12.

In divorce, the wife's costs can be taxed de die in diem; Graves v. Cole, 19 Pa. 171, citing 2 Hagg. Cons. 204.

Ordinarily an appeal does not lie from a decree for costs only in a chancery suit; but there are exceptions to the rule, turning on the question of the discretionary power of the trial court respecting costs. A decree for such costs as are discretionary is not appealable, but one for costs not in the discretion of the court is appealable if the amount is sufficient to confer jurisdiction; Nutter v. Brown, 58 W. Va. 237, 52 S. E. 88, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083, 6 Ann. Cas. 94.

See DOUBLE COSTS; TREBLE COSTS; SURETY COMPANY; ACTUAL.

COSTS OF THE DAY. Costs incurred in preparing for trial on a particular day. Ad. Eq. 343.

In English practice, costs are ordered to be paid by a plaintiff, who neglects to go to trial according to notice; Mozley & W. Law Dict.; Lush, Pr. 496.

COSTS DE INCREMENTO (Increased costs, costs of increase). Costs adjudged by the court in addition to those assessed by the jury. Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. (U. S.) 372, 14 L. Ed. 181.

The cost of the suit, etc., recovered originally under the statute of Gloucester is said to be the origin of costs de incremento; Bull. N. P. 323 a. Where the statute requires costs to be doubled in case of an unsuccessful appeal, costs de incremento stand on the same footing as jury costs; 2 Stra. 1048; TAXED COSTS. Costs were enrolled in England in the time of Blackstone as increase of damages; 3 Bla. Com. 399.

COTERELLUS. A cottager.

Coterellus was distinguished from cotarius in this, that the cotarius held by socage tenure, but the coterellus held in mere villenage, and his person, issue, and goods were held at the will of the lord. Cowell.

COTLAND. Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage. Cowell; Blount.

COTSETUS. A cottager or cottageholder who held by servile tenure and was bound to do the work of the lord. Cowell.

COTTAGE, COTTAGIUM. In Old English Law. A small house without any land belonging to it, whereof mention is made in stat. 4 Edw. I.

But, by stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 7, no man may build such cottage for habitation unless he lay unto it four acres of freehold land, except in market-towns, cities, or within a mile of the sea, or for the habitation of laborers in mines, shepherds, foresters, sailors, etc. Twenty years' possession of cottage gives good title as against the lord; Bull. N. P. 103 a, 104. By a grant of a cottage the curtilage will pass; 4 Vin. Abr. 582.

COTTIER TENANCY. A species of tenancy in Ireland, constituted by an agreement in writing, and subject to the following terms: That the tenement consist of a dwelling-house with not more than half an acre of land; at a rental not exceeding 5*l.* a year; the tenancy to be for not more than a month at a time; the landlord to keep the house in good repair. Landlord and Tenant Act (Ireland), 23 & 24 Vict. c. 154, s. 81.

COUCHANT. Lying down. Animals are said to have been levant and couchant when they have been upon another person's land, damage feasant, one night at least. 3 Bla. Com. 9.

COULISSE. The stock brokers' curb market in Paris.

COUNCIL (Lat. concilium, an assembly). The legislative body in the government of cities or boroughs. An advisory body selected to aid the executive. See Opinion of the Justices, 14 Mass. 470; Opinion of the Justices, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 517; In re Adams, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 25.

A governor's council is still retained in some of the states; 70 Me. 570. It is analogous in many respects to the privy council (q. v.), of the king of Great Britain and of the governors of the British colonies, though of a much more limited range of duties.

Common council is a term frequently applied to the more numerous branch of the legislative bodies in cities.

The British parliament is the common council of the whole realm.

COUNCIL OF THE BAR. A body composed of members of the English bar which governs the bar. It hears complaints against barristers and reports its findings with recommendations to the benchers of the Inn of Court of which the barrister is a member, who alone can act. Leaming, Phila. Lawy. in Lond. Courts 67.

COUNCIL OF LEGAL EDUCATION. See LEGAL EDUCATION.

COUNSEL. The counsellors who are associated in the management of a particular cause, or who act as legal advisers in reference to any matter requiring legal knowledge and judgment.

The term is used both as a singular and plural noun, to denote one or more. It is usual to say of one concerned in a case that he is "of counsel."

Originally there was no distinction between council and counsel; both were consilium. libert, Legisl. Meth. 5.

Knowledge. A grand jury is sworn to keep secret "the commonwealth's counsel, their fellows', and their own."

COUNSELLOR AT LAW. An officer in the supreme court of the United States, and in some other courts, who is retained by a party in a cause to conduct the same on its trial on his behalf.

He differs from an attorney at law.

In the supreme court of the United States, the two degrees of attorney and counsel were at first kept separate, and no person was permitted to practise in both capacities, but the present practice is otherwise; Weeks, Att. 54. It is the duty of the counsel to draft or review and correct the special pleadings, to manage the cause on trial, and, during the whole course of the suit, to apply established principles of law to the exigencies of the case; 1 Kent 307. In England the term "counsel" is applied to a barrister.

Generally, in the courts of the various states the same person performs the duties of counsellor and attorney at law.

In giving their advice to their clients, counsel have duties to perform to their clients, to the public and to themselves. In such cases they have thrown upon them something which they owe to their administration of justice, as well as to the private interests of their employers. The interests propounded for them ought, in their own apprehension, to be just, or at least fairly disputable; and when such interests are propounded, they ought not to be pursued per fas et nefas; 1 Hagg. Adm. 222. An attorney and counsellor is not an officer of the United States, he is an officer of the court. His right to appear for suitors and to argue causes is not a mere indulgence, revocable at the pleasure of the court, or at the command of the legislature. It is a right of which he can be deprived only by the judgment of the court, for moral or professional delinquency; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366.

See ATTORNEY; PRIVILEGE; CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS; DISBAR; BARRISTER.

COUNT (Fr. comte; from the Latin comes). An earl.

It gave way as a distinct title to the Saxon earl, but was retained in countess, viscount, and as the basis of county. Termes de la ley; 1 Bla. Com. 398. See COMES.

In Pleading. (Fr. conte, a narrative). The plaintiff's statement of his cause of action.

This word is in our old law-books used synonymously with declaration; but practice has introduced the following distinction. When the plaintiff's complaint embraces only a single cause of action, and he makes only one statement of it, that statement is called, indifferently, a declaration or count; though the former is the more usual term. But when the suit embraces two or more causes of action (each of which, of course, requires a different statement), or when the plaintiff makes two or more different statements of one and the same cause of action, each several statement is called a count, and all of them, collectively, constitute the declaration. In all cases, however, in which there are two or more counts, whether there is actually but one cause of action or several, each count purports, upon the face of it, to disclose a distinct right of action, unconnected with that stated in any of the other counts.

One object proposed in inserting two or more counts in one declaration when there is in fact but one cause of action, is, in some cases, to guard against the danger of an insufficient statement of the cause, where a doubt exists as to the legal sufficiency of one or another of two different modes of declaring; but the more usual end proposed in inserting more than one count in such case is to accommodate the statement to the cause, as far as may be, to the possible state of the proof to be exhibited on trial, or to guard, if possible, against the hazard of the proofs varying materially from the statement of the cause of action; so that, if one or more of several counts be not adapted to the evidence, some other of them may be so; Gould, Pl. c. 4, ss. 2, 3, 4; Steph. Pl. 266; Doctrina Plac. 178; 3 Com. Dig. 291; Dane, Abr. Index. In real actions, the declaration is usually called a count; Steph. Pl. 29. See COMMON COUNTS.

COUNT SUR CONCESSIT SOLVERE. A claim based upon a promise to pay. An ancient count in the mayor's court of London and now commonly used there. Under it the plaintiff can sue for any liquidated demand, but not for money due under a covenant. Particulars defining more precisely the nature of the claim must be delivered with the declaration. Odger, C. L. 1029.

COUNT AND COUNT-OUT. These words refer to the count of the house of commons by the speaker. Forty members, including the speaker, are required to constitute a quorum. Each day after parliament is opened, the speaker counts the house. If forty members are not present he waits till four o'clock, and then counts the house again. If forty members are not then present, he at once adjourns it to the following meeting day. May, Parl. Prac. 219.

COUNTER (spelled, also, Compter). The name of two prisons formerly standing in London, but now demolished. They were the Poultry Counter and Wood Street Counter. Cowell; Whish. L. D.; Coke, 4th Inst. 248.

COUNTER AFFIDAVIT. An affidavit made in opposition to one already made. This is allowed in the preliminary examination of some cases.

COUNTER-BOND. A bond to indemnify. 2 Leon. 90.

COUNTER-CLAIM. A liberal practice introduced by the reformed codes of procedure in many of the United States, and comprehending RECOUPMENT and SET-OFF, q. v., though broader than either.

The New York code thus defines it:

The counter-claim must tend, in some way, to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery, and must be one of the following causes of action against the plaintiff, or, in a proper case, against the person whom he represents, and in favor of the defendant, or of one or more defendants, between whom and the plaintiff a separate judgment may be had in the action:—

1. A cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction, set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action.

2. In an action on contract, any other cause of action on contract existing at the commencement of the action. N. Y. Code, 1889, § 501. See National Fire Ins. Co. v. McKay, 21 N. Y. 191; Waddell v. Darling, 51 id. 327; Smith v. Hall, 67 id. 48; Elwell v. Skiddy, 77 id. 282; Ballou v. Ballou, 78 id. 325; Cook v. Jenkins, 79 id. 575; Coffin v. McLean, 80 id. 560; Ward v. Craig, 87 id. 550; Clapp v. Wright, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 240; Dietrich v. Koch, 35 Wis. 618; Devries v. Warren, 82 N. C. 356; Howe Mach. Co. v. Reber, 66 Ind. 493; Brady v. Brennan, 25 Minn. 210.

By such statutes when a counter-claim is established the defendant may recover in the same action the amount by which his claim exceeds that of the plaintiff. A question as to which the cases vary in result, is the effect upon the jurisdiction when the counter-claim exceeds the limit of the court. Some courts hold that the jurisdiction is not ousted by reason of excess in the amount of the counter-claim; Howard Iron Works v. Elevating Co., 176 N. Y. 1, 68 N. E. 66; aliter, Haygood v. Boney, 43 S. C. 63, 20 S. E. 803; but it is said that the majority of the cases deny the right in such case to file the counter-claim; 17 Harv. L. Rev. 350 (citing Griswold v. Pieratt, 110 Cal. 259, 42 Pac. 820, and Almeida v. Sigerson, 20 Mo. 497), where that view is approved.

A counter-claim is a matter which is capable of use as the basis of a judgment against the plaintiff, and, of course, may be used as a set-off; Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co.

of America v. Electric Signaling Co., 206 Fed. 295.

COUNTER-LETTER. An agreement to reconvey where property has been passed by absolute deed with the intention that it shall serve as security only. A defeasance by a separate instrument. Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 9 L. Ed. 746.

COUNTER-SECURITY. Security given to one who has become security for another, the condition of which is, that if the one who first became surety shall be damnified, the one who gives the counter-security will indemnify him.

COUNTERFEIT. To make something false in the semblance of that which is true. It always implies a fraudulent intent. It refers usually to imitations of coin or paper money. See Vin. Abr. Counterfeit; State v. Calvin, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 151; Kirby v. State, 1 Ohio St. 185; FORGERY.

COUNTERMAND. A change or recalling of orders previously given.

Express countermand takes place when contrary orders are given and a revocation of the prior orders is made.

Implied countermand takes place when a new order is given which is inconsistent with the former order.

When a command or order has been given, and property delivered, by which a right vests in a third person, the party giving the order cannot countermand it. For example, if a debtor should deliver to A a sum of money to be paid to B, his creditor, B has a vested right in the money, and, unless he abandon that right and refuse to take the money, the debtor cannot recover it from A. 1 Rolle, Abr. 32, pl. 13; Yelv. 164; Styles 296. See 3 Co. 26 b; 2 Vent. 298; 10 Mod. 432; Vin. Abr. Countermand (A, 1), Bailment (D); 9 East 49; Bac. Abr. Bailment (D); Com. Dig. Attorney (B, 9), (C, 8); Dane, Abr. Countermand.

COUNTERPART. Formerly, each party to an indenture executed a separate deed: that part which was executed by the grantor was called the original, and the rest the counterparts. It is now usual for all the parties to execute every part; and this makes them all originals. 2 Bla. Com. 296.

In granting lots subject to a ground-rent reserved to the grantor, both parties execute the deeds, of which there are two copies; although both are original, one of them is sometimes called the counterpart. See 12 Vin. Abr. 104; Dane, Abr. Index; 7 Com. Dig. 443; Merlin, Rép. Double Ecrit.

COUNTERPLEA. A plea to some matter incidental to the main object of the suit, and out of the direct line of pleadings. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. 165; 2 Wms. Saund. 45 h. Thus, counterplea of oyer is the defendant's allegations why oyer of an instrument should not be granted. Counterplea to aid prayer is the demandant's allegation why the vouch-ee of the tenant in a real action, or a stranger who asks to come in to defend his right, should not be admitted. Counterplea of voucher is the allegation of the vouch-ee in avoidance of the warranty after admission to plead. Counterpleas are of rare occurrence. Termes de la Ley; Com. Dig. Voucher (B, 1, 2); Dane, Abr.

COUNTEUR. In the time of Edward I, a pleader; also called a Narrator, and Serjeant-Counteur.

COUNTRY. A word often used in pleading and practice. Usually signifies a jury, or the inhabitants of a district from which a jury is to be summoned. 3 Bla. Com. 349; 4 id. 349; Steph. Pl. 73, 78, 230.

COUNTY. One of the civil divisions of a country for judicial and political purposes. 1 Bla. Com. 113. Etymologically, it denotes that portion of the country under the immediate government of a count. 1 Bla. Com. 116.

The states are generally divided into counties. Counties are, in many of the states, divided into townships or towns. In the New England states, however, towns are the basis of all civil divisions, and the counties are rather to be considered as aggregates of towns, so far as their origin is concerned. In Pennsylvania, the state was originally divided into three counties by William Penn. See Proud's Hist. Pa. 234; 2 id. 258.

In some states, a county is considered a corporation; Coles v. Madison County, Breese (Ill.) 154, 12 Am. Dec. 161; in others, it is held a quasi corporation; Inhabitants of County of Hampshire v. Franklin County, 16 Mass. 87; Emerson v. Washington County, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 88; Jackson v. Cory, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 385; Boykin's Devises v. Smith, 3 Munf. (Va.) 102. In regard to the division of counties, see Drake's Adm'r v. Vaughan, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 147; State v. Jones, 9 N. J. L. 357, 17 Am. Dec. 483; Gary v. People, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 640; Walsh v. Com., 89 Pa. 419, 33 Am. Rep. 771; Blount County v. Loudon County, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 74; Stuart v. Bair, id. 141; Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 548, 25 L. Ed. 710; Eagle v. Beard, 33 Ark. 497; Cocke v. Gooch, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 294. A county may be required by act of legislature to build a public work outside the county limits, where it is of special interest to the people of the county; Carter v. Bridge, 104 Mass. 236; Talbot County Com'rs v. County Com'rs, 50 Md. 245.

A state has a greater latitude of control over a county, than over a town or city, as the latter had a two-fold character—public, as an agency of the state, and private, as affecting matter of local concern; State v. Board of Com'rs, 170 Ind. 595, 85 N. E. 513.

The terms "county" and "people of the county" are, or may be, used interchangeably; St. Louis County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.

In the English law, this word signifies the same as shire,—county being derived from the French, and shire from the Saxon. Both these words signify a circuit or portion of the realm into which the whole land is divided, for the better government thereof and the more easy administration of justice. There is no part of England that is not within some county; and the shirereeve (sheriff) was the governor of the province, under the comes, earl, or count.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS. Certain officers generally intrusted with the superintendence of the collection of the county taxes and the disbursements made for the county. They are invested by the local laws with various powers. In some of the states they are called supervisors.

COUNTY CORPORATE. A city or town, with more or less territory annexed constituting a county by itself. 1 Bla. Com. 120. See State v. Finn, 4 Mo. App. 347. They differ in no material points from other counties.

COUNTY COURTS. A number of different local courts existed in England in early times, but their jurisdiction was gradually absorbed by the royal courts of justice to such an extent that in the 18th century practically all the judicial work of the country was done by the common law courts, the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 418. See the various titles under Court. In 1846 courts of limited jurisdiction were established for England and Wales. They were inferior courts of record. Various acts in reference to these courts were consolidated in an act passed in 1888 under which England and Wales were divided in 56 districts, in which, as a rule, a County Court is held by one of the 53 County Court judges once in every month, except September. The judges, who must be barristers of seven years standing, are appointed by the Lord Chancellor (except in the Duchy of Lancaster).

Jurisdiction depends mainly on the place where the defendant resides or the property in dispute is situated, and the nature and amount of the claim. Ordinarily, suit must be brought in the district where defendant resides or carries on business, but there are special exceptions.

The ordinary jurisdiction extends (if the amount in controversy does not exceed £100) to personal actions, ejectment, the trial of title to corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments. A County Court cannot, except by consent, try any action in which the title to any toll, fair, market or franchise (including patents) is in question, or for libel, slander, seduction or breach of promise of marriage. It has all the powers in equity of the High Court of Justice (up to the jurisdictional amount of £500) in administration actions by creditors, legatees, devisees, heirs-at-law and next of kin, in actions for the executions of trusts, for the foreclosure of any charge or lien, for the specific performance, reforming or cancelling of agreements for the sale or lease of property, for dissolution or winding up partnerships.

In common law, but not in equity, the parties may agree that a particular court may try an action for a claim of any amount. In the large provincial towns it is a court of bankruptcy with all the powers therein of the High Court. Several of the County Courts have jurisdiction in admiralty. Numerous acts have extended their jurisdiction in special instances.

In American Law. Courts in many of the states of the United States and in Canada, of widely varying powers.

COUNTY PALATINE. An independent principality in England and Wales of the continental type in which the king's writ did not run. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 49. In feudal times political power was distributed among the larger landowners, who procured grants to themselves of the new processes and powers of the Curia Regis. Commissioners were sent out (1274) to enquire by what warrant different landowners were exercising their jura regalia. Many franchises were cancelled; the franchises of some remained. The Counties Palatine were Durham, Lancaster and Chester (by prescription). The palatine jurisdiction also existed in Wales and the Stannaries (see STANNARY COURTS) and in a lesser degree in the liberties of Ely, Pembroke (taken away by 27 Henry VIII. c. 26, § 17) and Heschem and the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. id. The name was derived from palatinus used on the continent to imply something peculiarly royal. Lapsley, County Palatine of Durham. Coke says the powers of those that had counties palatinate was King-like, for they might pardon treasons, murders, felonies and outlaws and make justices in Eyre, of assize, etc. All writs ran, and criminal process was made, in the name of the person having the County Palatine. 4 Inst. 205.

See COURTS OF THE COUNTIES PALATINE.

COUNTY SESSIONS. In England, the Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace held in every county once in every quarter of a year. Mozley & W. Law Dict.

COUPONS. Those parts of a commercial instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to bonds or certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at particular periods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payor. In England, they are known as warrants or dividend warrants, and the securities to which they belong, debentures; 13 C. B. 372. In the United States they have been decided to be negotiable instruments, if payable to bearer or order, upon which suit may be brought though detached from the bond; Town of Cicero v. Clifford, 53 Ind. 191; Beaver County v. Armstrong, 44 Pa. 63; Haven v. Depot Co., 109 Mass. 88; Antoni v. Wright, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 833; Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 282, 20 L. Ed. 809; Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U. S. 589, 1 Sup. Ct. 564, 27 L. Ed. 298; Jones, R. R. Sec. § 320; Myers v. R. Co., 43 Me. 232; Horne v. State, 82 N. C. 382; Walker v. State, 12 S. C. 200. Otherwise, in Clarke v. Janesville, 1 Biss. 105, Fed. Cas. No. 2,854, if the bond to which the coupons were attached was not negotiable; see Myers v. R. Co., 43 Me. 232; and otherwise if not payable to bearer or order; Evertson v. Bank, 66 N. Y. 14, 23 Am. Rep. 9; see Crosby v. R. Co., 26 Conn. 121. They are distinct instruments from the bonds, and can be added to the bond thereof to make up a jurisdictional amount; Edwards v. Bates County, 163 U. S. 269, 16 Sup. Ct. 967, 41 L. Ed. 155. Suits on a bond and on coupons cut therefrom are different causes of action; Presidio County, Tex., v. Bond & Stock Co., 212 U. S. 58, 29 Sup. Ct. 237, 53 L. Ed. 402.

In England the question has not been directly decided, but it has been held that they are not promissory notes, and therefore do not require a stamp; 13 C. B. 373. Dividend warrants of the Bank of England made payable to a particular person, but not containing words of transfer, were held not to be negotiable, notwithstanding they had been so by custom for sixty years; 9 Q. B. 396. A purchaser of overdue coupons takes only the title of his vendor; Arents v. Com., 18 Gratt. (Va.) 750; Gilbough v. R. Co., 1 Hughes 410, Fed. Cas. No. 5,419. Negotiable coupons were held entitled to days of grace; Evertson v. Bank, 66 N. Y. 14, 23 Am. Rep. 9; Jones, R. R. Sec. § 326; contra, Arents v. Com., 18 Gratt. (Va.) 773; 2 Dan. Neg. Instr., 3d ed. § 1490 a.

Interest on coupons may be recovered in a suit on the coupons; Beaver County v. Armstrong, 44 Pa. 75; Hollingsworth v. Detroit, 3 McLean 472, Fed. Cas. No. 6,613; Genoa v. Woodruff, 92 U. S. 502, 23 L. Ed. 586; Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681; Ashuelot R. Co. v. Elliot, 57 N. H. 397; Burroughs v. Richmond County Com'rs, 65 N. C. 234; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. The rate of interest provided for in the bond continues on the coupon till it is merged in judgment; Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681; McLane v. Abrams, 2 Nev. 199; Marietta Iron Works v. Lottimer, 25 Ohio St. 621; contra, Brewster v. Wakefield, 22 How. (U. S.) 118, 16 L. Ed.

301; Com. of Virginia v. State, 32 Md. 501; Pearce v. Hennessy, 10 R. I. 223. See Jones, R. R. Sec. § 336. A suit on the coupon is not barred by the statute of limitations unless a suit on the bond would be barred; Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 282, 20 L. Ed. 809; otherwise, when the coupons have passed into the hands of the party who does not hold the bonds; Clark v. Iowa City, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 583, 22 L. Ed. 427. As to practice in actions on coupons, see Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 477, 19 L. Ed. 725.

COUR DE CASSATION. In French Law. See COURTS OF FRANCE.

COURSE. The direction of a line with reference to a meridian.

Where there are no monuments, the land is usually described by courses and distances and those mentioned in the patent or deed will fix the boundaries. But when the lines are actually marked, they must be adhered to though they vary from the course mentioned in the deeds. See BOUNDARY.

COURSE OF BUSINESS. What is usually done in the management of trade or business. A statute exempting from distress property deposited with a tavern-keeper "in the usual course of business," only includes property deposited by a guest for safekeeping; Harris v. Boggs, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 489. Carriages used for carrying the band and performers of a circus in a street parade, are not carriages "used solely for the conveyance of any goods or burdens in the course of trade;" L. R. 9 Exch. 25.

Men are presumed to act for their own interest, and to pursue the way usually adopted by men generally: hence it is presumed in law that men in their actions will pursue the usual course of trade.

COURSE OF THE VOYAGE. By this term is understood the regular and customary track, if such there be, which a ship takes in going from one port to another, and the shortest way. Marsh. Ins. 185; Phill. Ins. 981.

COURT (Fr. cour, Dutch, koert, a yard). A body in the government to which the administration of justice is delegated.

The presence of a sufficient number of the members of such a body regularly convened in an authorized place at an appointed time, engaged in the full and regular performance of its functions. Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 446; Brumley v. State, 20 Ark. 77.

The place where justice is judicially administered. Co. Litt. 58 a; 3 Bla. Com. 23, 25. See Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Ia. 501.

The judge or judges themselves, when duly convened. See JUDGE.

The term is used in all the above senses, though but infrequently in the third sense given. The application of the term—which originally denoted the place of assembling—to denote the assemblage, strikingly resembles the similar application of the Latin term curia (if, indeed, it be not a mere translation), and is readily explained by the fact that the earlier courts were merely assemblages, in the court-yard of the baron or of the king himself, of those who were qualified and whose duty it was so to appear at stated times or upon summons. Traces of this usage and constitution of courts still remain in the courts baron, the various courts for the trial of impeachments in England and the United States, and in the control exercised by the parliament of England and the legislatures of the various states of the United States over the organization of courts of justice, as constituted in modern times. Indeed, the English parliament is still the High Court of Parliament, and in Massachusetts the united legislative bodies are entitled, as they (and the body to which they succeeded) have been from time immemorial, the General Court.

In England, however, and in those states of the United States which existed as colonies prior to the revolution, most of these judicial functions were early transferred to bodies of a compacter organization, whose sole function was the public administration of justice. The power of impeachment of various high officers, however, is still retained by the legislative bodies both in England and the United States, and is, perhaps, the only judicial function which has ever been exercised by the legislative bodies in the newer states of the United States. These more compact bodies are the courts, as the term is used in its modern acceptance.

The one common and essential feature in all courts is a judge or judges—so essential, indeed, that they are even called the court, as distinguished from the accessory and subordinate officers; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. R. Co., 3 Ind. 239; McClure v. McClurg, 53 Mo. 173; see Gold v. R. Co., 19 Vt. 478. Courts of record are also provided with a recording officer, variously known as clerk, prothonotary, register, etc.: while in all courts there are counsellors, attorneys, or similar officers recognized as peculiarly suitable persons to represent the parties actually concerned in the causes, who are considered as officers of the court and assistants of the judges, together with a variety of ministerial officers, such as sheriffs, constables, bailiffs, tipstaves, criers, etc. For a consideration of the functions of the various members of a court, see the various appropriate titles, as JURY, SHERIFF, etc.

Courts are said to belong to one or more of the following classes, according to the nature and extent of their jurisdiction, their forms of proceeding, or the principles upon which they administer justice, viz.:

Admiralty. See ADMIRALTY.

Appellate, which take cognizance of causes removed from another court by appeal or writ of error. See APPEAL AND ERROR; BILL OF EXCEPTIONS; DIVISION OF OPINION.

Civil, which redress private wrongs. See JURISDICTION.

Criminal, which redress public wrongs, that is, crimes or misdemeanors.

Ecclesiastical. See ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Of equity, which administer justice according to the principles of equity. See EQUITY; COURT OF EQUITY; COURT OF CHANCERY.

Of general jurisdiction, which have cognizance of and may determine causes various in their nature.

Inferior, which are subordinate to other courts. Nugent v. State, 18 Ala. 521. Also, those of a very limited jurisdiction.

Of law, which administer justice according to the principles of the common law.

Of limited or special jurisdiction, which can take cognizance of a few specified matters only.

Local, which have jurisdiction of causes occurring in certain places only, usually the limits of a town or borough, or, in England, of a barony.

Martial. See COURT-MARTIAL.

Not of record. See COURT OF RECORD.

Of original jurisdiction, which have jurisdiction of causes in the first instance. See JURISDICTION.

Of record. See COURT OF RECORD.

Superior. In England the High Court of Justice is spoken of as a superior court of record; in the United States the term superior courts has come to be applied to courts of intermediate jurisdiction between the inferior and supreme courts; also, those of controlling, as distinguished from those of subordinate, jurisdiction. As to superior and inferior courts, see 34 Amer. L. Rev. 71.

Supreme, which possess the highest and controlling jurisdiction; also, in some states, a court of higher jurisdiction than the superior courts, though not the court of final resort.

A court cannot pass upon the validity of its own organization; State v. Hall, 142 N. C. 710, 55 S. E. 806; but it would at least be a de facto court and its authority could not be attacked collaterally; In re Manning, 139 U. S. 504, 11 Sup. Ct. 624, 35 L. Ed. 264. See DE FACTO.

As to holding court with closed doors, see OPEN COURT.

See the various titles following.

Courts of the United States are treated under UNITED STATES COURTS; Courts of Great Britain, Ireland, Scotland, and France, under COURTS OF ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND FRANCE, respectively.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See ADMIRALTY; UNITED STATES COURTS.

COURT OF ANCIENT DEMESNE. A court of peculiar constitution, held by a bailiff appointed by the king, in which alone the tenants of the king's demesne could be impleaded. 2 Burr. 1046; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100; 2 Bla. Com. 99; 1 Report Eng. Real Prop. Comm. 28; 1 Steph. Com. 224; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 367.

COURT OF APPEAL. In England, one of the two sections of the Supreme Court of Judicature. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF APPEALS. An appellate tribunal which, in Kentucky, Maryland, and New York, is the court of last resort. In New Jersey, it is known as the Court of Errors and Appeals; in Virginia and West Virginia, the Supreme Court of Appeals; in Connecticut, the Supreme Court of Errors; in Massachusetts and Maine, the Supreme Judicial Court; in the other states, and in the federal courts, the Supreme Court. In Texas there is a court of Civil Appeals, and in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and other states, and the United States, there are appellate courts inferior to the highest court of appeals.

COURT OF ARCHDEACON. The most inferior of the English ecclesiastical courts, from which an appeal lay to the Consistory Court. The archdeacon formerly held it as a deputy of the bishop. Later it had a customary jurisdiction, and the bishops adopted the plan of exercising their jurisdiction through officials; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 369.

COURT OF THE ARCHES. The usual name for the Court of the "Official Principal" of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It was a court of appeal from all the diocesan courts and also a court of first instance in all ecclesiastical causes.

The most ancient consistory court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury for the trial of spiritual causes, the judge of which is called the dean of the arches, because he anciently held his court in the church of St. Mary le Bow (Sancta Maria de arcubus,—literally, "St. Mary of the arches"), so named from the style of its steeple which is raised upon pillars built archwise, like so many bent bowes. Termes de la Ley. It is now held, as are also the other spiritual courts, in the hall belonging to the College of Civilians, commonly called Doctor's Commons. It is still a part of the English system.

Its proper jurisdiction is only over the thirteen peculiar parishes of London, which were exempt from the jurisdiction of the bishop of London; but, the office of dean of the arches having been for a long time united with that of the archbishop's "Official Principal," the judge of the arches, in right of such added office, receives and determines appeals from the sentences of all inferior ecclesiastical courts within the province. 3 Bla. Com. 64; 3 Steph. Com. 306; Whart. Law Dict. Arches Court. Many suits are also brought before him as original judge, the cognizance of which properly belongs to inferior jurisdictions within the province, but in respect of which the inferior judge has waived his jurisdiction under a certain form of proceeding known in the common law as letters of request. 3 Steph. Com. 306; 2 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 496; 2 Add. Eccl. 406.

From the court of arches an appeal formerly lay to the pope, and afterwards, by statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19, to the king in chancery (i. e., to the Court of Delegates, q. v.), as supreme head of the English church, but now, by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

A suit is commenced in the ecclesiastical court by citing the defendant to appear, and exhibiting a libel containing the complaint against him, to which he answers. Proofs are then adduced, and the judge pronounces a decree upon hearing the arguments of advocates, which is then carried into effect.

The corresponding court of the archbishop of York was the Chancery Court.

The Public Worship Regulation Act (37 & 38 Vict.) provides for the appointment by the archbishops of Canterbury and York of a single judge to hold the position of the Official Principal of the Court of the Arches and the Chancery Court, and Master of the Faculties to the Archbishop of Canterbury. He must be either a barrister of 10 years standing or a judge of one of the superior courts.

COURT OF ASSISTANTS. A court in Massachusetts organized in 1630, consisting of the governor, deputy governor and assistants. It exercised the whole power both legislative and judicial of the colony and an extensive chancery jurisdiction as well; S. D. Wilson in 18 Am. L. Rev. 226.

COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS. Courts composed of two or more commissioners, called judges of assize (or of assize and nisi prius), who are twice in every year sent by special commission on circuits all round the kingdom, to try, by a jury of the respective counties, the truth of such matters of fact as are then under dispute in the courts of Westminster Hall; there being, however, as to London and Middlesex, this exception, that, instead of their being comprised within any circuit, courts of nisi prius are held there for the same purpose, in and after every term, at what are called the London and Westminster sittings.

These judges of assize came into use in the room of the ancient justices in eyre (justiciarii in itinere), who were regularly established, if not first appointed, by the Parliament of Northampton, A. D. 1176 (the first of these of whom we have any record, were appointed in 1170), with a delegated power from the king's great court or aula regis, being looked upon as members thereof; though the present justices of assize and nisi prius are more immediately derived from the stat. Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 30, and consist principally of the judges of the superior courts of common law, being assigned by that statute out of the king's sworn justices, associating to themselves one or two discreet knights of each county. By stat. 27 Edw. I. c. 4 (explained by 12 Edw. II. c. 3), assizes and inquests are allowed to be taken before any one justice of the court in which the plea is brought, associating with him one knight or other approved man of the county: by stat. 14 Edw. III. c. 16, inquests of nisi prius may be taken before any justice of either bench (though the plea be not depending in his own court), or before the chief baron of the exchequer, if he be a man of the law, or, otherwise, before the justices of assize, so that one of such justices be a judge of the king's bench or common pleas, or the king's sergeant sworn; and, finally, by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 22, all justices of assize may, on their respective circuits try causes pending in the court of exchequer, without issuing (as it had till then been considered necessary to do) a separate commission from the exchequer for that purpose. 3 Steph. Com. 352; 3 Bla. Com. 57, 58.

There are eight circuits (formerly seven), viz.: Northern, Northeastern, Midland, Southeastern, Oxford, Western, North Wales and Chester and South Wales. At least one judge of the High Court goes around each circuit three times a year—in the winter, summer and autumn. Two judges attend at the larger towns twice a year. At Liverpool, Manchester and Leeds four assizes are held in each year, two of them by two judges and two by one judge. The judges are under three commissions—oyer and terminer, gaol delivery and assize. The last empowers them inter alia to try civil actions; 2 Odger, Com. Law. 985.

Where courts of this kind exist in the United States, they are instituted by statutory provision. Dawson v. Ryan, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 404. See OYER AND TERMINER; GAOL DELIVERY; COURTS OF OYER AND TERMINER AND GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY; NISI PRIUS; COMMISSION OF THE PEACE.

COURT OF ATTACHMENTS. The lowest of the three courts held in the forests. It has fallen into total disuse. It was held before the verderers of the forest once in every forty days, to view the attachments by the foresters for offences against the vert and the venison. It had cognizance only of small trespasses. Larger ones were enrolled and heard by the Justices in Eyre; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 343. See COURTS OF THE FOREST; Rawle, Exmoor For. 51.

COURT OF AUDIENCE. The Archbishop of Canterbury possessed a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Court of the Arches, which he exercised in the Court of Audience, later held by a judge. It does not appear to have been revived after the Restoration. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 371. The Archbishop of York held a like Court of Audience.

COURT OF AUGMENTATION. A court established by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 27, for managing the revenues and possessions of all monasteries whose income was under £200 a year (which by an act of parliament of the same session had been given to the king), and for determining suits relating thereto.

It was called "The Court of the Augmentations of the Revenues of the King's Crown" (from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown derived from the suppression of the monasteries), and was a court of record, with one great seal and one privy seal,—the officers being a chancellor, who had the great seal, a treasurer, a king's attorney and solicitor, ten auditors, seventeen receivers, with clerk, usher, etc.

All dissolved monasteries under the above value, with some exceptions, were in survey of the court, the chancellor of which was directed to make a yearly report of their revenues to the king. The court was dissolved in the reign of queen Mary, but the Office of Augmentation remained long after; and the records of the court are now at the Public Record Office. Cowell.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY. A court of record, in England, with jurisdiction in bankruptcy, primary and appellate, which is declared a court of law and equity for that purpose. The Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849.

By the judicature acts, 1873 and 1875 (q. v.) the court of bankruptcy was consolidated into the supreme court of judicature.

COURT BARON. A domestic court, incident to every manor, held by the steward within the manor, for redressing misdemeanors and nuisances therein, and for settling disputes among the tenants relating to property. It is not a court of record. 1 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. E. L. 580.

Coke (1st Inst. 58*a*) speaks of the Court Baron as of two natures; the first, by the common law, called a court baron, a freeholders' court where they are the judges; the second, a customary court, in which the lord or his steward is the judge. Blackstone (3 Com. 33) says that, though in their nature distinct, they are frequently confounded together. Later writers doubt if there were two courts; 1 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. E. L. 580.

Their jurisdiction was practically abolished by the County Courts Act, 30 and 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 28; 3 Steph. Com. 279. In the state of New York such courts were held while the state was a province. See charters in Bolton's Hist. of New Chester. A deed of Wm. Penn to Letitia Penn for a manor in Pennsylvania granted the privilege of holding court baron; Myers, Immigration of Quakers 127. They existed in Maryland; Hall, The Lords Baltimore, etc. The court derived its name from the fact that it was the court of the baron or lord of the manor. 3 Bla. Com. 33, n.; see Fleta, lib. 2, c. 53; though it is explained by some as being the court of the freeholders, who were in some instances called barons. Co. Litt. 58*a*.

The lord's steward usually presided. From the 13th century he was a lawyer. All kinds of personal actions (where the cause of action did not exceed 40 shillings in value) were tried there; contracts, trespass, libel, slander, assault, etc. Both the common law and chancery courts interfered to protect suitors if injustice were done. The jurisdiction of the customary court declined and all that it was used for was copyhold conveyancing business; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 578.

COURT OF CHANCERY, or CHANCERY. A court formerly existing in England and still existing in several of the United States, which possesses an extensive equity jurisdiction.

The name is said by some to be derived from that of the chief judge, who is called a chancellor; others derive both names directly from the cancelli (bars) which in this court anciently separated the press of people from the officers. See 3 Bla. Com. 46, n.; Story, Eq. Jur. 40; CANCELLARIUS.

In American Law. A court of general equity jurisdiction.

The terms equity and chancery, court of equity and court of chancery, are constantly used as synonymous in the United States. It is presumed that this custom arises from the circumstance that the equity jurisdiction which is exercised by the courts of the various states is assimilated to that possessed by the English courts of chancery. Indeed, in some of the states it is made identical therewith by statute, so far as conformable to our institutions.

Separate courts of chancery or equity exist in a few of the states; in others, the courts of law sit also as courts of equity; in others, equitable relief is administered under the forms of the common law; and in others, the distinction between law and equity has been formally abolished or never existed. The federal courts exercise an equity jurisdiction as understood in the English courts at the time of the Revolution; Miller Const. 318; independent of local state law; id.; Gordon v. Hobart, 2 Sumn. 401, Fed. Cas. No. 5,609; and the remedies are not according to state practice but as distinguished and defined in that country from which we derive our knowledge of those principles; Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 212, 4 L. Ed. 372; whether the state courts in the district are courts of equity or not; Loroman v. Clarke, 2 McLean, 568, Fed. Cas. No. 8,516; Gaines v. Relf, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 9, 10 L. Ed. 642; Bennett v. Butterworth, 11 How. (U. S.) 669, 13 L. Ed. 859.

In English Law. Formerly the highest court of judicature next to parliament. Prior to the judicature acts it was the superior court of chancery, called distinctively "The High Court of Chancery," and consisted of six separate tribunals, viz.: the court of the lord high chancellor of Great Britain; the court of the master of the rolls, or keeper of the records in chancery; the court of appeal in chancery, the three separate courts of the vice-chancellors.

The jurisdiction of this court was four-fold.

The common-law or ordinary jurisdiction. By virtue of this the lord-chancellor was a privy councillor and prolocutor of the house of lords. The writs for a new parliament issued from this department. The Petty Bag Office was in this jurisdiction. It was a common-law court of record, in which pleas of scire facias to repeal letters-patent were exhibited, and many other matters were determined, and whence all original writs issued. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 94; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 109.

The statutory jurisdiction included the power which the lord-chancellor exercised under the habeas corpus act, and by which he inquired into charitable uses, but did not include the equitable jurisdiction.

The specially delegated jurisdiction included the exclusive authority which the lord-chancellor and lords justices of appeal had over the persons and property of idiots and lunatics.

The equity or extraordinary jurisdiction was either assistant or auxiliary to the common law, including discovery for the promotion of substantial justice at the common law, preservation of testimony of persons not litigants relating to suits or questions at law, removal of improper impediments and prevention of unconscientious defences at common law, giving effect to and relieving from the consequences of common-law judgments; concurrent with the common law, including the remedial correction of fraud, the prevention of fraud by injunction, accident, mistake, account, dower, interpleader, the delivery up of documents and specific chattels, the specific performance of agreements; or exclusive, relating to trusts, infancy, the equitable rights of wives, legal and equitable mortgages, the assignment of choses in action, partition, the appointment of receivers, charities, or public trusts. Whart. Law Dict.

By the Judicature Acts (1873 and 1875) this court was merged in the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

The inferior courts of chancery are the courts of the Palatine Counties (Lancaster and Durham), the courts of the Two Universities, the lord-mayor's courts in the city of London, and the court of chancery in the Isle of Man. See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48, and the titles of these various courts. See Story, Eq. Jur.; Dan. Ch. Pr.; Spence, Eq. Jur.; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 194; Spence, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 219; COURTS OF EQUITY; EQUITY; CANCELLARIUS.

COURT OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE IN EYRE. The highest of the courts of the forest, held every three years, by the chief justice, to inquire of purprestures or encroachments, assarts, or cultivation of forest land, claims to franchises, parks, warrens, and vineyards in the forest, as well as claims of the hundred, claims to the goods of felons found in the forest, and any other civil questions that might arise within the forest limits. But it had no criminal jurisdiction, except of offences against the forest laws. In the exercise of this, he passed sentences upon offenders convicted by the verderers in Swanimote (see COURT OF SWANIMOTE) and performed all the duties of a justice in eyre (q. v.). It was called also the court of justice seat. Inderwick, King's Peace. See FOREST LAWS; COURTS OF THE FOREST. Since the Restoration the forest laws have fallen into disuse. The office was abolished in 1817.

COURT OF CHIVALRY. An ancient military court, possessing both civil and criminal jurisdiction touching matters of arms and deeds of war. It was held by the constable of England and after that office reverted to the crown in the time of Henry VIII., by the earl-marshal. Davis, Mil. Law 13. It had cognizance, by statute 13 Ric. II. c. 2, "of contracts and other matters touching deeds of arms and war, as well out of the realm as within it." This jurisdiction was of importance while the English kings held territories in France.

As a court of criminal jurisdiction, it had jurisdiction over "pleas of life and member arising in matters of arms and deeds of war, as well out of the realm as within it." It was curia militaris.

It was not a court of record and could neither fine nor imprison; 7 Mod. 137 (where it was held to have still survived with doubtful and trifling jurisdiction). It is said to have fallen entirely into disuse; 3 Bla. Com. 68. The last trial before a Court of Chivalry was that of Lord Audeley, in 1497, but the trial of the Earl of Warwick in 1499 took place before the Court of the Lord High Steward. Harcourt, The Steward and Trial of Peers.

COURTS CHRISTIAN. Ecclesiastical courts, which see.

COURTS OF THE CINQUE PORTS. Courts of limited local jurisdiction, formerly held before the mayor and jurats (aldermen) of the Cinque Ports. From the earliest times they had the right to hold pleas and the right to wreck, and were always exempt from the jurisdiction of the admiralty. A writ of error lay to the lord-warden in his Court of Shepway, and from this court to the King's Bench.

In 1856 when the general civil jurisdiction of the lord-warden was abolished, his admiralty jurisdiction was retained. An appeal lies to the lord-warden in admiralty causes from the County Courts within his jurisdiction. Their jurisdiction was not affected by the Judicature Act of 1873. The regular sitting place was in the aisle of St. James' Church, Dover, but the judge now often sits at the Royal Courts of Justice; See 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 305; 3 Bla. Com. 79; 2 Steph. Com. 499. This jurisdiction is said to present the type and original of all the admiralty and maritime courts; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 305.

COURT OF CLAIMS. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

COURT OF THE CLERK OF THE MARKET. A tribunal incident to the market held in the suburbs of the king's court. The clericus mercati hospitii regis was the incumbent of an honorable office pertinent to the ancient custom of holding such markets. The clerk in early times witnessed verbal contracts; later he adjudicated on prices of corn, bread, and wine and other commodities as fixed by the justices of the peace; inquired as to the correctness of weights and measures in every city, town, or borough, subject to appeal to the lord high steward, who could fine him for extortion and send him to the tower for a third offence. The clerk also measured land in case of dispute, and he had power to send bakers, brewers, and others to the pillory for unlawful dealings. See Inderwick, King's Peace 104.

The jurisdiction over weights and measures formerly exercised was taken from him by stat. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63; 9 M. & W. 747; 4 Steph. Com. 323.

COURT OF COMMERCE. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS. See COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS. In American Law. A court of original and general jurisdiction for the trial of issues of fact and law according to the principles of the common law.

Courts of this name exist in some of the states of the United States, and frequently have a criminal as well as civil jurisdiction. They are, in general, courts of record, being expressly made so by statute in Pennsylvania, April 14, 1834, § 18. In Pennsylvania they exercise an equity jurisdiction also, as well as that at common law. Courts of substantially similar powers to those indicated in the definition exist in all the states, under various names.

In English Law. Formerly one of the three superior courts of common law at Westminster.

This court, which is sometimes called, also, Bancus Communis, Bancus, and Common Bench, was a branch of the curia regis. At the end of John's reign there was a separation between the court which sat at a certain place to hear common pleas and the court which followed the king with jurisdiction both over common pleas and pleas of the crown. There were not as yet two distinct bodies of judges. There is a reported case in 1237 which shows that the distinction was well recognized. In 1272 there was a chief justice of the common pleas, and from that date it may be said that the separation was complete. The common pleas was inferior to the court which followed the king, since error lay from it to his court. Magna Carta provided that it should sit at some fixed place, which was usually Westminster. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 74.

The establishment of this court at Westminster, and the consequent construction of the Inns of Court and gathering together of the common-law lawyers, enabled the law itself to withstand the attacks of the canonists and civilians. It derived its name from the fact that the causes of common people were heard there. It had exclusive jurisdiction of real actions as long as those actions were in use, and had also an extensive and, for a long time, exclusive jurisdiction of all actions between subjects. This latter jurisdiction, however, was gradually encroached upon by the king's bench and exchequer, with which it afterwards had a concurrent jurisdiction in many matters. Formerly none but serjeants at law were admitted to practise before this court in banc. See SERJEANTS-AT-LAW. Its judges were always serjeants-at-law.

It consisted of a chief justice and four puisne or associate justices.

It had a civil, common-law jurisdiction, concurrent with the king's bench and exchequer, of personal actions and actions of ejectment, and a peculiar or exclusive jurisdiction of real actions, actions under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, the registration of judgments, annuities, etc., 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82; 18 Vict. c. 15; respecting fees for conveyances under 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74; the examination of married women concerning their conveyances; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 70; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 75; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, § 73; and of appeals from the revising barristers' court; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18. Whart. Law Dict.

See BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

Appeals formerly lay from this court to the King's Bench; and by statutes 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 70, writs of error were afterwards taken to the King's Bench and Exchequer Chamber, from whose judgment an appeal lay to the House of Lords. 3 Bla. Com. 40.

Its jurisdiction has been transferred to the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE. See COURTS OF REQUESTS.

COURT FOR CONSIDERATION OF CROWN CASES RESERVED. A court established by stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, composed of such of the judges of the superior courts of Westminster as were able to attend, for the consideration of questions of law reserved by any judge in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, before which a prisoner had been found guilty by verdict. 4 Steph. Com. 442. The trial judge was empowered to "state a case" for the opinion of that court. He could not be compelled to do so, and only a question of law could be raised. If the court considered that the point had been wrongly decided at the trial, the conviction would be quashed. Prior to this act a judge who had a doubt as to the correctness of his opinion in a criminal trial would sentence the prisoner, but would suspend punishment until he could consult his brother judges or serjeants. By Act of 1907, the Court of Criminal Appeal was created and the Court for Crown Cases Reserved was abolished.

COURT, CONSISTORY. See CONSISTORY COURT.

COURT OF CONVOCATION. A convocation or ecclesiastical synod, which is in the nature of an ecclesiastical parliament.

There is one for each province. They are composed respectively of the archbishop, all the bishops, deans, and archdeacons of their province, with one proctor, or representative, from each chapter, and, in the province of Canterbury, two proctors for the beneficed parochial clergy in each diocese, while in the province of York there are two proctors for each archdeaconry. In York the convocation consists of only one house; but in Canterbury there are two houses, of which the archbishop and bishops form the upper house, and the lower consists of the remaining members of the convocation. In this house a prolocutor, performing the duty of president, is elected. These assemblies meet at the time appointed in the queen's writ. The convocation has long been summoned pro forma only, but is still, in fact, summoned before the meeting of every new parliament, and adjourns immediately afterwards, without proceeding to the dispatch of any business.

The purpose of the convocation is stated to be the enactment of canon law, subject to the license and authority of the sovereign, and consulting on ecclesiastical matters.

In their judicial capacity, their jurisdiction extends to matters of heresy, schisms, and other mere spiritual or ecclesiastical causes,—an appeal lying from their judicial proceedings to the king in council, by stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92.

But there is a question whether at any time Convocation ever acted as a court. There is some evidence to show that in the 14th and 15th centuries persons accused of heresy were brought before Convocation by the bishop, but the members did not vote on such trials, being probably rather in the nature of a body of assessors to the archbishop. Convocation exercises no jurisdiction at the present day; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 373.

Cowell; Bac. Abr. Ecclesiastical Courts, A, 1; 1 Bla. Com. 279; 2 Steph. Com. 525, 668; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 18.

COURT OF THE CORONER. A court the chief duty of which was to inquire, when any one dies in prison, or comes to a violent or sudden death, by what manner he came to his end; 4 Steph. Com. 323; 4 Bla. Com. 774; now generally known as an inquest. See CORONER.

COURTS OF THE COUNTIES PALATINE. In the county palatine of Durham there was a Central Court of Pleas, a body of justices who sat by virtue of commissions of assize, oyer and terminer and gaol delivery. The judges were often the same persons as those who sat in the royal courts. The bishop's council was a court of appeal and had original jurisdiction. The bishop had his Chancery. In 1536 an act was passed by which the independent judicial system was made to depend directly upon the king.

In the county palatine of Lancaster, the courts were a Court of Common Pleas, justices of assize, gaol delivery, oyer and terminer and of the peace; a Chancery Court presided over by the Vice-Chancellor; and a Court of Duchy Chamber, presided over by the Chancellor of the duchy, which sat at Westminster and heard appeals from the Chancery Court. It has ceased to exist. The Chancellor of the Duchy is no longer a judicial officer. The Act of 1536 (supra) extended to Lancaster and also to Chester.

In the county palatine of Chester, a justice held a Court of Pleas for the Crown and Common Pleas. The Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, by act in 1536, could appoint justices of the peace and gaol delivery for Chester and Wales. The chamberlain of Chester, assisted by the vice-chamberlain, exercised the equitable and common-law jurisdiction of the Chancery and of a Court of Exchequer. The palatinate jurisdiction of Chester and Wales ended in 1830. Six counties in Wales were created in 1284 and organized on the English model; other counties in Wales were under the Lords Marchers.

For the existing courts, see COURTS OF ENGLAND; COUNTY PALATINE; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 47; 1 Steph. Hist. C. L. 138; Coke, 4 Inst. 239; 1 Harg. L. Tr. 378.

COURT OF DELEGATES. A court of appeal for all ecclesiastical cases and called the High Court of Delegates. 25 Henry VIII. c. 19; repealed, 1 & 2 Phil. & Mary, c. 8; revived, 1 Eliz. c. 1. The crown could issue a Commission of Review and rehear the cases. It was held by commissioners appointed under the Great Seal. It was therefore a shifting body, which could not establish general rules of procedure. It was usually composed of junior civilians. By 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92, its jurisdiction was transferred to the Privy Council. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 373.

COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In English Law. A court which had the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the ecclesiastical courts in respect of divorces a mensa et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, suits of jactitation of marriage, suits for restitution of conjugal rights, and all suits, causes, and matters matrimonial.

It consisted of the lord chancellor and the justices of the queen's bench, the common pleas, the exchequer, and the judge of the court of probate, who was entitled judge ordinary.

The judge ordinary exercised all the powers of the court, except petitions for dissolving or annulling marriages and applications for new trials of matters of fact, bills of exception, special verdict and special cases, for hearing which excepted cases he must be joined by two of the other judges. Provision was made for his absence by authorizing the lord chancellor to appoint one of certain judicial persons to act in such absence. Juries were summoned to try matters of fact, and such trials were conducted in the same manner as jury trials at common law. It is now merged in the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER. A court of special jurisdiction, which has jurisdiction of all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster. See COURTS OF THE COUNTIES PALATINE.

COURT OF THE EARL MARSHAL. In the reign of William the Conqueror the marshal was next in rank to the constable, in command of the army. When the constable's office ceased, his duties devolved upon the earl marshal. The military Court of the Constable came to be known as the Marshal's Court, or, in its modern form, Court-Martial. Aside from its criminal jurisdiction, it had much to do with questions relating to fiefs and military tenures, though not to property rights involved therein. The earl marshal is now the head of the Herald's College. Davis, Mil. Laws of U. S. 14. See Hale, Hist. C. L. 36; Grose, Mil. Antiq. See COURT OF CHIVALRY; COURTS-MARTIAL; CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND.

COURTS OF ENGLAND. The Judicature Acts (in force November 2, 1875) created the Supreme Court of Judicature. It consists of the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal, both of which are superior courts of record. In itself it performs no judicial function.

To the High Court of Justice was transferred every jurisdiction formerly vested in the High Court of Chancery, the Queen's Bench, and the Common Pleas at Westminster, the Exchequer as a court of revenue as well as a common-law court, the High Court of Admiralty, the Court of Probate, the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, the Court of Pleas at Durham, the Courts created by Commissioners of Assize, of Oyer and Terminer, and of Gaol Delivery, or any of such Commissioners, and, by Act of 1883, the jurisdiction of the London Court of Bankruptcy.

To the Court of Appeal were transferred all jurisdiction and powers of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, the Court of Appeal in Chancery of the County Palatine of Lancaster, the Court of the Lord Warden of the Stannaries, the Court of Exchequer Chamber, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upon appeal from any judgment or order of the High Court of Admiralty, and many other minor appellate jurisdictions.

The High Court of Justice now consists of three divisions: The King's Bench Division, the Chancery Division, and the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division. By the original Judicature Act each of the superior courts of common law was made a separate division of the High Court of Justice, but by an Order in Council, December 16, 1880, the Common Pleas and Exchequer Divisions were merged in the King's Bench Division, and the offices of Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas Division and Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer Division were abolished.

The courts of law give any relief which the Court of Chancery could formerly have given. Law and equity are now administered concurrently. See (1887) 12 App. Cas. 308.

The King's Bench Division. The Lord Chief Justice of England is the President, nominated by the Prime Minister; there are seventeen puisne judges appointed on the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor. They hear cases in London or at the assizes throughout England and Wales. At the commencement of each sitting, one judge is appointed to hear causes in London and one in Liverpool. They are assisted by nine Masters who have power to transact all interlocutory and much other business, by District Registrars in most of the large provincial towns and by Official Referees. It has the bankruptcy jurisdiction formerly vested in the London Court of Bankruptcy, exercised by one of the judges called the Judge in Bankruptcy.

The judges of this division frequently sit as a Divisional Court, consisting of two or more judges. Any number of such courts may sit at the same time. In civil matters its jurisdiction is almost entirely appellate. It deals with appeals from Revising Barristers, from County Courts in Bankruptcy, and from certain inferior courts; with special cases stated by the courts of petty sessions and quarter sessions in civil matters, and by the Railway Commissioners; appeals from the Mayor's Court, London, the Salford Hundred Court, the V. C. Court of Oxford, and in a few cases of appeals from a judge of the High Court in Chambers. On the crown side it deals with indictments and criminal informations, and in civil proceedings with mandamus, habeas corpus, certiorari, prohibitions, informations in the nature of quo warranto, attachments for contempt of court and petitions of right.

The Chancery Division consists of the Lord Chancellor, who is President, and six puisne judges; the latter are divided into three groups of two each. The work consists chiefly of equity business; it, however, administers law as well as equity, but it tries no cases with a jury. It deals with administering the estates of deceased persons, partnership, mortgages, charitable and private trusts, infants, and other heads of equitable jurisdiction.

The Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division consist of the President and one puisne judge. Probate matters consist of the probate of wills, but their interpretations and the administrations of the estates are in the Chancery Division. In admiralty matters it hears appeals from the County Courts.

The Court of Appeal consists of the Master of the Rolls and five Lords Justices of Appeal, with the occasional assistance of the Lord Chancellor, any ex-Lord Chancellor, the Chief Justice of England and the President of the P., D. & A. Division. It sits in two divisions; the Master of the Rolls presides in the first and the senior Lord Justice in the second. It has the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the Lord Chancellor and by the Court of Appeal in Chancery, including bankruptcy, and by the Exchequer Chamber, and in admiralty and lunacy, etc.

The House of Lords is not a part of the Supreme Court of Judicature. When sitting as the supreme appellate court, it is usually composed of the Lord Chancellor, the ex-Lord Chancellor, if any, and the six Lords of Appeal in Ordinary; peers who have held high judicial office are entitled to sit. At least three judges are required to form a quorum. It may summon the judges to assist in their deliberations and give their opinion on any point of law. Lay peers have, strictly speaking, a right to vote, but, since 1883, have never exercised that right. It has no original jurisdiction in ordinary civil actions; an appeal lies to it against any judgment or order of the Court of Appeal.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, as created in 1833, is a court of final appeal from the ecclesiastical courts, the courts of India, the colonies, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. It is held by the Lord Chancellor, the six Lords of appeal in Ordinary, the Privy Counsellors, and such other members of the Privy Council as have held high judicial office in the United Kingdom or the colonies.

There are other courts with local or special jurisdiction which are superior courts of record but are not part of the Supreme Court of Judicature.

The Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster is held by the V. C. of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster at Liverpool and Manchester. Within the county palatine it has the jurisdiction of the Chancery Division; it is essential that the parties to actions should be within the county palatine.

The Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Durham is held by the Chancellor of the County Palatine at Durham. Either the parties to a suit must reside in the county palatine or the property be situate there. Its jurisdiction is unlimited in amount and is similar to that of the Chancery Division.

The Court of Railway and Canal Commissioners is held by a judge of the High Court and two laymen appointed by the crown, on the nomination of the Board of Trade, one of whom must be an expert in railway matters. The judge alone decides points of law. It deals with transportation facilities, preferences, rates, etc. An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal.

The Inferior Courts of Record. The most important are the County Courts (see that title). There are nineteen borough courts, whose jurisdiction is generally limited to causes of action arising in the borough; in most of them the Recorder is the judge. The most prominent of them are: The Mayor's Court, London; the City of London Court; the Liverpool Court of Passage; the Salford Hundred Court; the Courts of Tolzey and Pie Poudre, Bristol. From the Court of Passage an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal; from the others to the King's Bench Division.

The University Courts are analogous to the borough courts, and claim exclusive jurisdiction over the members of the Universities. See CHANCELLORS' COURTS OF THE TWO UNIVERSITIES.

The Sheriff's Court is held by the undersheriff with a jury of twelve.

A Coroner's Court is held in every county, every county borough and in borough having a court of quarter sessions.

Inferior Courts Not of Record. The Revising Barrister's Court annually revises the lists of parliamentary voters, of burgesses and county electors. It is held by one barrister. An appeal lies, in certain cases, on a point of law, to the King's Bench Divisional Court, and from there, but only on special leave, to the Court of Appeal.

The Courts of Petty Sessions, which may be held by a single justice, have jurisdiction in disputes as to contracts between master and servant, or between members of friendly societies, affiliation orders and in certain matrimonial matters.

The ordinary criminal courts are: Courts of Petty Session; Courts of Quarter Session; the Assizes; the Central Criminal Court; the King's Bench Division; and the Court of Criminal Appeal. Courts of Borough Quarter Sessions are now held in 131 of the larger cities and towns, having the same jurisdiction as the Quarter Sessions in a county. The judge of each is called a Recorder (q. v.).

Peers charged with treason, felony, or misprision are tried either in the House of Lords or in the Court of the Lord High Steward.

Appeals in criminal cases from the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, the Empire of India and the colonies are heard by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Courts of Petty Sessions are held by Justices of the Peace appointed by the crown on the recommendation of the Lord Lieutenant of the county. There is no limit to the number in any county. They are unpaid. They elect their own chairmen. They hold office for life, but may be removed by the Lord Chancellor for misconduct. They are appointed for a whole county, but ordinarily act in the sessional division in or near which they reside. Any two or more may in their own division form a Capital Court of Petty Session. An appeal lies to the Court of Quarter Session or the King's Bench Division, the latter only on a point of law.

Courts of Quarter Sessions are inferior Courts of Record. All the justices of the county are justices of this court for their county; two constitute a quorum. They try by jury prisoners committed for trial by the Courts of the Petty Sessions for the county. In boroughs there is a great variety of such courts under their various charters. The judge of a borough court is called a Recorder. Appeals from the Petty Sessions are heard without a jury; the cases are reheard. The King's Bench Division may review on certiorari any proceeding of a Court of Quarter Sessions.

The Assizes are held by the judges of the High Court at the capital of each county and other assize towns. There are eight circuits. See ASSIZE.

The Central Criminal Court was created in 1834. It is the Court of Assize and Quarter Session for the City of London and its Liberties, and the Court of Assize for the Counties of London and Middlesex and certain parts of Essex, Kent and Surrey. It sits at least twelve times a year. Its judges include the Lord Chancellor, the Judges of the High Court, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Recorder and Common Serjeant of the City of London, and two Commissioners.

The King's Bench Division is the successor of the Assize Court for the ancient county of Middlesex, which could try on indictment any treason, felony, or misdemeanor committed therein, and it still has the same power, though rarely exercised. It can try any misdemeanor committed in any part of England, for which a criminal information has been filed by an officer of the crown, and any crimes committed out of England by public officials of colonies, or by officials of the crown in India. Any indictment from inferior courts may be removed by certiorari and tried there either "at bar" (by three judges), or at nisi prius (by one), before a jury of the county where the crime was committed. But this can be done only on the ground that an impartial trial could not be had in the court below, or that some difficult question of law is involved, or a special jury, or a view of certain premises, is necessary to a satisfactory trial. It has general superintendence over all inferior courts of criminal jurisdiction and can review any proceedings of a court of quarter sessions on summary jurisdiction or certiorari. Any court of summary jurisdiction may state a case setting forth the facts for the King's Bench Division and the latter may order justices of the petty sessions to state such a case. A court of quarter sessions may state a case for it on a point of law arising in some matter that has come before it on appeal from a court of petty sessions.

The Court of Criminal Appeal has jurisdiction over all criminal cases tried at Quarter Sessions, the Assizes, the Central Criminal Court, or in the King's Bench Division. It consists of the Lord Chief Justice of England and the other judges of the King's Bench Division. Not less than three judges must be present and the number must be uneven. An appeal lies to the House of Lords when the Attorney General has certified that a point of law of exceptional public importance is involved. A convicted prisoner has a right of appeal on any question of law or fact, or of mixed law and fact, if he can obtain leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal or a certificate from the judge who tried the case that it is a fit case for appeal. By leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal a prisoner can appeal against a sentence passed upon him, but in such case that the court may inflict a more serious sentence. It may quash a conviction and may enter a verdict of acquittal. In a proper case it will hear fresh evidence. It cannot grant a new trial.

The House of Lords may try any one impeached by the House of Commons for any high crime or misdemeanor; also temporal peers and peeresses accused of high treason, felony or misprision. At such trial it is presided over by a peer as Lord High Steward appointed by the crown, or in the absence of such appointment, by the Lord Chancellor. All the members of the House are entitled to be present and are equally judges of law and fact. The judges may be summoned to give their opinion on any question of law. The bishops may be present, but may not vote in capital cases. If the House of Lords is not sitting, the accused will be tried in the Court of the Lord High Steward. See that title.

The above is abridged from Odgers, Common Law. See also Halsbury's Laws of England, title Courts.

See COUNTY COURTS.

COURT OF EQUITY. A court which administers justice according to the principles of equity.

As to the constitution and jurisdiction of such courts, see COURT OF CHANCERY.

Such courts are not, strictly speaking, courts of record except when made so by statute; Yelv. 226; Evans v. Tatem, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 252, 11 Am. Dec. 717. Their decrees touch the person only; Post v. Neafie, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 36; but are conclusive between the parties; Coit v. Tracy, 8 Conn. 268, 20 Am. Dec. 110; Van Riper v. Claxton, 9 N. J. Eq. 302; Hopkins v. Lee, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 109, 5 L. Ed. 218. See Rice's Heirs v. Lowan, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 149. And as to the personality, their decrees are equal to a judgment; 2 Madd. 355; 2 Salk. 507; 1 Vern. 214; Post v. Neafie, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 35; and have preference according to priority; 3 P. Wms. 401, n.; Cas. temp. Talb. 217; 4 Bro. P. C. 287; Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 638. See Chase, Bla. Com. 843, n. 3. They are admissible in evidence between the parties; Pleasants v. Clements, 2 Leigh (Va.) 474; Goddard v. Long, 5 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 783; Randall v. Parramore, 1 Fla. 409; Whitmore v. Johnson's Heirs, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 610; and see Landers v. Beauchamp, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 493; Wardlaw v. Hammond, 9 Rich. (S. C.) 454; when properly authenticated; Barbour v. Watts, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 290; and come within the provisions of the constitution for authentication of judicial records of the various states for use as evidence in other states; Craig v. Brown, Pet. C. C. 352, Fed. Cas. No. 3,328.

An action may be brought at law on a decree of a foreign court of chancery for an ascertained sum; 1 Campb. 253; Burnett v. Wylie, Hempst. 197, Fed. Cas. No. 2172a; but not for an unascertained sum; Post v. Neafie, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 37, note; but nil debet or nul tiel record is not to be pleaded to such an action; Evans v. Tatem, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 252, 11 Am. Dec. 717. See EQUITY; COURT OF CHANCERY.

COURT OF ERROR. An expression applied especially to the court of exchequer chamber and the house of lords, as taking cognizance of error brought. Moz. & W. Dict. 3 Steph. Com. 333. It is applied in some of the United States to the court of last resort in the state. See COURT OF APPEALS.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER. In English Law. A superior court of record, administering justice in questions of law and revenue.

It was the lowest in rank of the three superior common-law courts of record, and had jurisdiction originally only of cases of injury to the revenue by withholding or non-payment. The privilege of suing and being sued in this court in personal actions was extended to the king's accountants, and then, by a fiction that the plaintiff was a debtor of the king to all personal actions. See Quo Minus, Writ of. It had formerly an equity jurisdiction, and the cases were heard before the Treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Barons. By statute in 1542 this jurisdiction was transferred to the court of chancery.

It consisted of one chief and four puisne judges or barons.

As a court of common law, it administered redress between subject and subject in all actions whatever, except real actions.

The appellate jurisdiction from this court was to the judges of the king's bench and common pleas sitting as the court of exchequer chamber, and from this latter court to the house of lords; 3 Steph. Com. 338; 3 Bla. Com. 44. Its jurisdiction has been transferred to the high court of justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. In English Law. A court for the correction and prevention of errors of law in the three superior common-law courts of the kingdom.

A court of exchequer chamber was first erected by statute 31 Edw. III. c. 12, to determine causes upon writs of error from the common-law side of the exchequer court. It consisted of the chancellor, treasurer, and the "justices and other sage persons as to them seemeth." The judges were merely assistants. A second court of exchequer chamber was instituted by statute 27 Eliz. c. 8, consisting of the justices of the common pleas and the exchequer, or any six of them, which had jurisdiction in error of cases in the king's bench. In 1830 these courts were abolished and the court of exchequer chamber substituted in their place as an intermediate court of appeal between the three common-law courts and Parliament. It consisted of the judges of the two courts which had not rendered the judgment in the court below. It is now merged in the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

There was an early practice, continuing as late as the 17th century, by which cases of difficulty in either of the three common-law courts might be adjourned to be argued before all the judges and the barons in the exchequer chamber; but the judgment was given in the court in which the proceedings had begun. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 109.

COURT OF FACULTIES. A tribunal of the archbishop in England.

It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and other mortuary matters. It has also various other powers under 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, in granting licenses, faculties, dispensations, etc., of different descriptions; as, a license to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a churchyard, to remove bodies previously buried; and it may also grant dispensations to eat flesh on days prohibited, or to ordain a deacon under age, and the like. The archbishop's office in this tribunal is called magister ad facultates; Co. 4th Inst. 337; 2 Chit. Gen. Pr. 507.

It still exists as a registry for marriage licenses. It appoints notaries.

See COURT OF ARCHES.

COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE. See FIRST INSTANCE.

COURTS OF THE FOREST. Courts held for the enforcement of the forest laws. The lowest of these was the Woodmote, or Court of Attachments (q. v.). The next was the Swanimote (q. v.). The highest was the Court of the Chief Justice (q. v.). There was also a Survey of Dogs (see REGARD) held by the Regarders of the Forest every three years for the lawing of dogs. Inderwick, King's Peace. See FOREST LAWS.

COURTS OF FRANCE. Cour de Cassation (from casser, to reverse, because it only affirms or reverses) is the highest court in France (the Tribunal des Conflits possibly excepted). It is composed of forty-five Conseillers, with one Premier Président and three Présidents de Chambre. Attached to it are sixty lawyers who are both Avoués and Avocats.

There are twenty-seven Cours d'Appel, sitting in twenty-seven different cities and each having jurisdiction over several departments; also three hundred and fifty-nine district courts of first instance, two hundred and fourteen Tribunals of Commerce, and a large number of Justices of the Peace; also a certain number of Tradesmen's Courts, Conseils de Prud'hommes.

TRIBUNAL DES CONFLITS.—This is a jurisdictional court and nothing else. A dispute as to whether a given question shall be disposed of by a government department or by the law courts is decided by this court. The Minister of Justice is President of this court, ex officio; the eight other members are taken from the Conseil d'Etat and the Cour de Cassation.

COURTS OF THE FRANCHISES. Jurisdictions in the early Norman period which rested upon royal grants—often assumed. Edward I., in 1274, sent out commissioners to enquire by what warrant different landowners were exercising their jura regalia. Those showing continued possession since the beginning of Richard I. were allowed to stand—chiefly the less important franchises; the exceptions are the palatinate jurisdictions. See COURTS OF THE COUNTIES PALATINE. There were many varieties of lesser franchises, such as those conferred by the old Saxon terms, sac and soc, infangtheft and outfangtheft, view of frankpledge. Some of these franchises were recognized as existing by the County Courts Acts, 1846-1888. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 61.

COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In American Law. A court of criminal jurisdiction, so-called in many states.

In English Law. A court of criminal jurisdiction, in England, held in each county once in every quarter of a year, but in the county of Middlesex twice a month. 4 Steph. Com. 317. When held at other times than quarterly, the sessions are called "general sessions of the peace."

It is held before two or more justices of the peace, one of whom was a justice of the quorum.

Edward III. appointed justices of the peace for each county in England and enacted that they should meet at least four times a year, and the ordinary meetings of the county court appear soon to have merged in, or been extinguished by, these quarterly meetings of justices which are now known as Quarter Sessions of the Peace. 2 Odgers, C. L. 966. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF GREAT SESSIONS IN WALES. A court formerly held in Wales; abolished by 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 70, and the Welsh judicature incorporated with that of England. 3 Bla. Com. 77; 3 Steph. Com. 317, n.

COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION. An ecclesiastical court created under the Act of Supremacy, 1 Eliz. c. 1, § 8 (1559). Its duties were to enforce the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity and to deal generally with ecclesiastical offences. It entertained all important causes of doctrine and ritual; also matters of immorality and misconduct of the clergy and laity and of recusancy and non-conformity. It had concurrent jurisdiction with the ordinary ecclesiastical court. It fell in 1640 and was not revived at the Restoration; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 375.

COURT-HOUSE. The building occupied for the purposes of a court of record. The term may be used of a place temporarily occupied for the sessions of a court, though not the regular court-house; as, a church used when the court-house was occupied by troops; Kane v. McCown, 55 Mo. 181; and see Hambright v. Brockman, 59 Mo. 52; and where the court-house was burned down, sales required by law to be at its door must be held at the ruins of the door; Waller v. Arnold, 71 Ill. 350.

COURT, HUNDRED. See HUNDRED COURT.

COURT OF HUSTINGS. The county court in the city of London.

It is held nominally before the lord mayor, recorder, and aldermen; but the recorder is practically the sole judge. It has an appellate jurisdiction of causes in the sheriff's court of London. A writ of error lies from the decisions of this court to certain commissioners (usually five of the judges of the superior courts of law), from whose judgment a writ of error lies to the house of lords. No merely personal actions can be brought in this court. See 3 Bla. Com. 80, n.; 3 Steph. Com. 293, n.; Madox, Hist. Exch. c. 20; Co. 2d Inst. 327. Since the abolition of all real and mixed actions except ejectment, the jurisdiction of this court has fallen into comparative desuetude. Pulling on Cust. Lond.

In American Law. A local court in some parts of Virginia. Smith v. Commonwealth, 6 Gratt. 696.

COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF IMPEACHMENTS. A tribunal for determining the guilt or innocence of any person impeached. In England, the House of Lords, and in this country, generally, the more select branch of the legislative assembly, constitutes a court for the trial of impeachments. A peer could always be impeached for any crime, and although Blackstone lays it down that a commoner cannot be impeached for a capital offence, but only for a high misdemeanor, the opinion seems to have prevailed that he could be impeached for high treason; 4 Bla. Com. 260; 4 Steph. Com. 299; May, Parl. Prac. c. 23.

The Commons might impeach any person before the House of Lords. The practice fell into abeyance between 1459 and 1621, and its place was taken by Acts of Attainder. There has been no instance of impeachment since 1805. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 190.

COURT FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS IN ENGLAND. A court in London only, which received the petitions of insolvent debtors and decided upon the question of granting a discharge.

It was held by the commissioners of bankruptcy; and its decisions, if in favor of a discharge, were not reversible by any other tribunal. See 3 Steph. Com. 426; 4 id. 287. Abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861.

COURT OF INQUIRY. In English Law. A court sometimes appointed by the crown to ascertain the propriety of resorting to ulterior proceedings against a party charged before a court-martial. See 2 Steph. Com. 590; 1 Coler. Bla. Com. 418, n.; 2 Brod. & B. 130. Also a court for hearing the complaints of private soldiers. Moz. & W. Diet.: Simmons, Cts. Mart. § 341.

In American Law. A court constituted by authority of the articles of war, invested with the power to examine into the nature of any transaction, accusation, or imputation against any officer or soldier.

They are not strictly courts, having no power to try and determine guilt or innocence. They are rather agencies created by statute to investigate facts and report thereon. They cannot compel the attendance of witnesses nor require them to testify; Davis, Mil. Law 220. They may be convened by any military commander who has power to convene a court-martial to try the charge which is to be inquired into. The President may convene a court of inquiry at any time; otherwise they can be convened only on the application of the officer or soldier whose conduct is in question. They are composed of from one to three commissioned officers, with a recorder. They give no opinions unless required to do so. 119th Art. of War. Their proceedings are admitted in evidence by a court-martial, in cases not capital nor extending to the dismissal of an officer, if the oral testimony cannot be obtained; 121st Art. of War.

A naval court of inquiry may be ordered by the President, Secretary of the Navy, or commander of a fleet or squadron, consisting of not more than three commissioned officers. They "have power to summon witnesses, etc., in the same manner as courts-martial, but they shall only state facts and not give their opinion unless expressly required so to do" in the convening order. The person under inquiry, or his attorney, have a right to cross-examine witnesses (R. S. § 1624). The Act of February 16, 1909, provides for subpoenas to witnesses. See COURTS-MARTIAL (naval).

COURTS OF IRELAND. The Court of Appeal consists of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer and two Lords Justices of Appeal.

The High Court of Justice. The Chancery Division consists of the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, a Judge and a Land Judge. The King's Bench Division consists of the Lord Chief Justice, the Lord Chief Baron, and five judges, one of which is a probate judge and another a judge in admiralty and bankruptcy cases.

There are 33 County Court judges and chairmen of Quarter Sessions in the different counties.

COURT OF JUSTICE SEAT. See COURT OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE IN EYRE.

COURT OF JUSTICIARY. See COURTS OF SCOTLAND.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH. The supreme court of common law in the kingdom, now merged in the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

It was one of the successors of the curia regis and received its name, it is said, because the king formerly sat in it in person, the style of the court being coram rege ipso (before the king himself). During the reign of a queen it was called the Queen's Bench, and during Cromwell's Protectorate it was called the Upper Bench. Its jurisdiction was originally confined to the correction of crimes and misdemeanors which amounted to a breach of the peace, including those trespasses which were committed with force (vi et armis), and in the commission of which there was, therefore, a breach of the peace. By aid of a fiction of the law (see COURT OF THE STEWARD AND THE MARSHAL; BILL OF MIDDLESEX), the number of actions which might be alleged to be so committed was gradually increased, until the jurisdiction extended to all actions on the case, of debt upon statutes or where fraud was alleged, and, finally, included all personal actions whatever, and the action of ejectment. See ASSUMPSIT; ARREST; ATTACHMENT. It was from its constitution, ambulatory and liable to follow the king's person, all process in this court being returnable "coram rege ubicunque tum fuerimus in Anglia" (wherever in England we [the sovereign] shall then be). It was for centuries held at Westminster. As early as Henry IV.'s reign the king could not pronounce judgment.

It consisted of a lord chief justice and four puisne or associate justices, who were, by virtue of their office, conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land.

It had original criminal jurisdiction and transferred jurisdiction from inferior courts, by Certiorari, where a fair trial could not be had in the inferior court or some difficult question of law was likely to arise; also by writ of error and motion for a new trial. Its civil jurisdiction was original and in error. The former did not exist originally in ordinary civil suits between man and man, but was attained by a fiction that the defendant was in the custody of the marshal (supra). The jurisdiction in error was by audita querela, motion for a new trial, and in respect of certain errors in the process of the court. Jurisdiction in error belonged almost exclusively to the King's Bench. It had superintendence over the proper observance of the law by officials and others by means of certain "prerogative writs": Certiorari, prohibition, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, de homini replegiando, mainprize, the writ de odio et atia (which last three were superseded by habeas corpus); 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 78.

COURT LANDS. See DEMESNE.

COURT LEET. In English Law. A court of record for a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, holden therein before the steward of the leet, for the punishment of petty offences and the preservation of the peace. Kitchin, Courts Leet.

The Sheriff's Tourn (q. v.) was the Grand Court Leet for the county.

The privilege of holding them was a franchise subsisting in the lord of the manor by prescription or charter, and might be lost by disuse. The court leet had a limited criminal jurisdiction. For some offences of a lower order, punishment by fines, amercements, or other means might be inflicted. For the higher crimes, they either found indictments which were to be tried by the higher courts, or made presentment of the case to such higher tribunals. They also took view of frank-pledge. Among other duties for the keeping of the peace, the court assisted in the election of, or, in some cases, elected certain municipal officers in the borough to which the leet was appended. A court leet is still held in many manors and a few boroughs in England; Odgers, C. L. 965.

Powell, Courts Leet; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law; Inderwick, King's Peace 11; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 568; 4 Steph. Com. 306.

It was but a specially important moot of the leta, the fraction of the hundred or wapentake, alienated into private hands. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. in Eleventh Cent. 214.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH ADMIRAL. In the earlier part of the 14th century, the Admiral possessed a disciplinary jurisdiction over his fleet. After 1340 it is reasonable to suppose that the Admiral could hold an independent court and administer justice in piracy and other maritime cases. In 1353 a case was had before the Admiral and the Council. Four years later there is the earliest distinct reference to a Court of Admiralty. There were at first several admirals and several courts. From the early 15th century there was one Lord High Admiral and one Court of Admiralty. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 313. The term admiral appears to have been first used in 1300. id.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD. If the House of Lords is not sitting, cases of impeachment and temporal peers and peeresses accused of high treason, felony or misprision are tried in the Court of the Lord High Steward. He is appointed for the occasion, and is usually the Lord Chancellor. All peers who have a right to sit and vote in Parliament must be summoned. They are the sole judges of fact, and the majority, which must consist of twelve at least, decides. The Lord High Steward has a vote, and is judge of all matters of law.

HOUSE OF LORDS; COURTS OF ENGLAND. Trials of peers before it began about 1500. See Harcourt, The Steward and Trial of Peers.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD OF THE UNIVERSITIES. In English Law. A court constituted for the trial of scholars or privileged persons connected with the university of Oxford or Cambridge who are indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem.

The court consists of the lord high steward, or his deputy nominated by the chancellor of the university and approved of by the lord high chancellor of England. The steward issues a precept to the sheriff, who returns a panel of eighteen freeholders, and another to the university beadle, who return a panel of eighteen matriculated laymen. From these panels a jury de medietate is selected, before whom the cause is tried. An indictment must first have been found by a grand jury, and cognizance claimed thereof at the first day. 3 Bla. Com. 83; 4 id. 277; 1 Steph. Com. 67; 3 id. 341; 4 id. 261. See CHANCELLORS' COURTS OF THE UNIVERSITIES.

COURT OF MAGISTRATES AND FREEHOLDERS. A court in South Carolina for the trial of slaves and free persons of color for criminal offences. Now abolished.

COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA. See COURT OF THE STEWARD AND THE MARSHAL.

COURT-MARTIAL. A military or naval tribunal, which has jurisdiction of offences against the laws of the service, military or naval, in which the offender is engaged.

Courts-martial have some of the functions of the Court of Chivalry, which title see. They exist and have their jurisdiction by virtue of the military law, the court being constituted and empowered to act in each instance by authority from a commanding officer. The general principles applicable to courts-martial in the army and navy are essentially the same. Courts-martial for the regulation of the militia are held in the various states under local statutes, which resemble in their main features those provided for in the army of the United States; and when in actual service the militia, like the regular troops, are subject to courts-martial, of which a majority of members must be militia officers (Act of May 27, 1908). Where all the members of a court-martial convened to try a volunteer officer are officers of the regular army, the court is illegal; McClaghry v. Deming, 186 U. S. 49, 22 Sup. Ct. 786, 46 L. Ed. 1049 (considering at length the historical relations of volunteers to the regular army and approving Deming v. McClaghry, 113 Fed. 639, 51 C. C. A. 349).

ARMY COURTS-MARTIAL.—By Act of March 2, 1913, it is provided that after July 1, 1913, courts-martial shall be of three kinds: 1. General Courts-Martial (consisting of any number of officers from 5 to 13 inclusive) may try any person, subject to military offence, punishable by the Articles of War, and any other person who by statute or the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunal.

Special Courts-Martial (consisting of any number of officers from 3 to 5 inclusive) shall have power to try any person subject to military law, except an officer, for any crime or offence not capital, punishable by the Articles of War, but the President may make regulations excepting from their jurisdiction any class or classes of persons. They have power to adjudge punishment, not to exceed confinement at hard labor for 6 months or forfeiture of pay, or both, with reduction to the ranks of non-commissioned officers and reduction in classification of first-class privates.

Summary Courts-Martial (one officer) may try any soldier, except one having a certificate of eligibility to promotion, for any crime or offence not capital, punishable by the Articles of War. But non-commissioned officers shall not, if they object, be tried without the authority of officers competent to bring them to trial before a General Court-Martial. They may adjudge punishments not to exceed confinement at hard labor for 3 months or forfeiture of 3 months pay, or both, with reduction to the ranks as aforesaid; but when the Summary Court-Martial is also the commanding officer, confinement or forfeiture of pay for more than one month, must be approved by superior authority.

Art. 74 provides that officers who may appoint a court-martial shall be competent to appoint a judge-advocate for the same. He withdraws when the court sits in closed session. His advice must be given in open court. U. S. R. S. § 1342.

The jurisdiction of such courts is limited to offences against the military law (which title see) committed by individuals in the service; Smith v. Shaw, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 257; which latter term includes sutlers, retainers to the camp, and persons serving with the army in the field; 60th Art. of War; and persons employed in a quasi-military capacity with its troops in time of war and on its theatre; Davis, Mil. L. 478.

While a district is under martial law, by proclamation of the executive, as for rebellion, they may take jurisdiction of offences which are cognizable by the civil courts only in time of peace; 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 137. This rule is said by American writers to apply where the army passes into a district where there are no civil courts in existence; Benet, Mil. Law 15.

Military commissions organized during the Civil War, in a state not invaded and not engaged in rebellion, in which the federal courts were not obstructed in the exercise of their judicial functions, had no jurisdiction to convict, for a criminal offence, a citizen, who was neither a resident of a rebellious state, nor a prisoner of war, nor a person in the military or naval service; and congress could not invest them with any such power; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 2, 18 L. Ed. 281. Cases arising in the land and naval forces, or in the militia in time of war or public danger, are excepted from the right of trial by jury; ibid.

The court must appear from its record to have acted within its jurisdiction; Fox v. Wood, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 143; Brooks v. Adams, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 442; Mills v. Martin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 7; Mathews v. Bowman, 25 Me. 168; Ex parte Biggers, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 69; Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. (U. S.) 134, 14 L. Ed. 75. A court-martial unlawfully convened is not a de facto court; McClaghry v. Deming, 186 U. S. 49, 22 Sup. Ct. 786, 46 L. Ed. 1049. A want of jurisdiction either of the person, Meade v. Deputy Marshall, 1 Brock. 324, Fed. Cas. No. 9,372, or of the offence, will render the members of the court and officers executing its sentence trespassers: Wise v. Withers, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 331, 2 L. Ed. 457. So, too, the members are liable to a civil action if they admit or reject evidence contrary to the rules of the common law; 2 Kent 10; V. Kennedy, Courts-Mart. 13; or award excessive or illegal punishment; V. Kennedy, Courts-Mart. 13. The President may return the proceedings with a recommendation that a more severe sentence be imposed; Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S. 563, 17 Sup. Ct. 448, 41 L. Ed. 823.

The decision and sentence of a court-martial, having jurisdiction of the person accused and of the offence charged, and acting within the scope of its lawful powers, cannot be reviewed or set aside by writ of habeas corpus; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109, 15 Sup. Ct. 773, 39 L. Ed. 914. But by habeas corpus, the legality of the action of a court-martial—whether it was legally constituted and had jurisdiction—may be enquired into; In re Reed, 100 U. S. 23, 25 L. Ed. 538.

"Courts-martial are lawful tribunals, with authority to determine finally any case over which they have jurisdiction, and their proceedings, when confirmed as provided, are not open to review by the civil tribunals, except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the military court had jurisdiction of the person and subject matter, and whether, though having such jurisdiction, it had exceeded its powers in the sentence pronounced." Carter v. Roberts, 177 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 713, 44 L. Ed. 861. Quoted with approval in Carter v. McClaghry, 183 U. S. 365, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236; Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S. 333, 347, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 51 L. Ed. 1084.

The presumptions in favor of official action preclude attack on the sentences of courts-martial, though they are courts of special or limited jurisdiction; In re Chapman, 166 U. S. 670, 17 Sup. Ct. 677, 41 L. Ed. 1154, disapproving Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 1141, 30 L. Ed. 1167. They are entitled to the same finality as to the issue involved as the judgment of a civil court; Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S. 333, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 51 L. Ed. 1084. Questions of procedure, the improper admission of evidence, and the like, are not grounds of collateral attack on the judgment of a court-martial; Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S. 553, 17 Sup. Ct. 448, 41 L. Ed. 823. Under Art. 62, general courts-martial may take cognizance of all crimes not capital committed by an officer or soldier in the territory within which he is serving; this is concurrent with civil courts; if the former first obtains jurisdiction, its judgment can be disregarded by the civil courts only for reasons affecting its jurisdiction; Grafton v. United States, 206 U. S. 333, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 51 L. Ed. 1084.

If the offence is a crime against society, the punishment provided by law may be imposed and also a dishonorable discharge; In re Mason, 105 U. S. 696, 26 L. Ed. 1213.

Acquittal by a court-martial does not bar a prosecution by the civil authorities; In re Fair, 100 Fed. 149. Acquittal in a state court on a charge of murder does not bar a trial by court-martial for "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," though based on the same act; In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. 1012.

The President, by virtue of his office as Commander-in-Chief, may appoint a general court-martial; Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S. 553, 17 Sup. Ct. 448, 41 L. Ed. 823.

The presiding officer has no command over the other members; they are all on an equality; Dig. J. Adv. Gen. 609.

No officer shall, when it can be avoided, be tried by officers inferior to him in rank. 79th Art. Whether it "can be avoided" is for the decision of the convening officer; Swaim v.

U. S., 165 U. S. 553, 17 Sup. Ct. 448, 41 L. Ed. 823.

Consent does not give jurisdiction to a court of regular officers to try officers or soldiers of other forces; McLaughry v. Deming, 186 U. S. 49, 22 Sup. Ct. 786, 46 L. Ed. 1049.

Retired army officers are subject to trial by court-martial; Murphy v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cl. 511; Closson v. U. S., 7 App. D. C. 460; so is a minor who has enlisted without consent of his parents or guardians and has deserted; Solomon v. Davenport, 87 Fed. 318, 30 C. C. A. 664. When jurisdiction has attached, an enlisted man may be tried and sentenced after his enlistment has expired; Barrett v. Hopkins, 7 Fed. 312; and his sentence carried out; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118; so of an officer after he has ceased to be such; Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S. 365, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236.

Courts-martial should in general follow the rules of evidence of the civil courts and especially of the United States criminal courts; Davis, Mil. L. 251; Town of Lebanon v. Heath, 47 N. H. 359; 2 Op. A. G. 343. Perhaps more latitude is allowed; Davis, Mil. L. 251. In England (Act of 1881) the ordinary rules of evidence must be applied. The accused is not entitled to counsel but the privilege is usually granted; Davis, Mil. L. 38.

Where a prisoner on trial for a trivial offence is absent for a day, it does not vitiate the proceedings; Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 236. Where the offence is one punishable by the civil authorities, a court-martial may inflict the same punishment and add a dishonorable discharge; Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S. 696, 26 L. Ed. 1213, cited in Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S. 382, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236.

A death sentence requires the concurrence of two-thirds of the members; Art. 96.

NAVAL COURTS-MARTIAL.—Summary courts-martial (R. S. § 1624, Act of March 2, 1885) may be ordered upon petty officers and persons of inferior ratings, by the commander of any vessel, or by the commandant of any navy-yard, naval station or marine barracks, for the trial of offences which such officer may deem deserving of greater punishment than such officer is authorized to inflict, but not sufficient to require trial by general court-martial. They consist of 3 officers not below the rank of ensign, as members, and a recorder.

The punishments which they can inflict are specified in the act. No sentence shall be carried into execution until the proceedings have been approved by the convening officer and by the commander-in-chief, or, in his absence, by the senior officer present, and, if it involves loss of pay, until approved by the Secretary of the Navy. The convening officer may remit in part or altogether, but not commute, the sentence. Any punishment which a summary court-martial may inflict may also be inflicted by a general court-martial.

No officer shall be dismissed from the service except by order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial, or, in time of peace, except in pursuance of a sentence of a general court-martial or in mitigation thereof.

A general court-martial shall consist of not more than 13 nor less than 5 commissioned officers, and as many officers, not exceeding 13, as can be convened without injury to the service (which is for the convening officer to decide); Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S. 334, 25 Sup. Ct. 440, 49 L. Ed. 780; but in no case, where it can be avoided without injury to the service, shall more than one-half, exclusive of the President, be junior to the officer to be tried.

When proceedings have been commenced, they shall not be suspended or delayed on account of the absence of any of the members, provided five or more are assembled. But where a member is absent for legal cause, the witnesses examined during his absence must be recalled and their testimony read to him and acknowledged by them to be correct, and they must be subject to such further examination as he may require. Without compliance with this rule and an entry thereon on the record, such member shall not sit again in that case.

Two-thirds must concur in a death sentence. All other sentences may be determined by a majority.

A convening officer may order a court-martial to reconsider its proceedings and sentence before it has dissolved; In re Reed, 100 U. S. 13, 25 L. Ed. 538; where it has been adjourned by the Secretary of the Navy till further orders, he may reconvene it to reconsider the proceedings; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 6 Sup. Ct. 570, 29 L. Ed. 601.

Where the sentence of an officer is dismissal from the navy (in time of peace) it is subject to the President's confirmation, disapproval or order. His action thereon is judicial; Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S. 334, 25 Sup. Ct. 440, 49 L. Ed. 780.

Deck Courts (Act of February 16, 1909) are courts for the trial of enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps for minor offences formerly triable by summary court-martial and may be ordered by the commanding officer of a naval vessel, by the commandant of a navy-yard or station, by a commanding officer of marines or by a higher naval authority. They consist of one commissioned officer only, who shall hear and determine cases and impose punishment, but not discharge from the service or impose confinement or forfeiture of pay for longer than 20 days. The officer within whose command the court sits may "remit or mitigate, but not commute, any sentence; no sentence shall be carried into effect until it shall have been so approved or mitigated, and such officer shall have power to remit any punishment." No person who objects thereto shall be tried before a deck court; in case of objection, trial shall be by summary, or by general court-martial, as may be appropriate.

The Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings or remit or mitigate the sentence imposed by any court-martial.

General courts-martial may be convened by the President, the Secretary of the Navy, by the commander-in-chief of a fleet, or squadron, and by the commanding officer of any naval station beyond the continental limits of the United States.

The use of irons as a form of punishment in the Navy is abolished, except for the purpose of safe custody, or when part of a sentence as imposed by a general court-martial. Act of May 11, 1908.

A general court-martial or court of inquiry of the Navy may issue like process to witnesses which United States courts of criminal jurisdiction within the state, etc., where the court is ordered to sit, may lawfully issue. Any person duly subpoenaed as a witness, who wilfully neglects or refuses to appear or qualify or to testify or to produce documentary evidence, is guilty of a misdemeanor, excepting persons residing beyond the state, etc., where the court is held. No witness can be compelled to incriminate himself. Depositions may be taken in certain cases.

The sentences of summary courts-martial may be carried into effect upon the approval of the senior officer present, and those of deck courts upon the approval of the convening authority or his successor in office. Act of February 16, 1909.

The ordinary rules of evidence are applied as far as justice requires and are to be departed from in cases of necessity created by the nature of the service, the constitution of the court, and its course of procedure. The accused is entitled to counsel, but he may only address the court by permission, and only in case a stenographer is employed.

No federal tribunal has jurisdiction over a naval court-martial nor can it interfere in the performance of its duties; Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S. 564, 5 Sup. Ct. 1050, 29 L. Ed. 277; Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S. 553, 17 Sup. Ct. 448, 41 L. Ed. 823.

COURT OF NISI PRIUS. A court of original civil jurisdiction in the city and county of Philadelphia, held by one of the judges of the supreme court of the state. Abolished by the constitution of 1874. See NISI PRIUS; COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

COURT OF THE OFFICIAL PRINCIPAL. See COURT OF THE ARCHES.

COURT OF ORDINARY. A court which has jurisdiction of the probate of wills and the regulation of the management of decedents' estates.

Such a court exists in Georgia (Code 1882, § 318), and formerly existed in New Jersey, South Carolina, and Texas, but has been replaced by other courts. See 2 Kent 409; ORDINARY.

COURT OF ORPHANS. The court of the lord mayor and aldermen of London, which had the care of those orphans whose parents died in London and were free of the city.

By the custom of London this court was entitled to the possession of the person, lands, and chattels of every infant whose parent was free of the city at the time of his death and who died in the city. The executor or administrator of such deceased parent was obliged to exhibit inventories of the estate of the deceased, and give security to the chamberlain for the orphan's part or share. It is now said to be fallen into disuse. 2 Steph. Com. 313; Pull. Cust. Lond. 196, Orphans' Court.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER. The name of courts of criminal jurisdiction in several of the states, as in Delaware and Pennsylvania. They were abolished in New York and New Jersey in 1895. In Pennsylvania they are held at the same time with the court of quarter sessions, as a general rule, and by the same judges. In Delaware they are specially called by a precept from the judges when there are capital felonies to be tried, and consist of the chief justice and three associate judges.

COURTS OF OYER AND TERMINER AND GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY. In English Law. Tribunals for the examination and trial of criminals.

They are held before commissioners selected by the High Court, among whom are usually two justices of that court.

Under the commission of oyer and terminer the justices try indictments previously found at the same assizes for treason, felony, or misdemeanors. Under the commission of general gaol delivery they may try and deliver every prisoner who is in gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever or before whomsoever indicted or for whatsoever crime committed. These commissioners are joined with those of assize and nisi prius and the commission of the peace. 3 Steph. Com. 352. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

In American Law. Courts of criminal jurisdiction in some states. See COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

COURT OF THE PALACE. See COURT OF THE STEWARD AND THE MARSHAL.

COURT OF PASSAGE. A court, still existing, in Liverpool, having civil jurisdiction. It is an inferior court of record.

COURT OF PECULIARS. Ecclesiastical courts which grew up in England and gradually displaced the jurisdiction of the ordinary diocesan court. There are peculiars of various descriptions in most dioceses, and in some they are very numerous: Royal, archiepiscopal, episcopal, deaconal, subdeaconal, prebendal, rectorial and vicarial. Some of them were wholly exempt from episcopal, and even archiepiscopal control. There was an appeal formerly to the Pope; in later days to the High Court of Delegates. Most of them have been abolished by legislation. 1 Holdsworth, Hist. Engl. Law 352.

COURTS OF PETTY SESSIONS. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF PIE POWDER, PY-POWDER, PIPOWDER, PIE POUDRE, or PIED-POUDRE (Fr. pied, foot, and poudre, dust or pied poudreaux [old French] pedler). A court of special jurisdiction in every fair or market, said to have been so called because the several disputes which arose were adjudged with a dispatch that suited the convenience of transitory suitors,—the men with “dusty feet.”

The word pie powder, spelled also piedpoudre and pypowder, has been considered as signifying dusty feet, pointing to the general condition of the feet of the suitors therein; Cowell; Blount; or as indicating the rapidity with which justice is administered, as rapidly as dust can fall from the foot; Co. 4th Inst. 472; or pedler's feet, as being the court of such chapmen or petty traders as resorted to fairs. It was not confined to fairs or markets, but might exist, by custom, in cities, boroughs, or villis for the collection of debts and the like; Cro. Jac. 313; Cro. Car. 46; 2 Salk. 604. Coke calls them “Courts Pedpoudrous.” 4 Inst. 272. It was an important court in his time. It was held before the steward of him who was entitled to the tolls from the market.

In an enumeration of common-law institutions which he claims were derived from the Roman law, Mr. Semmes claims that these courts owe both their origin and their name to the Roman law, “as will be seen by referring to the code l. 3, tit. 3, De Pedaneis Judicibus.” Address, Am. Bar. Assn. Rep. 1886, p. 197.

The civil jurisdiction extended to all matters of contract arising within the precinct of the fair or market during the continuance of the particular fair or market at which the court was held, the plaintiff being obliged to make oath as to the time and place. The cases were mostly trade disputes, and accordingly the decisions were law made by merchants, and a good deal of interest attached to them as decisions by juries of experts; 1 Social England 464. Disputes only could be determined which arose in the fair and in fair time; Inderwick, King's Peace 105.

The criminal jurisdiction embraced all offences committed at the particular fair or market at which the court was held. An appeal lay to the courts at Westminster. See Barrington, Stat. 337; 3 Bla. Com. 32; 3 Steph. Com. 317, n.; Skene, de verb. sig. Pede pulverosus; Bracton 334; 22 L. Q. R. 244; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 309.

The court of pie poudre is mentioned in Odgers, C. L. 1021, as being an inferior court not of record, now in existence.

COURT OF POLICIES OF INSURANCE. A court of special jurisdiction which took cognizance of cases involving claims made by those insured upon policies in the city of London.

It was organized by a commission issued yearly by the lord chancellor, by virtue of 43 Eliz. c. 12, and 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 23, to the judge of the admiralty, the recorder of London, two doctors of the civil law, two common-law lawyers, and eight merchants, empowering any three of them (one being a civilian or barrister) to determine in a summary way all causes concerning policies in the city of London. The jurisdiction was confined to actions brought by assured persons upon policies of insurance on merchandise; and an appeal lay by way of a bill to the court of chancery. The court has been long disused, and was formally abolished by stat. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. 3 Bl. Com. 74; 3 Steph. Com. 317, n.; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law 503.

COURT PREROGATIVE. See PREROGATIVE COURT.

COURT OF PROBATE. In American Law. A court which has jurisdiction of the probate of wills and the regulation of the management and settlement of decedents' estates, as well as a more or less extensive control of the estates of minors and other persons who are under the especial protection of the law. In some states, this court has also a limited jurisdiction in civil and criminal actions. For the states in which such courts exist, and the limits of their jurisdiction, see the articles on the various states.

In English Law. A court in England, established under the Probate Act of 1857, having exclusive jurisdiction of testamentary causes or proceedings relating to the validity of wills and the succession to the property of intestates. 2 Steph. Com. 192; 3 id. 346. This court is now merged in the High Court of Justice under the Judicature Act of 1873. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF PYPOWDER. See COURT OF PIE-POWDER.

COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. A court of criminal jurisdiction in the state of Pennsylvania. There is one such court in each county of the state.

Its sessions are, in general, held at the same time and by the same judges as the court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH. See COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

COURT OF RECORD. A judicial organized tribunal having attributes and exercising functions independently of the person of the magistrate designated generally to hold it, and proceeding according to the course of the common law. Ex parte Gladhill, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 171, per Shaw, C. J.

A court where the acts and proceedings are enrolled in parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony. 3 Bla. Com. 24.

A court which has jurisdiction to fine and imprison, or one having jurisdiction of civil causes above forty shillings, and proceeding according to the course of the common law. Woodman v. Somerset County, 37 Me. 29.

All courts are either of record or not of record. The possession of the right to fine and imprison for contempt was formerly considered as furnishing decisive evidence that a court was a court of record: Co. Litt. 117 b, 260 a; 1 Salk. 144; 12 Mod. 388; 2 Wms. Saund. 101a; Viner, Abr. Courts; and it is said that the erection of a new tribunal with this power renders it by that very fact a court of record; 1 Salk. 200; 12 Mod. 388; 1 Woodd. Lect. 98; 3 Bla. Com. 24, 25; but every court of record does not possess this power; 1 Sid. 145; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 25, n. The mere fact that a permanent record is kept does not, in modern law, stamp the character of the court; since many courts, as probate courts and others of limited or special jurisdiction, are obliged to keep records and yet are held to be courts not of record. See Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 519; Smith v. Morrison, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 430; Scott v. Rushman, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 212; Thomas v. Robinson, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 268; Snyder v. Wise, 10 Pa. 158; Silver Lake Bank v. Harding, 5 Ohio, 545; Bancroft v. Stanton, 7 Ala. 351; Ellis v. White, 25 Ala. 540. The definition first given above is taken from the opinion of Shaw, C. J., in Ex parte Gladhill, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 171, with an additional element not required in that case for purposes of distinction, and is believed to contain all the distinctive qualities which can be said to belong to all courts technically of record at modern law. To be a court of record, a court must have a clerk and a seal; Lewis Co. v. Adamski, 131 Wis. 311, 111 N. W. 495. As to what are courts of record and courts not of record in England, see 2 Odgers, C. L. 1021.

Courts may be at the same time of record for some purposes and not of record for others; Wheaton v. Fellows, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 376; Lester v. Redmond, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 590; Ex parte Gladhill, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 168.

Courts of record have an inherent power, independently of statutes, to make rules for the transaction of business; but such rules must not contravene the law of the land; Fullerton v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 604, 7 L. Ed. 280; Boas v. Nagle, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 253; Snyder v. Bauchman, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 336; Risher v. Thomas, 2 Mo. 98. They can be deprived of their jurisdiction by express terms of denial only; Kline v. Wood, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 298; 2 Burr. 1042; 1 W. Bla. 285. Actions upon the judgments of such courts may, under the statutes of limitations of some of the states of the United States, be brought after the lapse of the period of limitation for actions on simple contracts; and this provision has given rise to several determinations of what are and what are not courts of record. See Smith v. Morrison, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 430; Mowry v. Cheesman, 6 Gray (Mass.) 515; Lester v. Redmond, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 590; Scott v. Rushman, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 212; Ellis v. White, 25 Ala. 540; Woodman v. Somerset County, 37 Me. 29.

Under the naturalization act of the United States, "every court of record in a state having common-law jurisdiction and a seal and a clerk or prothonotary" has certain specified powers. As to what the requirements are to constitute a court of record under this act, see Carter v. Gregory, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 168; Wheaton v. Fellows, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 375.

A writ of error lies to correct erroneous proceedings in a court of record; 3 Bla. Com. 407; Gay v. Richardson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 417; but will not lie unless the court be one, technically, of record; Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 510. See WRIT OF ERROR.

COURT OF REFEREES. See REFEREES, COURT OF; LOCUS STANDI.

COURT OF REGARD. See REGARD.

COURT OF REQUESTS (called otherwise court of conscience). A court of equity for poor suitors, or for the king's servants privileged to sue there. The first record of a case is in 8 Henry VIII. Originally a standing committee of the Council, its members being the same as those of the Star Chamber. Later it became a separate court and its regular judges were styled Masters of Request. It was virtually abolished by Act of 1640; 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 208. See 3 Steph. Com. 449; Bac. Abridg.; Select Cases in the Court of Requests (Selden Society, Publ. vol. 12).

In the 17th and 18th centuries Courts of Request were established in different parts of England for the collection of small debts; by 1800, fifty-four such courts had been created by fifty-four acts of Parliament.

COURT ROLLS. The rolls of a manor court. In the 13th century landowners were beginning to catalogue their possessions and enrol the proceedings of their courts. The court rolls show that there was a large body of law systematically and regularly administered in these local Courts; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 272. See COPYHOLD; ROLL.

COURTS OF SCOTLAND. The Court of Session consists of the Inner House, and the Outer House. The former has two divisions; the Lord President and three judges constitute the first division; the Lord Justice Clerk and three judges constitute the second division. In the Outer House are five permanent Lords Ordinary, attached equally to both divisions of the court.

Court of Justiciary is a court of general criminal and limited civil jurisdiction.

It consists of the Lord Justice General, the Lord Justice Clerk, and all the members of the court of session. The kingdom is divided into three circuits, in each of which two sessions, of not less than three days each, are to be held annually. A term may be held by any two of the justices, or by the Lord Justice General alone, or in Glasgow, by a simple justice; except in Edinburgh, where three justices constitute a quorum, and four generally sit in important cases.

Its criminal jurisdiction extends to all crimes committed in any part of the kingdom; and it has the power of reviewing the sentences of all inferior criminal courts, unless excluded by statute. Alison, Pr. 25.

Its civil jurisdiction on circuits is appellate and final in cases involving not more than twelve pounds sterling.

COURT OF SESSIONS. A court of criminal jurisdiction existing in some of the states.

COURT OF SHERIFF'S TOURN. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

COURT OF STANNARIES. See STANNARY COURTS.

COURTS OF THE STAPLE. See STATUTE STAPLE.

COURT OF STAR CHAMBER. A court which was formerly held by members of the King's Council, together with two judges of the courts of common law.

The name star chamber is of uncertain origin. It has been thought to be from the Saxon steoran, to govern, alluding to the jurisdiction of the court over the crime of cosenage; and has been thought to have been given because the hall in which the court was held was full of windows, Lambard, Eiren. 148; or, according to Blackstone, because the contracts and obligations of the Jews (called Starra, which were enrolled in three places, one of which was the exchequer at Westminster) were originally kept there; 4 Bla. Com. 266, n. The room so used came to be appropriated to the Council. The derivation of Blackstone receives confirmation from the fact that this location (the exchequer) is assigned to the star chamber the first time it is mentioned. The word star acquired at some time the recognized signification of inventory or schedule. Stat. Acad. Cont. 32; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 266, n; Coke (4 Inst. 66). Sir Thomas Smith (3 Comm. c. 4), and Camden (Britannia 130), derive the name from the fact that the roof of the room where the Council sat, was ornamented with stars. "Sterred Chambre" is first referred to in 1348; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 272.

In 1487 an act relating to the King's Council provided that the Chancellor and Treasurer of England, the Keeper of the Privy Seal, or two of them, a bishop and a temporal lord of the Council, the two chief justices, or two other justices in their absence, should have jurisdiction over certain "misdoers." According to Coke and Bacon this act merely confirmed the jurisdiction of the Council and vested it in a committee. This committee became an ordinary court towards the end of the 16th century, though closely connected with the Council. It was officially styled "The Lords of the Council sitting in the Star Chamber." The jurisdiction related to matters in some way concerning the state such as piracy, prize, salvage, disputes arising in the course of trade; punishing libels, conspiracy and false accusations, riots, fraud, forgery, and enforcing the laws against recreants. In private disputes, it was open to all. It protected the weak from the oppression of great offenders. If the poor were oppressed they sought relief in the Star Chamber. Palgrave (Council 104) says that it "became indispensable for the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people."

The court became unpopular and its proceedings in political cases became tyrannical before 1640. In that year it was abolished by Parliament, together with the Council of Wales, the Council of the North, the jurisdiction of the Star Chamber exercised by the Court of the Duchy of Lancaster, and the Court of Exchequer of the County Palatine of Chester. The act provided that neither the King nor his Privy Council have, or should have, jurisdiction by English bill, petition etc. over the lands and chattels of subjects, but that the same ought to be determined in the ordinary courts of justice and by the ordinary course of law. See GRAND REMONSTRANCE.

As the act referred only to English bills or petitions, it did not affect the appellate jurisdiction of the Council over places outside the English law. To this is largely due the present Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which title see. See 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 271; Encycl. Brit., art. Star Chamber; Palgrave, Council; Scofield; Hudson, Star Chamber; 12 Am. L. Rev. 21; COURTS OF ENGLAND; PRIVY COUNCIL.

COURT OF THE STEWARD AND THE MARSHAL. A court which had cognizance of cases which arose within the Verge i. e. within 12 miles of the place where the king was actually residing. Its judges had jurisdiction as deputies of the Lord Chief Justice; when he was present, their general authority ceased. When, in 28 Edw. I., the King's Bench was ordered to follow the king, their general jurisdiction practically ceased, though they sometimes tried cases in vacation under a special commission of oyer and terminer.

As judges of the Court of the Marshalsea, the Steward and the Marshal had jurisdiction in debt and covenant (if both parties were of the King's household), and in trespass vi et armis (if one was); and it was limited to the Verge (10 Co. Rep. 71). As it was obliged to follow the king it was an extremely inconvenient court to use.

It is probable that the fiction by which the King's Bench ultimately acquired concurrent jurisdiction with the Common Pleas sprung from its early connection with this court.

Charles I. created a Court of the Palace to be held by the Steward and the Marshal, having jurisdiction over all personal actions arising within the Verge of Whitehall, but cases begun there, if of importance, were usually removed to the King's Bench or Common Pleas; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 80. The Palace Court was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101. 3 Steph. Com. 317.

COURT OF SWANMOTE or SWEINMOTE (spelled, also, Swainmote, Swaingemote; Saxon, swang, an attendant, a freeholder, and mote or gemote, a meeting).

In English Law. One of the forest courts, now obsolete, held before the verderers, as judges, by the steward, thrice in every year, —the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury.

This court had jurisdiction to inquire into grievances and oppressions committed by the officers of the forest, and also to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments, certifying the cause, in turn, under the seals of the jury, in case of conviction, to the court of justice seat for the rendition of judgment. Cowell; 3 Bla. Com. 71, 72; 3 Steph. Com. 317, n. See Inderwick, King's Peace 150; FOREST LAWS.

COURTS OF SURVEY. These are courts held in England and Wales under the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1894. The Wreck Commissioner is judge of every such court in the United Kingdom. There are a large number of associate judges in various circuits in England and Wales.

COURTS OF THE TWO UNIVERSITIES. In English Law. See CHANCELLOR'S COURTS OF THE TWO UNIVERSITIES.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

COURT OF VICAR GENERAL. A court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which the bishops of the province are confirmed. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 372.

COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES. A court of record in England, which had the supervision and regulation of inquiries concerning the profits which arose to the crown from the fruits of tenure, and to grant to heirs the delivery of their lands from the possession of their guardians.

The Court of the King's Wards was instituted by stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46, to take the place of the ancient inquisitio post mortem, and the jurisdiction of the restoration of lands to heirs on their becoming of age (livery) was added by statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 22, when it became the Court of Wards and Liveries. It was abolished in 1660.

The jurisdiction extended to the superintendence of lunatics and idiots in the king's custody, granting licenses to the king's widows to marry, and imposing fines for marrying without license; 4 Reeve, Hist. E. L. 259;

Crabb, Hist. E. L. 468; 1 Steph. Com. 183; 4 id. 40; 2 Bla. Com. 68; 3 id. 258.

COURTESY. See CURTESY.

COUSIN. The son or daughter of the brother or sister of one's father or mother.

The issue, respectively, of two brothers or two sisters, or of a brother and a sister.

Those who descend from the brother or sister of the father of the person spoken of are called paternal cousins; maternal cousins are those who are descended from the brothers or sisters of the mother. See 2 Brown, Ch. 125; 1 Sim. & S. 301; 9 Sim. 386, 457. The word is still applied in Devonshire to a nephew. 1 Ves. Jr. 73.

COUSINAGE. See COSINAGE.

COUTHUTLAUGH. He that willingly receives an outlaw and cherishes or conceals him. In ancient times he was subject to the same punishment as the outlaw. Blount.

COUTUM (Fr.). Custom; duty; toll. 1 Bla. Com. 314.

COUTUMIER (Fr.). See GRAND COUTUMIER.

COVENABLE (L. Fr.). Convenient; suitable. Anciently written convenable.

COVENANT (Lat. convenire, to come together; conventio, a coming together. It is equivalent to the factum conventum of the civil law).

In Contracts. An agreement between two or more persons, entered into by deed, whereby one of the parties promises the performance or non-performance of certain acts, or that a given state of things does or shall, or does not or shall not, exist.

A contract under seal; a deed.

Affirmative covenants are those in which the covenantor declares that something has been already done, or shall be done in the future.

Affirmative covenants do not operate to deprive covenantees of rights enjoyed independently of the covenants; Dyer 19 b; 1 Leon. 251.

Covenants against incumbrances. See COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES.

Alternative covenants are disjunctive covenants.

Auxiliary covenants are those which do not relate directly to the principal matter of contract between the parties, but to something connected with it. Those the scope of whose operations is in aid or support of the principal covenant. If the principal covenant is void, the auxiliary is discharged; Anstr. 256; Prec. Chanc. 475.

Collateral covenants are those which are entered into in connection with the grant of something, but which do not relate immediately to the thing granted: as, to pay a sum of money in gross, that the lessor shall distrain for rent on some other land than that which is demised, to build a house on the land of some third person, or the like. Platt, Cov. 69; Shepp. Touchst. 161; 4 Burr. 2439; 3 Term 393; 2 J. B. Moore 164; 5 B. & Ald. 7; 2 Wils. 27; 1 Ves. 56.

Concurrent covenants are those which are to be performed at the same time. When one party is ready and offers to perform his part, and the other refuses or neglects to perform his, he who is ready and offers has fulfilled his engagement, and may maintain an action for the default of the other, though it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act; Platt, Cov. 71; 2 Selw. N. P. 443; Dougl. 698; 18 E. L. & Eq. 81; Goodwin v. Lynn, 4 Wash. C. C. 714, Fed. Cas. No. 5,553; Denny v. Kile, 16 Mo. 450.

Declaratory covenants are those which serve to limit or direct uses. 1 Sid. 27; 1 Hob. 224.

Dependent covenants are those in which the obligation to perform one is made to depend upon the performance of the other. Covenants may be so connected that the right to insist upon the performance of one of them depends upon a prior performance on the part of the party seeking enforcement. Platt, Cov. 71; 2 Selw. N. P. 443; 1 C. B. N. S. 646; Northrup v. Northrup, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 296; Cassell v. Cooke, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 610; Smith v. Lewis, 24 Conn. 624, 63 Am. Dec. 180; Low v. Marshall, 17 Me. 232; Humphries v. Goulding, 3 Ark. 581; Caldwell v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Ala. 60, 41 Am. Dec. 36; Bailey v. White, 3 Ala. 330. To ascertain whether covenants are dependent or not, the intention of the parties is to be sought for and regarded, rather than the order or time in which the acts are to be done, or the structure of the instrument, or the arrangement of the covenant; 1 Wms. Saund. 320, n.; 5 B. & P. 223; Goodwin v. Lynn, 4 Wash. C. C. 714, Fed. Cas. No. 5,553; McCrelish v. Churchman, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 26; Grant v. Johnson, 5 N. Y. 247; Leveret v. Sherman, 1 Root (Conn.) 170; Brockenbrough v. Ward's Adm'r, 4 Rand. (Va.) 352. See note to Cutter v. Powell, 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 22.

Disjunctive covenants. Those which are for the performance of one or more of several things at the election of the covenantor or covenantee, as the case may be. Platt, Cov. 21; Harmony v. Bingham, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 209.

Executory covenants are those whose performance is to be future. Shepp. Touchst. 161.

Express covenants are those which are created by the express words of the parties to the deed declaratory of their intention; Platt, Cov. 25. The formal word covenant is not indispensably requisite for the creation of an express covenant; 5 Q. B. 683; 8 J. B. Moore 546; Marshall v. Craig, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 379, 4 Am. Dec. 647; Hallett v. Wylie, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 44, 3 Am. Dec. 457; Mitchell v. Hazen, 4 Conn. 508, 10 Am. Dec. 169; Randel v. Canal, 1 Harr. (Del.) 233. The words "I oblige," "agree," 1 Ves. 516; "I bind myself," Hardr. 178; 3 Leon. 119; have been held to be words of covenant, as are the words of a bond; 1 Ch. Cas. 194. Any words showing the intent of the parties to do or not to do a certain thing, raise an express covenant; Lovering v. Lovering, 13 N. H. 513. But words importing merely an order or direction that other persons should pay a sum of money, are not a covenant; 6 J. B. Moore 202.

Covenants for further assurance. See COVENANT FOR FURTHER ASSURANCE.

Covenants for quiet enjoyment. See COVENANT FOR QUIET ENJOYMENT.

Covenants for title are those covenants in a deed conveying land which are inserted for the purpose of securing to the grantee and covenantee the benefit of the title which the grantor and covenantor professes to convey.

Those in common use in England are four in number—of right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, against incumbrances, and for further assurance—and are held to run with the land; the covenant for seisin has not been generally in use in modern conveyances in England; Rawle, Cov. § 24. In the United States there is, in addition, a covenant of warranty, which is more commonly used than any of the others. What are "often called 'full covenants' are the covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and, almost always, of warranty—this last often taking the place of the covenant for quiet enjoyment;" Rawle, Cov. § 27. The covenants of seisin, for right to convey, and against incumbrances, are generally held to be in præsentia; if broken at all, they are broken as soon as made; Rawle, Cov. 318; 4 Kent 471; Whitney v. Dinsmore, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 128; 3 Washb. R. P. 478; see Mitch. R. P. 448; Allen v. Little, 36 Me. 170; and the various titles below for a fuller statement of the law relative to the different covenants for title.

Implied covenants or covenants in law are those which arise by intendment and construction of law from the use of certain words having a known legal operation in the creation of an estate, so that after they have had their primary operation in the creation of the estate, the law gives them a secondary force, by implying an agreement on the part of the grantor to protect and preserve the estate so by these words already created; 1 C. B. 429; Bacon, Abr. Covenant, B; Rawle, Cov. § 270, n. In Co. Litt. 139 b, it is said that "of covenants there be two kinds: a covenant personal and a covenant real; a covenant in deed and a covenant in law." In a conveyance of lands in fee, the words "grant, bargain, and sell," imply certain covenants; see 4 Kent 473; and the word "give" implies a covenant of warranty during the life of the feoffor; Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Frost v. Raymond, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 193, 2 Am. Dec. 228; Crouch v. Fowle, 9 N. H. 222, 32 Am. Dec. 350; Young v. Hargrave's Adm'r, 7 Ohio 69, pt. 2; (but this covenant and that implied from the word "grant" are abolished in England by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 14); and in a lease the use of the words "grant and demise;" Co. Litt. 384; Barney v. Keith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 502; "grant;" Cro. Eliz. 214; 1 P. & D. 360; "demise;" 4 Co. 80; 10 Mod. 162; Crouch v. Fowle, 9 N. H. 222, 32 Am. Dec. 350; Vernam v. Smith, 15 N. Y. 327; "demise;" 1 Show. 79; 1 Salk. 137; raise an implied covenant on the part of the lessor, as do "yielding and paying;" Boardman v. Harrington, 9 Vt. 151; on the part of the lessee. In regard to the covenants arising to each grantee by implication on sale of an estate with conditions, in parcels to several grantees, see Brouwer v. Jones, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 153.

Covenants in deed. Express covenants.

Covenants in gross. Such as do not run with the land.

Covenants in law. Implied covenants.

Illegal covenants are those which are expressly or impliedly forbidden by law. Covenants are absolutely void when entered into in violation of the express provisions of statutes; Hall v. Mullin, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 193; Seidenbender v. Charles' Adm'r, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 159, 8 Am. Dec. 682; Weaver v. Wallace, 9 N. J. L. 252; (see Vom); or if they are of an immoral nature; 1 B. & P. 340; Winebrinner v. Weisiger, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 35; against public policy; Ayer v. Hutchins, 4 Mass. 370, 3 Am. Dec. 232; Hodsdon v. Wilkins, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 113, 20 Am. Dec. 347; Gulick v. Ward, 10 N. J. L. 87, 18 Am. Dec. 389; Nichols v. Ruggles, 3 Day (Conn.) 145, 3 Am. Dec. 262; Clippinger v. Hepbaugh, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 315, 40 Am. Dec. 519; Cowen v. Boyce, 5 How. (Miss.) 769; Scudder v. Andrews, 2 McLean, 464, Fed. Cas. No. 12,564; Toler v. Armstrong, 4 Wash. C. C. 297, Fed. Cas. No. 14,078; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258, 6 L. Ed. 468; in general restraint of trade; Ross v. Sadgheer, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 166; Pierce v. Woodward, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 206; or fraudulent as between the parties; Duncan v. McCullough, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 483; Banorjee v. Hovey, 5 Mass. 16, 4 Am. Dec. 17; or as to third persons; Bailey v. Lewis, 3 Day (Conn.) 450; Martin v. Mathiot, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 214, 16 Am. Dec. 491; Case v. Gerrish, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 49.

Independent covenants are those the necessity of whose performance is determined entirely by the requirements of the covenant itself, without regard to other covenants between the parties relative to the same subject-matter or transactions or series of transactions.

Covenants are generally construed to be independent; Platt, Cov. 71; Barruso v. Madan, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 145; Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 438; 3 Bingh. N. S. 355; unless the undertaking on one side is in terms a condition to the stipulation of the other, and then only consistently with the intention of the parties; 3 Maule & S. 308; or unless dependency results from the nature of the acts to be done, and the order in which they must necessarily precede and follow each other in the progress of performance; Willes 496; or unless the non-performance on one side goes to the entire substance of the contract, and to the whole consideration; Grant v. Johnson, 5 N. Y. 247. If once independent, they remain so; Evans v. Harris, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 416.

Inherent covenants are those which relate directly to the land itself, or matter granted. Shepp. Touchst. 161. Distinguished from collateral covenants.

If real, they run with the land; Platt, Cov. 66.

Intransitive covenants are those the duty of performing which is limited to the covenantee himself, and does not pass over to his representative.

Joint covenants are those by which several parties agree to do or perform a thing together, or in which several persons have a joint interest as covenantees. Cheesbrough v. Agate, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; Calvert v. Bradley, 16 How. (U. S.) 580, 14 L. Ed. 1066; Capen v. Barrows, 1 Gray (Mass.) 376; Evans v. Sanders, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 291. They may be in the negative; Wing v. Chase, 35 Me. 260.

Negative covenants are those in which the party obliges himself not to do or perform some act. Courts are unwilling to construe a negative covenant a condition precedent, inasmuch as it cannot be said to be performed till a breach becomes impossible; 2 Wms. Saund. 156; 1 Mod. 64; 2 Kebl. 674.

Obligatory covenants are those which are binding on the party himself. 1 Sid. 27; 1 Kebl. 337. They are distinguished from declaratory covenants.

Personal Covenants. See PERSONAL COVENANT.

Principal covenants. Those which relate directly to the principal matter of the contract entered into between the parties. They are distinguished from auxiliary.

Real covenants. See REAL COVENANT.

Covenants of rights to convey. See COVENANT OF RIGHT TO CONVEY.

Covenants of seisin. See COVENANT OF SEISIN.

Covenants to stand seized, etc. See COVENANT TO STAND SEIZED TO USES.

Transitive covenants are those personal covenants the duty of performing which passes over to the representatives of the covenantor.

Covenants of warranty. See COVENANT OF WARRANTY.

Covenants are subject to the same rules as other contracts in regard to the qualifications of parties, the assent required, and the nature of the purpose for which the contract is entered into. See PARTIES; CONTRACTS.

No peculiar words are needed to raise an express covenant; Midgett v. Brooks, 34 N. C. 145, 55 Am. Dec. 405; 5 Q. B. 683; 3 Ex. 237, per Parke, B.; and by statute in Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, and Texas, the words grant, bargain, and sell, in conveyances in fee, unless specially restricted, amount to covenants that the grantor was seized in fee, freed from incumbrances done or suffered by him, and for quiet enjoyment against his acts; 4 Kent 473; Gratz's Lessee v. Ewalt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 95; Dickson v. Desire's Adm'r, 23 Mo. 151, 66 Am. Dec. 661; Chambers' Adm'r v. Smith's Adm'r, 23 Mo. 174; Griffin v. Reynolds, 17 Ala. 198; Prettyman v. Wilkey, 19 Ill. 235; Davis v. Tarwater, 15 Ark. 289; but do not imply any general warranty of title in Alabama, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina; 4 Kent 474; Winston v. Vaughan, 22 Ark. 72, 76 Am. Dec. 418; Rickets v. Dickens, 5 N. C. 343, 4 Am. Dec. 555; Roebuck v. Duprey, 2 Ala. 535. In Iowa, by the statute of 1843, the same rule was authorized, and upon this it was held that all covenants were express; Brown v. Tomlinson, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 525; but no such provisions are to be found in the revised code of 1884. In Ohio the statute of 1795 was almost exactly copied from the Pennsylvania statute, but was repealed in 1824 and reenacted in substance, and entirely repealed in 1831, and the latest Revised Statutes (1884), like those of Iowa, are silent on the subject. The Wisconsin statute, providing that no covenant shall be implied, makes an exception in the case of the short form of conveyance provided by statute, and declares that such a deed shall have the effect of a conveyance in fee simple to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, etc.; Rev. Stat. 1878. In Tennessee there is no statutory provision as to implied covenants, but a statutory short form of conveyance was held to authorize the broadest construction of the granting words unless their effect was specially limited by the instrument itself; Daly v. Willis, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 100. In California and North and South Dakota the same rule substantially is prescribed by statute in the first-named state, the implied covenants do not run with the land; Lawrence v. Montgomery, 37 Cal. 183. In Georgia a covenant of general warranty is held to include covenants of a right to convey, quiet enjoyment, and freedom from incumbrances; Burk v. Burk, 64 Ga.

632. See generally on this subject, Rawle, Cov. § 286.

Describing lands in a deed as bounded on a street of a certain description raises a covenant that the street shall be of that description; Loring v. Otis, 7 Gray (Mass.) 563; and that the purchaser shall have the use thereof; Moale v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 5 Md. 314, 61 Am. Dec. 276; Greenwood v. R. R., 23 N. H. 261; which binds subsequent purchasers from the grantor; Thomas v. Poole, 7 Gray (Mass.) 83.

In New York it is provided by statute that no covenants can be implied in any conveyance of real estate; 4 Kent 469; but this provision does not extend to leases for years; Tone v. Brace, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 566; Mack v. Patchin, 42 N. Y. 174, 1 Am. Rep. 506.

The New York statute has been enacted in Michigan, Minnesota, Oregon, Wisconsin, and Wyoming, and no covenants for title seem to be implied in states other than those above named. In some cases where the covenants relate to lands, the rights and liabilities of the covenantor, or covenantee, or both, pass to the assignee of the thing to which the covenant relates. In such cases the covenant is said to run with the land. If rights pass the benefit is said to run; if liabilities, the burden. Only real covenants run with the land, and these only when the covenant has entered into the consideration for which the land, or some interest therein to which the covenant is annexed, passed between the covenantor and the covenantee; 2 Sugd. Vend. 468, 484; 2 M. & K. 535; Morse v. Aldrich, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 449; Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 464; Van Rensselaer v. Bonesteel, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 366; Lyon v. Parker, 45 Me. 474; see 1 Washb. R. P. 526; and they die with the estate to which they are annexed; Lewis v. Cook, 35 N. C. 193; but an estoppel to deny passage of title is said to be sufficient; Trull v. Eastman, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 124, 37 Am. Dec. 126; and the passage of mere possession, or defeasible estate without possession, enables the covenant to run; Dickson v. Desire's Adm'r, 23 Mo. 151, 66 Am. Dec. 661; Chambers' Adm'r v. Smith's Adm'r, 23 Mo. 174.

It is said by some authorities that the benefit of a covenant to do acts upon land of the covenantee, made with the "covenantee and his assigns," will run with the land though no estate passed between the covenantor and covenantee; Rawle, Cov. 335; Year B. 42 Edw. III. 13; Allen v. Culver, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 301; but the weight of authority is otherwise; 2 Sugd. Vend. 468; Platt, Cov. 461. Covenants concerning title generally run with the land; Carter v. Denman's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. L. 260; except those that are broken before the land passed; 4 Kent 473; Swasey v. Brooks, 30 Vt. 692. See COVENANT OF SEISIN, etc. "Until breach, covenants for title, without distinction between them, run with the land to heirs and assigns. But while this is well settled, a strong current of American authority has set in favor of the position that the covenants for seisin, for right to convey, and, perhaps, against incumbrances, are what are called covenants in present.—If broken at all, their breach occurs at the moment of their creation. . . . These covenants, it is held, are then turned into a mere right of action, which is not assignable at law and can neither pass to an heir, a devisee, or a subsequent purchaser. A distinction is considered, by this class of cases, to exist, in this respect, between the covenants first named, and those for quiet enjoyment, of warranty, and for further assurance, which are held to be prospective in their character." Rawle, Cov. §§ 204, 205. See also Greenby v. Wilcocks, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 3 Am. Dec. 379.

Covenants in leases, by virtue of the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 34, which has been reenacted in most of the states; are assignable as respects assignees of the reversion and of the lease. The lessee continues liable on express covenants after an assignment by him, but not on implied ones; 4 Term 98; but he is liable to the assignee of the lessor on implied covenants, at common law; Platt, Cov. 532; 2 Sugd. Vend. 466; Burton, R. P. § 855. See 1 Washb. R. P. 526.

In case of the assignment of lands in parcels, the assignees may recover pro rata, and the original covenantor may recover according to his share of the original estate remaining; 2 Sugd. Vend. 508; Rawle, Cov. § 215; Allen v. Little, 36 Me. 170; McClure's Ex'rs v. Gamble, 27 Pa. 288; White v. Whitney, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 87; Dickinson v. Hoomes's Adm'r, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 407; Dougherty v. Duvall's Heirs, 9 B. Monr. (Ky.) 58. But covenants are not, in general, apportionable; McClure's Ex'rs v. Gamble, 27 Pa. 288. See Spencer's case, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 206.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for breach of a contract under seal. It is one of the brevia formata of the register, and is sometimes a concurrent remedy with debt, though never with assumpsit, and is the only proper remedy where the damages are unliquidated in nature and the contract is under seal; Fitzh. N. B. 340; Chit. Pl. 112, 113; 2 Steph. N. P. 1058. As to the early history of the action, see Salmond, 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 324.

The action lies, generally, where the covenantor does some act contrary to his agreement, or fails to do or perform that which he has undertaken; 4 Dane, Abr. 115; or does that which disables him from performance; Cro. Eliz. 449; 15 Q. B. 88; Heard v. Bowers, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 455.

To take advantage of an oral agreement modifying the original covenant in an essential point, the covenant must be abandoned and assumpsit brought; Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Harlan, 27 Pa. 429; Sherwin v. R. R. Co., 24 Vt. 347.

The venue is local when the action is founded on privity of estate; 1 Wins. Saund. 241 b, n.; and transitory when it is founded upon privity of contract. As between original parties to the covenant, the action is transitory; and, by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 34, an action of covenant by an assignee of the reversion against a lessor, or by a lessee against the assignee of the reversion, is also transitory; 1 Chit. Pl. 274.

The declaration must, at common law, aver a contract under seal; 2 Ld. Raym. 1536; and either make profert thereof or excuse the omission; 3 Term 151; at least of such part as is broken; Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 436, 1 L. Ed. 808; Killian v. Herndon, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 196; and a breach or breaches; Fortenbury v. Tunstall, 5 Ark. 263; Steele v. Curle, 4 Dana (Ky.) 381; which may be by negating the words of the covenant in actions upon covenants of seisin and right to convey; Rawle, Cov. § 176; or according to the legal effect; but must set forth the incumbrance in case of a covenant against incumbrances; id. § 86; and must allege an eviction in case of warranty; id. § 155. The disturbance must be averred to have been under lawful title; id. No consideration need be averred or shown, as it is said to be implied from the seal; but performance of an act which constitutes a condition precedent to the defendant's covenant, if there be any such, must be averred; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 235; Nesbitt v. McGehee, 26 Ala. 748. The damages laid must be large enough to cover the real amount sought to be recovered; Clarke v. McNulty, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 364; Jordan v. Cooper, id. 567.

There is no plea of general issue in this action. Under non est factum, the defendant may show any facts contradicting the making of the deed; Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 422, 55 Am. Dec. 350; Agent of State Prison v. Lathrop, 1 Mich. 438; as, personal incapacity; 2 Campb. 272; that the deed was fraudulent; Lofft 457; was not delivered; 4 Esp. 255; or was not executed by all the parties; 6 Maule & S. 341.

Non infregit conventionem and nil debet have both been held insufficient; Com. Dig. Pleader, 2 V. 4. As to the effect of covenant performed, see COVENANTS PERFORMED.

The judgment is that the plaintiff recover a named sum for the damages which he has sustained by reason of the breach or breaches of covenant, together with costs.

COVENANT TO CONVEY. A covenant by which the covenantor undertakes to convey to the covenantee the estate described in the covenant, under certain circumstances.

This form of conditional alienation of lands is in frequent use; Espy v. Anderson, 14 Pa. 308; Atkins v. Bahrett, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 639; Marshall v. Haney, 4 Md. 498, 69 Am. Dec. 92; Morgan v. Smith, 11 Ill. 194; Campbell v. Gittings, 19 Ohio, 347. Substantially the same effect is secured as by a conveyance and a mortgage back for the purchase-money, with this important difference, however, that the title remains in the covenantor until he actually executes the conveyance.

The remedy for breach may be by action on the covenant; Haverstick v. Gas Co., 29 Pa. 254; but the better remedy is said to be in equity for specific performance; Poor Directors v. McFadden, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 230.

It is satisfied only by a perfect conveyance of the kind bargained for; Atkins v. Babrett, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 639; otherwise where an imperfect conveyance has been accepted; Marshall v. Haney, 4 Md. 498, 59 Am. Dec. 92.

COVENANT FOR FURTHER ASSURANCE. One by which the covenantor undertakes, at the requirement of the covenantee, to do such reasonable acts in addition to those already performed as may be necessary for the completion of the transfer made, or intended to be made. It relates both to the title of the vendor and to the instrument of conveyance, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts for supplying any defect in the former, as to remove all objections to the sufficiency and security of the latter. Platt Cov. 341.

The covenant is of frequent occurrence in English conveyances; but its use here seems to be limited to some of the middle states; 2 Washb. R. P. 648; Griffin v. Fairbrother, 10 Me. 91; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 627, 3 Am. Dec. 246; Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 134. It is usual in railroad and other corporation mortgages.

The covenantor, in execution of his covenant, is not required to do unnecessary acts; Yelv. 44; 9 Price 43. He must in equity grant a subsequently acquired title; 2 Ch. Cas. 212; 2 P. Wms. 630; must levy a fine; 16 Ves. 366; 4 Maule & S. 188; must remove a judgment or other incumbrance; 5 Taunt. 427; but a mortgagor with such covenant need not release his equity; 1 Ld. Raym. 36. It may be enforced by a bill in equity for specific performance, or an action at law to recover damages for the breach; 2 Co. 3 a; 6 Jenk. Cas. 24; Rawle, Cov. § 362; 2 Washb. R. P. 666.

COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES. One which has for its object security against those rights to, or interests in, the land granted which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate, though consistently with the passing of the fee by the deed of conveyance. See INCUMBRANCE.

The mere existence of an incumbrance constitutes a breach of this covenant; 2 Washb. R. P. 658; McLemore v. Mabson, 20 Ala. 137; without regard to the knowledge of the grantee; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242; Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; Medler v. Hiatt, 8 Ind. 171.

Such covenants, being in presenti, do not run with the land in Massachusetts and most of the other states; but the rule is otherwise, either by statute or decision in Maine, R. S. 1883, p. 697, tit. 9, § 18; Colorado, R. S. 1883, 172; Georgia, Code 1882, 672; New York, Hall v. Dean, 13 Johns. 105; Colby v. Osgood, 29 Barb. 339; Ohio, Foote v. Burnet, 10 Ohio, 327, 36 Am. Dec. 90; Minnesota, Kimball v. Bryant, 25 Minn. 496; Missouri, Magwire v. Riggin, 44 Mo. 512; Hall v. Scott Co., 7 Fed. 341, 2 McCrary 356; Indiana, Martin v. Baker, 5 Blackf. 232; Wisconsin, Mecklem v. Blake, 22 Wis. 495, 99 Am. Dec. 68 (reversing the rule adopted in Pillsbury v. Mitchell, 5 Wis. 17); Iowa, Knadler v. Sharp, 36 Ia. 232; South Carolina, Brisbane v. McCrady's Ex'rs, 1 N. & McC. 104, 9 Am. Dec. 676; Vermont, Cole v. Kimball, 52 Vt. 639; and possibly in Michigan. See Rawle, Cov. § 212. If the covenant is so linked with another covenant as to have a prospective operation it runs with the land; id. This covenant is usually coupled with that of seisin in considering this question, but it was not treated as running with the land in this country so readily as the latter; Rawle, Cov. § 212.

Yet the incumbrance may be of such a character that its enforcement may constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty; as in case of a mortgage; Hamilton v. Cutts, 4 Mass. 349, 3 Am. Dec. 222; Sprague v. Baker, 17 Mass. 586; Tufts v. Adams, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 547.

The measure of damages is the amount of injury actually sustained; Delavergne v. Norris, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 358, 5 Am. Dec. 281; Bean v. Mayo, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 94; Wyman v. Ballard, 12 Mass. 304; Batchelder v. Sturgis, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 201; Morrison v. Underwood, 20 N. H. 369; Willson v. Willson, 25 N. H. 229, 57 Am. Dec. 320; Rawle, Cov. § 188.

The covenantee may extinguish the incumbrance and recover therefor, at his election, in the absence of agreement; Lawless v. Collier's Ex'rs, 19 Mo. 480; Willson v. Willson, 25 N. H. 229, 57 Am. Dec. 320. See COVENANT; REAL COVENANT.

COVENANT OF NON-CLAIM. A covenant sometimes employed, particularly in the New England States, and in deeds of extinguishment of ground rents in Pennsylvania, that neither the vendor, nor his heirs, nor any other person, etc., shall claim any title in the premises conveyed. Rawle, Cov. § 22. It is substantially the same as the covenant of warranty, q. v.; id. § 231.

COVENANT NOT TO SUE. One entered into by a party who has a cause of action at the time of making it, by which he agrees not to sue the party liable to such action.

A perpetual covenant not to sue is one by which the covenantor agrees not to sue the covenantee at any time. Such a covenant operates as a release to the covenantee, and may be pleaded as such. Cro. Eliz. 623; Hastings v. Dickinson, 7 Mass. 153, 5 Am.

Dec. 34; Shed v. Pierce, 17 Mass. 623; Harvey v. Harvey, 3 Ind. 473; 34 L. J. Q. B. 25. And see Wolf v. Wyeth, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 149.

A covenant of this kind with one of several, jointly and severally bound, will not protect the others so bound; 12 Mod. 551; Ward v. Johnson, 6 Munf. (Va.) 6, 8 Am. Dec. 729; Walker v. McCulloch, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 421; Mason v. Jouett's Adm'r, 2 Dana (Ky.) 107; Shed v. Pierce, 17 Mass. 623. It is equivalent to a release with a reserve of remedies, and hence is properly used in composition deeds in preference to a release, which discharges all sureties and co-debtors; 3 B. & C. 361.

A covenant by one of several partners not to sue cannot be set up as a release in an action by all; 3 P. & D. 149.

A limited covenant not to sue, by which the covenantor agrees not to sue for a limited time, does not operate a release; and a breach must be taken advantage of by action; Carth. 63; 1 Show. 46; 2 Salk. 573; 11 Q. B. 852; Howland v. Marvin, 5 Cal. 501. See Keep v. Kelly, 20 Ala. 322, as to requisite consideration. See Leake, Contr. 928.

COVENANT FOR QUIET ENJOYMENT.

An assurance against the consequences of a defective title, and of any disturbances thereupon. Platt, Cov. 312; 11 East 641; Rawle, Cov. § 91. By it, when general in its terms, the covenantor stipulates at all events; 1 Mod. 101; to indemnify the covenantee against all acts committed by virtue of a paramount title; Platt, Cov. 313; 4 Co. 80 b; Cro. Car. 5; 3 Term 584; Howard v. Doolittle, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 464; Parker v. Dunn, 47 N. C. 203; Hagler v. Simpson, 44 N. C. 384; Carter v. Denman's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. L. 260; not including the acts of a mob; Surget v. Arighi, 11 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 87, 49 Am. Dec. 46; Rantin v. Robertson, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 367; nor a mere trespass by the lessor; Mayor, etc., of New York v. Mabie, 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538.

But this rule may be varied by the terms of the covenant; as where it is against acts of a particular person; Cro. Eliz. 212; 5 Maule & S. 374; or those "claiming or pretending to claim;" 10 Mod. 383; or molestation by any person. See Surget v. Arighi, 11 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 87, 49 Am. Dec. 46.

It has practically superseded the ancient doctrine of warranty as a guaranty of title, in English conveyances; 2 Washb. R. P. 661; but the latter is more common in conveyances in America; Rawle, Cov. § 91.

It occurs most frequently in leases; 1 Washb. R. P. 325; Rawle, Cov. § 91; and is usually the only covenant used in such cases; it is there held to be raised by the words grant, demise, lease, yielding and paying, give, etc.; 1 P. & D. 360; Crouch v. Fowle, 9 N. H. 222, 32 Am. Dec. 350; Vernam v. Smith, 15 N. Y. 327; 6 Bingh. 656; 4 Kent 474, n.; and exists impliedly in a parol lease; 20 E. L. & Eq. 374; Carter v. Denman's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. L. 260; see Blydenburgh v. Cothead, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 176. It is usual in ground-rent deeds in Pennsylvania; Rawle, Cov. § 91.

COVENANT OF RIGHT TO CONVEY.

An assurance by the covenantor that the grantor has sufficient capacity and title to convey the estate which he by his deed undertakes to convey.

In modern English conveyancing, this covenant has taken the place of the covenant of seisin; 2 Washb. R. P. 648. It is said to be the same as a covenant of seisin; Griffin v. Fairbrother, 10 Me. 91; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 627, 3 Am. Dec. 246; but is not necessarily so, as it includes the capacity of the grantor; T. Jones 195; Cro. Jac. 358.

The breach takes place on execution of the deed, if at all; Freem. 41; Chapman v. Holmes' Ex'rs, 10 N. J. L. 20; and the covenantee need not wait for a disturbance to bring suit; 5 Taunt. 426; but a second recovery of damages cannot be had for the same breach; Platt, Cov. 310; 1 Maule & S. 365; 4 id. 53.

COVENANT OF SEISIN. An assurance to the grantee that the grantor has the very estate, both in quantity and quality, which he professes to convey. Platt, Cov. 306. It has given place in England to the covenant of right to convey, but is in use in several states; 2 Washb. R. P. 648.

In England; 1 Maule & S. 355; 4 id. 53; and in several states of the United States; e. g. Colorado, Georgia, New York, Ohio, Minnesota and other states (see Rawle, Cov. § 211); by decisions; Martin v. Baker, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 232; Devore v. Sunderland, 17 Ohio 52, 49 Am. Dec. 442; Mecklem v. Blake, 22 Wis. 495, 99 Am. Dec. 68; Schofield v. Homestead Co., 32 Ia. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 197; Magurre v. Riffin, 44 Mo. 512; or by statute; 2 Washb. R. P. 650; this covenant runs with the land, and may be sued on for breach by an assignee; in other states it is held that a mere covenant of lawful seisin does not run with the land, but is broken, if at all, at the moment of executing the deed; Bearce v. Jackson, 4 Mass. 408; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 627, 3 Am. Dec. 246; Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Fowler v. Poling, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 303; Cushman v. Blanchard, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 269, 11 Am. Dec. 76; Wilson v. Forbes, 13 N. C. 30; Dickinson v. Hoomes's Adm'r, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 396; Kencaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 119; Bottorf v. Smith, 7 Ind. 673; Brady v. Spurek, 27 Ill. 482; Lawrence v. Montgomery, 37 Cal. 188; Pate v. Mitchell, 23 Ark. 590, 79 Am. Dec. 114. See COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES.

A covenant for indefeasible seisin is everywhere held to run with the land; Garfield v. Williams, 2 Vt. 328; Wilson v. Forbes, 13 N. C. 30; Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (Pa.)

439, 1 L. Ed. 898; Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 123; Abbott v. Allen, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 248; Smith v. Strong, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 128; Collier v. Gamble, 10 Mo. 467; and to apply to all titles adverse to the grantor's; 2 Washb. R. P. 656.

A covenant of seisin or lawful seisin, in England and most of the states, is satisfied only by an indefeasible seisin; Rawle, Cov. § 41; 7 C. B. 310; Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 106; Parker v. Brown, 15 N. H. 176; Lockwood v. Sturdevant, 6 Conn. 374; while in other states possession under a claim of right is sufficient; Catlin v. Hurlburt, 3 Vt. 403; Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Bearce v. Jackson, 4 Mass. 408; Marston v. Hobbs, 2 Mass. 439, 3 Am. Dec. 61; Wilson v. Widenham, 51 Me. 567; Montgomery v. Reed, 69 Me. 510; Watts v. Parker, 27 Ill. 229; Scott v. Twiss, 4 Neb. 133; Vancourt v. Moore, 26 Mo. 92; Backus' Adm'r v. McCoy, 3 Ohio 211, 17 Am. Dec. 585; Robinson v. Neil, 3 Ohio 525.

A covenant of seisin, of whatever form, is broken at the time of the execution of the deed if the grantor has no possession either by himself or another; and no rights can pass to the assignee of the grantee; Greenby v. Wilcocks, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 3 Am. Dec. 379; Garfield v. Williams, 2 Vt. 327; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497; Bartholomew v. Candee, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 170; Devore v. Sunderland, 17 Ohio 60, 49 Am. Dec. 442; Dickinson v. Hoomes' Adm'r, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 397; Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 430, 2 L. Ed. 666; Allen v. Little, 36 Me. 170; Abernathy v. Boazman, 24 Ala. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 459; 4 Kent 471. But it is said that this is only a technical breach, and that a cause of action for a substantial breach does not accrue, and the statute of limitations commence to run, till there has been some substantial injury; Forshay v. Shafer, 116 Ia. 302, 89 N. W. 1106; but other cases hold that the full consideration paid may be recovered immediately upon breach. The cases will be found in 8 Am. & Engl. Enc. Law 186.

The existence of an outstanding life-estate; Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 106; a material deficiency in the amount of land; Pringle v. Witten's Ex'rs, 1 Bay (S. C.) 256, 1 Am. Dec. 612; see Phipps v. Tarpley, 24 Miss. 597; non-existence of the land described; Wheelock v. Thayer, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 68; the existence of fences or other fixtures on the premises belonging to other persons, who have a right to remove them; Mott v. Palmer, 1 N. Y. 564; West v. Stewart, 7 Pa. 122; Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19 Ia. 427; or of a paramount right in another to divert a natural spring; Clark v. Conroe's Estate, 38 Vt. 471; or to prevent the grantee from damming water to a certain height when that right is reserved to him by his deed; Hall v. Gale, 20 Wis. 293; Traster v. Snelson's Adm'r, 29 Ind. 96; concurrent seisin of another as tenant in common; Wheeler v. Hatch, 12 Me. 389; Morrison v. McArthur, 43 Me. 567; adverse possession of a part by a stranger; Sedgwick v. Hollenback, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 376; a conveyance by one of two tenants in common of the entire estate (so far as his half is concerned); Downer's Adm'r v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464; constitute a breach of this covenant. But the existence of such easements or incumbrances as do not affect the seisin of the purchaser does not constitute a breach of the covenant; Rawle, Cov. § 59. For instance, the existence of a highway over a part of the land; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 449, 8 Am. Dec. 263; Lewis v. Jones, 1 Pa. 336, 44 Am. Dec. 138; Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 103, 6 Am. Dec. 216; Vaughn v. Stuyaker, 16 Ind. 340; or of a judgment, mortgage, or right of dower; Rawle, Cov. § 59; Fitzhugh v. Croghan, 2 J. Marsh. (Ky.) 430, 19 Am. Dec. 139; Tuitt v. Miller, 10 Ohio 383; Sedgwick v. Hollenback, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 380; (otherwise if the mortgagee has entered; Rawle, Cov. § 59); the removal of fixtures; Loughran v. Ross, 45 N. Y. 792, 6 Am. Rep. 173. But see Whitney v. Dinsmore, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 124.

In the execution of a power, a covenant that the power is subsisting and not revoked is substituted; Platt, Cov. 309.

COVENANT TO STAND SEISED TO USES. A covenant by means of which under the statute of uses a conveyance of an estate may be effected. Burton, R. P. §§ 136, 145.

Such a covenant cannot furnish the ground for an action of covenant broken, and in this respect resembles the ancient real covenants.

The consideration for such a covenant must be relationship either by blood or marriage; 2 Washb. R. P. 129; See Corwin v. Corwin, 6 N. Y. 342, 57 Am. Dec. 453.

As a mode of conveyance it has fallen into disuse; though the doctrine is often resorted to by courts in order to give effect to the intention of the parties who have undertaken to convey lands by deeds which are insufficient for the purpose under the rules required in other forms of conveyance; 2 Washb. R. P. 155; 2 Sand. Uses 79, 83; Wallis v. Wallis, 4 Mass. 136, 3 Am. Dec. 210; Gale v. Coburn, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 397; Allen v. Sayward, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 232, 17 Am. Dec. 221; Jackson v. Staats, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 351, 6 Am. Dec. 376; Cains' Lessee v. Jones, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 249.

COVENANT OF WARRANTY. An assurance by the grantor of an estate that the grantee shall enjoy the same without interruption by virtue of paramount title. Parker v. Dunn, 47 N. C. 203; Howard v. Doolittle, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 464; Rindskopf v. Trust Co., 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 36; Moore v. Lanham, 3 Hill (S. C.) 304.

It is not in use in English conveyances, but is in general use in the United States; 2 Washb. R. P. 659; and in several states is the only covenant in general use; Rawle, Cov. § 21; Leary v. Durham, 4 Ga. 593; Dickinson v. Hoome's Adm'r, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 353; Caldwell v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Ala. 60, 41 Am. Dec. 36.

A special warranty is not a covenant against incumbrances; Washington City Sav. Bank v. Thornton, 83 Va. 157, 2 S. E. 193. See Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 436, 1 L. Ed. 898.

The form in common use is as follows: "And I the said [grantor], for myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, do covenant with the said [grantee], his heirs and assigns, that I will, and my heirs, executors, and administrators shall, warrant and defend the same to the said [grantee], his heirs and assigns forever, against the lawful claims and demands of all persons [or, of all persons claiming by, through, or under me, but against none other]," [or other special covenant, as the case may be]. When general, it applies to lawful adverse claims of all persons whatever; when special, it applies only to certain persons or claims to which its operation is limited or restricted; 2 Washb. R. P. 665. See a form in Rawle, Cov. § 21, n.

This limitation may arise from the nature of the subject-matter of the grant; Tufts v. Adams, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 547; Wheelock v. Henshaw, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 341; Patterson's Lessee v. Pease, 5 Ohio 190.

Such covenants give the covenantee and grantee the benefit of subsequently acquired titles; Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 91, 6 Am. Dec. 355; Brown v. McCormick, 6 Watts (Pa.) 60, 31 Am. Dec. 450; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 43, 3 L. Ed. 650; Wark v. Willard, 13 N. H. 389; Patterson's Lessee v. Pease, 5 Ohio 190; Somes v. Skinner, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 52; Lawry v. Williams, 13 Me. 281; to the extent of their terms; Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39; Trull v. Eastman, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 121, 37 Am. Dec. 126; Jackson v. Hoffman, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 271; Larrabee v. Larrabee, 34 Me. 483; but not if an interest actually passes at the time of making the conveyance upon which the covenant may operate; Lewis v. Baird, 3 McLean 56, Fed. Cas. No. 8,316; Blanchard v. Brooks, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 47; Wynn v. Harmon's Devisees, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 157; in case of terms for years, as well as conveyances of greater estates; Wms. R. P. 229; 4 Kent 261, n.; Cro. Car. 109; Barney v. Keith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 502; as against the grantor and those claiming under him; 2 Washb. R. P. 479; including purchasers for value; Bates v. Norcross, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 224; Kimball v. Blaisdell, 5 N. H. 533, 22 Am. Dec. 476; Allen v. Sayward, 5 Me. 231, 17 Am. Dec. 221; Jackson v. Murray, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 201; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 53, 3 L. Ed. 650; but see Jackson v. Bradford, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 619. And this principle does not operate to prevent the grantee's action for breach of the covenant, if evicted by such title; Jarvis v. Aikens, 25 Vt. 635; Curtis v. Deering, 12 Me. 499. See Wheeler v. Wheeler, 33 Me. 347. A deed of land is not void as between the parties because of a want of consideration, and such want is no answer to an action upon a breach of covenant of warranty; Comstock v. Son, 154 Mass. 389.

In case of a release of right and title, covenants limited to those claiming under the grantor do not prevent the assertion by the grantor of a subsequently acquired title; Bell v. Twilight, 26 N. H. 401; Jackson v. Peek, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 300; Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray (Mass.) 328, 66 Am. Dec. 369; Kinsman's Lessee v. Loomis, 11 Ohio 475; Ham v. Ham, 14 Me. 351; Cole v. Persons Unknown, 43 Me. 432; Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472.

It is a real covenant, and runs with the estate in respect to which it is made, into the hands of whoever becomes the owner; 2 Washb. R. P. 659; Chal. R. P. 279; Laurence v. Senter, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 52; Marbury v. Thornton, 82 Va. 702, 1 S. E. 909; Succession of Cassidy, 40 La. Ann. 827, 5 South. 292; against the covenantor and his personal representatives; McClures' Ex'rs v. Gamble, 27 Pa. 288; Carter v. Denman's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. L. 260; see Mygatt v. Coe, 142 N. Y. 78, 36 N. E. 870, 24 L. R. A. 850; to the extent of assets received, and cannot be severed therefrom; Lewis v. Cook, 35 N. C. 193.

The covenant of warranty and that of seisin or of right to convey are not equivalent covenants. Defect of title will sustain an action upon the latter, while disturbance of possession is requisite to recover upon the former; Douglass v. Lewis, 131 U. S. 75, 9 Sup. Ct. 634, 33 L. Ed. 53. Grantors having made an express contract of warranty, cannot set up knowledge of vice in their title, to exonerate themselves from the obligation of their contract; New Orleans v. Gaines, 138 U. S. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. 428, 34 L. Ed. 1102.

The action for breach should be brought by the owner of the land and, as such, assignee of the covenant at the time it is broken; Bickford v. Page, 2 Mass. 455; Elder v. Elder, 10 Me. 81, 25 Am. Dec. 205; Thompson v. Sanders, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 357; Chase v. Weston, 12 N. H. 413; but may be by the original covenantee, if he has satisfied the owner; Withy v. Mumford, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 137; Wheeler v. Sohler, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 222; Thompson v. Sanders, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 357; Booth v. Starr, 1 Conn. 244, 6 Am. Dec. 233; Markland v. Crump, 18 N. C. 94, 27 Am. Dec. 230; Redwine v. Brown, 10 Ga. 311; Smith v. Perry, 26 Vt. 279.

To constitute a breach there must be an eviction by paramount title; Rawle, Cov. § 131; Fowler v. Poling, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 165; Evans v. Lewis, 5 Harr. (Del.) 162; Faries v. Smith's Adm'r, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 80; Norton

v. Jackson, 5 Cal. 262; Hannah v. Henderson, 4 Ind. 174; Picket's Adm'r v. Picket's Adm'r, 6 Ohio St. 525; Vancourt v. Moore, 26 Mo. 92; Moore v. Vail, 17 Ill. 185; Reed v. Pierce, 36 Me. 455, 58 Am. Dec. 761; Higgins v. Johnson, 14 Ark. 309, 60 Am. Dec. 544; Cheney v. Straube, 35 Neb. 521, 53 N. W. 479; McGregor v. Tabor (Tex.) 26 S. W. 443; Gleason v. Smith, 41 Vt. 296; which may be constructive; Curtis v. Deering, 12 Me. 499; Moore v. Vail, 17 Ill. 185; and it is sufficient if the tenant yields to the true owner, or if, the premises being vacant, such owner takes possession; St. John v. Palmer, 5 Hill. (N. Y.) 599; Hamilton v. Cutts, 4 Mass. 349, 3 Am. Dec. 222; Beebe v. Swartwout, 3 Gil. (Ill.) 162; Wilmington & R. R. Co. v. Robeson, 27 N. C. 393; Ogden v. Ball, 40 Minn. 94, 41 N. W. 453; Hodges v. Latham, 98 N. C. 239, 3 S. E. 495, 2 Am. St. Rep. 333; Succession of Cassidy, 40 La. Ann. 827, 5 South. 292; McGary v. Hastings, 39 Cal. 560, 2 Am. Rep. 456; Kellog v. Platt, 33 N. J. L. 328. But in such case the grantee must prove the existence and assertion of such paramount, outstanding, hostile title; Brown v. Corson, 16 Or. 388, 19 Pac. 66, 21 Pac. 47; Claycomb v. Munger, 51 Ill. 377; Crance v. Collenbaugh, 47 Ind. 256; Ryerson v. Chapman, 66 Me. 557; Merritt v. Morse, 108 Mass. 276; Smith v. Sprague, 40 Vt. 43; and assume the burden of proof with as much particularity as if suing in ejectment; Rawle, Cov. § 136; Thomas v. Stickle, 32 Ia. 76; Westrope v. Chambers' Estate, 51 Tex. 178; unless the adverse right has been established by a judgment or decree in a suit of which the covenantor had been properly notified; Rawle, Cov. § 136; in which case the judgment or decree will be conclusive evidence of the validity of the paramount title; id. See id. § 123 et seq.

Exercise of the right of eminent domain does not render the covenantor liable; Taylor v. Young, 71 Pa. 83; Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 452; Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 134; Brown v. Jackson, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 452, 4 L. Ed. 432.

When the covenantee is threatened with eviction, it is usual and proper for him to give notice to the covenantor to appear and defend the suit. If it appears on the record that the covenantor received the notice or if he defends the suit, recovery therein will be conclusive against him in an action by the covenantee; otherwise the question of notice will go to the jury on the facts. If no notice was given, the record of the adverse suit is not even prima facie evidence that the adverse title was paramount. Notice of the adverse suit is not indispensable to a recovery against the covenantor; Rawle, Cov. § 125.

COVENANTS PERFORMED. A plea to an action of covenant, in use in Pennsylvania, whereby the defendant, upon proper notice to the plaintiff, may give anything in evidence which he might have pleaded. Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 439, 1 L. Ed. 898; Neave v. Jenkins, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 107; Roth v. Miller, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 105. And this evidence, it seems, may be given in the circuit court without notice, unless called for; Webster v. Warren, 2 Wash. C. C. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 17,339.

COVENANTEE. One in whose favor a covenant is made. Shepp. Touch. 150.

COVENANTOR. One who becomes bound to perform a covenant.

COVENTRY ACT. The common name for the statute 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 1,—it having been enacted in consequence of an assault on Sir John Coventry in the street, and slitting his nose, in revenge, as was supposed, for some obnoxious words uttered by him in parliament.

By this statute it is enacted that if any person shall, of malice aforethought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully cut or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off the nose or lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member, of any other person, with intent to maim or disfigure him, such person, his counsellors, aiders, and abettors, shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. The act was repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31.

COVERING DEED. A trust deed executed by a trading company to secure an issue of debentures.

Such deed usually contains a conveyance to the trustees of the holders of debentures or debenture stock with provisions authorizing the company to retain possession and carry on the business until forfeiture. Simonson, Debentures, 38. It corresponds to the general corporation mortgage to secure an issue of bonds, as used in this country. They did not formerly include a charge on personal chattels because of decisions that trust deeds containing charges on personalty must be framed and registered under the Bills of Sales acts; 34 Ch. Div. 43; but it having been held that a covering deed is not subject to the registration provisions; (1891) 1 Ch. (C. A.) 627; (1896) 2 Ch. 212; they now usually contain such a charge; Simonson, Debentures, 39. See DEBENTURE.

COVERT BARON. A wife. So called from being under the protection of her husband, baron, or lord. 1 Bla. Com. 442.

COVERTURE. The condition or state of a married woman.

During coverture the civil existence of the wife is, for many purposes, merged in that of her husband; 2 Steph. Com. 263. See ABATEMENT; PARTIES; MARRIED WOMEN.

COVIN. A secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another in his rights. Co. Litt. 357b; Comyns, Dig. Covin, A; 1 Viner, Abr. 473; Mix v. Muzzy, 28 Conn. 186. See COLLUSION; DECEIT; FRAUD.

COW. In a penal statute which mentions both cows and heifers, it was held that by the term cow must be understood one that had had a calf. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 616; 1 Leach 105. See Taylor v. State, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 285.

COWARDICE. Pusillanimity; fear; misbehavior through fear in relation to some duty to be performed before an enemy. O'Brien, Court M. 142.

By both the army and navy regulations of the United States this is an offence punishable in officers or privates with death, or such other punishment as may be inflicted by a court-martial; Rev. Stat. §§ 1342, 1624.

CRAFT. Art or skill; dexterity in particular manual employment, hence the occupation or employment itself; manual art; a trade. Webster.

This word is also now applied to all kinds of sailing vessels. Owners of the Wenonah v. Bragdon, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 693. See 23 L. J. Rep. 156; 3 El. & Bl. 888.

CRANAGE. A toll paid for drawing merchandise out of vessels to the wharf; so called because the instrument used for the purpose is called a crane. 8 Co. 46.

CRASTINUM, CRASTINO (Lat. to-morrow). On the day after. The return day of writs is made the second day of the term, the first day being some saint's day, which gives its name to the term. In the law Latin, crastino (the morning, the day after) would then denote the return day. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 56. In the United States the return day is the first day of the term.

CRAVE. To ask; to demand.

The word is frequently used in pleading; as, to craveoyer of a bond on which the suit is brought; and in the settlement of accounts the accountant-general craves a credit or an allowance. 1 Chit. Pr. 520. See OYER.

CRAVEN. A word denoting defeat, and begging the mercy of the conqueror.

It was used (when used) by the vanquished party in trial by battle. Victory was obtained by the death of one of the combatants, or if either champion proved recreant—that is, yielded, and pronounced the horrible word "craven." Such a person became infamous, and was thenceforth unfit to be believed on oath. 3 Bla. Com. 340. See WAGER OF BATTLE.

CRÉANCE. In French Law. A claim; a debt; also belief, credit, faith. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1040.

CREANSOR. A creditor. Cowell.

CREATE. To create a charter is to make an entirely new one, and differs from renewing, extending, or continuing an old one. Moers v. City of Reading, 21 Pa. 188; People v. Marshall, 1 Gilm. (Ill.) 672; Syracuse

City Bank v. Davis, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 188. See McClellan v. McClellan, 65 Me. 500; Palmer v. Preston, 45 Vt. 154, 12 Am. Rep. 191.

CREDENTIALS. In International Law. The instruments which authorize and establish a public minister in his character with the state or prince to whom they are addressed. If the state or prince receive the minister, he can be received only in the quality attributed to him in his credentials. They are as it were his letter of attorney, his mandate patent, mandatum manifestum. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, § 76. See FULL POWERS; LETTER OF CREDENCE.

CREDIBILITY. Worthiness of belief. The credibility of witnesses is a question for the jury to determine, as their competency is for the court; Best, Ev. § 76; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 49, 425; Tayl. Ev. 1257. See IMPEACHMENT.

CREDIBLE WITNESS. One who, being competent to give evidence, is worthy of belief. Armory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 229; 2 Curt. Eccl. 336.

In deciding upon the credibility of a witness, it is always pertinent to consider whether he is capable of knowing thoroughly the thing about which he testifies; whether he was actually present at the transaction; whether he paid sufficient attention to qualify himself to be a reporter of it; and whether he honestly relates the affair fully as he knows it, without any purpose or desire to deceive, or to suppress or add to the truth.

In some of the states, wills must be attested by credible witnesses. In several of the states, credible witness is used, in certain connections, as synonymous with competent witness, and in Connecticut, in a statute providing for the certification of copies of records, it refers to a witness giving testimony under the sanction of the witness's oath; Dibble v. Morris, 26 Conn. 416; Hall v. Hall, 18 Ga. 40; Garland v. Crow's Ex'rs, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 24; Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350, 20 Am. Dec. 481; Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358; Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky. 350; Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 8, 42 Am. Rep. 565; Jarm. Wills, 124.

See WITNESS.

CREDIT. The ability to borrow, on the opinion conceived by the lender that he will be repaid.

A debt due in consequence of a contract of hire or borrowing of money.

The time allowed by the creditor for the payment of goods sold by him to the debtor.

That which is due to a merchant, as distinguished from debit, that which is due by him.

That influence connected with certain social positions. 20 Toullier, n. 19.

In a statute making credits the subject of taxation, the term is held to mean the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands, whether for money or other valuable thing, or for labor or services, due or to become due to the person liable to pay taxes thereon, when added together (estimating every such claim or demand at its true value in money) over and above the sum of all legal bona fide debts owing by such person; Payne v. Watterson, 37 Ohio St. 123.

See, generally, 5 Taunt. 338; Dry Dock Bank v. Trust Co., 3 N. Y. 344; Rindge v. Judson, 24 N. Y. 64, 71; People v. Loan Soc., 51 Cal. 243, 21 Am. Rep. 704.

As to the "full faith and credit" to be given in one state to the records, etc., of another state, see FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

CREDIT, BILL OF. See BILL OF CREDIT.

CREDIT INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

CREDITOR. He who has a right to require the fulfillment of an obligation or contract.

A person to whom any obligation is due. New Jersey Ins. Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. L. 300. See Pettibone v. Roberts, 2 Root (Conn.) 261.

Preferred creditors are those who, in consequence of some provision of law, are entitled to some special privilege in the order in which their claims are to be paid.

CREDITOR, JUDGMENT. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he can enforce execution.

CREDITORS' BILL. A bill in equity, filed by one or more creditors, for the purpose of collecting their debts out of assets, or under circumstances as to which an execution at law would not be available.

It is a proceeding in rem, to make effective a judgment against the debtor's property which is concealed; Houghton & Co. v. Axelsson, 64 Kan. 274, 67 Pac. 825. Such bills are usually filed by and on behalf of the complainant and all other creditors who shall come in under the decree. They may be either against the debtor in his lifetime or for an account of the assets and a due settlement of the estate of a decedent.

They are divided by Bispham (Equity) into two classes, numbered in the order here stated. In bills of the second class, or those which in effect seek for the administration of a decedent's estate, the usual decree against the executor or administrator is quod computet; it directs the master to take the accounts between the deceased and all his creditors, and to cause the creditors, upon due public notice, to come before him to prove their debts, and to take an account of all the personal estate of the deceased in the hands of the executor or administrator, and the same to be applied in payment of the debts and other charges in a due course of administration; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 546.

Generally speaking, this jurisdiction has been transferred to probate courts in most of the states, but in some states the original jurisdiction of equity over the administration of estates remains unabridged by the statutes and is concurrent with that of probate courts. See 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1154.

Creditors' suits of the other class are brought while the debtor is living and for the collection of a debt against him. This jurisdiction had its origin in the inadequacy of common-law remedies by writs of execution. These writs at common law often did not extend to estates and interests which were equitable in their nature, and creditors' suits were therefore permitted to be brought where the relief at common law by execution was ineffectual, as for the discovery of assets, to reach equitable and other interests not subject to levy and sale at law, and to set aside fraudulent conveyances.

Statutes in England and America have extended the common-law remedies and provided adequate legal relief in many cases where formerly a resort to equity was necessary; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1415.

The jurisdiction of chancery in suits brought by judgment creditors to enforce the collection of their judgments, after having exhausted their remedy at law, although it may have previously existed, is in some states expressly declared and defined by statutes.

Before a creditor can resort to the equitable estate of his debtor, he must first obtain judgment and seek to collect the debt by execution; exhausting his remedy at law; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 11 Sup. Ct. 712, 35 L. Ed. 358; Taylor v. Bowker, 111 U. S. 110, 4 Sup. Ct. 397, 28 L. Ed. 368; Newman v. Willetts, 52 Ill. 98; Lawson's Ex'r v. Grubbs's Adm'r, 44 Ga. 466; and it must appear that a judgment has been recovered, execution issued thereon and returned "nulla bona," Preston v. Colby, 117 Ill. 477, 4 N. E. 375; Taylor v. Bowker, 111 U. S. 110, 4 Sup. Ct. 397, 28 L. Ed. 368; but this rule is said to be too general; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1415; it probably would not apply where the judgment was a lien; id.; Fleming v. Grafton, 54 Miss. 79; and in the federal court the objection that the claim has not been reduced to judgment can be raised only by defendant and may be waived; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 440. A judgment cannot be questioned upon a creditor's bill brought to secure its payment; Mattingly v. Nye, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 370, 19 L. Ed. 380.

In a few jurisdictions the equitable rule has been changed by statute, so that suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances may be maintained by simple contract creditors; Builders' & Painters' Supply Co. v. Bank, 123 Ala. 203, 26 South. 311; Riggins v. Hillard, 56 Ark. 476, 20 S. W. 402, 35 Am. St. Rep. 113; Huntington v. Jones, 72 Conn. 45, 43 Atl. 564; Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 399, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156; Balls v. Balls, 69 Md. 388, 16 Atl. 18; Sandford v. Wright, 164 Mass. 85, 41 N. E. 120; Dawson Bank v. Harris, 84 N. C. 206; Greene v. Starnes, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 582; Stovall v. Bank, 78 Va. 188; Frye v. Miley, 54 W. Va. 324, 46 S. E. 135. A judgment of a court of record is ordinarily sufficient; Chalmers v. Sheehy, 132 Cal. 459, 64 Pac. 709, 84 Am. St. Rep. 62; Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70, 56 N. W.

1105; Thorp v. Leibrecht, 56 N. J. Eq. 499, 39 Atl. 361; but a judgment may be dispensed with when a creditor desires to reach assets of a deceased debtor; Mallow v. Walker, 115 Ia. 238, 88 N. W. 452, 91 Am. St. Rep. 158; or when a debtor has absconded and cannot be found within the state; First Nat. Bank of Riverside v. Eastman, 144 Cal. 487, 77 Pac. 1043, 103 Am. St. Rep. 95, 1 Ann. Cas. 626; Quarl v. Abbott, 102 Ind. 234, 1 N. E. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 662; or where the debtor is insolvent and the claim is undisputed; Talley v. Curtain, 54 Fed. 43, 4 C. C. A. 177. An attachment which creates a lien upon real property may be the foundation of a creditor's bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance; Chicago & A. Bridge Co. v. Packing Co., 46 Fed. 584; Evans v. Lough-ton, 69 Wis. 138, 33 N. W. 573. Where execution after judgment is necessary to form part of basis for a bill, it should be directed to and returned either from the county where the judgment was obtained or where the debtor resides; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mattingly, 101 Ky. 219, 40 S. W. 673; Illinois Malleable Iron Co. v. Graham, 55 Ill. App. 266.

Creditors cannot attack the interest of third parties, alleged to have been obtained by fraud, until they have gained a standing in court by legal proceedings; Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532, 29 N. W. 94; Goode v. Garrity, 75 Ia. 713, 38 N. W. 150; Tift v. Collier, 78 Ga. 194, 2 S. E. 943; McMurtry v. Masonic Temple Co., 86 Ky. 206, 5 S. W. 570.

Judgments of the federal court cannot be made the basis of a creditor's bill in a state court; Winslow v. Leland, 128 Ill. 304, 21 N. E. 588; contra, First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Sloman, 42 Neb. 350, 60 N. W. 589, 47 Am. St. Rep. 707; Chicago & A. Bridge Co. v. Fowler, 55 Kan. 17, 39 Pac. 727. The plaintiff in a creditor's bill is not concluded by sworn answer of defendant; Edwards v. Rodgers, 41 Ill. App. 405.

A creditor's bill is not maintainable against a debtor and his fraudulent grantee, after the return of an execution satisfied; Davis v. Walton, 80 Me. 461, 15 Atl. 48. A judgment creditor's bill may be framed for the double purpose of aiding an execution and to reach property not open to execution; Vanderpool v. Notley, 71 Mich. 431, 42 N. W. 680.

The debtor should be made a party; U. S. v. Howland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 108, 4 L. Ed. 526; the person who has possession of the property sought to be reached must be joined; Dobbins v. Coles, 59 N. J. Eq. 80, 45 Atl. 444; and in general all who have interests which will be affected by the decree in the property sought to be reached must be made parties; State v. Superior Court, 14 Wash. 686, 45 Pac. 670; Marshall's Ex'r v. Hall, 42 W. Va. 641, 26 S. E. 300. A single creditor may file a bill on his own behalf and he is entitled to retain the priority thereby gained over other creditors; Senter v. Williams, 61 Ark. 189, 32 S. W. 490, 54 Am. St. Rep. 200; Pullis v. Robison, 73 Mo. 201, 39 Am. Rep. 497; Clark v. Figgins, 31 W. Va. 157, 5 S. E. 643, 13 Am. St. Rep. 860 (contra, where other creditors intervene; Johnston v. Paper Co., 153 Pa. 189, 25 Atl. 560, 885); except in certain suits, where a trust or quasi-trust exists for all creditors; Fauch v. De Socarras, 56 N. J. Eq. 524, 39 Atl. 381; Coddington v. Bispham's Ex'rs, 36 N. J. Eq. 574; Baker v. Kinnaird, 94 Ky. 5, 21 S. W. 237; Day v. Washburn, 24 How. (U. S.) 355, 16 L. Ed. 712.

It is the filing of the bill and service of process after the return of execution which gives the plaintiff a specific lien; Hines v. Duncan, 79 Ala. 112, 58 Am. Rep. 580; Belth v. Porter, 119 Mich. 365, 78 N. W. 336, 75 Am. St. Rep. 402.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to sequester property in a creditor's suit, where the bill charges fraud as well as insolvency; Robinson v. Ins. Co., 162 Fed. 794. Intangible property can be reached by creditor's bill, such as patents and copyrights; Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. (U. S.) 528, 14 L. Ed. 528; Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 942; probably the majority rule is that, in the absence of statutory authorization, a creditor's bill cannot reach choses in action unless the case presents some independent ground of equity jurisdiction; Greene v. Keene, 14 R. I. 388, 51 Am. Rep. 400.

Alimony awarded to a wife cannot be applied by creditor's bill to the payment of a debt contracted before the decree of divorce; Romaine v. Chauncey, 129 N. Y. 566, 29 N. E. 826, 14 L. R. A. 712, 26 Am. St. Rep. 544; a contingent interest, such as devise under a will, may be subjected to the payment of debts; Jacob v. Howard (Ky.) 22 S. W. 332; so of any equitable interest; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. R. Co. v. McDonald, 53 Tex. 510. Fraudulent transfers of personalty may be set aside, but the bill is seldom used for this purpose, the general practice being to levy on personal property and determine the ownership by action of replevin; O'Brien v. Stambach, 101 Ia. 40, 69 N. W. 1133, 63 Am. St. Rep. 368; Pierstoff v. Jorges, 86 Wis. 128, 56 N. W. 735, 39 Am. St. Rep. 881; Highley v. Bank, 185 Ill. 565, 57 N. E. 436.

Motives of public policy prohibit a bill to reach the salary of a state official; Bank of Tennessee v. Dibrell, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 379; or of an employé of a municipal corporation; Addyston Pipe Co. v. City of Chicago, 170 Ill. 580, 48 N. E. 967, 44 L. R. A. 405; Morgan v. Rust, 100 Ga. 346, 28 S. E. 419; but if the court can ascertain that no inconvenience can result to the public in a given case, the suit may be maintained; Berton v. Anderson, 56 Ark. 476, 20 S. W. 250; Knight v. Nash, 22 Minn. 452; Pendleton v. Perkins, 49 Mo. 565. There are various statutory exemptions, such as homesteads; Jayne v. Hymer, 66 Neb. 785, 92 N. W. 1019; Hines v. Duncan, 79 Ala. 112, 58 Am. Rep. 580. Money in custodia legis, as in the hands of a clerk of court in his official capacity, cannot be made the subject of a creditor's bill; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n v. Hier, 52 Neb. 424, 72 N. W. 588; U. S. v. Eisenbeis, 88 Fed. 4. A creditor's bill will lie against municipal corporation, though the same be not subject to garnishment. See Addison Pipe & Steel Co. v. Chicago, 28 Chicago Leg. News 256.

State statutes authorizing suits in the nature of creditors' bills against corporations do not give the federal courts jurisdiction to entertain such suits when the creditor has not first exhausted his legal remedy, since the equity jurisdiction of those courts cannot be enlarged by a state statute; Morrow Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Shoe Co., 60 Fed. 341, 8 C. C. A. 652, 24 L. R. A. 417; nor will such a bill lie to obtain the seizure of the property of an insolvent corporation which has failed to collect stock subscriptions and executed an illegal trust deed, as these facts do not change the rule of those courts that simple contract creditors cannot obtain the aid of equity to effect the seizure of the debtor's property and its application to their claims; Hollins v. Coal & Iron Co., 150 U. S. 371, 14 Sup. Ct. 127, 37 L. Ed. 1113. But see Atlanta & F. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 35 Cent. L. J. 207.

See Bisph. Eq. 525-528; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 44, 7 Sup. Ct. 788, 30 L. Ed. 864; 4 Harv. L. Rev. 99; 5 id. 101; Ad. Eq. 250.

CREEK. Such small inlets of the sea, whether within the precinct or extent of a port or without, as are narrow passages, and have shore on either side of them. Callis, Sew. 56; 5 Taunt. 705.

Such inlets that though possibly for their extent and situation they might be ports, yet are either members of or dependent upon other ports.

In England the name arose thus. The king could not conveniently have a customer and comptroller in every port or haven. But such custom-officers were fixed at some eminent port; and the smaller adjacent ports became by that means creeks, or appendants of that port where these custom-officers were placed. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 726; Hale, de Portibus Maris, pt. 2, c. 1, vol. 1, p. 46; Comyns, Dig. Navigation (C); Callis, Sew. 34.

A small stream, less than a river. Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Schermerhorn v. R. Co., 38 N. Y. 103.

A creek passing through a deep level marsh and navigable by small craft, may, under legislative authority, be obstructed by a dam, or wholly filled up and converted into house-lots,—such obstructions not being in conflict with any act of congress regulating commerce; Willson v. Marsh Co., 2 Pet. (U. S.) 245, 7 L. Ed. 412; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161; Rowe v. Bridge Corp., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 344; Charlestown v. County Com'rs, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 202; Glover v. Powell, 10 N. J. Eq. 211.

CREEK NATION. See INDIAN TRIBE.

CREMATION. The act or practice of reducing a corpse to ashes by means of fire. Act Pa. 1891, June 8; P. L. 212.

To burn a dead body instead of burying it is not a misdemeanor unless it is so done as to amount to a public nuisance. If an inquest ought to be held upon a dead body it is a misdemeanor so to dispose of the body as to prevent the coroner from holding an inquest; L. R. 12 Q. B. D. 247. In L. R. 20 Ch. D. 659, it was doubted as to whether it is lawful to burn a body, but the question was not decided. See 43 Alb. L. J. 140. See DEAD BODY.

CREMENTUM COMITATUS. The increase of the county. The increase of the king's rents above the old vicontiel rents for which the sheriffs were to account. Wharton, Dict.

CREPUSCULUM. Daylight; twilight. The light which immediately precedes or follows the rising or setting of the sun. 4 Bla. Com. 224. Housebreaking during the period in which there is sunlight enough to discern a person's face (crepusculum) is not burglary; Co. 3d Inst. 63; 1 Russell, Cr. 820; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 75.

CRETIO. Time for deliberation allowed an heir (usually 100 days), to decide whether he would or would not take an inheritance. Calvinus, Lex.; Taylor, Gloss.

CREW. The word crew used in a statute in connection with master, includes officers as well as seamen. U. S. v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 16,740; U. S. v. Winn, 1 Law Rep. 63, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730a. Sometimes also the master is included; Millaudon v. Martin, 6 Rob. (La.) 534; but a passenger would not be; U. S. v. Libby, 1 W. & M. 231, Fed. Cas. No. 15,597. See FULL CREW.

CRIER (Norman, to proclaim). An officer whose duty it is to make the various proclamations in court, under the direction of the judges. The office of crier in chancery is now abolished in England. Wharton.

CRIM. CON. An abbreviation for criminal conversation, of very frequent use, denoting adultery, unlawful sexual intercourse with a married woman. Bull. N. P. 27; Bacon, Abr. Marriage (E) 2; Nixon v. Brown, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 157; 3 Bla. Com. 139.

The term is used to denote the act of adultery in a suit brought by the husband of the married woman with whom the act was committed, to recover damages of the adulterer. That the plaintiff connived at or assented to his wife's infidelity, or that he prostituted her for gain, is a complete answer to the action. But the fact that the wife's character for chastity was bad before the plaintiff married her, that he lived with her after he knew of the criminal intimacy with the defendant, that he had connived at her intimacy with other men, or that the plaintiff had been false to his wife, only go in mitigation of damages; Saunborn v. Neilson, 4 N. H. 501; Sherwood v. Titman, 55 Pa. 77; as will the fact that the wife willingly consented or threw herself in the way of her paramour; Ferguson v. Smethers, 70 Ind. 520, 36 Am. Rep. 186.

The wife cannot maintain an action for criminal conversation with her husband; and for this, among other reasons, because her husband, who is particeps criminis, must be joined with her as plaintiff. But the husband may maintain the action after a divorce granted; 2 Bish. Marr. Div. & Sep. § 727; Ratcliff v. Wales, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 63. This action is rare in the United States, and has been abolished in England by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 59. The husband may, however, in suing for a divorce, claim damages from the adulterer; 3 Steph. Com. 437. The right to an action for damages is not barred by the fact that the act was done by violence, and that a criminal action will lie; Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245, 6 N. W. 654, 38 Am. Rep. 260. See 15 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 451. That the defendant was ignorant that the woman was married is immaterial; Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 119; 4 C. & P. 499.

CRIME. An act committed or omitted in violation of a public law forbidding or commanding it.

A wrong which the government notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a criminal proceeding in its own name. 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 43. See People v. Supervisors of Ontario County, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 260; Rector v. State, 6 Ark. 187; Durr v. Howard, id. 461; Clark, Cr. Law 1. See INTENT; MENS REA.

The word crime generally denotes an offence of a deep and atrocious dye. When the act is of an inferior degree of guilt, it is called a misdemeanor; 4 Bla. Com. 4. Crime, however, is often used as comprehending misdemeanor and even as synonymous therewith, and also with offence; in short, as embracing every indictable offence; State v. Corporation of Savannah, T. U. P. Charit. (Ga.) 235, 4 Am. Dec. 708; Van Meter v. People, 60 Ill. 168; In re Bergin, 31 Wis. 383; In re Clark, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 212; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 102, 16 L. Ed. 717; In re Voorhees, 32 N. J. L. 144; People v. Board of Police Com'rs, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 510; People v. French, 102 N. Y. 583, 7 N. E. 913; but it is not synonymous with felony; County of Lehigh v. Schock, 113 Pa. 379, 7 Atl. 52.

Crimes are defined and punished by statutes and by the common law. Most common-law offences are as well known and as precisely ascertained as those which are defined by statutes; yet, from the difficulty of exactly defining and describing every act which ought to be punished, the vital and preserving principle has been adopted that all immoral acts which tend to the prejudice of the community are punishable criminally by courts of justice; 2 East 5, 21; State v. Doud, 7 Conn. 386; People v. Smith, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 258; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26.

As to "moral turpitude" as ground of deportation, see that title.

There are no common-law offences against the United States; U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S.

677, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 36 L. Ed. 591; Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419. See COMMON LAW. There can be no constructive offences, and before a man can be punished, his case must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute; U. S. v. Lacher, 134 U. S. 624, 10 Sup. Ct. 625, 33 L. Ed. 1080; Todd v. U. S., 158 U. S. 282, 15 Sup. Ct. 889, 39 L. Ed. 982.

Deliberation and premeditation to commit crime need not exist in the criminal's mind for any fixed period before the commission of the act; Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 16 Sup. Ct. 62, 40 L. Ed. 237.

A crime malum in se is an act which shocks the moral sense as being grossly immoral and injurious. With regard to some offences, such as murder, rape, arson, burglary, and larceny, there is but one sentiment in all civilized countries, which is that of unqualified condemnation. With regard to others, such as adultery, polygamy, and drunkenness, in some communities they are regarded as mala in se; while in others they are not even mala prohibita.

An offence is regarded as strictly a malum prohibitum only when, without the prohibition of a statute, the commission or omission of it would in a moral point of view be regarded as indifferent. The criminality of the act or omission consists not in the simple perpetration of the act, or the neglect to perform it, but in its being a violation of a positive law.

The nature of the offense and the amount of punishment prescribed, rather than its place in the statutes, determine whether it is to be placed among the serious or petty offenses, whether among crimes or misdemeanors; Schick v. U. S., 195 U. S. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585. The purchase or receipt for sale of oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped according to law was held a misdemeanor, not a crime; id.

A corrupt purpose, a wicked intent to do evil, is indispensable to conviction of a crime which is morally wrong. But no evil intent is essential to an offence which is a mere malum prohibitum. A simple purpose to do the act forbidden in violation of the statute is the only criminal intent requisite to a conviction of a statutory offense which is not malum in se; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 153 Fed. 1, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400.

It may be by act of omission, e. g., where a public officer, charged with the duty of rescuing bathers, neglects his duty and one is drowned.

The following is, perhaps, as complete a classification as the subject admits:

Offences against the sovereignty of the state. 1. Treason. 2. Misprision of treason.

Offences against the lives and persons of individuals. 1. Murder. 2. Manslaughter.

3. Attempts to murder or kill. 4. Mayhem. 5. Rape. 6. Robbery. 7. Kidnapping. 8. False imprisonment. 9. Abduction. 10. Assault and battery. 11. Abortion. 12. Cruelty to children.

Offences against public property. 1. Burning or destroying public property. 2. Injury to the same.

Offences against private property. 1. Arson. 2. Burglary. 3. Larceny. 4. Obtaining goods on false pretences. 5. Embezzlement. 6. Malicious mischief.

Offences against public justice. 1. Perjury. 2. Bribery. 3. Destroying public records. 4. Counterfeiting public seals. 5. Jailbreach. 6. Escape. 7. Resistance to officers. 8. Obstructing legal process. 9. Barratry. 10. Maintenance. 11. Champerty. 12. Contempt of court. 13. Oppression. 14. Extortion. 15. Suppression of evidence. 16. Compounding felony. 17. Misprision of felony.

Offences against the public peace. 1. Challenging or accepting a challenge to a duel. 2. Unlawful assembly. 3. Rout. 4. Riot. 5. Breach of the peace. 6. Libel.

Offences against chastity. 1. Sodomy. 2. Bestiality. 3. Adultery. 4. Incest. 5. Bigamy. 6. Seduction. 7. Fornication. 8. Lascivious carriage. 9. Keeping or frequenting house of ill-fame.

Offences against public policy. 1. False currency. 2. Lotteries. 3. Gambling. 4. Immoral shows. 5. Violations of the right of suffrage. 6. Destruction of game, fish, etc. 7. Nuisance.

Offences against the currency, and public and private securities. 1. Forgery. 2. Counterfeiting. 3. Passing counterfeit money.

Offences against religion, decency, and morality. 1. Blasphemy. 2. Profanity. 3. Sabbath-breaking. 4. Obscenity. 5. Cruelty to animals. 6. Drunkenness. 7. Promoting intemperance. See 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 42.

Offences against the public, individuals, or their property. 1. Conspiracy.

Under recent legislation certain new offences have been created, such as conspiracies in restraint of trade; infractions of rules affecting commerce and carriers and the like. These have been called commercial crimes; such, for instance, as infractions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

As to state compensation to one unjustly accused of crime, see RESTITUTION.

See CONTINUING OFFENCE; LETTEB; INTENT; PROSECUTOR; CRIMINAL LAW.

CRIME AGAINST NATURE. Sodomy or buggery. Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 355, 71 Am. Dec. 331.

CRIMEN FALSI. In Civil Law. A fraudulent alteration, or forgery, to conceal or alter the truth, to the prejudice of another. This crime may be committed in three ways, namely: by forgery; by false declarations or false oath,—perjury; by acts, as by dealing with false weights and measures, by altering the current coin, by making false keys, and the like; see Dig. 48. 10. 22; 34. 8. 2; Code 9. 22; 2. 5. 9. 11. 16. 17. 23. 24; Merlin, Répert.; 1 Bro. Civ. Law 426; 1 Phill. Ev. 26; 2 Stark. Ev. 715.

At Common Law. Any crime which may injuriously affect the administration of justice, by the introduction of falsehood and fraud. Johnston v. Riley, 13 Ga. 97; Webb v. State, 29 Ohio St. 351, 358; Harrison v. State, 55 Ala. 239; U. S. v. Block, 4 Sawy. 211, Fed. Cas. No. 14,609. See MAXIMS (crimen falsi dicitur, etc.).

The meaning of this term at common law is not well defined. It has been held to include forgery; 5 Mod. 74; perjury, subornation of perjury; Co. Litt. 6 b; Comyns, Dig. Testmoigne (A 5); suppression of testimony by bribery or conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness; Ry. & M. 434; conspiracy to accuse of crime; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 277; 2 Leach 496; 2 Dods. 191; barratry; 2 Salk. 690; the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing, to the prejudice of another man's right; or of a stamp, to the prejudice of the revenue; 4 Steph. Comm. (15th ed.) 119, citing 2 East P. C. Ch. xix, § 60. The effect of a conviction for a crime of this class is infamy, and incompetence to testify; Barbour v. Com., 80 Va. 288. Statutes sometimes provide what shall be such crimes.

CRIMEN LÆSÆ MAJESTATIS. See LÆSA MAJESTAS.

CRIMINA EXTRAORDINARIA. In South African Law. Certain crimes have been so called by Voet and the classification is sometimes broadly used. They include interfering with another's marital rights, seducing a girl, polluting streams, procuring abortion, blackmail and many others. The classification does not seem valuable. See 28 So. Afr. L. J. 490.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION. See CRIM. CON.

CRIMINAL INFORMATION. A criminal suit brought, without interposition of a grand jury, by the proper officer of the king or state. Cole, Cr. Inf.; 4 Bla. Com. 398. See INFORMATION.

CRIMINAL INTENT. The intent to commit a crime; malice, as evidenced by a criminal act. Black, Dict.

CRIMINAL LAW. That branch of jurisprudence which treats of crimes and offences.

From the very nature of the social compact on which all municipal law is founded, and in consequence of which every man, when he enters into society, gives up part of his natural liberty, result those laws which, in certain cases, authorize the infliction of penalties the privation of liberty and even the destruction of life with a view to the future prevention of crime and to insuring the safety and well-being of the public. Salus populi suprema lex.

The extreme importance of a knowledge of the criminal law is evident. For a mistake in point of law, which every person of discretion not only may know but is bound and presumed to know, is in criminal cases no defence. Ignorantia eorum quæ quis scire tenetur non excusat. This law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it without proof that he does know it; per Tindal, C. J., in 10 Cl. & F. 210. See U. S. v. Anthony, 11 Blatchf. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459; Hoover v. State, 59 Ala. 57; State v. Goodenow, 65 Me. 30; State v. Halsted, 39 N. J. L. 402. And this is true though the statute making an act illegal is of so recent promulgation as to make it impossible to know of its existence; Branch Bank at Mobile v. Murphy, 8 Ala. 119; Heard v. Heard, 8 Ga. 380; The Ann, 1 Gall. C. C. 62, Fed. Cas. No. 397. This doctrine has been carried so far as to include the case of a foreigner charged with a crime which was no offence in his own country; 7 C. & P. 456; Russ. & R. 4. See Sumner v. Beeler, 50 Ind. 341, 19 Am. Rep. 718. And, further, the criminal law, whether common or statute, is imperative with reference to the conduct of individuals; so that, if a statute forbids or commands a thing to be done, all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command of the statute are offences at common law, and ordinarily indictable as such; Hawk. Pl. Cr. bk. 2, c. 25, § 4; 8 Q. B. 883. An offence which may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it; U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 36 L. Ed. 591.

In seeking for the sources of our law upon this subject, when a statute punishes a crime by its legal designation, without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to resort to the common law for a definition of the crime with its distinctions and qualifications. So if an act is made criminal, but no mode of prosecution is directed or no punishment provided, the common law furnishes its aid, prescribing the mode of prosecution by indictment, and as a mode of punishment, fine, and imprisonment. This is generally designated the common law of England; but it might now be properly called the common law of this country. It was adopted by general consent when our ancestors first settled here. So far, therefore, as the rules and principles of the common law are applicable to the administration of criminal law and have not been altered and modified by legislative enactments or judicial decisions, they have the same force and effect as laws formally enacted; Tully v. Com., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 358; Com. v. Chapman, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 69. "The common law of crimes is at present that jus vacuum et incognitum against which jurists and vindicators of freedom have strenuously protested. It is to be observed that the definitions of crimes, the nature of punishments, and the forms of criminal procedure originated, for the most part, in the principles of the most ancient common law, but that most of the unwritten rules touching crimes have been modified by statutes which assume the common-law terms and definitions as if their import were familiar to the community. The common law of crimes has, partly from humane and partly from corrupt motives, been pre-eminently the sport of judicial constructions. In theory, indeed, it was made for the state of things that prevailed in this island and the kind of people that inhabited it in the reign of Richard I.; in reality, it is the patchwork of every judge in every reign, from Cœur de Lion to Victoria." Ruins of Time Exemplified in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, by Amos, Pref. x.

Some of the leading principles of the English and American system of criminal law are—First. Every man is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is shown; and if there is any reasonable doubt of his guilt, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. See Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205. Second. In general, no person can be brought to trial until a grand jury on examination of the charge has found reason to hold him for trial. Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 781, 30 L. Ed. 849. Third. The prisoner is entitled to trial by a jury of his peers, who are chosen from the body of the people with a view to impartiality, and whose decision on questions of fact is final. Fourth. The question of his guilt is to be determined without reference to his general character. By the systems of continental Europe, on the contrary, the tribunal not only examines the evidence relating to the offence, but looks at the probabilities arising from the prisoner's previous history and habits of life. Fifth. The prisoner cannot be required to criminate himself. (The general rule, however, now seems to be in jurisdictions where there is no statutory prohibition, that an accused person testifying in his own behalf may be cross-examined like any other witness; People v. Tice, 131 N. Y. 651, 30 N. E. 494, 15 L. R. A. 669; People v. Howard, 73 Mich. 10, 40 N. W. 789; Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 5 N. E. 203, 55 Am. Rep. 218; Keyes v. State, 122 Ind. 527, 23 N. E. 1097; State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 12 Pac. 406; State v. Huff, 11 Nev. 17; Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 413. See for a full discussion of this question, Rice, Ev. § 223 and note; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110.) Sixth. He cannot be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence. See Simmons v. U. S., 142 U. S. 148, 12 Sup. Ct. 171, 35 L. Ed. 968; In re Nielsen, 131 U. S. 176, 9 Sup. Ct. 672, 33 L. Ed. 118. Seventh. He cannot be punished for an act which was not an offence by the law existing at the time of its commission; nor can a severer punishment be inflicted than was declared by law at that time.

As to the identification of criminals, see ANTHROPOMETRY; ROGUE'S GALLERY.

As to circulating photographs of criminals, to assist in detecting crime, see PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION ACTS. Passed in England in 1861, for the consolidation of the criminal law of England and Ireland. 4 Steph. Com. 227. They are a codification of the modern criminal law of England. See Bruce's Archb. Pl. & Ev. in Cr. Ca. 1875.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE. The method pointed out by law for the apprehension, trial, or prosecution, and fixing the punishment of those persons who have broken or violated, or are supposed to have broken or violated, the laws prescribed for the regulation of the conduct of the people of the community, and who have thereby laid themselves liable to fine or imprisonment, or both. A. & E. Encyc. Law. See PROCEDURE.

CRIMINAL PROCESS. Process which issues to compel a person to answer for a crime or misdemeanor. Ward v. Lewis, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 26.

CRIMINALITER. Criminally; on criminal process.

CRIMINATE. To exhibit evidence of the commission of a criminal offence.

It is a rule that a witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to expose him to a penalty, or to any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge; 4 St. Tr. 6; 6 id. 649; 10 How. St. Tr. 1090; Johnson v. Goss, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 110; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.) 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143; Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 598; Parry v. Almond, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 284; State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307. Such a statement cannot be used to show guilt and a confession must be free and voluntary; In re Emery, 107 Mass. 180, 9 Am. Rep. 22. If a defendant offers himself as a witness to disprove a criminal charge, he cannot excuse himself from answering on the ground that by so doing he may criminate himself; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 235, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320. See INCRIMINATION.

An accomplice admitted to give evidence against his associates in guilt is bound to make a full and fair confession of the whole truth respecting the subject-matter of the prosecution; Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; 2 Stark. Ev. 12, note; but he is not bound to answer with respect to his share in other offences, in which he was not concerned with the prisoner; People

v. Whipple, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 721, note (a); 2 C. & P. 411.

CRIMINOLOGY. The science which treats of crimes and their prevention and punishment.

CRIMP. One who decoys and plunders sailors under cover of harboring them. Wharton.

CRITICISM. The art of judging skilfully of the merits or beauties, defects or faults, of a literary or scientific composition, or of a production of art. When the criticism is reduced to writing, the writing itself is called a criticism.

Liberty of criticism must be allowed, or there would be neither purity of taste nor of morals. Fair discussion is essentially necessary to the truth of history and the advancement of literature and science. That publication, therefore, is not a libel which has for its object not to injure the reputation of an individual, but to correct misrepresentations of facts, to refute sophistical reasoning, to expose a vicious taste for literature, or to censure that which is hostile to morality; 1 Campb. 351. As every man who publishes a book commits himself to the judgment of the public, any one may comment on his performance; if he does not step aside from the work, or introduce fiction for the purpose of condemnation, he exercises a fair and legitimate right. The critic does a good service to the public who writes down any such vapid or useless publication as should never have appeared; and, although the author may suffer a loss from it, the law does not consider such loss an injury; because it is a loss which the party ought to sustain. It is the loss of fame and profit to which he was never entitled; 1 Campb. 358, n. See 1 Esp. 28; Stark. Lib. and Sl. 228; 4 Bingh. N. S. 92; 3 Scott 340; 1 Mood. & M. 74, 187; Cooke, Def. 52; 20 Q. B. D. 275. See LIBEL; SLANDER.

CROFT. A little close adjoining a dwelling-house, and enclosed for pasture and tillage or any particular use. Jacob, Law Dict. A small place fenced off in which to keep farm-cattle. Spelman, Gloss.

CROP. See EMBLEMENTS; GROWING CROPS; AWAY-GOING CROP.

CROPPER. One who, having no interest in the land, works it in consideration of receiving a portion of the crop for his labor. Fry v. Jones, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 12; Harrison v. Ricks, 71 N. C. 7.

CROSS. A mark made by a person who is unable to write, instead of his name. See MARK.

CROSS-ACTION. An action by a defendant in an action, against the plaintiff in the same action, upon the same contract, or for the same tort. Thus, if Peter bring an action of trespass against Paul, and Paul bring another action of trespass against Peter, the subject of the dispute being an assault and battery, it is evident that Paul could not set off the assault committed upon him by Peter, in the action which Peter had brought against him; therefore a cross-action becomes necessary. 10 Ad. & E. 643.

CROSS-APPEAL. Where both parties to a judgment appeal therefrom, the appeal of each is called a cross-appeal as regards that of the other. 3 Steph. Com. 581.

CROSS-BILL. One which is brought by a defendant in a suit against a plaintiff in or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 389; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 80. It is brought either to obtain a discovery of facts, in aid of the defence to the original bill, or to obtain full and complete relief as to the matters charged in the original bill; Ayers v. Carver, 17 How. (U. S.) 595, 15 L. Ed. 179.

It is considered as a defence to the original bill, and is treated as a dependency upon the original suit; 1 Eden, Inj. 190; 3 Atk. 312; 19 E. L. & Eq. 325; Cockrell v. Warner, 14 Ark. 346; McDougald v. Dougherty, 14 Ga. 674; Slason v. Wright, 14 Vt. 208; Nelson v. Dunn, 15 Ala. 501; Kidder v. Barr, 35 N. H. 251. It is usually brought either to obtain a necessary discovery, as, for example, where the plaintiff's answer under oath is desired; 3 Swanst. 474; 3 Y. & C. 594; 2 Cox, Ch. 109; or to obtain full relief for all parties, since the defendant in a bill could originally only pray for a dismissal from court, which would not prevent subsequent suits; 1 Ves. 284; 2 Sch. & L. 9, 144; Speer v. Whitfield, 10 N. J. Eq. 107; Jones v. Smith, 14 Ill. 229; Bullock v. Brown, 20 Ga. 472; or where the defendants have conflicting interests; Pattison v. Hull, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 747; Armstrong v. Pratt, 2 Wis. 299; but may not introduce new parties; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. (U. S.) 130, 15 L. Ed. 158; unless affirmative relief is demanded and justice so requires; Brooks v. Applegate, 37 W. Va. 376, 16 S. E. 585. New parties cannot be brought in by a cross-bill; if the defendant's interest requires their presence, he should object for non-joinder and compel plaintiff to amend; Patton v. Marshall, 173 Fed. 350, 97 C. C. A. 610, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127. It is also used for the same purpose as a plea puis darrein continuance at law; 2 Ball & B. 140; 2 Atk. 177, 553; Baker v. Whiting, 1 Sto. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 786.

It should state the original bill, and the proceedings thereon, and the rights of the party exhibiting the bill which are necessary to be made the subject of a cross-litigation, on the grounds on which he resists the claims of the plaintiff in the original bill, if that is the object of the new bill; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 81; and it should not introduce new and distinct matters; Gallatien v. Cunningham, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 361.

It should be brought before publication; Sterry v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 62; Josey v. Rogers, 13 Ga. 478; and not after, —to avoid perjury; Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 250; Nelson 103.

In England it need not be brought before the same court; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 81. For the rule in the United States, see Carnochan v. Christie, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 446, 6 L. Ed. 516; Story, Eq. Pl. § 401; Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 1549.

The granting or refusing permission to file a cross-bill is largely in the discretion of the court; Huff v. Bidwell, 151 Fed. 563, 81 C. C. A. 43.

Under the Equity Rules of Supreme Court of United States (Feb. 1, 1913), matter proper for a cross-bill may be set up in the answer, with the same effect. Rule 30 (33 Sup. Ct. xxvi).

CROSS-COMPLAINT. This is allowed when a defendant has a cause of action against a co-defendant, or a person not a party to the action, and affecting the subject-matter of the action. The only real difference between a complaint and a cross-complaint, is, that the first is filed by the plaintiff and the second by the defendant. Both contain a statement of the facts, and such demands affirmative relief upon the facts stated. The difference between a counter-claim and a cross-complaint is that in the former the defendant's cause of action is against the plaintiff; and the latter, against a co-defendant, or one not a party to the action; White v. Reagan, 32 Ark. 290.

CROSS-DEMAND. A demand is so called which is preferred by B, in opposition to one already preferred against him by A.

CROSS-ERRORS. Errors assigned by the respondent in a writ of error.

CROSS-EXAMINATION. The examination of a witness by the party opposed to the party who called him, and who examined, or was entitled to examine him in chief.

The purpose of the cross-examination is to test the truthfulness, intelligence, memory, bias or interest of the witness, and any question to that end within reason is usually allowed; Briggs v. People, 219 Ill. 330, 76 N. E. 499; Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 270; Wroe v. State, 20 Ohio St. 460.

In England and some of the states, when a competent witness is called and sworn, the other party is ordinarily entitled to cross-examine him as to matters not covered by the direct examination; 1 Esp. 357; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317; Varick v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 166, 19 Am. Dec. 571; Fulton Bank v. Stafford, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 483; Aiken v. Cato, 23 Ga. 154; Mask v. State, 32 Miss. 405; see 3 C. & P. 16; 2 M. & R. 273; Aiken v. Cato, 23

Ga. 154; but see Swift v. Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 578; but it is held in other states and in the federal courts that the cross-examination must be confined to facts connected with the direct examination; Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 580, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141; Philadelphia & Trenton R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 448, 10 L. Ed. 535; Ellmaker v. Buckley, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 77; Floyd v. Board, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 75; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law, 463; Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 450; Cokely v. State, 4 Ia. 477; Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360, 54 N. W. 904; Hansen v. Miller, 145 Ill. 538, 32 N. E. 548; In re Westerfield, 96 Cal. 113, 30 Pac. 1104; Winkler v. Roeder, 23 Neb. 706, 37 N. W. 607, 8 Am. St. Rep. 155; Fulton v. Bank, 92 Pa. 112; Monongahela Water Co. v. Stewartson, 96 Pa. 436. It may extend to every fact which is part of the plaintiff's case, but not to matter of defense; Smith v. Philadelphia Traction Co., 202 Pa. 54, 51 Atl. 345; New York Iron Mine v. Bank, 39 Mich. 644; affirmative defenses cannot be introduced on cross-examination; McCrea v. Parsons, 112 Fed. 917, 50 C. C. A. 612.

Inquiry may be made in regard to collateral facts in the discretion of the judge; 7 C. & P. 389; Lawrence v. Barker, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 305; Huntsville Belt Line & Monte Sano Ry. Co. v. Corpening & Co., 97 Ala. 681, 12 South. 295; but not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witness by other evidence; 7 C. & P. 789; Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 157; Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 42. And see Howard v. Ins. Co., 4 Denio (N. Y.) 502; State v. Patterson, 24 N. C. 346, 38 Am. Dec. 699; Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 461, 10 L. Ed. 535. Considerable latitude should be allowed in cross-examining witnesses as to value, in order that the ground of their opinion may appear; Phillips v. Inhabitants of Marblehead, 148 Mass. 326, 19 N. E. 547.

A written paper identified by the witness as having been written by him may be introduced in the course of cross-examination as a part of the evidence of the party producing it, if necessary for the purposes of the cross-examination; 8 C. & P. 369. A witness may be asked whether he has not made previous statements contradictory to his present testimony; People v. Walker, 140 Cal. 153, 73 Pac. 831; Dillard v. U. S., 141 Fed. 303, 72 C. C. A. 451; but he must be given a chance to explain; Rice v. Rice, 43 App. Div. 458, 60 N. Y. Supp. 97. Where the statement about which he is asked is in writing, it is necessary that his attention be called to the writing and if he denies that he made such statement, the writing must be proved in the ordinary way; Gaffney v. People, 50 N. Y. 416. In Queen Caroline's Case, 2 B. & B. 286, it was held that on cross-examination counsel is not allowed to represent in the statement of a question the contents of a letter and to ask the witness whether the witness wrote a letter to any person with such contents, or contents to the like effect, without first having shown the letter to the witness and asked whether he wrote such letter. This is commonly spoken of as the rule in the Queen's Case. It is severely and ably criticised in Wigmore, Evidence 1259-1263. In England it was unanimously condemned by the bar, and in 1854 a statute was passed which abolished it. In the United States it was adopted in People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307; Simmons v. State, 32 Fla. 387, 13 South. 896; Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 150, 35 S. E. 161; Momence Stone Co. v. Groves, 197 Ill. 88, 64 N. E. 335; Glenn v. Gleason, 61 Ia. 28, 15 N. W. 659; Hendrickson v. Com. (Ky.) 64 S. W. 954; State v. Cain, 106 La. 708, 31 South. 300; O'Riley v. Clampet, 53 Minn. 539, 55 N. W. 740; Story v. State, 68 Miss. 609, 10 South. 47; State v. Matthews, 88 Mo. 121; Omaha Loan & Trust Co. v. Douglas County, 62 Neb. 1, 86 N. W. 936; Haines v. Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 467; Gaffney v. People, 50 N. Y. 423; State v. Steeves, 29 Or. 85, 43 Pac. 947; Kann v. Bennett, 223 Pa. 36, 72 Atl. 342; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 520, 11 Sup. Ct. 129, 34 L. Ed. 747; Kalk v. Fielding, 50 Wis. 339, 7 N. W. 296; Mr. Wigmore thinks that its repudiation in England was not known at the time of its early adoption here.

A cross-examination as to matters not otherwise admissible in evidence entitles the party producing the witness to re-examine him as to those matters; 3 Ad. & E. 554; Stuart v. Baker, 17 Tex. 417. If the defendant be permitted on cross-examination to bring out new matter, constituting his own case, which he had not opened to the jury, to the injury of the plaintiff, it may be ground for reversal; Thomas & Sons v. Loose, Seaman & Co., 114 Pa. 35, 6 Atl. 326; Hughes v. Coal Co., 104 Pa. 207.

Leading questions may be put in cross-examination; 1 Stark. Ev. 96; Floyd v. Board, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 75; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317.

The trial court has not such a discretion as to the scope of cross-examination of the defendant in a criminal cause as in the examination of other witnesses; People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45. See State v. Wright, 40 La. Ann. 589, 4 South. 486.

A refusal to permit cross-examination as to relevant matters brought out in direct examination is usually ground for reversal; Prout v. Bernards Land & Sand Co., 77 N. J. L. 719, 73 Atl. 486, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 683, note; Eames v. Kaiser, 142 U. S. 488, 12 Sup. Ct. 302, 35 L. Ed. 1091; Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, 23 Pac. 286. A full and fair cross-examination is a matter of right and a denial of it is error; after such has been allowed, further cross-examination becomes discretionary; Ressurrection Gold Min. Co. v. Fortune Min. Co., 129 Fed. 668, 64 C. C.

It is improper for a trial judge to cross-examine defendant's witnesses in such a manner as to impress the jury with the idea that he thinks the defendant guilty. If he participates in the cross-examination, he should do it in such a way as to indicate his entire impartiality; Adler v. U. S., 182 Fed. 464, 104 C. C. A. 608.

CROSS-REMAINDER. Where a particular estate is conveyed to several persons in common, or various parcels of the same land are conveyed to several persons in severalty, and upon the termination of the interest of either of them his share is to go in remainder to the rest, the remainders so limited over are said to be cross-remainders. In deeds, such remainders cannot arise without express limitation. In wills, they frequently arise by implication; 1 Prest. Est. 94; 2 Hilliard, R. P. 44; 4 Kent 201; Chal. R. P. 241.

CROSS-RULES. Rules entered where each of the opposite litigants obtained a rule nisi, as the plaintiff to increase the damages, and the defendant to enter a nonsuit. Wharton.

CROSSED-CHECK. See CHECK.

CROSSING. See GRADE CROSSING.

CROWN. In England. A word often used for the sovereign. As to the Crown as a corporation, see Maitland, 16 L. Q. R. 335, 17 id. 131.

See DEMISE OF THE CROWN.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. See COURT FOR CONSIDERATION OF CROWN CASES RESERVED.

CROWN DEBTS. Debts due to the crown, which are put, by various statutes, upon a different footing from those due to a subject.

CROWN LANDS. The demesne lands of the crown. 2 Steph. Com. 534.

CROWN LAW. In England. Criminal law, the crown being the prosecutor.

CROWN OFFICE. The criminal side of the court of king's bench. The king's attorney in this court is called master of the crown office. 4 Bla. Com. 308.

CROWN SIDE. The criminal side of the court of king's bench. Distinguished from the pleas side, which transacts the civil business. 4 Bla. Com. 265.

CROWN SOLICITOR. In England. The solicitor to the treasury.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT. See PUNISHMENT.

CRUELTY. As between husband and wife. See LEGAL CRUELTY.

Cruelty towards weak and helpless persons takes place where a party bound to provide for and protect them either abuses them by whipping them unnecessarily, or by neglecting to provide for them those necessities which their helpless condition requires. Exposing a person of tender years, under one's care, to the inclemency of the weather; 2 Campb. 650; keeping such a child, unable to provide for himself, without adequate food; 1 Leach 137; Russ. & R. 20; or an overseer neglecting to provide food and medical care to a pauper having urgent and immediate occasion for them; Russ. & R. 46; are examples of this species of cruelty.

In many of the principal cities, beginning with New York, in April, 1875, societies for the prevention of cruelty to children have been formed, authorized to prosecute persons who maltreat children, or force them to pursue improper and dangerous employments; N. Y. Act of April 21, 1875; Delafield on Children, 1876. Stat. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 34 regulates certain employments for children. By the act of Congress of February 13, 1885, the association for the prevention of cruelty to animals for the District of Columbia, was authorized to extend its operation, under the name of the Washington Humane Society, to the protection of children as well as animals from cruelty and abuse, and the agents of the society have power to prefer complaints for the violation of any law relating to or affecting the protection of children. They may also bring before the court any child who is subjected to cruel treatment, abuse or neglect, or any child under sixteen years of age found in a house of ill-fame, and the court may commit such child to an orphan asylum or other public charitable institution, and any person wilfully or cruelly maltreating, or wrongfully employing such child, is liable to punishment. 23 Stat. L. 302.

Cruelty to animals is an indictable offence. A defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor for tying the tongue of a calf so near the root as to prevent its sucking, in order to sell the cow at a greater price, by giving to her under the appearance of being full of milk while affording the calf all it needed; Morris & Clark's Cases, 6 City H. Rec. (N. Y.) 62. A man may be indicted for cruelly beating his horse; U. S. v. Jackson, 4 Cra. C. C. 483, Fed. Cas. No. 15,453; 9 L. T. R. (N. S.) 175; Com. v. Lufkin, 7 Allen (Mass.) 579; 3 B. & S. 382; State v. Avery, 44 N. H. 392; Collier v. State, 4 Tex. App. 12; Uecker v. State, 4 Tex. App. 234; State v. Bogardus, 4 Mo. App. 215; State v. Haley, 52 Mo. App. 520; Swartzbaugh v. People, 85 Ill. 457; Com. v. Curry, 150 Mass. 509, 23 N. E. 212; See Com. v. McClellan, 101 Mass. 34; State v. Porter, 112 N. C. 887, 16 S. E. 915; Tinsley v. State (Tex.) 22 S. W. 39; or for cruel treatment of a hen; State v. Neal, 120 N. C. 613, 27 S. E. 81, 58 Am. St. Rep. 810.

Under 12 and 13 Vict. c. 92, § 2, dishorning cattle is not an offence where the operation is skilfully performed; 16 Cox, Cr. Cas. 101. This practice is allowed in Pennsylvania; Act Pa. 1895, June 25, P. L. 286. In Massachusetts it was held that a fox is an animal in the sense of the statute, and a person letting loose a captive fox to be subjected to unnecessary suffering (for the purpose of being hunted by dogs) was liable to punishment; Com. v. Turner, 145 Mass. 296, 14 N. E. 130.

Malice toward the owner is not an ingredient of the offense created by a statute providing for the punishment of every person who shall wilfully and maliciously maim the horse of another; People v. Tessmer, 171 Mich. 522, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 137 N. W. 214.

CRUISE. A voyage or expedition in quest of vessels or fleets of the enemy which may be expected to sail in any particular track at a certain season of the year. The region in which these cruises are performed is usually termed the rendezvous, or cruising-latitude.

When the ships employed for this purpose, which are accordingly called cruisers, have arrived at the destined station, they traverse the sea backwards and forwards, under an easy sail, and within a limited space, conjectured to be in the track of their expected adversaries. Wesk. Ins.; Lex Merc. Red. 271, 284; Dougl. 509; Marsh. Ins. 196, 199, 520; The Brutus, 2 Gall. 526, Fed. Cas. No. 2,060.

CRY DE PAYS, CRY DE PAIS. A hue and cry raised by the country. This was allowable in the absence of the constable when a felony had been committed.

CRYER. See CRIER.

CUCKING-STOOL. An engine or machine for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women.

Called also a trebucket, tumbrel, and castigatory. Bakers and brewers were formerly also liable to the same punishment. Being fastened in the machine, they were immersed over head and ears in some pool; Blount; Co. 3d Inst. 219; 4 Bla. Com. 168.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui ipsa ante divortium contradicere non potuit, whom she before the divorce could not gainsay). A writ which anciently lay in favor of a woman who had been divorced from her husband, to recover lands and tenements which she had in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband had aliened them during marriage, when she could not gainsay it; Fitzh. N. B. 240; 3 Bla. Com. 183, n.; Stearns, Real Act. 143; Booth, Real Act. 188. Abolished in 1833.

CUI IN VITA (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui in vita sua ipsa contradicere non potuit, whom in his lifetime she could not gainsay). A writ of entry which lay for a widow against a person to whom her husband had in his lifetime aliened her lands. Fitzh. N. B. 193. It was a method of establishing the fact of death, being a trial with witnesses, but without a jury. The object of the writ was to avoid a judgment obtained against the husband by confession or default. It is obsolete in England by force of 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28, § 6. See 6 Co. 8, 9. As to its use in Pennsylvania, see 3 Binn. Appx.; Rep. Comm. on Penn. Civ. Code, 1835, 90. Abolished in England, 1833. Blackstone is said to have shown little knowledge of its history; Thayer, Evidence.

It may be a highway; L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 449; Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460; Adams v. Harrington, 114 Ind. 66, 14 N. E. 603; Penick v. Morgan County, 131 Ga. 385, 62 S. E. 300; L. R. 16 Eq. 108. The earlier authorities are generally to the contrary. See 11 East 376, note; 5 Taunt. 137; 5 B. & Ald. 454; Holdane v. Village of Cold Spring, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 103; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 76, s. 1; Dig. 50. 16. 43; 43. 12. 1. § 13; 47, 10, 15, § 7. It may be said that prima facie it is not a highway; see 18 Q. B. 870; State v. Gross, 119 N. C. 868, 26 S. E. 91.

CULPA. A fault; negligence. Jones, Bailm. 8.

Culpa is to be distinguished from dolus, the latter being a trick for the purpose of deception, the former merely a negligence. There are three degrees of culpa: lata culpa, gross fault or neglect; levis culpa, ordinary fault or neglect; levissima culpa, slight fault or neglect; and the definitions of these degrees are precisely the same as those in our law. Story, Bailm. § 18; Waltham Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen (Mass.) 122; Woodman v. Nottingham, 49 N. H. 387, 6 Am. Rep. 526. See NEGLIGENCE.

CULPABLE. This means not only criminal but censurable; and when the term is applied to the omission by a person to preserve the means of enforcing his own rights, censurable is more nearly equivalent. As he has merely lost a right of action which he might voluntarily relinquish, and has wronged nobody but himself, culpable neglect would seem to convey the idea of neglect for which he was to blame and is ascribed to his own carelessness, improvidence or folly. Waltham Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen (Mass.) 122.

CULPRIT. A person who is guilty, or supposed to be guilty, of a crime.

When a prisoner is arraigned, and he pleads not guilty, in English practice, the clerk, who arraigns him on behalf of the crown, replies that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove the accusation. This is done by writing two monosyllabic abbreviations,—cul. prit. 4 Bla. Com. 339; 1 Chit. Cr. Law 416. See Christian's note to Bla. Com. cited; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 340, n. 9. The technical meaning has disappeared, and the compound is used in the popular sense as above given.

CULVERTAGE. A base kind of slavery. The confiscation or forfeiture which takes place when a lord seizes his tenant's estate. Blount; Du Cange.

CUM ONERE (Lat.). With the burden; subject to the incumbrance; subject to the charge. A purchaser with knowledge of an incumbrance takes the property cum onere. Co. Litt. 231 a; 7 East 164.

CUM TESTAMENTO ANNEXO (Lat.). With the will annexed. The term is applied to administration when there is no executor named in a will, or if he who is named is incapable of acting, or where the executor named refuses to act. If the executor has died, an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo (of the goods not [already] administered upon with the will annexed) is appointed. Often abbreviated d. b. n. c. t. a.

CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE. That which goes to prove what has already been established by other evidence. Waller v. Graves, 20 Conn. 305; Glidden v. Dunlap, 28 Me. 379; Parker v. Hardy, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 246; Parshall v. Klinck, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 203; Able & Co. v. Frazier, 43 Iowa, 175.

Newly discovered evidence, if cumulative merely, is not sufficient ground for a new trial: Hill v. Helman, 33 Neb. 731, 51 N. W. 128; Johnson v. Palmour, 87 Ga. 244, 13 S. E. 637; White v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 418, 14 S. E. 22; Link v. R. Co., 3 Wyo. 680, 29 Pac. 741; Louisville, N. O. & T. Ry. Co. v. Crayton, 69 Miss. 152, 12 South. 271; Davis v. Mann, 43 Ill. App. 301.

CUMULATIVE LEGACY. See LEGACY.

CUMULATIVE REMEDY. A remedy created by statute in addition to one which still remains in force.

CUMULATIVE SENTENCE. A second or additional judgment given against one who has been convicted, the execution or effect of which is to commence after the first has expired. Clifford v. Dryden, 31 Wash. 545, 72 Pac. 96.

Thus, where a man is sentenced to an imprisonment for six months on conviction of larceny, and afterwards he is convicted of burglary, he may be sentenced to imprisonment for the latter, to commence after the expiration of the first imprisonment: this is called a cumulative judgment. And if the former sentence is shortened by a pardon, or by reversal on writ of error, it expires, and the subsequent sentence takes effect, as if the former had expired by lapse of time; Kite v. Com., 11 Metc. (Mass.) 581. Where an indictment for misdemeanor contained four counts, the third of which was held on error to be bad in substance, and the defendant, being convicted on the whole indictment, was sentenced to four successive terms of imprisonment of equal duration, held that the sentence on the fourth count was not invalidated by the insufficiency of the third count, and that the imprisonment on it was to be computed from the end of the imprisonment on the second count; 15 Q. B. 594.

Upon an indictment for misdemeanor containing two counts for distinct offences, the defendant may be sentenced to imprisonment for consecutive terms of punishment, although the aggregate of the punishments may exceed the punishment allowed by law for one offence, and this rule is in many states prescribed by statute; 1 Bish. New Crim. Proc. § 1227 (2); Whart. Cr. PL & Pr. § 932; In re White, 50 Kan. 299, 32 Pac. 36; In re Walsh, 37 Neb. 454, 55 N. W. 1075; In re Wilson, 11 Utah, 114, 39 Pac. 498. But it may in some cases be the means of perpetrating great injustice. See O'Neill v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450, where a justice of the peace imposed a fine of $6038, and on failure to pay it, a sentence of nearly 60 years' imprisonment, for selling intoxicating liquors. The Supreme Court of the United States refused to interfere. See 31 Am. L. Reg. 619.

In the absence of a statute, it is generally held that the court has power to impose cumulative sentences upon conviction under separate indictments for separate offences, the imprisonment under one to commence at the termination of that under the other; Howard v. U. S., 75 Fed. 986, 21 C. C. A. 586, 34 L. R. A. 509, 43 U. S. App. 678; Simmons v. Coal Co., 117 Ga. 315, 43 S. E. 780, 61 L. R. A. 739; In re Breton, 93 Me. 39, 44 Atl. 125, 74 Am. St. Rep. 335; Rigor v. State, 101 Md. 465, 61 Atl. 631, 4 Ann. Cas. 719; State v. Hamby, 126 N. C. 1066, 35 S. E. 614; Contra, Ex parte Meyers, 44 Mo. 279; Lockwood v. Dills, 74 Ind. 57. A statute giving this authority is ex post facto; Baker v. State, 11 Tex. App. 262; where a court imposes sentences exceeding, in the aggregate, its jurisdiction, only the excess is void; Harris v. Lang, 27 App. D. C. 84, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 124, 7 Ann. Cas. 141. If the second conviction of three is erroneous, the third at once follows the first; U. S. v. Carpenter, 151 Fed. 214, 81 C. C. A. 194, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 10 Ann. Cas. 509.

Upon an indictment for perjury charging offences committed in different suits, the defendant, upon conviction, may be sentenced to distinct punishments, although the suits were instituted with a common object; 5 Q. B. Div. 490.

Where, upon trial of an indictment—containing several counts—charging separate and distinct misdemeanors, identical in character, a general verdict of guilty is rendered, or a verdict of guilty upon two or more specified counts, the court has no power to impose a sentence or cumulative sentences exceeding in the aggregate what is prescribed by statute as the maximum punishment for one offence of the character charged; People v. Liscomb, 60 N. Y. 559, 19 Am. Rep. 211; but this case is said to stand alone. See 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 1327 (2); 6 App. Cas. 241.

CUMULATIVE VOTING. A method of voting in which a voter, in voting for a class of officers, can distribute his votes among the candidates in such proportion as he sees fit. It does not exist except by a constitutional or statutory provision; State v. Stockley, 45 Ohio St. 304, 13 N. E. 279; this appears to be the settled rule; the cases found in the books are all on statutory provisions.

The right of a stockholder to vote cumulatively cannot be exercised on a single proposition, such as a question of adjournment; Bridgers v. Staton, 150 N. C. 216, 63 S. E. 892; the motives in exercising this right cannot be inquired into; Chicago Macaroni Mfg. Co. v. Boggiano, 202 Ill. 312, 67 N. E. 17. The law providing for cumulative voting of stock is not applicable to an election of managers of a partnership association; Attorney General v. McVichie, 138 Mich. 387, 101 N. W. 552.

CUNEATOR. A colner. Du Cange. Cunearre, to coin. Cuneus, the die with which to coin. Cuneata, coined. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

CUR. ADV. VULT. See CURIA ADVISARE VULT.

CURATE. One who represents the incumbent of a church, parson or vicar, and takes care of the church and performs divine services in his stead. An officiating temporary minister in the English church who represents the proper incumbent. Burn, Eccl. Law; 1 Bla. Com. 393. See CURE OF SOULS.

CURATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The power or duty of managing the property of him who, either on account of infancy or some defect of mind or body, cannot manage his own affairs. The duty of a curator or guardian. Calvinus, Lex.

CURATOR. In Civil Law. One legally appointed to take care of the interests of one who, on account of his youth, or defect of his understanding, or for some other cause, is unable to attend to them himself; a guardian.

There are curators ad bona (of property), who administer the estate of a minor, take care of his person, and intervene in all of his contracts; curators ad litem (of suits), who assist the minor in courts of justice, and act as curators ad bona in cases where the interests of the curator are opposed to the interests of the minor. There are also curators of insane persons, and of vacant successions and absent heirs.

In Missouri the term has been adopted from the civil law and it is applied to the guardian of the ward's estate, as distinct from the guardian of his person; Duncan v. Crook, 49 Mo. 117. In Scotland, it is pronounced Cúrador.

Under the Roman law, the guardian of a minor, both as to person or property, was called a tutor (q. v.); and if, after being of an age to exercise his rights, he needed a person to look after his rights, such person was called a curator. Sandars, Inst. Just. Introd. xl. A person who had attained the age of puberty was not required to have a curator, but if he had much property he was almost certain to have one, as it was part of his tutor's duty to urge him to do so; id. 74; Dig. xxvi. 7. 5. 5.

Interim Curator. In England. A person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict until the appointment by the crown of an administrator for the same purpose; 3 Stat. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23; 4 Steph. Com. 462.

CURATOR BONIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A guardian to take care of the property. Calvinus, Lex.

In Scotch Law. A guardian for minors, lunatics, etc. Halkers, Tech. Terms; Bell, Dict.

CURATOR AD HOC. A guardian for this special purpose.

A curator ad hoc can be appointed to proceed against the tutor for an accounting or his removal only when there is no undertutor; Welch v. Baxter, 45 La. Ann. 1062, 13 South. 629.

CURATOR AD LITEM (Lat.). Guardian for the suit. In English law, the corresponding phrase is guardian ad litem.

CURATORSHIP. The office of a curator.

Curatorship differs from tutorship (q. v.) in this, that the latter is instituted for the protection of property in the first place, and secondly, of the person; while the former is intended to protect, first, the person, and, secondly, the property. 1 Legons Elem. du Droit Civ. Rom. 241.

CURATRIX. A woman who has been appointed to the office of a curator.

CURE BY VERDICT. See AIDER BY VERDICT.

CURE OF SOULS. The ordinary duties of an officiating clergyman.

Curate more properly denotes the incumbent in general who hath the cure of souls; but more frequently it is understood to signify a clerk not instituted to the cure of souls, but exercising the spiritual office in a parish under the rector or vicar. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 54; 1 H. Bla. 424.

CURFEW (French, couvre, to cover, and feu, fire). This is generally supposed to be an institution of William the Conqueror, who required, by ringing of the bell at eight o'clock in the evening, that all lights and fires in dwellings should then be extinguished. But the custom is evidently older than the Norman; for we find an order of King Alfred that the inhabitants of Oxford should at the ringing of that bell cover up their fires and go to bed. And there is evidence that the same practice prevailed at this period in France, Normandy, Spain, and probably in most of the other countries of Europe. Henry, Hist. of Britain, vol. 3, 567. It was doubtless intended as a precaution against fires, which were very frequent and destructive when most houses were built of wood.

That it was not intended as a badge of infamy is evident from the fact that the law was of equal obligation upon the nobles of court and upon the native-born serfs. And yet we find the name of curfew law employed as a by-word denoting the most odious tyranny.

The curfew is spoken of in 1 Social England 373, as having been ordained by William I. in order to prevent nightly gatherings of the people of England.

It appears to have met with so much opposition that in 1103 we find Henry I. repealing the enactment of his father on the subject; and Blackstone says that, though it is mentioned a century afterwards, it is rather spoken of as a time of night than as a still subsisting custom. Shakespeare frequently refers to it in the same sense. This practice is still pursued, in many parts of England (Lincoln's Inn, among them) and of this country, as a very convenient mode of apprising people of the time of night. It was enacted in Utah (1903) and other states.

CURIA. In Roman Law. One of the divisions of the Roman people. The Roman people were divided by Romulus into three tribes and thirty curiæ: the members of each curia were united by the tie of common religious rites, and also by certain common political and civil powers. Dion. Hal. l. 2, p. 82; Liv. l. 1, cap. 13; Plut. in Romulo, p. 30; Festus Brisson, in verb.

In later times the word signified the senate or aristocratic body of the provincial cities of the empire. Brisson, in verb.; Ortolan, Histoire, no. 25, 408; Ort. Inst. no. 123.

The senate-house at Rome; the senate-house of a provincial city. Cod. 10. 31. 2; Spelman, Gloss.

In English Law. The king's court; the palace; the royal household. The residence of a noble; a manor or chief manse; the hall of a manor. Spelman, Gloss.

A court of justice, whether of general or special jurisdiction. Fleta, lib. 2, l. 72, § 1; Feud. lib. 1, 2, 22; Spelman; Cowell; 3 Bla. Com. c. iv. See COURT.

A court-yard or enclosed piece of ground; a close. Stat. Edw. Conf. 1, 6; Bracton, 76, 222 b, 335 b, 356 b, 358; Spelman, Gloss. See CURIA CLAUDENDA.

The civil or secular power, as distinguished from the church. Spelman, Gloss.

CURIA ADVISARE VULT (Lat.). The court wishes to consider (the matter).

The entry formerly made upon the record to indicate the continuance of a cause until final judgment should be rendered.

It is commonly abbreviated thus: cur. adv. vult, or c. a. v. Thus, in 2 B. & C. 172, after the report of the argument we find "cur. adv. vult," then, "on a subsequent day judgment was delivered," etc.

CURIA CLAUDENDA. See DE CURIA CLAUDENDA.

CURIA MILITARIS. See COURT OF CHIVALRY; COURT-MARTIAL; Harcourt, His Grace the Steward, etc.

CURIA REGIS (Lat.). The king's court.

In English Law. A court established in England by William the Conqueror in his own hall.

It was the "great universal" court of the kingdom; from the dismemberment of which are derived the present four superior courts in England, viz.: the High Court of Chancery, and the three superior courts of common law, to-wit, The Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer. It was composed of the king's great officers of state resident in his palace and usually attendant on his person; such as the lord high constable and lord marescal (who chiefly presided in matters of honor and of arms), the lord high steward and lord great chamberlain, the steward of the household, the lord chancellor (whose peculiar duty it was to keep the king's seal, and examine all such writs, grants, and letters as were to pass under that authority), and the lord high treasurer, who was the principal adviser in all matters relating to the revenue. These high officers were assisted by certain persons learned in the laws, who were called the king's justiciars or justices, and by the greater barons of parliament, all of whom had a seat in the aula regia, and formed a kind of court of appeal, or rather of advice in matters of great moment and difficulty. These, in their several departments, transacted all secular business, both civil and criminal, and all matters of the revenue; and over all presided one special magistrate, called the chief justiciar, or capitalis justiciarius totius Angliæ, who was also the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and, by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. This court was bound to follow the king's household in all his expeditions; on which account the trial of common causes in it was found very burdensome to the people, and accordingly the 11th chapter of Magna Charta enacted that "communia placita non sequantur curiam regis, sed teneantur in aliquo certo loco," which certain place was established in Westminster Hall (where the aula regis originally sat, when the king resided in that city), and there it has ever since continued, under the name of Court of Common Pleas, or Common Bench. It was under the reign of Edward I. that the other several officers of the chief justiciar were subdivided and broken into distinct courts of judicature. A court of chivalry, to regulate the king's domestic servants, and an august tribunal for the trial of delinquent peers, were erected; while the barons reserved to themselves in parliament the right of reviewing the sentences of the other courts in the last resort; but the distribution of common justice between man and man was arranged by giving to the court of chancery jurisdiction to issue all original writs under the great seal to other courts; the exchequer to manage the king's revenue, the common pleas to determine all causes between private subjects, and the court of king's bench retaining all the jurisdiction not cantoned out to the other courts, and particularly the sole cognizance of pleas of the crown, or criminal causes. 3 Steph. Com. 397; 3 Bla. Com. 33; Bract. l. 3. tr. 1, c. 7; Fleta, Abr. 2, cc. 2, 3; Gilbert, Hist. C. Pleas, Introd. 18; 1 Reeve, Hist. E. L. 48.

The Council of the King. Its early nature is not well understood. Probably its working body consisted of the king's great officers of state and the judges; perhaps others were added to it on particular occasion. It transacted business of state, sometimes taxation and legislation. It was a court of appeal and exercised original jurisdiction. It answered petitions, which was its chief duty. It might send the petition to one of the ordinary courts or lay it before the king. It came to provide new remedies for new wrongs and distribute justice for each man's deserts. Later it was tending to become an executive body.

Formerly the Chancellor was the leading legal member of the Council. By the end of the Middle Ages the Chancery has become a court, but its connection with the Council is so close that in most cases the Council gives the judgment of the court. In the Tudor period the Council was re-organized and the Chancery became separate from it.

At the end of the 13th and the beginning of the 14th century, Parliament gradually became separate from the Council; a hundred years later a division began to take place within the Council—into the Privy or Ordinary Council, the great officers of state and certain other trusted advisers of the king, and the Great Council, which consisted of the Privy Council and the great body of the nobility, spiritual and temporal. The early records speak of the Council; about the time of Henry VI the term Privy Council is met with.

The royal authority was exercised through the Council.

Towards the end of the 16th century, a committee of practically the whole Council sitting in the Star Chamber gradually absorbed the judicial work of the Council, but the process was gradual and there are few data. The Star Chamber had the title of the "Lords of the Council Sitting in the Star Chamber." Every member of the Privy Council had the right to sit there.

At the beginning of the Tudor period the court of Star Chamber had begun to present the appearance of a court more or less separate from the Council acting as an executive body.

The Long Parliament abolished the greater part of the judicial business of the Council but only as to English bills or petitions. Its appellate jurisdiction as to places outside the ordinary English law was retained.

The act of 1833 provided "for the better administration of justice in His Majesty's Privy Council."

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is a committee of an Executive Council. Though spoken of as a court, it has not a self-contained and independent judicial function; its legal operation receives its final consummation and sole efficacy from the direct official action of the sovereign in council.

Historically it is the oldest of the royal courts. The act of the crown in allowing or dismissing an appeal, according to the advice contained in the report of the Judicial Committee, is the direct lineal descendant of the judgment given by the king in person in the Curia Regis. See 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 23.

See JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL; COURT OF STAR CHAMBER; Dicey, Privy Council. A collection of cases (1616-1626) called Abbreviatio Placitorum contains the earliest information of the working of the Curia Regis. See REPORTS; 2 Sel. Esays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 209.

See Procedure in the Curia Regis, by G. B. Adams (13 Columb. L. Rev. 277).

CURRENCY. A term commonly used for whatever passes among the people for money, whether gold or silver coin or bank notes. Osgood v. McConnell, 32 Ill. 74; Cockrill v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Mo. 697; Dugan v. Campbell, 1 Ohio 115, 119; Pilmer v. Bank, 16 Ia. 323; Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 47 Wis. 560, 3 N. W. 357, 32 Am. Rep. 773.

CURRENT MONEY. That which is in general use as a medium of exchange.

It means the same thing as currency of the country. Miller v. McKinney, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 96.

The adjective "current," when qualifying money, is not the synonym of "convertible." It is employed to describe money which passes from hand to hand, and is generally received. Money is current which is received in the common business transactions, and is the common medium in barter and trade; Stalworth v. Blum, 41 Ala. 321.

Current money means that money which is commonly used and recognized as such; current bank notes, such as are convertible into specie at the counter where they were issued. Wharton v. Morris, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 125, 1 L. Ed. 65; Pierson v. Wallace, 7 Ark.

282; see Fry v. Dudley, 20 La. Ann. 368; Kupfer v. Marc, 28 Ill. 388; Conwell v. Pumphrey, 9 Ind. 135, 68 Am. Dec. 611; McChord v. Ford, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 166; Warren v. Brown, 64 N. C. 381; Stalworth v. Blum, 41 Ala. 321.

CURSITOR. A junior clerk in the court of chancery, whose business it formerly was to write out from the register those forms of writs which issued of course. 1 Poll. & M. Hist. Engl. Law 174.

Such writs were called writs de cursu (of course), whence the name, which had been acquired as early as the reign of Edward III. The body of cursitors constituted a corporation, each clerk having a certain number of counties assigned to him. Coke, 2d Inst. 670; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 238. The office was abolished by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 82.

CURSITOR BARON. An officer of the court of exchequer, appointed by patent under the great seal to be one of the barons of the exchequer. Abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 86. Wharton, Dict.

CURTESY. The estate to which by common law a man is entitled, on the death of his wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in fee simple or in tail during their coverture, provided they have had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate. Chal. R. P. 314.

An estate for life which a husband takes at the death of his wife, having had issue by her born alive during coverture, in all lands of which she was seised in fact of an inheritable estate during coverture.

The right of the husband to enjoy during his life land of which his wife is at any time during coverture seised in fee simple (absolute or defeasible) or in fee tail, provided there was issue, born alive, of the marriage. Demb. Land Tit. § 109.

It is a freehold estate for the term of his natural life. 1 Washb. R. P. 127. In the common law the word is used in the phrases tenant by curtesy, or estate by curtesy, but seldom alone; while in Scotland of itself it denotes the estate. The phrase "tenant by the law of England" was also used, and is said to have been of earlier origin; 2 Poll. & M. Hist. E. L. 412.

Some question has been made as to the derivation both of the custom and its name. It is said that the term is derived from curtis, a court, and that the custom, in England at least, is of English origin, though a similar custom existed in Normandy, and still exists in Scotland. 1 Washb. R. P. 128, n.; Wright, Ten. 192; Co. Litt. 30 a; 2 Bla. Com. 126; Ersk. Inst. 380; Grand Cout. de Normandie, c. 119. But this derivation "is considered more ingenious than satisfactory," and it is suggested that it is possible to explain the phrase by "some royal concession," as "being reasonable enough." 2 Poll. & M. Hist. E. L. 412.

A husband has an estate by curtesy after the death of his wife in lands which he had voluntarily settled upon her, if he did not expressly or by implication relinquish such rights in the settlement; Depue v. Miller, 65 W. Va. 120, 64 S. E. 740, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775; In re Kaufmann, 142 Fed. 898; Meacham v. Baufiling, 156 Ill. 586, 41 N. E. 175, 28 L. R. A. 618, 47 Am. St. Rep. 239; contra, Ratloff v. Ratloff, 102 Va. 887, 47 S. E. 1007. He has curtesy in the equity of redemption of the wife's lands; Jackson v. Printing Co., 86 Ark. 591, 112 S. W. 161, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454. That an estate was purchased by funds from the wife's separate estate and conveyed to the husband and wife jointly will not deprive him of his curtesy in the property; Donovan v. Griffith, 215 Mo. 149, 114 S. W. 621, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825, 128 Am. St. Rep. 458, 15 Ann. Cas. 724. A surviving husband is entitled to curtesy out of a determinable fee owned by his wife with issue born alive notwithstanding the contingency upon which the fee is to terminate exists at the time of her death; Carter v. Couch, 157 Ala. 470, 47 South. 1006, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 858; Hatfield v. Sneden, 54 N. Y. 280; Webb v. First Baptist Church, 90 Ky. 117, 13 S. W. 362; McMasters v. Negley, 152 Pa. 303, 25 Atl. 641.

In Pennsylvania, by act of April 8, 1833, issue of the marriage is no longer necessary, so that the husband gains a freehold by the marriage itself; Lancaster County Bank v. Stauffer, 10 Pa. 399; but the law applies only when the estate is devisable, not to an estate tail or defeasible fee; McMasters v. Negley, 152 Pa. 303, 25 Atl. 641. That the wife's title to real estate is not acquired until after the death of the only child of the marriage will not deprive the husband of curtesy in the property; Donovan v. Griffith, 215 Mo. 149, 114 S. W. 621, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825, 128 Am. St. Rep. 458, 15 Ann. Cas. 724. Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky, and Maine reduce the husband's life estate to one-third, calling it "dower," and dispense with birth of issue alive, while dower remains unchanged. In South Carolina and Georgia, curtesy has gone out of use, the husband having under the law greater benefits. Demb. Land Tit. § 109. Louisiana, Texas, California, Nevada, Washington, and Idaho, and Arizona and New Mexico have the "community" system and no curtesy; id. § 111. And in Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, and Mississippi, dower is applied by a forced lienship of the widow and there is no curtesy; id. § 108. See DOWER.

CURTILAGE. The enclosed space immediately surrounding a dwelling-house, contained within the same enclosure.

It is defined by Blount as a yard, backside, or piece of ground near a dwelling-house, in which they sow beans, etc., yet distinct from the garden. Blount; Spelman. By others it is said to be a waste piece of ground so situated. Cowell.

It has also been defined as "a fence or enclosure of a small piece of land around a dwelling-house, usually including the buildings occupied in connection with the dwelling-house, the enclosure consisting either of a separate fence or partly of a fence and partly of the exterior of buildings so within this enclosure." Com. v. Barney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 480.

It usually includes the yard, garden, or field which is near to and used in connection with the dwelling. Cook v. State, 83 Ala. 62, 3 South. 849, 3 Am. St. Rep. 688. See Ivey v. State, 61 Ala. 58.

The term is used in determining whether the offence of breaking into a barn or warehouse is burglary. See 4 Bla. Com. 224; 1 Hale Pl. Cr. 558; 2 Russell, Cr. 13; Russ. & R. 239; 1 C. & K. 84.

In Michigan the meaning of curtilage has been extended to include more than an enclosure near the house. People v. Taylor, 2 Mich. 250. See Codding v. Dry Dock & Wet Dock Co., 31 N. J. L. 485; State v. Shaw, 31 Me. 523.

CURTILLUM. The area or space within the enclosure of a dwelling-house. Spelman, Gloss.

CURTIS. The area about a building; a garden; a hut or farmer's house; a farmer's house with the land enrolled with it.

A village or a walled town containing a small number of houses.

The residence of a nobleman; a hall or palace.

A court; a tribunal of justice. 1 Washb. R. P. 120; Spelman, Gloss.; 3 Bla. Com. 320.

CUSTODES. Keepers; guardians; conservators.

Custodes pacis (guardians of the peace). 1 Bla. Com. 349.

Custodes libertatis Angliæ auctoritate parliamenti (guardians of the liberty of England by authority of parliament). The style in which writs and all judicial process ran during the grand rebellion, from the death of Charles I. till Cromwell was declared Protector. Jacob, Law Dict.

CUSTODIA LEGIS. In the custody of the law.

When property is lawfully taken, by virtue of legal process, it is in the custody of the law, and not otherwise; Gilman v. Williams, 7 Wis. 334, 76 Am. Dec. 219.

Where a sheriff has taken under attachment more than enough property to satisfy it, the property is not in custodia legis in a sense that will prevent a levy by a U. S. marshal in a suit in the federal court, so as to give the latter creditor a lien on the excess after satisfying the first attachment; Goodbar v. Brooks, 57 Ark. 450. Nor are executions issued on void judgments and their returns admissible against subsequent attaching creditors, to show that the goods were in custodia legis; Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470.

For cases on property and funds in the custody of the courts not subject to attachment, see Curtis v. Ford, 10 L. R. A. 529, note.

CUSTODY. The detainer of a person by virtue of a lawful authority. 3 Chit. Pr. 355.
The care and possession of a thing.

Custody has been held to mean nothing less than actual imprisonment; Smith v. Com., 59 Pa. 320; Rolland v. Com., 82 Pa. 306, 22 Am. Rep. 758. See CUSTODIA LEGIS.

As to custody of children, see PARENT AND CHILD; INFANT; DIVORCE.

CUSTOM. Such a usage as by common consent and uniform practice has become the law of the place, or of the subject-matter, to which it relates.

Custom is a law established by long usage. Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 349. See Pollock, 1st Bk. of Jurispr. 263.

It differs from prescription, which is personal and is annexed to the person of the owner of a particular estate; while the other is local, and relates to a particular district. An instance of the latter occurs where the question is upon the manner of conducting a particular branch of trade at a certain place; of the former, where a certain person and his ancestors, or those whose estates he has, have been entitled to a certain advantage or privilege, as to have common of pasture in a certain close, or the like. 2 Bla. Com. 263. The distinction has been thus expressed: "While prescription is the making of a right, custom is the making of a law;" Laws. Us. & Cust. 15, n. 2.

General customs are such as constitute a part of the common law of the country and extend to the whole country.

Particular customs are those which are confined to a particular district; or to the members of a particular class; the existence of the former are to be determined by the court, of the latter, by the jury. Laws. Us. & Cust. 15, n. 3; see Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Me. 90, 39 Am. Dec. 611.

In general, when a contract is made in relation to matter about which there is an established custom, such custom is to be understood as forming part of the contract, and may always be referred to for the purpose of showing the intention of the parties in all those particulars which are not expressed in the contract; 2 Pars. Contr. 652, 663; Fulton Bank of New York v. Benedict, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 602; Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 138, 7 L. Ed. 374; Stultz v. Dickey, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 285, 6 Am. Dec. 411; 1 M. & W. 476; L. R. 17 Eq. 358; Robinson v. Fiske, 25 Me. 401; Bragg v. Bletz, 7 D. C. 105.

Evidence of a usage is admissible to explain technical or ambiguous terms; 3 B. & Ad. 728; Lane v. Bank, 3 Ind. App. 299, 29 N. E. 613; Nonantum Worsted Co. v. Mfg. Co., 156 Mass. 331, 31 N. E. 293. But evidence of a usage contradicting the terms of a contract is inadmissible; 2 Cr. & J. 244; Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136, 18 Am. Rep. 463; Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Buffalo v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 586; Exchange Bank of Virginia v. Cookman, 1 W. Va. 69; Gilbert v. McGinnis, 114 Ill. 28, 28 N. E. 382; De Cernea v. Cornell, 1 Misc. 399, 20 N. Y. Supp. 895; Globe Milling Co. v. Elevator Co., 44 Minn. 153, 46 N. W. 306. Nor can a local usage affect the meaning of the terms of a contract unless it is known to both contracting parties; Chateaugay Ore & Iron Co.

v. Blake, 144 U. S. 476, 12 Sup. Ct. 731, 36 L. Ed. 510; nor can it affect a contract made elsewhere; Insurance Co. of North America v. Ins. Co., 140 U. S. 565, 11 Sup. Ct. 909, 35 L. Ed. 517.

"Merely that it varies the apparent contract is not enough to exclude the evidence, for it is impossible to add any material incident to the written terms of a contract, without altering its effect more or less. To fall within the exception of repugnancy the incident must be such as, if expressed in the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent;" Per cur. in 3 E. & B. 715. See Leake, Contr. 197; 7 E. & B. 274.

In order to establish a custom, it will be necessary to show its existence for so long a time that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," and that the usage has continued without any interruption of the right; for, if it has ceased for a time for such a cause, the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be what the law calls within memory. It will be no objection, however, that the exercise of the right has been merely suspended. 1 Bla. Com. 76; 2 id. 31; Freary v. Cooke, 14 Mass. 488; L. R. 7 Q. B. 214; Ulmer v. Farnsworth, 80 Me. 500, 15 Atl. 65. See Hyde v. News Co., 32 Mo. App. 298. It must not have begun within legal memory, i. e. A. D. 1189; L. R. [1905] 2 Ch. 538; but a jury may find an immemorial custom upon proof of a period of twenty years or so; 21 L. J. Q. B. 196.

It must also have been peaceably acquiesced in and not subject to dispute; for, as customs owe their origin to common consent, their being disputed, either at law or otherwise, shows that such consent was wanting; Wood v. Hickok, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 501; Rapp v. Palmer, 3 Watts (Pa.) 178. In addition to this, customs must be reasonable and certain. A custom, for instance, that land shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood is void; for how shall this be determined? But a custom that it shall descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good; 2 Bla. Com. 78; Browne, Us. & Cust. 21. See Minis v. Nelson, 43 Fed. 777.

Evidence of usage is never admissible to oppose or alter a general principle or rule of law so as, upon a given state of facts, to make the legal right and liabilities of the parties other than they are by law; Browne, Us. & Cust. 135, n; Stoeve v. Whitman's Lessee, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 416; 16 C. B. N. S. 646; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 383, 19 L. Ed. 987; Warren v. Ins. Co., 104 Mass. 518; East Birmingham Land Co. v. Dennis, 85 Ala. 565, 5 South. 317, 2 L. R. A. 836, 7 Am. St. Rep. 73; Hopper v. Sage, 112 N. Y. 530, 20 N. E. 350, 8 Am. St. Rep. 771; but the rule is said by Lawson to extend no further than to usages which "conflict with an established rule of public policy, which it is not to the general interest to disturb."

Laws. Us. & Cust. 486. With respect to a usage of trade, however, it is sufficient if it appears to be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law; Collings v. Hope, 3 Wash. C. C. 150, Fed. Cas. No. 3,003; U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 587; Lowry v. Russell, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 360; 4 B. & Ald. 210; 1 C. & P. 59; Grissom v. Bank, 87 Tenn. 350, 10 S. W. 774, 3 L. R. A. 273, 10 Am. St. Rep. 669. See Pickering v. Weld, 159 Mass. 522, 34 N. E. 1081. But if not directly known to the parties to the transaction, it will still be binding upon them if it appear to be so general and well established that knowledge of it may be presumed; Smith v. Wright, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 43, 2 Am. Dec. 162; 4 Stark. 452; 1 Dougl. 510. A usage of trade is sufficiently long continued if it has existed so long as to show that the parties to a contract meant to employ the expression in the sense defined by it; Hyde v. News Co., 32 Mo. App. 298. And one who seeks to avoid the effect of a notorious and uniform usage of trade must show that he was ignorant of it; Robertson v. S. S. Co., 139 N. Y. 416, 34 N. E. 1053. Whether a trade custom is established by the evidence in a case, and whether, if so, it was known to the party contracting or was so well established that he must be presumed to have known of it and contracted with reference to it, are questions for the jury; New Roads Oilmill & Mfg. Co. v. Kline, Wilson & Co., 154 Fed. 296, 83 C. C. A. 1.

Parties to a contract may contract to exclude a custom of trade therefrom; id. To read a usage into a contract, it must be consistent with the terms of the writing; id.

In an action for negligence, proof of a custom on the part of engine drivers to uncouple the locomotive and run ahead a short distance was offered to show the measure of duty. It was held that such a custom, to have the force of law, or to furnish a standard for the rights and acts of men, must be certain and uniform and so well known that no man dealing with the subject would be ignorant of it; per Sanborn, C. J., in Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Lindeman, 143 Fed. 946, 75 C. C. A. 18 (C. C. A., Eighth Circuit).

A local custom is usage which has obtained the force of law and is in truth the binding law in a particular district or at a particular place of the persons or things that it concerns; 9 A. & E. 421. A local custom, so far as it extends, supersedes the local law; 5 Bingh. 253; but it cannot prevail against an express act of parliament; [1899] App. Cas. 41. The particular custom must have been asserted openly and acquiesced in by the persons who were affected and the enjoyment must have been peaceable. It must have been reasonable. It ought to be certain.

A local custom cannot supersede or modify a statute; Gore v. Lewis, 109 N. C. 539, 13

S. E. 909; Palmer v. Transportation Co., 76 Hun 181, 27 N. Y. Supp. 561.

See 26 L. J. Ex. 219; Stevens v. Reeves, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Seagar v. Silgerland, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 219; 2 F. & F. 131; Metcalf v. Weld, 14 Gray (Mass.) 210; Renner v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. CUSTOM-HOUSE. A place appointed by law, in ports of entry, where importers of goods, wares, and merchandise are bound to enter the same, in order to pay or secure the duties or customs due to the government.

CUSTOM-HOUSE BROKER. A person authorized to act for parties, at their option, in the entry or clearance of ships and the transaction of general business. Wharton. See act of July 13, 1866, § 9, 14. U. S. Stat. L. 117.

CUSTOM OF LONDON. Particular regulations in force within the city of London, in regard to trade, apprentices, widows and orphans, etc., which form part of the common law. 1 Bla. Com. 75; 3 Steph. Com. 588. See DEAD MAN'S PART. The custom of London, as regards intestate succession, was abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94; as regards foreign attachment, it was extended to all England and Wales by the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, and is the basis of the law on that subject in this country. See ATTACHMENT.

Their influence on the early institutions of Pennsylvania was very great; Com. v. Hill, 185 Pa. 392, 39 Atl. 1055.

CUSTOM OF MERCHANTS. A system of customs acknowledged and taken notice of by all nations, and which are, therefore, a part of the general law of the land. See LAW MERCHANT; 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 76, n. 9.

CUSTOM OF THE REALM. A current description of the common law of England, which is said not to be unhistorical. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 252. See James C. Carter, Law, Its Origin, etc.

CUSTOM OF YORK. A custom of intestacy in the province of York similar to that of London. Abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94.

CUSTOMARY COURT BARON. See COURT BARON.

CUSTOMARY ESTATES. Estates which owe their origin and existence to the custom of the manor in which they are held. 2 Bla. Com. 149.

CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD. A class of freeholds held according to the custom of the manor, derived from the ancient tenure in villein socage. Holders of such an estate have a freehold interest, though it is not held by a freehold tenure. 2 Bla. Com. 149. In reference to customary freehold, outside the ancient demesne all the tenures of the non-freeholding peasantry are in law one tenure, tenure in villeinage; 1 Poll. & M. Hist. Engl. Law 384.

CUSTOMARY SERVICE. A service due by ancient custom or prescription only. Such is, for example, the service of doing suit at another's mill, where the persons resident in a particular place, by usage, time out of mind have been accustomed to grind corn at a particular mill. 3 Bla. Com. 234.

CUSTOMARY TENANTS. Tenants who hold by the custom of the manor. 2 Bla. Com. 149.

CUSTOMS. Taxes levied upon goods and merchandise imported or exported. Story, Const. § 949; Bacon, Abr. Smuggling.

The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff payable upon merchandise exported or imported. These are called customs from having been paid from time immemorial. Expressed in law Latin by custuma, as distinguished by consuetudines, which are usages merely. 1 Bla. Com. 314.

Nine general appraisers are appointed by the president (not more than five from the same political party). They are employed at such ports and within such limits as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. Three of them constitute a board of general appraisers at the port of New York. It is a part of their duties to make reappraisements of the dutiable value of goods on demand of the importer, etc., or the collector. There is an appeal from the appraiser or person acting as such, or from the general appraiser in cases of reappraisement (either by the importer, etc., or by the collector) to the general board in New York or another board of three general appraisers designated by the Secretary.

The collector fixes the rate and amount of duties chargeable. If an importer, etc., gives the required notice, the papers are then transmitted to the general board in New York, or to another such board designated by the Secretary. From its decision, an appeal lies to the district court in the district, which may, upon request of the importer, etc., the Secretary, or the collector, direct a general appraiser to procure further evidence. The court then determines the classification and the rate of duty. It may, if it deems the case of such importance, allow an appeal to the Supreme Court, and shall allow one whenever the Attorney-General requests it within 30 days from a decision. Provision is made for giving publicity to the rulings of the general appraisers and the boards. Act of June 10, 1890, as amended Aug. 5, 1909.

See SMUGGLING; TARIFF; PROTEST, PAYMENT UNDER.

CUSTOS BREVIUM (Lat.). Keeper of writs. An officer of the court of common pleas whose duty it is to receive and keep all the writs returnable to that court and put them upon file, and also to receive of the prothonotaries all records of nisi prius, called postcas. Blount. An officer in the king's bench having similar duties. Cowell; Termes de la Ley. The office is now abolished.

CUSTOS MARIS (Lat.). Warden or guardian of the seas. Among the Saxons, an admiral. Spelman, Gloss. Admiralius.

CUSTOS MORUM. Applied to the court of king's bench, as "the guardian of the morals" of the nation. 4 Steph. Com. 311.

CUSTOS PLACITORUM CORONÆ (Lat.). Keeper of the Pleas of the Crown (the criminal records). Said by Blount and Cowell to be the same as the Custos Rotulorum.

CUSTOS ROTULORUM (Lat.). Keeper of the rolls of the peace. The principal justice of the peace of a county, who is the keeper of the records of the county. 1 Bla. Com. 349. He is always a justice of the peace and quorum, is the chief civil officer of the king in the county, and is nominated under the king's sign-manual. He is rather to be considered a minister or officer than a judge. Cowell; Lambard, Eiren. 373; 4 Bla. Com. 272; 3 Steph. Com. 37. The office has come to be united with that of the lord-lieutenant of the county. Maitland, Justice, etc., 82.

CUSTUMA. Duties. See CONSUETUDO.

CUSTUMA ANTIQUA SIVE MAGNA (Lat. ancient or great duties). The duties on wool, sheepskin or wool-pelts and leather exported were so called, and were payable by every merchant, stranger as well as native, with the exception that merchant strangers paid one-half more than natives. 1 Bla. Com. 314.

CUSTUMA PARVA ET NOVA (Lat.). An impost of threepence in the pound sterling on all commodities exported or imported by merchant strangers. Called at first the alien's duty, and first granted by stat. 31 Edw. I. Maddox, Hist. Exch. 526, 532; 1 Bla. Com. 314.

CUT. A wound made with a sharp instrument. State v. Patza, 3 La. Ann. 512; 1 Russ. & R. 104. See Binns v. Lawrence, 12 How. (U. S.) 9, 13 L. Ed. 871.

CYNEBOTE. A mulct anciently paid, by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelman, Gloss.

CY PRES (L. Fr. as near as). The rule of construction applied to a will (but not to a deed) by which, where the testator evinces a general intention to be carried into effect in a particular mode which cannot be followed, the words shall be so construed as to give effect to the general intention. 3 Hare 12; 2 Term 254; 2 Bligh 49; Sugd. Pow. 60; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 532; Bisph. Eq. § 126; McGrath, Cy Pres.

The doctrine of approximation, whereby the intent of the testator or grantor, which is impracticable to carry out literally, is carried out as near as possible. Mott v. Morris, 249 Mo. 137, 155 S. W. 434.

As commonly understood it has two features—one the right to exercise prerogative authority, enabling a court to deal with a bequest to a charitable use having no designated particular purpose as a bequest to charity generally, treating the purpose as the legatee, or a bequest for an illegal purpose, or some purpose impossible of execution for some reason; and the other, the right by liberal rules of construction to deal with a trust having a designated particular purpose, though in general terms, and enforce it within the limits of such purpose, supplying the trustee if necessary; Tincher v. Arnold, 147 Fed. 665, 77 C. C. A. 649, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 471, 8 Ann. Cas. 917; Harrington v. Pier, 105 Wis. 485, 82 N. W. 345, 50 L. R. A. 307, 76 Am. St. Rep. 924.

The principle is applied to sustain wills in which perpetuities are attempted to be created, so that, if it can possibly be done, the devise is not regarded as utterly void, but is expounded in such a manner as to carry the testator's intention into effect as far as the law respecting perpetuities will allow. This is called a construction cy pres. Its rules are vague, and depend chiefly upon judicial discretion applied to the particular case. Sedgwick, Stat. Law 265; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1167. A limitation void because it offends the doctrine of perpetuity will be void altogether, and cannot be held under the cy pres rule of construction to be good as to that part which keeps within the period of perpetuity, and void only as to the excess; Post v. Rohrbach, 142 Ill. 606, 32 N. E. 687.

It is also applied to sustain devises and bequests for charities (q. v.). In its origin the doctrine was applied, in the exercise of the royal prerogative, delegated to the Lord Chancellor under the sign manual of the crown. Where there was a definite charitable purpose which was illegal and could not take place, the chancellor would substitute another. The judicial doctrine under this name is that if charity be the general substantial intention, though the mode provided for its execution fails, the English chancery will find some means of effectuating it, even by applying the fund to a different purpose from that contemplated by the testator, but as near to it as possible, provided only it be charitable; Bisph. Eq. § 129; Boyle, Char. 147, 155; Shelf, Mortm. 601; 3 Bro. C. C. 379; 7 Ves. 69, 82. Where a legacy is given to a charitable institution which exists at the testator's death, but ceases to exist before the legacy is paid over, it becomes the property of the charity on the death of the testator, and upon the charity ceasing to exist it is applicable to charitable purposes according to the doctrine of cy pres; [1891] 2 Ch. 236. Most of the cases carry the doctrine beyond what is allowed where private interests are concerned, and have in no inconsiderable degree to draw for their support on the prerogative of the crown and the statute of charitable uses; 43 Eliz. c. 4. This doctrine does not universally obtain in this country to the disinherison of heirs and next of kin. See CHARITABLE USES; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 580; Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. (U. S.) 127, 11 L. Ed. 205; Perin v. Carey, 24 How. (U. S.) 465, 16 L. Ed. 701; Loring v. Marsh, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 337, 18 L. Ed. 802; Williams v. Williams, 8 N. Y. 548.

The doctrine of cy pres with reference to charitable trusts is that where a definite function or duty is to be performed, which cannot be done in exact conformity with the plan of the person who has provided therefor, such function or duty will be performed with as close approximation to the original plan as is reasonably practicable; Ingraham v. Ingraham, 169 Ill. 432, 48 N. E. 561, 49 N. E. 320; MacKenzie v. Trustees, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 61 Atl. 1027, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

In cases where there has been an intention to make an unconditional gift to a non-existent corporation or society, then the gift will be regarded as immediate supported upon the doctrine of cy pres; Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 2 Sup. Ct. 327, 27 L. Ed. 397; Swasey v. American Bible Soc., 57 Me. 523; Cumming v. Reid Memorial Church, 64 Ga. 105; Andrews v. Andrews, 110 Ill. 223; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70, 1 N. W. 92, 50 N. W. 1103. In some states, however, the power to administer a charitable trust cy pres is declared not to exist, and therefore gifts to corporations not in being are void for remoteness; Shipman v. Rollins, 98 N. Y. 311; Little v. Willford, 31 Minn. 173, 17 N. W. 282; Methodist Church of Newark v. Clark, 41 Mich. 730, 3 N. W. 207; Barnum v. Council of Baltimore, 62 Md. 275, 50 Am. Rep. 219; Williams v. Pearson, 38 Ala. 299. Though the disallowance of charitable gifts to corporations not in being seems to be the logical consequence of repudiating the doctrine of cy pres, yet there are some states whose courts repudiate the doctrine of cy pres and yet support such gifts; Literary Fund v. Dawson, 10 Leigh (Va.) 147; Bridges v. Pleasants, 39 N. C. 80, 44 Am. Dec. 94; Zeisweiss v. James, 63 Pa. 465, 3 Am. Rep. 553.

Upon the dissolution of a charitable corporation, its property will be appropriated by the court to the purpose most nearly akin to the intent of the donors and will not be distributed to the donors; In re Centennial & Memorial Ass'n of Valley Forge, 235 Pa. 206, 83 Atl. 683.

Where the perpetuity is attempted to be created by deed, all the limitations based upon it are void; Cruise, Dig. t. 38, c. 9, § 34. See, 1 Vern. 250; 2 Ves. 336, 337, 364, 380; 3 id. 141, 220; 4 id. 13; Com. Dig. Condition (L, 1); 1 Roper, Leg. 514; Dane, Abr. Index; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 6, t. 2, § 1; Shelf, Mortm.; Highmore, Mortm.; 8 H. L. R. 69.

The cy pres doctrine has been repudiated by the states of Alabama, Iowa, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin (quere). But the doctrine has been approved in all the New England states, also Pennsylvania and New York; in Mississippi and Illinois, and in some other states, the question has not been decided. Bisph. Eq. § 130; Eliot's Appeal, 74 Conn. 586, 51 Atl. 544; Duggan v. Slocum, 83 Fed. 244; Lennig's Estate, 154 Pa. 209, 25 Atl. 1049; Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568; Howard v. Society, 49 Me. 302.

In England, a gift to a charity which failed in the testator's lifetime is not within the doctrine; [1898] 1 Ch. 19; otherwise, if the charity never existed; [1902] 1 Ch. 276; or if the name be left blank; [1896] 2 Ch. 451, C. A. It applies where there is a gift to a charity which has failed, though there be a gift over to a second charity; 1 Myl. & K. 410. It does not apply if the gift is not charitable; 1 De G. F. & J. 399; or in case of a gift for masses; 2 Drew. 425. The cy pres scheme will be settled as near as possible to the testator's intention; 10 Cl. & F. 908.

CYROGRAPHARIUS. In Old English Law. A cyrographer. An officer of the common pleas court.

CYROGRAPHUM. A chirograph, which see.

D. S. B. See DERET SINE BREVE.

D. V. N. See DEVISAVIT VEL NON.

DACION. In Spanish Law. The real and effective delivery of an object in the execution of a contract.

DAILY. Every day; day by day. Web.

Where a statute requires an advertisement to be published in a daily newspaper it is such if it uses the term "daily newspaper" in contradistinction to the term "weekly," "semi-weekly," or "tri-weekly" newspaper. The term was used and is to be understood in its popular sense, and in this sense it is clear that a paper which, according to its usual custom, is published every day of the week except one, is a daily newspaper; otherwise a paper which is published every day except Sunday would not be a daily newspaper. Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30. It may include a legal journal; Kellogg v. Carrico, 47 Mo. 157.

DAM. A construction of wood, stone, or other materials, made across a stream of water for the purpose of confining it; a mole. See People v. Gaige, 23 Mich. 93; Colwell v. Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 245.

It is an instrument for turning the water of a stream to the use of a mill; Burnham v. Kempton, 44 N. H. 78.

The word is sometimes used for the pond formed by the obstruction; Colwell v. Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 245; Natoma Water & Mining Co. v. Hancock, 101 Cal. 42, 31 Pac. 112, 35 Pac. 334; Hutchinson v. Ry. Co., 37 Wis. 582; and it is held to be synonymous with dyke; Com. v. Tolman, 149 Mass. 229, 21 N. E. 377, 3 L. R. A. 747, 14 Am. St. Rep. 414. The water collected by a dam is not properly termed a reservoir, as its object is not storage of water; Natoma Water & Mining Co. v. Hancock, 101 Cal. 42, 31 Pac. 112, 35 Pac. 334.

The construction of dams in floatable streams to facilitate their use is in some states authorized by statute; Brooks v. River Imp. Co., 82 Me. 17, 19 Atl. 87, 7 L. R. A. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 459; Kretschmar v. Meehan, 74 Minn. 211, 77 N. W. 41; Field v. Log Driving Co., 67 Wis. 569, 31 N. W. 17; McLaughlin v. Mfg. Co., 103 N. C. 100, 9 S. E. 307; and incidental injuries to land of riparian proprietors thereby damaged are held to be consequential injuries incident to their proprietorship; Brooks v. River Imp. Co., 82 Me. 17, 19 Atl. 87, 7 L. R. A. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 459. See LOGS; RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

The owner of a stream not navigable may erect a dam across it, provided he do not thereby materially impair the rights of the proprietors above or below to the use of the water in its accustomed flow; Gould, Waters 110, n.; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 401, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; Vandenburgh v. Van Bergen, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 212; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 90, 11 Am. Dec. 249; Boynton v. Rees, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 528; *Wadsworth v. He may even detain the water for the purposes of a mill, for a reasonable time, to the injury of an older mill,—the reasonableness of the detention in each particular case being a question for the jury; Hartzall v. Sill, 12 Pa. 248; Thomas v. Brackney, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 654; Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 459, 67 Am. Dec. 723; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 25 Conn. 321; Phillips v. Sherman, 64 Me. 171; Drake v. Woolen Co., 99 Mass. 574; Hoxsie v. Hoxsie, 38 Mich. 77; Holden v. Lake Co., 53 N. H. 552. But he must not unreasonably detain the water; Dilling v. Murray, 6 Ind. 324, 63 Am. Dec. 385; and the jury may find the constant use of the water by night and a detention of it by day to be an unreasonable use, though there be no design to injure others; Barrett v. Parsons, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 367; see Bullard v. Mfg. Co., 77 N. Y. 525. Nor has such owner the right to raise his dam so high as to cause the stream to flow back upon the land of supra-riparian proprietors; 1 B. & Ald. 258; Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287; Union Canal Co. v. Keiser, 19 Pa. 134; Pitman v. Poor, 38 Me. 237; Ellington v. Bennett, 59 Ga. 286; Drew v. Inhabitants of Westfield, 124 Mass. 461. And see BACK-WATER. These rights may, of course, be modified by contract or prescription.

An owner maintaining a dam across a floatable stream is entitled to an injunction against the operation of a splash dam by an upper riparian owner in such manner as to interfere materially with the continuity of his power and to fill his pond and race with dirt; Trullinger v. Howe, 53 Or. 219, 97 Pac. 548, 99 Pac. 880, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545.

A mill proprietor may erect and maintain dams in a floatable stream, but he must keep open, for the use of those that wish, a convenient and considerable passageway for logs through or by his dam; Lancey v. Clifford, 54 Me. 487, 92 Am. Dec. 561; Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Olcott Falls Co., 65 N. H. 290, 21 Atl. 1090, 13 L. R. A. 826; Powell v. Lumber Co., 12 Idaho, 723, 88 Pac. 97; he may erect dividing pliers to separate his logs from the common mass, but he must make reasonable provision for the passage of other logs without unreasonable hindrance; A. C. Conn. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 74 Wis. 652, 43 N. W. 660.

One erecting fences and culverts across a stream is not liable for injuries to an upper riparian proprietor because they are not sufficient to pass an extraordinary flood, due to the giving way of a dam or to an unprecedented rainfall; American Locomotive Co. v. Hoffman, 105 Va. 343, 54 S. E. 25, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 252, 8 Ann. Cas. 773. Riparian owners upon navigable fresh water lakes may construct in the shore waters in front of their lands wharves, piers, landings, and booms; Revell v. People, 177 Ill. 468, 52 N. E. 1052, 43 L. R. A. 790, 69 Am. St. Rep. 257; Mobile Transp. Co. v. City of Mobile, 153 Ala. 409, 44 South. 976, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352, 127 Am. St. Rep. 34.

A state has full power, in the absence of legislation by congress, to authorize dams across interior streams although previously navigable to the sea; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 50 L. Ed. 274.

If there be no license or act from which a license will necessarily follow, a person erecting a dam so as to flood the land of another, is a trespasser and acts at his peril; De Vaughn v. Minor, 77 Ga. 809, 1 S. E. 433.

When one side of the stream is owned by one person and the other by another, neither, without the consent of the other, can build a dam which extends beyond the flum aquæ, thread of the river, without committing a trespass; Cro. Eliz. 269; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; Lindeman v. Lindsey, 69 Pa. 93, 8 Am. Rep. 219. See Lois des Bât. p. 1, c. 3, s. 1, a. 3; Pothier, Traité du Contrat de Société, second app. 236; Stiles v. Hooker, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 266; McCalmont v. Whitaker, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 90, 23 Am. Dec. 102; Anthony v. Lapham, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 175; Goodwin v. Gibbs, 70 Me. 243.

Many of the states have statutes enabling persons to build dams on their own land, although in so doing the land of a higher riparian owner may be overflowed; and in some cases this permission is given although the party may own the land on one side only. In all these instances, however, a remedy is provided for assessing the damages resulting from such dam. See Angell, Waterc. §§ 482, 484.

Where the natural flow of water has been collected by a permanent artificial dam into an artificial channel, and such condition has continued for more than twenty years, the riparian owners acquire a prescriptive right to have the water remain at such high stage, and the person who placed the permanent obstruction in the stream, and all other persons claiming under him are estopped from restoring the water to its original state; 4 Hurlst. & C. 714; Jones, Easem. 808; Washb.

Easem. § 47; Woodbury v. Short, 17 Vt. 387, 44 Am. Dec. 344; Belknap v. Trimble, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 577; Shepardson v. Perkins, 58 N. H. 354; Delaney v. Boston, 2 Harr. (Del.) 489; Mathewson v. Hoffman, 77 Mich. 420, 43 N. W. 879, 6 L. R. A. 349; Smith v. Youmans, 96 Wis. 103, 70 N. W. 1115, 37 L. R. A. 285, 65 Am. St. Rep. 30; Murchie v. Gates, 78 Me. 300, 4 Atl. 698; Canton Iron Co. v. Biwabik Bessemer Co., 63 Minn. 367, 65 N. W. 643; City of Reading v. Althouse, 93 Pa. 400; Kray v. Muggli, 84 Minn. 90, 86 N. W. 882, 54 L. R. A. 473, 87 Am. St. Rep. 332, where the owner of the dam acquired his right to maintain it by prescription. The owners of the land flooded by the dam had improved their property with reference to the changed conditions, the court held that a reciprocal right accrued to the owners of the flooded lands to have the dam remain, and that the person who maintained it could not by any affirmative act restore the stream to its original condition. The decision is criticised, as are certain expressions to the same effect in Belknap v. Trimble, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 577, as not being in accord with the weight of authority; Farnham, Waters 2399; Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. v. Burnham, 147 N. C. 41, 60 S. E. 650, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 125 Am. St. Rep. 527. It is of the essence of such an easement (to divert a stream by an artificial way) that it exists for the benefit of the dominant tenement alone. Being in its very nature a right created for the benefit of the dominant owner, its exercise by him cannot create a new right for the benefit of the servient owner. Like any other right its exercise may be discontinued if it becomes onerous or ceases to be beneficial to the party entitled; L. R. 6 Q. B. 578. In Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. v. Burnham, 147 N. C. 41, 60 S. E. 650, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 125 Am. St. Rep. 527, it is said that decisions upholding the rights of the servient owner may be upheld under the doctrines of dedication and estoppel.

The degree of care which a party who constructs a dam across a stream is bound to use, is in proportion to the extent of injury which will be likely to result to third persons provided it should prove insufficient. It is not enough that the dam is sufficient to resist ordinary floods; for if the stream is occasionally subject to great freshets, these must likewise be guarded against; and the measure of care required in such cases is that which a discreet person would use if the whole risk were his own; Lapham v. Curtis, 5 Vt. 371, 26 Am. Dec. 310; Gray v. Harris, 107 Mass. 492, 9 Am. Rep. 61; Washb. Easem. *288; Bristol Hydraulic Co. v. Boyer, 67 Ind. 236; State v. Water Co., 51 Conn. 137.

If a mill-dam be so built that it causes a watercourse to overflow the surrounding country, where it becomes stagnant and unwholesome, so that the health of the neighborhood is sensibly impaired, such dam is a public nuisance, for which its owner is liable to indictment; Douglass v. State, 4 Wis. 387.

The owners of a mill dam cannot interfere with the right of the public to float logs on a stream; Lancey v. Clifford, 54 Me. 487, 92 Am. Dec. 561; but one injuring the dam of a riparian owner by running logs down a stream must show that the stream was navigable; 26 U. C. C. P. 539. As to the right of a riparian proprietor on a navigable stream to recover for injuries to his dam by the floating of logs down stream, see Logs, which see also as to the conflicting rights of dam owners and log driving companies. See Carlson v. Imp. Co., 73 Minn. 128, 75 N. W. 1044, 41 L. R. A. 372, 72 Am. St. Rep. 610; Coyne v. Boom Co., 72 Minn. 533, 75 N. W. 748, 41 L. R. A. 494, 71 Am. St. Rep. 508. So it is an indictable nuisance to erect a dam so as to overflow a highway; State v. Phipps, 4 Ind. 515; Com. v. Fisher, 6 Mete. (Mass.) 433; see Stone v. Peckham, 12 R. I. 27; or so as to obstruct the navigation of a public river; Newark Plank Road Co. v. Elmer, 9 N. J. Eq. 754; Tyrell v. Lockhart, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 136; Williams v. Beardsley, 2 Ind. 591; Morgan v. King, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 277; Bacon v. Arthur, 4 Watts (Pa.) 437; Hoxsie v. Hoxsie, 38 Mich. 77; Lagrone v. Trice, 57 Miss. 227; Ellis v. Harris' Ex'r, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 684. See IRRIGATION; RIVER; WATERCOURSE; RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR; POLICE POWER.

DAMAGE. The loss caused by one person to another, or to his property, either with the design of injuring him, or with negligence and carelessness, or by inevitable accident.

In England, in the common law courts, it was held that neither in common parlance nor in legal phraseology is the word "damage" used as applicable to injuries done to property; 40 L. J. Q. B. 218; 41 L. J. C. P. 128.

The admiralty courts on the other hand contended that the word did include claims for personal injury and even for loss of life; 37 L. J. Adm. 14; 38 id. 12, 50; 46 L. J. P. D. & A. 71; 2 P. D. 8.

But the House of Lords construing section 7 of the Admiralty Court Act, 24 Vict. c. 10, providing that "the High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for damages done by any ship" established the former doctrine, and held that a claim for loss of life under Lord Campbell's Act is not a claim for damage within the provisions of the Admiralty Court Act; 54 L. J. P. D. & A. 9; 10 App. Cas. 59.

But the word may be controlled by the context and can mean personal injury; 52 L. J. Q. B. 395; and there seems in this country to be no distinction between the meaning of the words damage and injury.

Damage to the person as used in the Massachusetts statute relating to survival of actions, does not extend to torts not directly affecting the person, but includes every action the substantial cause of which is bodily injury, as the negligent sale of deadly poison for a harmless drug as the result of which a man dies; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298.

He who has caused the damage is bound to repair it; and if he has done it maliciously he may be compelled to pay beyond the actual loss; Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270. When damage occurs by accident without blame to any one, the loss is borne by the owner of the thing injured: as, if a horse run away with his rider, without any fault of the latter, and injure the property of another person, the injury is the loss of the owner of the thing. When the damage happens by the act of God, or inevitable accident, as by tempest, earthquake, or other natural cause, the loss must be borne by the owner. See Comyns, Dig.; Sedgwick; Mayne; Sutherland; Joyce; Hale; Field, Damages; 1 Rutherf. Inst. 399; COMPENSATION; DAMAGES; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

DAMAGE CLEER. The tenth part in the common pleas, and the twentieth part in the king's bench and exchequer courts, of all damages beyond a certain sum, which was to be paid the prothonotary or chief officer of the court in which they were recovered before execution could be taken out. At first it was a gratuity, and of uncertain proportions. Abolished by stat. 17 Car. II. c. 6. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

DAMAGE FEASANT (French, faisant dommage, doing damage). A term usually applied to the injury which animals belonging to one person do upon the land of another, by feeding there, treading down his grass, corn, or other production of the earth. 3 Bla. Com. 6; Co. Litt. 142, 161; Com. Dig. Pleader (3 M, 26).

It "is the strictest distress, for the thing distrained must be taken in the very act;" Lord Holt in 12 Mod. 658; 3 Bla. Com. 6, 7. By the common law, a distress of animals or things damage feasant is allowed. Gilb. Distr. 21; Poll. Torts 473, 478. It was also allowed by the ancient customs of France. 11 Toullier 402; Merlin, Répert. Fourriere; 1 Fournel, Abandon. See ANIMAL.

DAMAGED GOODS. Goods subject to duties, which have received some injury either in the voyage home, or while bonded in warehouse.

DAMAGES. The indemnity recoverable by a person who has sustained an injury, either in his person, property, or relative rights, through the act or default of another.

The sum claimed as such indemnity by a plaintiff in his declaration.

The injury or loss for which compensation is sought.

Compensatory damages. Those allowed as a recompense for the injury actually received. They cannot include an allowance for inconvenience as well as injuries; Jenson v. R. Co., 86 Wis. 589, 57 N. W. 359, 22 L. R. A. 680.

Consequential damages. Those which, though directly, are not immediately, consequential upon the act or default complained of.

Double or treble damages. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Exemplary damages. Those allowed for torts committed with fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence or oppression, as a punishment to the defendant, and as a warning to other wrong doers. Mayer v. Frobe, 40 W. Va. 246, 22 S. E. 58; Hale, Dam. 200; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

General damages. Those which necessarily and by implication of law result from the act or default complained of.

They are such as the jury may give when the judge cannot point out any measure by which they are to be ascertained, except the opinion and judgment of a reasonable man. They are such as by competent evidence are directly traceable to a failure to discharge a contract, obligation or duty imposed by law. Bank of Commerce v. Goos, 39 Neb. 437, 58 N. W. 84, 23 L. R. A. 190.

Liquidated damages. See that title.

Nominal damages. See that title.

Punitive damages. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Special damages. Such as arise directly, but not necessarily or by implication of law, from the act or default complained of.

These are either superadded to general damages, arising from an act injurious in itself, as when some particular loss arises from the uttering of slanderous words, actionable in themselves, or are such as arise from an act indifferent and not actionable in itself, but injurious only in its consequences, as when the words become actionable only by reason of special damage ensuing.

Unliquidated damages. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

Vindictive damages. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In modern law, the term damages is not used in a legal sense to include the costs of the suit; though it was formerly so used. Co. Litt. 267 a; Dougl. 751.

The various classes of damages here given are those commonly found in the text-books and in the decisions of courts of common law. Other terms are of occasional use (as resulting, to denote consequential damages), but are easily recognizable as belonging to some one of the above divisions. The question whether damages are to be limited to an allowance compensatory merely in its nature and extent, or whether they may be assessed as a punishment upon a wrong-doer in certain cases for the injury inflicted by him upon the plaintiff, received much attention from the courts and was very fully and vigorously discussed by Greenleaf and Sedgwick, the latter of whom, though supporting the doctrine admitted that it was exceptional and anomalous and could not be logically supported; Sedgw. Dam. § 353. He attributes the origin of the principle to the rule making juries the judges of the damages; id. § 354. In cases of aggravated wrong there were large verdicts and the courts were powerless, although the early cases consisted mainly of setting them aside. Originating in the unrestrained expressions of judges in justifying verdicts, there grew up this doctrine of exemplary damages characterized as "a sort of hybrid between a display of ethical indignation, and the imposition of a criminal fine." The current of authorities set strongly (in numbers, at least) in favor of allowing punitive damages; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. (U. S.) 363, 14 L. Ed. 181; and that rule of decision has prevailed in most of the states, though in some it is repudiated entirely; Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 Mich. 280, 18 N. W. 815; Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 383; Greeley, S. L. & P. R. Co. v. Yeager, 11 Colo. 345, 18 Pac. 211; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475; and in others the doctrine is also denied but exemplary damages were permitted on the ground that they were compensatory merely for mental suffering; Quigley v. R. Co., 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757; Union Pac. R. R. Co. v. Hause, 1 Wyo. 27. This rule prevailed in West Virginia; Pegram v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220, 6 S. E. 485; Beck v. Thompson, 31 W. Va. 459, 7 S. E. 447, 13 Am. St. Rep. 870; but has been over-ruled; Mayer v. Frobe, 40 W. Va. 246, 22 S. E. 58. The argument against such damages was based on the objection that it admits of the infliction of pecuniary punishment to an almost unlimited extent by an irresponsible jury, a view which is theoretically more obnoxious (supposing that there is no practical difference) than that which considers damages merely as a compensation, of the just amount of which the jury may well be held to be proper judges. It also seemed to savor somewhat of judicial legislation in a criminal department to extend such damages beyond those cases where an injury is committed to the feelings of an innocent plaintiff. See 2 Greenl. Ev. § 253; 2 Sedgw. Dam. 323; 1 Kent 630; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 465, 23 L. Ed. 356; Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270, where the terms exemplary, vindictive and punitive or punitive are considered as synonymous, and the cases and authorities are exhaustively reviewed.

Direct is here used in opposition to remote, and immediate to consequential.

In Pleading. In personal and mixed actions (but not in penal actions, for obvious reasons), the declaration must allege, in conclusion, that the injury is to the damage of the plaintiff, and must specify the amount of damages; Com. Dig. Pleader (C. 84); 10 Co. 116 b.

In personal actions there is a distinction between actions that sound in damages and those that do not; but in either of these cases it is equally the practice to lay damages. There is, however, this difference: that, in the former case, damages are the main object of the suit, and are, therefore, always laid high enough to cover the whole demand; but in the latter, the liquidated debt, or the chattel demanded, being the main object, damages are claimed in respect of the detention only of such debt or chattel, and are, therefore, usually laid at a small sum. The plaintiff cannot recover greater damages than he has laid in the conclusion of his declaration; Com. Dig. Pleader (C. 84); 10 Co. 117 a, b; Viner, Abr. Damages (R.); 1 Bulstr. 49; 2 W. Bla. 1300; Curtiss v. Lawrence, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 111; Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 311, 47 Am. Dec. 254; Fowlkes v. Webber, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 530; New Jersey Flax Cotton Wool Co. v. Mills, 26 N. J. L. 60. See AD DAMNUM. A verdict for larger damages than are alleged or proved should be set aside; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Morin, 66 Tex. 133, 18 S. W. 345.

In real actions no damages are to be laid, because in these the demand is specially for the land withheld, and damages are in no degree the object of the suit; Steph. Pl. 426; 1 Chit. Pl. 397-400.

General damages need not be averred in the declaration; nor need any specific proof of damages be given to enable the plaintiff to recover. The legal presumption of injury in cases where it arises is sufficient to maintain the action. Whether special damage be the gist of the action, or only collateral thereto, it must be particularly stated in the declaration, as the plaintiff will not otherwise be permitted to go into evidence of it at the trial, because the defendant cannot also be prepared to answer it. See 2 Sedgw. Dam. 606; 4 Q. B. 493; 7 C. & P. 804; Agnew v. Johnson, 22 Pa. 471, 62 Am. Dec. 303; Patton v. Libbey, 32 Me. 379; Town of Troy v. R. Co., 23 N. H. 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Brizsee v. Maybee, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 144; Rice v. Coolidge, 121 Mass. 393, 23 Am. Rep. 279; Nunan v. San Francisco, 38 Cal. 689; Tomlinson v. Town of Derby, 43 Conn. 562; Parker v. Burgess, 64 Vt. 442, 24 Atl. 743; Oliver v. Perkins, 92 Mich. 304, 52 N. W. 609; Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 578, 18 L. Ed. 791.

In Practice. To constitute a right to recover damages, the party claiming damages must have sustained a loss; the party against whom they are claimed must be chargeable with a wrong; the loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong.

There is no right to damages, properly so called, where there is no loss. A sum in which a wrong-doer is mulcted simply as punishment for his wrong, and irrespective of any loss caused thereby, is a "fine," or a "penalty," rather than damages. Damages are based on the idea of a loss to be compensated, a damage to be made good; Yates v. Joyce, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 136; Smith v. Sherwood, 2 Tex. 460; Allison v. McCune, 15 Ohio 726, 45 Am. Dec. 605; Webb v. Mfg. Co., 3 Sumn. 192, Fed. Cas. No. 17,322; Linton v. Hurley, 104 Mass. 353; 16 Q. B. D. 613. See Dayton v. Parke, 142 N. Y. 391, 37 N. E. 642; Hale, Dam. 3. This loss, however, need not always be distinct and definite, capable of exact description or of measurement in dollars and cents. A sufficient loss to sustain an action may appear from the mere nature of the case itself. The law in many cases presumes a loss where a wilful wrong is proved; and thus also damages are awarded for injured feelings, bodily pain, grief of mind, injury to reputation, and for other sufferings which it would be impossible to make subjects of exact proof and computation in respect to the amount of the loss sustained; Tilden v. Metcalf, 2 Day (Conn.)

259; Johnson v. Courts, 3 H. & McH. (Md.) 510; Ratliff v. Huntly, 27 N. C. 545; Wilkins v. Gilmore, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 140; Huntley v. Bacon, 15 Conn. 267; Jennings v. Maddox, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 432; Hatt v. News Ass'n, 94 Mich. 119, 54 N. W. 766; White v. Barnes, 112 N. C. 323, 16 S. E. 922; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Christian, 39 Ill. App. 495; Hale v. Bonner, 82 Tex. 33, 17 S. W. 605, 14 L. R. A. 336, 27 Am. St. Rep. 850. See MENTAL SUFFERING. The rule is not that a loss must be proved by evidence, but that one must appear, either by evidence or by presumption, founded on the nature of the case.

There is no right to damages where there is no wrong. It is not necessary that there should be a tort, strictly so called,—a wilful wrong, an act involving moral guilt. The wrong may be either a wilful, malicious injury, as in the case of assault and battery, libel, and the like, or one committed through mere motives of interest, as in many cases of conversion of goods, trespasses on land, etc.; or it may consist in a mere neglect to discharge a duty with suitable skill or fidelity, as where a surgeon is held liable for malpractice, a sheriff for the escape of his prisoner, or a carrier for the neglect to deliver goods; or a simple breach of contract, as in case of refusal to deliver goods sold, or to perform services under an agreement; or it may be a wrong of another person for whose act or default a legal liability exists, as where a master is held liable for an injury done by his servant or apprentice, or a railroad company for an accident resulting from the negligence of its engineer. But there must be something which the law recognizes as a wrong, some breach of a legal duty, some violation of a legal right, some default or neglect, some failure in responsibility, sustained by the party claiming damages. For the sufferer by accident or by the innocent or rightful acts of another cannot claim indemnity for his misfortune. It is called damnum absque injuria,—a loss without a wrong, for which the law gives no remedy; Pollock, Torts 22, 175; Bartholomew v. Bentley, 15 Ohio 659, 45 Am. Dec. 596; 11 M. & W. 755; Howland v. Vincent, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 371, 43 Am. Dec. 442; Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339, 20 Am. Rep. 394; Brown v. Collins, 53 N. H. 442, 16 Am. Rep. 372; Chase v. Silverstone, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419; Trustees, etc., of Village of Delhi v. Younians, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 316; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Reaney, 42 Md. 119; Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318; 3 L. R. 3 H. L. 330; Egan v. Hart, 45 La. Ann. 1358, 14 South. 244; Booth v. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 267, 35 N. E. 592, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552.

See DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA.

The obligation violated must also be one owed to the plaintiff. The neglect of a duty, which the plaintiff had no legal right to enforce, gives no claim to damages, though perhaps it is better said, gives no right of action. Thus where a postmaster was required by law to advertise in the newspaper in his city having the largest circulation, and chose another newspaper, it was merely a breach of a duty he owed to the public and not to the owner of the newspaper having the largest circulation; Strong v. Campbell, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 135.

Whether when the law gives judgment on a contract to pay money—e. g. on a promissory note—this is to be regarded as enforcing performance of the promise, or as awarding damages for the breach of it, is a question on which juriconsults have differed. Regarded in the latter point of view, the default of payment is the wrong on which the award of damages is predicated.

The loss must be the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 256; 2 Sedgw. Dam. 362; Field, Dam. 42; Hale, Dam. 4. Smith v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 10 Sup. Ct. 39, 33 L. Ed. 279. Or, as others have expressed the idea, it must be the "direct and necessary," or "legal and natural," consequence. It must not be "remote" or "consequential." The loss must be the natural consequence. Every man is expected—and may justly be—to foresee the usual and natural consequences of his acts, and for these he may justly be held accountable; but not for consequences that could not have been foreseen; Dickinson v. Boyle, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 78, 28 Am. Dec. 281; Donnell v. Jones, 13 Ala. 490, 48 Am. Dec. 59; Vedder v. Hildreth, 2 Wis. 427; Walker & Langford v. Ellis & Moore, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 515; Young v. Tustin, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 277; 6 Q. B. 928; Fritts v. R. Co., 62 Conn. 503, 26 Atl. 347; Swain v. Schieffelin, 134 N. Y. 471, 31 N. E. 1025, 18 L. R. A. 385. See Malone v. R. R., 152 Pa. 390, 394, 25 Atl. 638; Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Hatcher Mfg. Co., 39 Fed. 440, 3 L. R. A. 587. It must also be the proximate consequence. Vague and indefinite results, remote and consequential, and thus uncertain, are not embraced in the compensation given by damages. It cannot be certainly known that they are attributable to the wrong, or whether they are not rather connected with other causes; Hatchell v. Kimbrough, 49 N. C. 163; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 302. See Engelsdorf v. Sire, 64 Hun 209, 18 N. Y. Supp. 907; Brooke v. Bank, 60 Hun 202, 23 N. Y. Supp. 802.

In cases of tort the rule has been thus stated: "The question is not what cause was nearest in time or place to the catastrophe. This is not the meaning of the maxim causa proxima non remota spectatur. The proximate cause is the efficient cause, the one that sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental, or instruments of a superior or controlling agency, are not the proximate causes, and the responsible ones, though they may be nearer in time to the result. It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is, of course, to be charged with the disaster;" Ætna Insurance Co. v. Roon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. Ed. 395. See CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR.

"The true inquiry is, whether the injury sustained was such as, according to common experience and the usual course of events, might reasonably be anticipated;" Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 131. See L. R. 10 Q. B. 111; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Barker, 4 Colo. 344, 34 Am. Rep. 89; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Close, 5 Ind. App. 444, 32 N. E. 588.

The foregoing are the general principles on which the right to recover damages is based. Many qualifying rules have been established, of which the following are among the more important instances. In an action for damages for an injury caused by negligence, the plaintiff must himself appear to have been free from fault; for if his own negligence in any degree contributed directly to produce the injury, he can recover nothing. The law will not attempt to apportion the loss according to the different degrees of negligence of the two parties; 1 C. & P. 181; Miller v. Trustees of Mariner's Church, 7 Me. 51, 20 Am. Dec. 341; Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 284; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 49; Murphy v. Diamond, 3 La. Ann. 441; Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403, 27 N. W. 581; though this rule has in some cases been relaxed in favor of the plaintiff; L. R. 1 Ap. Ca. 754; e. g., if the injury would have occurred although the plaintiff had been free from negligence; 8 C. B. N. S. 115; Newhouse v. Miller, 35 Ind. 463; Walsh v. Transp. Co., 52 Mo. 434; Lindsey v. Town of Danville, 45 Vt. 72; or if the injury is wilful; Cook v. R. & Bank Co., 67 Ala. 533; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Graham, 95 Ind. 286, 48 Am. Rep. 719; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bodemer, 139 Ill. 596, 29 N. E. 692, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218. See NEGLIGENCE. There is no right of action by an individual for damages sustained from a public nuisance, so far as he only shares the common injury inflicted on the community; 5 Co. 72. For any special loss suffered by himself alone, he may recover; 4 Maule & S. 101; 2 Bingham 263; 1 Bingham N. C. 222; 2 id. 281; Baxter v. Turnpike Co., 22 Vt. 114, 52 Am. Dec. 84; Proprietors of Quincy Canal v. Newcomb, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 276, 39 Am. Dec. 778; Mayor, etc., of Pittsburgh v. Scott, 1 Pa. 309; O'Brien v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 372; but in so far as the whole neighborhood suffer together, resort must be had to the public remedy; 7 Q. B. 339; Proprietors of Quincy Canal v. Newcomb, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 276, 39 Am. Dec. 778; Barr v. Stevens, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 293. Judicial officers are not liable in damages for erroneous decisions. See JUDGE; LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

Where the wrong committed by the defendant amounted to a felony, the English rule was that the private remedy by action was stayed till conviction for the felony was had. This was in order to stimulate the exertions of private persons injured by the commission of crimes to bring offenders to justice. This rule has, however, been changed in some of the United States. Thus, in New York it is enacted that when the violation of a right admits of both a civil and criminal remedy, one is not merged in the other. And see Boardman v. Gore, 15 Mass. 336; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Stor. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 10,406; Turner's Case, Ware 78, Fed. Cas. No. 14,248. A criminal prosecution and conviction for an assault and battery is not a bar to the recovery of punitive damages in a civil action for the same offence; but it may be shown in mitigation of damages; Rhodes v. Rodgers, 151 Pa. 634, 24 Atl. 1044; but see Roach v. Caldebeck, 64 Vt. 593, 24 Atl. 989. When a servant is injured through the negligence of a fellow-servant employed in the same enterprise or avocation, the common employer is not liable for damages. The servant, in engaging, takes the risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow-servants; McKinn. Fellow-Serv. 18; Farwell v. R. Corporation, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339; Hubgh v. R. Co., 6 La. Ann. 495; Ryan v. R. Co., 23 Pa. 354; Coon v. R. Co., 5 N. Y. 493; Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698; Honner v. R. Co., 15 Ill. 550; Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Keary, 3 Ohio St. 201; 5 Exch. 343. But this rule does not exonerate the master from liability for negligence of a servant in a different employment. See MASTER AND SERVANT. But this rule has been altered in some states, and by act of congress in certain cases; see EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS.

By the common law, no action was maintainable to recover damages for the death of a human being; 1 Campb. 493; Carey v. R. Co., 1 Cush. (Mass.) 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616; Hendrick v. Walton, 69 Tex. 192, 6 S. W. 749. As to the right under statutes, see DEATH.

Excessive or inadequate damages. Even in that large class of cases in which there is no fixed measure of damages, but they are left to the discretion of the jury, the court has a certain power to review the verdict, and to set it aside if the damages awarded are grossly excessive or unreasonably inadequate. The rule is, however, that a verdict will not be set aside for excessive damages unless the amount is so large as to satisfy the court that the jury have been misled by passion, prejudice, ignorance, or partiality; Field, Dam. 683; Clapp v. R. Co., 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 461; Treanor v. Donahoe, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 228; Kountz v. Brown, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 577; Nicholson v. R. Co., 22 Conn. 74, 56 Am. Dec. 390; Bell v. Morrison, 27 Miss. 68; Lang v. Hopkins, 10 Ga. 37; Marshall v. Gunter, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 419; Payne v. Steamship Co.,

1 Cal. 33; George v. Law, id. 363; Farish v. Reigle, 11 Grat. (Va.) 697, 62 Am. Dec. 666; Dwyer v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 87; City of Delphi v. Lowery, 74 Ind. 520, 39 Am. Rep. 98; Gale v. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 594; Tennessee Coal & Railroad Co. v. Roddy, 85 Tenn. 400, 5 S. W. 286. But this power is very sparingly used; and cases are numerous in which the courts have expressed themselves dissatisfied with the verdict, but have refused to interfere, on the ground that the case did not come within this rule. See Potter v. Thompson, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 87; Woodson v. Scott, 20 Mo. 272; Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345; Barnette v. Hicks, 6 Tex. 352; Spencer v. McMasters, 16 Ill. 405; Whipple v. Mfg. Co., 2 Sto. 661, Fed. Cas. No. 17,516; Vreeland v. Berry, 21 N. J. L. 183; McDermott v. Ry. Co., 85 Wis. 102, 55 N. W. 179; Slette v. Ry. Co., 53 Minn. 341, 55 N. W. 137.

As a general rule, in actions of tort the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of the smallness of damages; 12 Mod. 150; 2 Stra. 940; 24 E. L. & Eq. 406. But they have the power to do so in a proper case; and in a few instances in which the jury have given no redress at all, when some was clearly due, the verdict has been set aside; Richards v. Sandford, 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 349; 4 Q. B. 917.

An important case sustaining this view is reported in 5 Q. B. D. 78; there two verdicts of £7,000 and £16,000, respectively, were successively set aside as inadequate.

In the cases in which there is a fixed legal rule regulating the measure of damages, it must be stated to the jury by the presiding judge upon the trial. His failure to state it correctly is ground of exception; and if the jury disregard the instructions of the court on the subject, their verdict may be set aside. In so far, however, as the verdict is an honest determination of questions of fact properly within their province, it will not, in general, be disturbed. Sedgw. Dam. 604. See CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES; MEASURE OF DAMAGES; DAMAGE.

DAME. A woman of rank, high social position, or culture; specifically, in Great Britain, the legal title of the wife or widow of a knight or baronet. Cent. Dict.

DAMNA (Lat. damnum). Damages, both inclusive and exclusive of costs.

DAMNATUS. In Old English Law. Condemned; prohibited by law; unlawful. Damnatus coitus, an unlawful connection. Black, L. Dict.

DAMNI INJURIAE ACTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. An action for the damage done by one who intentionally injured the beast of another. Calvinus, Lex.

DAMNOSA HÆREDITAS. A name given by Lord Kenyon to that species of property of a bankrupt which, so far from being valuable, would be a charge to the creditors: for example, a term of years where the rent would exceed the revenue.

The assignees are not bound to take such property; but they must make their election, and having once entered into possession they cannot afterwards abandon the property; 7 East 342; 3 Campb. 340.

DAMNUM (Lat.). That which is taken away; loss; damage; legal hurt or harm. Anderson, L. Dict.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA (Lat. injury without wrong). A wrong done to a man for which the law provides no remedy. Broom. Max. 1. See DAMAGES.

Injuria is here to be taken in the sense of legal injury; and where no malice exists, there are many cases of wrong or suffering inflicted upon a man for which the law gives no remedy; 2 Ld. Raym. 595; 11 M. & W. 735; Lamb v. Stone, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 527. Thus, if the owner of property, in the prudent exercise of his own right of dominion, does acts which cause loss to another, it is damnum absque injuria; Gardner v. Heartt, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 168; Howland v. Vincent, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 371, 43 Am. Dec. 442; Trout v. McDonald, 83 Pa. 144; see Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 6 Atl. 453, 57 Am. Rep. 445; 10 M. & W. 109. A railroad company which exercises due care in blasting on its own land, in order to lay its tracks, is not liable for injury to adjoining property arising merely from the incidental jarring; Booth v. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 267, 35 N. E. 592, 24 L. R. A. 105, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552. See BLASTING. The location and operation of a railroad in a street, the bed of which does not belong to an abutting property owner, is, as to him, damnum absque injuria; otherwise if he own the bed of the street; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62, 31 Am. Rep. 306. The ringing of bells, sounding of whistles and other noises, and the emission of smoke by railroads, are damnum absque injuria; Aldrich v. R. Co., 195 Ill. 456, 63 N. E. 155, 57 L. R. A. 237.

So, too, acts of public agents within the scope of their authority, if they cause damage, cause simply damnum absque injuria (q. v.); Sedgw. Dam. 29, 111; Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 418; Bridge over River Lehigh v. Nav. Co., 4 Rawle (Pa.) 9, 26 Am. Dec. 111; Graves v. Otis, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 466; Hollister v. Union Co., 9 Conn. 436, 25 Am. Dec. 36; Hatch v. R. Co., 25 Vt. 49; Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 395, 3 Sup. Ct. 228, 27 L. Ed. 971; Hamilton v. R. Co., 119 U. S. 284, 7 Sup. Ct. 206, 30 L. Ed. 393; Hart v. Aqueduct Corp., 133 Mass. 489; 2 B. & Ald. 646. See Ashby v. White, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 244; and Weeks, Doc. of Dam. Abs. Inj.

The state, in locating its public levees, acts in the exercise of its police powers, and private injury resulting therefrom is damnum absque injuria; Egan v. Hart, 45 La. Ann. 1358, 14 South. 244.

See MENTAL SUFFERING.

DAMNUM FATALE. In Civil Law. Damages caused by a fortuitous event or inevitable accident; damages arising from the act of God.

Among these were included losses by shipwreck, lightning, or other casualty; also losses by pirates, or by vis major, by fire, robbery, and burglary; but theft was not numbered among these casualties. In general, bailees are not liable for such damages; Story, Bailm. 471.

DANEGELD. A tax or tribute imposed upon the English when the Danes got a footing in their island. From about the year 991 the Danegeld was levied and paid to the Danes as a tribute. In its later form, from 1012, it was a tax levied to pay the wages of a Danish fleet in the service of the English crown. It was abolished about 1051. It was levied again by William in 1083-4, and it was with a view of amending its assessment that the survey of the kingdom called Domesday was undertaken; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 119. A detailed history of the Danegeld cannot be written; Maitl. Domesday and Beyond 3.

DANE LAGE, or DANE LAW. The laws of the Danes which obtained in the eastern counties and part of the midland counties of England in the eleventh century. 1 Bla. Com. 65.

DANGEROUS WEAPON. One dangerous to life. Cosby v. Com., 115 Ky. 221, 72 S. W. 1089. One likely to produce death. State v. Johns, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 174, 65 Atl. 763; or great bodily injury; People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245. This must often depend upon the manner of using it; Hunt v. State, 6 Tex. App. 663; and the question should go to the jury. A distinction is made between a dangerous and a deadly weapon; United States v. Small, 2 Curt. 241, Fed. Cas. No. 16,314. It is said to be anything with which death can be easily and readily produced, with a reference to the manner in which it was used and the part of the body upon which the blow was struck with it; Acers v. U. S., 164 U. S. 388, 17 Sup. Ct. 91, 41 L. Ed. 481. The following have been held to be deadly weapons: A chisel; Com. v. Branham, 8 Bush (Ky.) 387; a heavy iron weight or other ponderous instrument; State v. West, 51 N. C. 506; Killer v. Com., 124 Pa. 92, 16 Atl. 495; McReynolds v. State, 4 Tex. App. 327; a sledgehammer; Philpot v. Com., 86 Ky. 595, 6 S. W. 455; a heavy pistol used as a bludgeon; Prior v. State, 41 Ga. 155; a club; State v. Phillips, 104 N. C. 786, 10 S. E. 463; a piece of timber; State v. Alfred, 44 La. Ann. 582, 10 South. 887; a pocket knife; State v. Scott, 39 La. Ann. 943, 3 South. 83; a razor; Scott v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 607, 62 S. W. 419; an axe; Dollarhide v. U. S., Morris (Ia.) 293, 39 Am. Dec. 460; State v. Shields, 110 N. C. 497, 14 S. E. 779; but where its size, weight, character and kind are not shown, it is held that it cannot be so regarded; Melton v. State, 30 Tex. App. 273, 17 S. W. 257; Gladney v. State (Tex.) 12 S. W. 868. A jackknife may be a dangerous weapon in fact, but whether it was such as matter of law was not decided; Com. v. O'Brien, 119 Mass. 342, 20 Am. Rep. 325. A heavy oak stick, three feet long and an inch thick, is a dangerous weapon but not a "deadly" weapon in the sense that from the use of it alone an attack would be as matter of law an aggravated assault under a Texas statute; Pinson v. State, 23 Tex. 579. See ARMS; WEAPONS. And to the same effect,

People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 Pac. 170; Renon v. State, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 343, 120 S. W. 174; Taylor v. State, 108 Ga. 384, 34 S. E. 2; Kelly v. State, 68 Miss. 343, 8 South. 745.

In one way it may be true that sticks or clubs are not deadly weapons. Carrying them does not import any hostile intent, nor, even in view of an expected affray, a design to take life. But when a fight is actually going on, they may become weapons of a very deadly character; Allen v. U. S., 157 U. S. 675, 15 Sup. Ct. 720, 39 L. Ed. 854. When its size and the manner of its use is shown, it may be left to the jury to say whether a stick or club or piece of plank is a deadly weapon of a character likely to produce death or great bodily harm; State v. Nueslein, 25 Mo. 111; Allen v. State, 148 Ala. 588, 42 South. 1006; State v. Brown, 67 Ia. 289, 25 N. W. 248. A weapon cannot be said as a matter of law to be deadly, without reference to the manner of its use; Crow v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 200, 116 S. W. 52, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497, where a baseball bat is held not to be per se a deadly weapon, though it has been said, if viciously used, it would probably be so considered; State v. Brown, 67 Ia. 289, 25 N. W. 248. A piece of gas pipe 4 feet long and weighing about 4 pounds was held a deadly weapon per se; State v. Drumm, 156 Mo. 216, 56 S. W. 1086; as was a hoe; Hamilton v. People, 113 Ill. 34, 55 Am. Rep. 396; Krechnav v. State, 43 Neb. 337, 61 N. W. 628; a pitchfork; Evans v. Com., 12 S. W. 767, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 551. A stone may be; State v. Wilson, 16 Mo. App. 550; North Carolina v. Gosnell, 74 Fed. 734. Whether a rock used for a missile was a deadly weapon was held to be for the jury; State v. Shipley, 174 Mo. 512, 74 S. W. 612; Tribble v. State, 145 Ala. 23, 40 South. 938; but in State v. Speaks, 94 N. C. 865, the question was said to be one of law. An indictment for assault with a deadly weapon, to wit, a brick, sufficiently charges the use of a deadly weapon; State v. Sims, 80 Miss. 381, 31 South. 907. But it was held that whether a brickbat is a deadly weapon is for the jury; State v. Harper, 69 Mo. 425. Pushing a pin down the throat of an infant is a killing with a deadly weapon; State v. Norwood, 115 N. C. 789, 20 S. E. 712, 44 Am. St. Rep. 498. A stocking loaded with salt and plaster which had been hardened by wetting, used by a prisoner in assaulting his jailer while attempting to escape, may be found by the jury to be a deadly weapon; People v. Valiere, 123 Cal. 576, 56 Pac. 433. And one may be found guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon who has placed a tin box filled with gunpowder in the stove of the prosecuting witness, where it exploded; People v. Pape, 66 Cal. 366, 5 Pac. 621. See Crow v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 200, 116 S. W. 52, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

A mere trespass on land does not justify an assault with a deadly weapon; Montgomery v. Com., 98 Va. 840, 36 S. E. 371; State v. Lightsey, 43 S. C. 114, 20 S. E. 975; State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 220; as where one threw down a fence and drove over a wheat field, on account of snow drifts; State v. Talley, 9 Houst. (Del.) 417, 33 Atl. 181; or where one tore down and carried away a fence; State v. Matthews, 148 Mo. 185, 49 S. W. 1085, 71 Am. St. Rep. 594; or went on another's land to remove crops; Rauck v. State, 110 Ind. 384, 11 N. E. 450. Other cases hold that if force be necessary, a deadly weapon may be used; People v. Flanagan, 60 Cal. 2, 44 Am. Rep. 52; or if the owner has reasonable ground for believing that he is in danger; People v. Dann, 53 Mich. 490, 19 N. W. 159, 51 Am. Rep. 151. If the trespasser assault him, he may be justified in killing; Ayers v. State, 60 Miss. 709; he may oppose force with force; Wenzel v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 625, 90 S. W. 28; in the defence of his house; People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466, 35 N. W. 72; so if the killing is believed, in good faith and upon reasonable grounds, to be necessary in order to repel the assailant or prevent his forcible entry; State v. Peacock, 40 Ohio St. 333. In ejecting a trespasser or preventing a trespass, a deadly weapon is not justified unless the owner reasonably believes that he is in danger of personal violence; State v. Howell, 21 Mont. 165, 53 Pac. 314; Sage v. Harpending, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 166. In Pryse v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 523, 113 S. W. 938, it was held that a person may use all the force necessary to protect his property, and if in danger of death or serious injury he may kill. In Higgins v. Minaghan, 78 Wis. 602, 47 N. W. 941, 11 L. R. A. 138, 23 Am. St. Rep. 428, it was held that effectual means, by shooting or otherwise, was justifiable to drive away a charivari party who were causing fright to the owner's family and endangering their lives.

DANGERS OF THE RIVER. In a bill of lading this term means only the natural accidents incident to river navigation, and does not embrace such as may be avoided by the exercise of that skill, judgment, and foresight which are demanded from persons in a particular occupation. Hill v. Sturgeon, 35 Mo. 212, 86 Am. Dec. 149. See Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Transp. Co., 17 Fed. 478.

DANGERS OF THE SEA. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

DAPIFER. The name of the first officer of state in France until 1191, after which it was never conferred. The name came to England with the Normans, but the office was less important, and there was a staff of dapifers. After the accession of Richard I. the style Seneschal began to take its place. Harcourt, The Steward and Trial of Peers.

DARREIN (Fr. dernier). Last. Darrein continuance, last continuance. See PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE; CONTINUANCE.

DARREIN PRESENTMENT. See ASSIZE OF DARREIN PRESENTMENT.

DARREIN SEISIN (L. Fr. last seisin). A plea which lay in some cases for the tenant in a writ of right. Hunt v. Hunt, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 184; Jackson, Real Act. 285. See 1 Roscoe, Real Act. 206; 2 Prest. Abstr. 345.

DATE. The designation or indication in an instrument of writing of the time and place when and where it was made.

In the Anglo-Saxon land charters dates were given by the year of the Indiction (q. v.). Dating by the year of our Lord was invented in 532. At a council in 816 it was adopted for the acts of the synod and became general in documents from that date; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 19. Some early charters were not dated; some referred to the regnal year, or a church festival, or a remarkable event; 3 id. 196.

When the place is mentioned in the date of a deed, the law intends, unless the contrary appear, that it was executed at the place of the date; Plowd. 7 b. The word is derived from the Latin datum (given); because when the instruments were in Latin the form ran datum, etc. (given the — day of, etc.).

A date is necessary to the validity of a policy of insurance; but where there are separate underwriters, each sets down the date of his own signing, as this constitutes a separate contract; Marsh. Ins. 336; 2 Pars. Marit. Law 27. Written instruments generally take effect from the day of their date, but the actual date of execution may be shown, though different from that which the instrument bears; and it is said that the date is not of the essence of a contract, but is essential to the identity of the writing by which it is to be proved; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 12, 489, n.; Cloyes v. Sweetser, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 403; Jackson v. McKenny, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 233, 20 Am. Dec. 690; Gammon v. Freeman, 31 Me. 243; Bement v. Mfg. Co., 32 N. J. L. 513; McSparran v. Neeley, 91 Pa. 17; 17 E. L. & Eq. 548. See Knisely v. Sampson, 100 Ill. 573; 19 L. J. Q. B. 435. And if the written date is an impossible one, the time of delivery must be shown; Shepp. Touchst. 72; Cruise, Dig. c. 2, s. 61.

An indictment charging the commission of a crime on an impossible date (in the year 18903) was held fatally defective; Terrell v. State, 165 Ind. 443, 75 N. E. 894, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251, 112 Am. St. Rep. 244, 6 Ann. Cas. 851; see also State v. Sexton, 10 N. C. 184, 14 Am. Dec. 584; State v. Litch, 33 Vt. 67; even when the mistaken date appears to have been merely a clerical error; Robles v. State, 5 Tex. App. 347; and one charging the commission of an offense upon a date not yet arrived was held to allege no offense as having been already committed; Com. v. Doyle, 110 Mass. 103. Where the date alleged for the commission of a statutory offense occurred before the statute was enacted, and even before the state became a member of the Union, it was held an impossible date; State v. O'Donnell, 81 Me. 271, 17 Atl. 66. See INDICTMENT; TIME.

A date in a note or bill is required only for the purpose of fixing the time of payment. If the time of payment is otherwise indicated, no date is necessary; 1 Ames, Bills and Notes 145, citing Brewster v. McCardell, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 478; Walker v. Geisse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 252, 33 Am. Dec. 60. When a note payable at a fixed period after date has no date, a holder may fill the date with the day of issue; ibid.

It is usually presumed that a deed was delivered on the day of its date; but proof of the date of delivery must be given if the circumstances were such that collusion might be practised; Steph. Dig. Ev. 138; Raines v. Walker, 77 Va. 92; Harman v. Oberdorfer, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 497; Saunders v. Blythe, 112 Mo. 1, 20 S. W. 319. See 6 Bing. 296; Ellsworth v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 93; Cutts v. Mfg. Co., 18 Me. 190. But this presumption does not hold in respect to deeds in fee, unattested and unacknowledged; Genter v. Morrison, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 155. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the date stated in the in testimonium clause of a mortgage deed of personal property is not its true date; Shaughnessey v. Lewis, 130 Mass. 355; Orcutt v. Moore, 134 Mass. 52, 45 Am. Rep. 278. There is a presumption as to a note that it was delivered on the day of its date; Cranston v. Goss, 107 Mass. 439, 9 Am. Rep. 45.

Where a date is given, both as a day of the week and a day of the month, and the two are inconsistent, the day of the month governs; Minor v. Michie, Walker (Miss.) 27.

DATION. In Civil Law. The act of giving something. It differs from donation, which is a gift; dation, on the contrary, is giving something without any liberality; as, the giving of an office.

DATION EN PAIEMENT. In Civil Law. A giving by the debtor and receipt by the creditor of something in payment of a debt instead of a sum of money.

It is somewhat like the accord and satisfaction of the common law. 16 Toullier, n. 45; Pothier, Vente, n. 601. Dation en paiement resembles in some respects the contract of sale; dare in solutum est quasi vendere. There is, however, a very marked difference between a sale and a dation en paiement. First. The contract of sale is complete by the mere agreement of the parties; the dation en paiement requires a delivery of the thing given; Donoven & Daley v. Travers, 122 La. 458, 47 South. 769. Second. When the debtor pays a certain sum which he supposed he was owing, and he discovers he did not owe so much, he may recover back the excess; not so when property other than money has been given in payment. Third. He who has in good faith sold a thing of which he believed himself to be the owner, is not precisely required to transfer the property of it to the buyer; and while he is not troubled in the possession of the thing, he cannot pretend that the seller has not fulfilled his obligations. On the contrary, the dation en paiement is good only when the debtor transfers to the creditor the property in the thing which he has agreed to take in payment; and if the thing thus delivered be the property of another, it will not operate as a payment. Pothier, Vente, nn. 602, 603, 604. See 1 Low. C. 53; Keough v. J. Meyers & Co., 43 La. Ann. 952, 9 South. 913.

DATIVE. A word derived from the Roman law, signifying "appointed by public authority." Thus, in Scotland, an executor-dative is an executor appointed by a court of justice, corresponding to an English administrator. Mozley & W. Dict.

DAUGHTER. A female child; an immediate female descendant.

DAUGHTER-IN-LAW. The wife of one's son.

DAY. The space of time which elapses while the earth makes a complete revolution on its axis.

A portion of such space of time which, by usage or law, has come to be considered as the whole for some particular purpose.

The space of time which elapses between two successive midnights. 2 Bla. Com. 141.

That portion of such space of time during which the sun is shining.

Generally, in legal signification, the term included the time elapsing from one midnight to the succeeding one; 2 Bla. Com. 141; Kane v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 522, 33 Am. Rep. 787; see Helphenstine v. Bank, 65 Ind. 589, 32 Am. Rep. 36; but it is also used to denote those hours during which business is ordinarily transacted (frequently called a business day); Hinton v. Locke, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 437; as well as that portion of time during which the sun is above the horizon (called, sometimes, a solar day), and, in addition, that part of the morning or evening during which sufficient of its light is above for the features of a man to be reasonably discerned; Co. 3d Inst. 63; Trull v. Wilson, 9 Mass. 154. Where a party is required to take action within a given number of days in order to secure or assert a right, the day is to consist of twenty-four hours, that is the popular and legal sense of the term; Zimmerman v. Cowan, 107 Ill. 631, 47 Am. Rep. 476; also in a marine insurance policy "for 30 days after arrival" means thirty successive periods of twenty-four hours each, "commencing as soon as moored at anchor"; [1904] 1 K. B. 40.

By custom, the word day may be understood to include working-days only; 3 Esp. 121; Sorensen v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 163, 2 C. C. A. 650. In a similar manner only, a certain number of hours less than the number during which the work actually continued each day. Hinton v. Locke, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 437.

Sundays and other public holidays falling within the number of days specified by a statute for the performance of an act, are often omitted from the computation, as not being judicial days; Abrahams v. Comm., 1 Rob. (Va.) 676; Michie v. Michie's Adm'r, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 109; Neal v. Crew, 12 Ga. 93; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Williams, 46 Mo. 17; Caupfield v. Cook, 92 Mich. 626, 52 N. W. 1031; McChesney v. People, 145 Ill. 614, 34 N. E. 431; Danielson v. Fuel Co., 55 Fed. 49; Sorensen v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 163, 2 C. C. A. 650. But see Miles v. McDermott, 31 Cal. 271. Where the last day of the six months within which an appeal or writ of error may be taken to review in the circuit court of appeals, the judgment or decree of a lower court, falls on Sunday, the appeal cannot be taken or the writ sued out on any subsequent day; Johnson v. Meyers, 54 Fed. 417, 4 C. C. A. 399. When the day of performance of contracts, other than instruments upon which days of grace are allowed, falls on Sunday, or other public holiday, it is not counted, and the contract may be performed on Monday; Salter v. Burt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 205, 32 Am. Dec. 530; Stryker v. Vanderbilt, 27 N. J. L. 68; Johnson v. Merritt, 50 Minn. 303, 52 N. W. 863. See Broome v. Wellington, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 664.

The time for completing commercial contracts is not limited to banking hours; Price v. Tucker, 5 La. Ann. 514.

A day is generally, but not always, regarded in law as a point of time; and fractions will not be recognized; 2 B. & Ald. 586; In re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407; Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 158, 22 N. E. 629, 5 L. R. A. 844, 15 Am. St. Rep. 183; State v. Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371, 5 South. 818. And see Brainard v. Bushnell, 11 Conn. 17; 3 Op. Att. Gen. 82; Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 193; Duffy v. Ogden, 64 Pa. 240. See FRACTION OF A DAY.

It is said that there is no general rule in regard to including or excluding days in the computation of time from the day of a fact or act done, but that it depends upon the reason of the thing and the circumstances of the case; 9 Q. B. 141; 6 M. & W. 55; Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193; Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249; Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525. And see, also, 5 Co. 1 a; Dougl. 463; 4 Nev. & M. 378; Atkins v. Ins. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 439, 39 Am. Dec. 692; Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 346; Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304; Ewing v. Bailey, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 420; Marys v. Anderson, 24 Pa. 272; State v. Water Co., 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578. Perhaps the most general rule is to exclude the first day and include the last; Weld v. Barker, 153 Pa. 465, 26 Atl. 239; Miner v. Tilley, 54 Mo. App. 627; Seward v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 159, 22 N. E. 629, 5 L. R. A. 844, 15 Am. St. Rep. 183; 12 A. & E. 635; Blackman v. Nearing, 43 Conn. 56, 21 Am. Rep. 634; Warren v. Slade, 23 Mich. 1, 9 Am. Rep. 70. Such is the rule as to negotiable paper; 1 Dan. Neg. Instr. 496; Mark's Ex'rs v. Russell, 40 Pa. 372. See, generally, 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 141, n.; and so in the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act, § 86.

The rule now generally followed seems to be that not only in mercantile contracts, but also in wills and other instruments, and in the construction of statutes, the day of the date, or the day of the act from which a future time is to be ascertained, is to be excluded; Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249; People v. R. Co., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 284; Hahn v. Dierkes, 37 Mo. 574; Faure v. Exp. Co., 23 Ind. 48.

A statutory rule for computing time does not apply to ascertain the day, or the last day, on which a thing may be done, where such day is expressed by its date; Northwestern Guaranty Loan Co. v. Channell, 53 Minn. 269, 55 N. W. 121.

See TIME.

DAY BOOK. An account-book in which merchants and others make entries of their daily transactions. This is generally a book of original entries, and, as such, may be given in evidence to prove the sale and delivery of merchandise or of work done.

DAY RULE. In English Practice. A rule or order of the court by which a prisoner on civil process, and not committed, is enabled, in term-time, to go out of the prison and its rule or bounds. Tidd. Pr. 961. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

DAYS IN BANK. In English Practice. Days of appearance in the court of common pleas, usually called bancum. They are at the distance of about a week from each other, and are regulated by some festival of the church.

By the common law, the defendant is allowed three full days in which to make his appearance in court, exclusive of the day of appearance or return-day named in the writ; 3 Bla. Com. 278. Upon his appearance, time is usually granted him for pleading; and this is called giving him day, or, as it is more familiarly expressed, a continuance. 3 Bla. Com. 316. When the suit is ended by discontinuance or by judgment for the defendant, he is discharged from further attendance, and is said to go thereof sine die, without day. See CONTINUANCE.

DAYS OF GRACE. Certain days allowed to the acceptor of a bill or the maker of a note in which to make payment, in addition to the time contracted for by the bill or note itself.

They are so called because formerly they were allowed as a matter of favor; but the custom of merchants to allow such days of grace having grown into law, and been sanctioned by the courts, all bills of exchange are by the law merchant entitled to days of grace as of right. The statute of Anne making promissory notes negotiable confers the same right on those instruments. This act has been generally adopted throughout the United States; and the days of grace allowed are three; Thomas v. Shoemaker, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 179; Chitty, Bills; Byles, Bills.

The Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act passed in most of the states abolishes days of grace, but three days of grace are allowed on sight drafts in the Rhode Island Act, and on notes, acceptances, and sight drafts in the North Carolina act; the Massachusetts act was amended so as to allow days of grace on sight drafts; also by the English Bills of Exchange Act (1882); Selover, Negot. Instr. 253. The following cases are retained as having at least historical interest:

Bank checks are due on presentation and are not entitled to days of grace; Wood River Bank v. Bank, 36 Neb. 744, 55 N. W. 239.

The principle deducible from all the authorities is, that, as to every bill not payable on demand, the day on which payment is to be made to prevent dishonor is to be determined by adding three days of grace, where the bill itself does not otherwise provide, to the time of payment as fixed by the bill. This principle is formulated into a statutory provision in England in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, § 14; Bell v. Bank, 115 U. S. 383, 6 Sup. Ct. 105, 29 L. Ed. 409; President, etc., of Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 31, 7 L. Ed. 37.

Where there is an established usage of the place where the bill is payable to demand payment on the fourth or other day instead of the third, the parties to it will be bound by such usage; Renner v. President, etc., of Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 582, 6 L. Ed. 166; Price v. Earl of Torrington, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 417. When the last day of grace happens on Sunday or a general holiday, as the Fourth of July, Christmas day, etc., the bill is due on the day previous, and must be presented on that day in order to hold the drawer and indorsers; Big. Bills & N. 90; Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank v. Gibson, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 460; Bank of North America v. Pettit, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 127, 1 L. Ed. 770; Fisher v. Evans, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 541; Brown v. Lusk, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 210; McRae v. Kennon, 1 Ala. 295, 34 Am. Dec. 777; Leavitt v. Simes, 3 N. H. 14; contra, First Nat. Bank of Hastings v. McAllister, 33 Neb. 646, 50 N. W. 1040; unless changed by statute as in some states. Days of grace are, for all practical purposes, a part of the time the bill has to run, and interest is charged on them; President, etc., of the Bank of Utica v. Wager, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 712; 1 Dan. Neg. Instr. 489. According to the usage and custom of merchants to fix the liability of the indorser of negotiable paper, it should be protested on the last day of grace; Carey Lombard Lumber Co. v. Bank, 86 Tex. 299, 24 S. W. 260.

In computing the days of grace allowed in a bond for the payment of interest, the day when the interest became payable will not be counted; Serrell v. Rothstein, 49 N. J. Eq. 385, 24 Atl. 369. A bill payable in thirty days having been drawn and accepted on February 11th, of a leap year, the last day of grace falls on March 15th, the 29th of February being counted as a distinct day; Helphenstine v. Bank, 65 Ind. 582, 32 Am. Rep. 86.

Our courts always assume that the same number of days are allowed in other countries; and a person claiming the benefit of a foreign law or usage must prove it; Bowen v. Newell, 13 N. Y. 290, 64 Am. Dec. 550; Ripley v. Greenleaf, 2 Vt. 129; President, etc., of the Farmers' Bank of Maryland v. Duvall, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 78; President, etc., of the Bank of Alexandria v. Swann, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 33, 9 L. Ed. 40; Wood v. Corl, 4 Mete. (Mass.) 203. When properly proved, the law of the place where the bill or note is payable prescribes the number of days of grace and the manner of calculating them; Dollfus v. Frosch, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 367; Story, Pr. Notes §§ 216, 247. The tendency to adopt as laws local usages or customs has been materially checked; Bowen v. Newell, 8 N. Y. 190.

DAYS OF THE WEEK. The courts will always take judicial notice of the days of the week; for example, when a writ of inquiry was stated in the pleadings to have been executed on the fifteenth of June, and upon an examination it was found to be Sunday, the proceeding was held to be defective; Fortesc. 373; Stra. 387.

DAYSMAN. An arbitrator, umpire, or elected judge. Cowell.

DAYWERE. As much arable land as could be ploughed in one day's work. Cowell.

DE ADMENSURATIONE or AMENSURACIONE, in Maitland (2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 585). Of admeasurement.

Used of the writ of admeasurement of dower, which lies where the widow has had more dower assigned to her than she is entitled to. It is said by some to lie where either an infant heir or his guardian made such assignment at suit of the infant heir whose rights are thus prejudiced. 2 Bla. Com. 136; Fitzh. N. B. 348. It seems, however, that an assignment by a guardian binds the infant heir, and that after such assignment the heir cannot have his writ of admeasurement; Boyers v. Newbanks, 2 Ind. 388; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314; Young v. Tarbell, 37 Me. 509; 1 Washb. R. P. 226.

Used also of the writ of admeasurement of pasture, which lies where the quantity of common due each one of several having rights thereto, has not been ascertained. 3 Bla. Com. 38. See ADMEASUREMENT OF DOWER.

DE ETATE PROBANDA (Lat. for proving age). A writ which lay to summon a jury for the purpose of determining the age of the heir of a tenant in capite who claimed his estate as being of full age. Fitzh. N. B. 257.

DE ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA (Lat. for making an allowance). A writ to allow the collectors of customs, and other such officers having charge of the king's money, for sums disbursed by them.

It was directed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer.

DE ALTO ET BASSO (Of high and low). A phrase anciently used to denote the absolute submission of all differences to arbitration. Cowell.

DE ANNUA PENSIONE (Lat. of annual pension). A writ by which the king, having due unto him an annual pension from any abbot or prior for any of his chaplains which he will name who is not provided with a competent living, demands it of the said abbot or prior for the one that is named in the writ. Fitzh. N. B. 231; Termes de la Ley, Annua Pensione.

DE ANNUO REDITU (Lat. for a yearly rent). A writ to recover an annuity, no matter how payable. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 258.

DE APOSTATA CAPIENDO (Lat. for taking an apostate). A writ directed to the sheriff for the taking the body of one who, having entered into and professed some order of religion, leaves his order and departs from his house and wanders in the country. Fitzh.

N. B. 233; Termes de la Ley, Apostata Capiendo.

DE ARBITRATIONE FACTA (Lat. of arbitration had). A writ formerly used when an action was brought for a cause which had been settled by arbitration. Watson, Arb. 256.

DE ASSISA PROROGANDA (Lat. for pro-roguing assize). A writ to put off an assize issuing to the justices where one of the parties is engaged in the service of the king.

DE ATTORNATO RECIPIENDO (Lat. for receiving an attorney). A writ to compel the judges to receive an attorney and admit him for the party. Fitzh. N. B. 156 b. Sometimes de attornato faciendo; see Maitland, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 576.

DE AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAM (Lat. for cattle taken in withernam). A writ which lies to take other cattle of the defendant where he has taken and carried away cattle of the plaintiff out of the country, so that they cannot be reached by replevin. Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Com. 149.

DE AVERIIS REPLEGIANDIS (Lat.). A writ to replevy beasts. 3 Bla. Com. 149.

DE AVERIIS RETORNANDIS (Lat. for returning cattle). Used of the pledges in the old action of replevin. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 177.

DE BENE ESSE (Lat. formally; conditionally; provisionally). A technical phrase applied to certain acts deemed for the time to be well done, or until an exception or other avoidance. It is equivalent to provisionally, with which meaning the phrase is commonly employed. For example, a declaration is filed or delivered, special bail is put in, a witness is examined, etc., de bene esse, or provisionally; 3 Bla. Com. 383.

The examination of a witness de bene esse takes place where there is danger of losing the testimony of an important witness from death by reason of age or dangerous illness, or where he is the only witness to an important fact; Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 238; Aijs v. Sublit, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 204; Clark v. Dibble, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 601; 13 Ves. 261; May's Heirs v. May's Adm'r, 28 Ala. 141. In such case, if the witness be alive at the time of trial, his examination is not to be used; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1111. See Haynes, Eq. 183; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 52, 149.

To declare de bene esse is to declare in a bailable action subject to the contingency of bail being put in; and in such case the declaration does not become absolute till this is done; Grah. Pr. 191.

When a judge has a doubt as to the propriety of finding a verdict, he may direct the jury to find one de bene esse; which verdict, if the court shall afterwards be of opinion that it ought to have been found, shall stand. Bac. Abr. Verdict (A). See, also, Blair v. Weaver, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 84.

DE BIEN ET DE MAL. See DE BONO ET MALO.

DE BIENS LE MORT (Fr.). Of the goods of the deceased. Dyer 32.

DE BONIS ASPORTATIS (Lat. for goods carried away). The name of the action for trespass to personal property is trespass de bonis asportatis. Bull. N. P. 836; 1 Tidd, Pr. 5.

DE BONIS NON. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DE BONIS PROPRIIS (Lat. of his own goods). A judgment against an executor or administrator which is to be satisfied from his own property.

When an executor or administrator has been guilty of a devastavit, he is responsible for the loss which the estate has sustained de bonis propriis. He may also subject himself to the payment of a debt of the deceased de bonis propriis by his false plea when sued in a representative capacity; as, if he plead plene administravit and it be found against him, or a release to himself when false. In this latter case the judgment is de bonis testatoris si, et si non, de bonis propriis. 1 Wms. Saund. 336 b, n. 10; Bacon, Abr. Executor (B, 3).

DE BONIS TESTATORIS (Lat. of the goods of the testator). A judgment rendered against an executor which is to be satisfied out of the goods or property of the testator; distinguished from a judgment de bonis propriis.

DE BONIS TESTATORIS AC SI (Lat. from the goods of the testator, if he has any, and, if not, from those of the executor). A judgment rendered where an executor falsely pleads any matter as a release, or, generally, in any case where he is to be charged in case his testator's estate is insufficient. 1 Wms. Saund. 366 b; Bacon, Abr. Executor (B, 3); 2 Archb. Pr. 148.

DE BONO ET MALO (Lat. for good or ill). A writ which apparently allowed a person to be delivered from gaol if he were willing to put himself upon a jury. The French phrase de bien et de mal has the same meaning.

A special writ of gaol delivery, one being issued for each prisoner: now superseded by the general commission of gaol delivery. 4 Bla. Com. 270.

DE CALCETO REPARANDO (Lat.). A writ for repairing a highway, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to distrain the inhabitants of a place to repair the highway. Reg. Orig. 154; Blount.

DE CARTIS REDDENDIS (Lat. for restoring charters). A writ to secure the delivery of charters; a writ of detinue. Reg. Orig. 159 b.

DE CATALLIS REDDENDIS (Lat. for restoring chattels). A writ to secure the return specifically of chattels detained from the owner. Cowell.

DE CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA (Lat. for admitting bail). A writ directed to a bishop who refused to allow a prisoner to go at large on giving sufficient bail, requiring him to admit him to bail. Fitzh. N. B. 63 c. It seems to have been applicable only to secure the release of a person who had been taken on a writ of de excommunicato capiendo (q. v.) and who was willing to purge himself of contumacy.

DE CERTIFICANDO. A writ requiring a thing to be certified. A kind of certiorari. Reg. Orig. 152.

DE COMMUNI DIVIDENDO. In Civil Law. A writ of partition of common property. See COMMUNI DIVIDENDO.

DE COMPUTO. Writ of account. A writ commanding a defendant to render a reasonable account to the plaintiff, or show cause to the contrary. The foundation of the modern action of account. Blount; Registr. Br. 135.

DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO. A writ issuing from the English court of chancery for the arrest of a defendant who is in contempt of the ecclesiastical court. 1 N. & P. 685; 5 Dowl. 213, 646; 5 Q. B. 335.

DE CURIA CLAUDENDA (Lat. of enclosing a court). An obsolete writ, to require a defendant to fence in his court or land about his house, where it was left open to the injury of his neighbor's freehold. 1 Crabb, R. P. 314; Rust v. Low, 6 Mass. 90.

DE CURSU. See CURSITOR.

DE DOMO REPARANDA (Lat.). The name of an ancient common-law writ, by which one tenant in common might compel his co-tenant to concur in the expense of repairing the property held in common. 8 B. & C. 269; 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 216, note 17, and p. 787.

DE DONIS, THE STATUTE (more fully, De Donis Conditionalibus; concerning conditional gifts). The statute of Westminster the Second. 13 Edw. I. c. 1.

The object of the statute was to prevent the alienation of estates by those who held only a partial interest in the estate in such a manner as to defeat the estate of those who were to take subsequently. This was effected by providing that, in grants to a man and the heirs of his body or the heirs male of his body, the will of the donor should be observed according to the form expressed in the deed of gift (per formam doni); that the tenements so given should go, after the grantee's death, to his issue (or issue male), if there were any, and if none, should revert to the donor. This statute was the origin of the estate in fee tail, or estate tail, and by introducing perpetuities, it built up great estates and strengthened the power of the barons. See Bac. Abr. Estates Tail; 1 Cruise, Dig. 70; 1 Washb. R. P. 271. See CONDITIONAL FEE TAIL.

DE DOTE ASSIGNANDA (Lat. for assigning dower). A writ commanding the king's escheator to assign dower to the widow of a tenant in capite. Fitzh. N. B. 263, c.

DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET (Lat. of dower in that whereof she has none). A writ of dower which lay for a widow where no part of her dower had been assigned to a widow. It is now much disused; but a form closely resembling it is still used in the United States. 4 Kent 63; Stearns, Real Act. 302; 1 Washb. R. P. 230.

DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ. A writ which lay for a guardian who had been forcibly ejected from his wardship. Reg. Orig. 162; Black, L. Dict.

DE EJECTIONE FIRMÆ. A writ which lay at the suit of the tenant for years against the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or stranger who had himself deprived the tenant of the occupation of the land during his term. 3 Bla. Com. 199. Originally lying to recover damages only, it came to be used to recover the rest of the term, and then generally the possession of lands. Involving, in the question of who should have possession, the further question of who had the title, it gave rise to the modern action of ejectment. Brooke, Abr.; Adams, Ejectm.; 3 Bla. Com. 199 et seq.

DE ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS (Lat. to obtain estovers). A writ which lay for a woman divorced a mensa et thoro to recover her alimony or estovers. 1 Bla. Com. 441.

DE EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO (Lat. for taking one who is excommunicated). A writ commanding the sheriff to arrest one who was excommunicated, and imprison him till he should become reconciled to the church. 3 Bla. Com. 102.

DE EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO (Lat. for freeing one excommunicated). A writ to deliver an excommunicated person, who has made satisfaction to the church, from prison. 3 Bla. Com. 102.

DE EXONERATIONE SECTÆ. A writ to free the king's ward from suit in any court lower than the court of common pleas during the time of such wardship.

DE FACTO. Actually; in fact; in deed. A term used to denote a thing actually done.

An officer de facto is one who performs the duties of an office with apparent right, and under claim and color of an appointment, but without being actually qualified in law so to act. Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423.

One who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law. 6 East 368, where Lord Ellenborough and a full court of K. B. adopted this definition of Lord Holt in 1 Raym. 658, which it is said "has never been questioned since in England," per Butler, C. J., in the leading case of State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409, where the common-law learning on the subject is collected.

Where there is an office to be filled, and one acting under color of authority fills the office and discharges its duties, his actions are those of an officer de facto, and are binding on the public; McDowell v. U. S., 159 U. S. 596, 16 Sup. Ct. 111, 40 L. Ed. 271.

An officer in the actual exercise of executive power would be an officer de facto, and as such distinguished from one who, being legally entitled to such power, is deprived of it,—such a one being an officer de jure only. An officer holding without strict legal authority; 2 Kent 295.

An officer de facto is frequently considered an officer de jure, and legal validity allowed his official acts; State v. Anderson, 1 N. J. L. 318, 1 Am. Dec. 207; Com. v. Fowler, 10 Mass. 290; Laver v. McGlachlin, 28 Wis. 364; Conover v. Devlin, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 587; Whiting v. City of Ellsworth, 85 Me. 301, 27 Atl. 177; Petition of Town of Portsmouth, 19 N. H. 115; Burton v. Patton, 47 N. C. 124, 62 Am. Dec. 194; Gregg Tp. v. Jamison, 55 Pa. 468; Kimball v. Alcorn, 45 Miss. 151; Hussey v. Smith, 99 U. S. 20, 25 L. Ed. 314; People v. Weber, 86 Ill. 283; State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409; State v. Davis, 111 N. C. 729, 16 S. E. 540; State v. Lee, 35 S. C. 192, 14 S. E. 395; Zabel v. Harshman, 68 Mich. 273, 42 N. W. 44; 7 L. R. H. L. 894. But this is so only so far as the rights of the public and third persons are concerned. In order to sue or defend in his own right as a public officer, he must be so de jure; People v. Weber, 89 Ill. 347. An officer de facto incurs no liability by his mere omission to act; Olmstead v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 378; Snyder v. Schram, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404; but see Thayer v. Printing Co., 108 Mass. 523; Providence Steam-Engine Co. v. Hubbard, 101 U. S. 192, 25 L. Ed. 786.

An officer de facto must be submitted to as such until displaced by a regular direct proceeding for that purpose; Ex parte Moore, 62 Ala. 471; 4 East 327; Buncombe Turnpike Co. v. McCarson, 18 N. C. 306; he is a legal officer until ousted; Board of Auditors of Wayne County v. Benoit, 20 Mich. 176, 4 Am. Rep. 382.

An officer acting under an unconstitutional law, acts by color of title, and is an officer de facto; Com. v. McCombs, 56 Pa. 436;

Watson v. McGrath, 111 La. 1097, 36 South. 204; State v. Gardner, 54 Ohio St. 31, 42 N. E. 999, 31 L. R. A. 660; Lang v. City of Bayonne, 74 N. J. L. 455, 68 Atl. 90, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 93, 122 Am. St. Rep. 391, 12 Ann. Cas. 961; State v. Poulin, 105 Me. 224, 74 Atl. 119, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, 134 Am. St. Rep. 543; State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409; Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309, 46 N. W. 782; Cocke v. Halsey, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 71, 10 L. Ed. 891, where the office was an existing one; contra, Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178, where the office was created by the same act. The discussion of this point has in almost every case included the consideration of what may be assumed to be a rule, when properly understood, that there cannot be a de facto officer without a de jure office; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 276. In one case it was said that a de facto office cannot exist under a constitutional government; Hawver v. Seldenridge, 2 W. Va. 274, 94 Am. Dec. 532; and speaking through Mr. Justice Field in the much discussed case of Norton v. Shelby County, above cited from 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178, the court held that acts done by officers appointed under an unconstitutional statute before it was declared unconstitutional were void. In an L. R. A. note to the New Jersey case above cited, which may be referred to for a collection of cases, it is assumed that the doctrine of the Supreme Court case is supported by a "decided preponderance of authority." The cases cited in the note, however, while making a strong showing for a rule that there must be a de jure office, seem to establish an overwhelming weight of authority in support of the doctrine above stated, that until the act is declared unconstitutional there is a de jure office and therefore a de facto officer whose acts are to be considered valid. The opinions in the Connecticut, New Jersey and Maine cases, the last two of which take direct issue with Mr. Justice Field, and the first of which was decided before it, seem to leave no logical support for his opinion.

When a special judge is duly elected, qualifies, and takes possession of the office according to law, he becomes judge de facto, though his official oath is not filed as required by law; and the proceedings of the court, if unchallenged during his incumbency, cannot afterwards be questioned collaterally; State v. Miller, 111 Mo. 542, 20 S. W. 243. See In re Powers' Estate, 65 Vt. 399, 26 Atl. 640; Keith v. State, 49 Ark. 439, 5 S. W. 880; Campbell v. Com., 96 Pa. 344; People v. Weber, 86 Ill. 283.

A notary who continues to act after his commission has expired, long enough to afford a reasonable presumption of reappointment, is a de facto notary; Cary v. State, 76 Ala. 78; and so of one who has failed to file his bond; Keeney v. Leas, 14 Ia. 464; and of an alien appointed a notary; Wilson v. Kimmel, 109 Mo. 260, 19 S. W. 24. But where a notary's commission had expired seven months before he took an acknowledgment, and it did not appear that he had continued to act and hold himself out as a notary, he was not a de facto notary; Sandlin v. Dowdell, 143 Ala. 518, 39 South. 279, 5 Ann. Cas. 459.

There can be no de facto officer in the case of an office abolished by statute; Stenson v. Koch, 152 N. Y. 89, 46 N. E. 176; People v. Welsh, 225 Ill. 364, 80 N. E. 313; Walker v. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. App. 223; Gorman v. People, 17 Colo. 596, 31 Pac. 335, 31 Am. St. Rep. 350; Farrier v. Dugan, 48 N. J. L. 613, 7 Atl. 881, affirming Dugan v. Farrier, 47 N. J. L. 383, 1 Atl. 751; but there are cases contra, which, however, appear to be all cases of municipal officers; Adams v. Lindell, 5 Mo. App. 197; Hilgert v. Pav. Co., 107 Mo. App. 385, 81 S. W. 496; Keeling v. R. Co., 205 Pa. 31; 54 Atl. 485; Perkins v. Fielding, 119 Mo. 149, 24 S. W. 444, 27 S. W. 1100.

An injunction does not lie to restrain a de facto officer from performing the duties of his office, on account of irregularity of election, his acts being valid as to third persons; Chambers v. Adair, 110 Ky. 942, 62 S. W. 1128; but a mandamus may be directed to one, to compel him to perform the duties of his office, and he cannot set up in defense that he is not in possession of his office de jure; Kelly v. Wimberly, 61 Miss. 548; Harvey v. Philbrick, 49 N. J. L. 374, 8 Atl. 122.

Where the defects in the title of the officer are notorious, such as to make those relying on his acts chargeable with such knowledge, persons relying upon such acts will not be protected; Oliver v. Jersey City, 63 N. J. L. 634, 44 Atl. 709, 48 L. R. A. 412, 76 Am. St. Rep. 228. Officers of a corporation cease to be officers de facto after a judgment of a court of last resort adjudging that they have no rightful title (notwithstanding an appeal pending to the supreme court of the United States and no judgment of ouster appearing of record); Rochester & G. V. R. Co. v. Bank, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 234.

Contracts and other acts of de facto directors of corporations are valid; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 522, n. c.; Atlantic, T. & O. R. Co. v. Johnston, 70 N. C. 348; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McPherson, 35 Mo. 13, 86 Am. Dec. 128; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Coal Co., 21 Pa. 131.

An officer de facto is prima facie one de jure; Allen v. State, 21 Ga. 217, 68 Am. Dec. 457.

When the inspectors of an election fail to issue a certificate of election, one who has received the highest number of legal votes cast, and holding over as the present incumbent, has sufficient apparent authority or color of title to be considered an officer de facto; Montgomery v. O'Dell, 67 Hun 169, 22 N. Y. Supp. 412.

A government de facto signifies one completely, though only temporarily, established in the place of the lawful government; Thomas v. Taylor, 42 Miss. 651, 703, 2 Am. Rep. 625; Chisholm v. Coleman, 43 Ala. 204, 94 Am. Dec. 677. See DE JURE; Austin, Jur. Lect. vi. p. 336.

A wife de facto only is one whose marriage is voidable by decree; 4 Kent 36.

Blockade de facto is one actually maintained; 1 Kent 44.

De Facto Corporations. A colorable corporate organization of persons intending in good faith to form a corporation, under a law authorizing it, who have failed to comply with one or more provisions of the statute, but have used some of the powers which, if a de jure corporation, it would have possessed.

An apparent corporate organization, asserted to be a corporation by its members, and actually acting as such, but lacking the creative fiat of the law. In re Gibbs' Estate, 157 Pa. 59, 27 Atl. 383, 22 L. R. A. 276.

There must have been: (1) A colorable corporate organization; Bergeron v. Hobbs, 96 Wis. 641, 71 N. W. 1056, 65 Am. St. Rep. 85; Abbott v. Refining Co., 4 Neb. 416; Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 52 Minn. 243, 53 N. W. 1150, 18 L. R. A. 778, 38 Am. St. Rep. 552; McLeary v. Dawson, 87 Tex. 524, 538, 29 S. W. 1044; Tulare Irr. District v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 13, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773. An agreement to do business as a corporation, fulfilling part of the requisites but purposely stopping short of complete incorporation is not sufficient; Card v. Moore, 173 N. Y. 598, 66 N. E. 1105.

(2) A statute authorizing the proposed corporation; American Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 157 Ill. 641, 42 N. E. 153; Imperial B'lg Co. v. Board of Trade, 238 Ill. 100, 87 N. E. 167; Eaton v. Walker, 76 Mich. 579, 43 N. W. 638, 6 L. R. A. 102; Bradley v. Reppill, 123 Mo. 545, 32 S. W. 645, 34 S. W. 841, 54 Am. St. Rep. 685; Duke v. Taylor, 37 Fla. 64, 19 South. 172, 31 L. R. A. 484, 53 Am. St. Rep. 232; Davis v. Stevens, 104 Fed. 235; Snyder v. Studebaker, 19 Ind. 462, 81 Am. Dec. 415; Tulare Irr. District v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 13, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773; which, though in most cases a general incorporation act, may be a special charter, of which there has been a failure to perform some condition; Utica Ins. Co. v. Tiltman, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 555; Bank of Manchester v. Allen, 11 Vt. 302; Society of Middlesex Husbandmen & Manufacturers v. Davis, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 133; Buncombe Turnpike Co. v. M'Carson, 18 N. C. 306; Gaines v. Bank of Mississippi, 12 Ark. 769; and it may be under a law passed by a de facto legislature; U. S. v. Ins. Companies, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 99; or under a law passed subsequently to the organization providing for the recognition of existing corporations on filing a certificate, which it failed to do; Tennessee Automatic Lighting Co. v. Massey (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 35; or if there is a law authorizing it, and the attempt was under a different law, it is sufficient; Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Trust Co., 94 Ga. 306, 21 S. E. 701, 32 L. R. A. 208, 47 Am. St. Rep. 153. But where two corporations of different states attempted to merge, without any enabling statute, it was a nullity and they did not become a corporation de facto; Whaley v. Bankers' Union of the World, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 385, 88 S. W. 259; American Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 157 Ill. 641, 42 N. E. 153.

(4) Good faith in the transaction; Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773; Williamson v. Loan Fund Ass'n, 89 Ind. 389; Hasselman v. Mortgage Co., 97 Ind. 365; Vanneman v. Young, 52 N. J. L. 403, 20 Atl. 53; Elizabethtown Gaslight Co. v. Green, 49 N. J. Eq. 329, 338, 24 Atl. 560; Society Perun v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 481, 3 N. E. 357; American Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 157 Ill. 641, 652, 42 N. E. 153; Stanwood v. Metal Co., 107 Ill. App. 569; Gilkey v. Town of How, 105 Wis. 41, 45, 81 N. W. 120, 49 L. R. A. 483; Slocum v. Head, 105 Wis. 431, 81 N. W. 673, 50 L. R. A. 324; Haas v. Bank, 41 Neb. 754, 60 N. W. 85.

The second and third conditions were given as a sufficient definition in Methodist Episcopal Union Church v. Pickett, 19 N. Y. 482, and this was adopted in Trustees of East Norway Lake Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Froislie, 37 Minn. 447, 35 N. W. 260; but criticised in Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 52 Minn. 243, 53 N. W. 1150, 18 L. R. A. 778, 38 Am. St. Rep. 552, where the first was added and the definition, so amended, repeated in Johnson v. Okerstrom, 70 Minn. 303, 73 N. W. 147, was, in preference to that of the New York court, adopted in Gibbs' Estate, 157 Pa. 59, 27 Atl. 383, 22 L. R. A. 276. It is believed, however, that the fourth must be added to make a definition completely expressing all the conditions which are required by due consideration of the authorities which create and support the doctrine of de facto corporations. Indeed in Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 1, 14, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773, Peckham, J., while enumerating the first three conditions as the requisites proceeds in the same paragraph to state the "bona fide attempt to organize" under a general law, and "actual user of the corporate franchise" as the elements which constituted the defendant a de facto corporation. The four conditions are given substantially as requisites in many cases; Clark v. Coal Co., 35 Ind. App. 65, 73 N. E. 727; Mackay v. R. Co., 82 Conn. 73, 72 Atl. 583, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768; Marsh v. Mathias, 19 Utah 350, 56 Pac. 1074; Franke v. Maun, 106 Wis. 118, 81 N. W. 1014, 48 L. R. A. 856; Stevens v. History Co., 140 App. Div. 570, 125 N. Y. Supp. 573; and are all combined under three heads in Stanwood v. Metal Co., 107 Ill. App. 569.

The mere carrying on, under a company name, of a business of such character as may well be conducted by an individual, or partnership, does not constitute a de facto corporation; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Loveland, 132 Fed. 41; nor is a bank, exclusively owned by one person, such a corporation; Longfellow v. Barnard, 59 Neb. 455, 81 N. W. 307.

Such corporations are recognized by the same rule which recognizes de facto officers, and this is necessary for public and private security; Clement v. Everest, 29 Mich. 19. There cannot be a corporation de facto where it could not exist de jure; Davis v. Stevens, 104 Fed. 235; Brown v. Power Co., 113 Ga. 462, 39 S. E. 71; State v. Stevens, 16 S. D. 309, 92 N. W. 420; Evenson v. Ellingson, 67 Wis. 634, 31 N. W. 342; nor can one exist under an unconstitutional statute; Clark v. Coal Co., 165 Ind. 213, 73 N. E. 1083, 112 Am. St. Rep. 217; Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 105 N. W. 1031, 1135, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 7 Ann. Cas. 400.

The state only can proceed against such corporation, by quo warranto to test the validity of its corporate existence; Hon v. State, 89 Ind. 249; Savings Bank Co. v. Miller, 24 Ohio C. C. 198; Los Angeles Holiness Band v. Spires, 126 Cal. 541, 58 Pac. 1049; Armour v. E. Bement's Sons, 123 Fed. 56, 62 C. C. A. 142; Mayor, etc., of City of Wilmington v. Addicks, 8 Del. Ch. 310, 43 Atl. 297; Wyandotte Electric-Light Co. v. City of Wyandotte, 124 Mich. 43, 82 N. W. 821; and this is a rule of public policy; Continental Trust Co. v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 642, 649; and the de facto corporation may be made sole defendant in such proceeding without joining the associates; New Orleans Debenture, etc., Co. v. Louisiana, 180 U. S. 320, 21 Sup. Ct. 378, 45 L. Ed. 550; and a decree at the suit of the state avoiding the charter does not deny to the incorporators the equal protection of the laws or take away their property without due process of law; id.; but a private individual cannot institute proceedings by quo warranto for the forfeiture of a corporate charter; Attorney General v. Adonai Shomo Corp., 167 Mass. 424, 45 N. E. 762; Appeal of Western Pennsylvania R. Co., 104 Pa. 399; Com. v. Bank, 2 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 392; North v. State, 107 Ind. 356, 8 N. E. 159; State v. Turnpike Co., 21 N. J. L. 9. An action instituted on behalf of the state to vacate a charter for non-compliance with the act under which it purports to have organized may be instituted by "the attorney-general," without a relator, and it is strictly a people's action; People v. Cement Co., 131 N. Y. 143, 29 N. E. 947, 15 L. R. A. 240.

The corporate existence may not be attacked by the associates who have acted as a corporation and are sued as such by one with whom they have dealt as such; Racine & M. R. Co. v. Trust Co., 49 Ill. 331, 95 Am. Dec. 595; Hamilton v. R. Co., 144 Pa. 34, 23 Atl. 53, 13 L. R. A. 779; Rush v. Steamboat Co., 84 N. C. 702; Empire Mfg. Co. v. Stuart, 46 Mich. 482, 9 N. W. 527; Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Trust Co., 95 Fed. 497, 507, 36 C. C. A. 155; contra; Boyce v. Trustees of M. E. Church, 46 Md. 359; or by one of the associates as against the others; Curtis v. Tracy, 169 Ill. 233, 48 N. E. 399, 61 Am. St. Rep. 168; Lincoln Park Chapter No. 177 Royal Arch Masons v. Swatek, 204 Ill. 228, 68 N. E. 429; Franke v. Mann, 106 Wis. 118, 81 N. W. 1014, 48 L. R. A. 856; Merchants' & Planters' Line v. Waganer, 71 Ala. 581, 585; Heald v. Owen, 79 Ia. 23, 44 N. W. 210; Foster v. Moulton, 35 Minn. 458, 29 N. W. 155; or by all the others as against one; Meurer v. Protective Ass'n, 95 Mich. 451, 54 N. W. 954; or by an associate or organizer as against one who is induced by him to deal with the corporation (as to sell property to it); Smith v. Mayfield, 163 Ill. 447, 45 N. E. 157; or by one who deals or contracts with it as a corporation; Commercial Bank of Keokuk, Ia., v. Pfeiffer, 108 N. Y. 242, 15 N. E. 311; Seven Star Grange No. 73, Patrons of Husbandry, v. Ferguson, 98 Me. 176, 56 Atl. 648; Hudson v. Seminary Corp., 113 Ill. 618; Cravens v. Eagle Cotton Mills Co., 120 Ind. 6, 21 N. E. 981, 16 Am. St. Rep. 298; Bartlett v. Wilbur, 53 Md. 485, 498; Butchers' & Drovers' Bank of St. Louis v. McDonald, 130 Mass. 264; Bibb v. Hall, 101 Ala. 79, 14 South. 98; Canfield v. Gregory, 66 Conn. 9, 33 Atl. 536; Way v. Grease Co., 60 N. J. Eq. 263, 47 Atl. 44; Lincoln Park Chapter No. 177 Royal Arch Masons v. Swatek, 204 Ill. 228, 68 N. E. 429; nor can one who contracts with the associates as a corporation hold them individually liable for a breach; Whitford v. Laidler, 94 N. Y. 145, 151, 46 Am. Rep. 131; Vanneman v. Young, 52 N. J. L. 403, 20 Atl. 53; Clausen v. Head, 110 Wis. 405, 85 N. W. 1028, 84 Am. St. Rep. 933; Love v. Ramsey, 139 Mich. 47, 102 N. W. 279; Larned v. Beal, 65 N. H. 184, 23 Atl. 149; Tennessee Automatic Lighting Co. v. Massey (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 35; Richards v. Bank, 75 Minn. 196, 77 N. W. 822; Planters' & Miners' Bank v. Padgett, 69 Ga. 159; Owensboro Wagon Co. v. Bliss, 132 Ala. 253, 31 South. 81, 90 Am. St. Rep. 907; unless under a statute making persons who unlawfully assume corporate powers personally liable; Loverin v. McLaughlin, 161 Ill. 417, 434, 44 N. E. 99; Sweney Bros. v. Talcott, 85 Ia. 103; Thornton v. Balcom, 85 Ia. 198, 52 N. W. 190.

erally attacked; Doty v. Patterson, 155 Ind. 60, 56 N. E. 668; Gilkey v. Town of How, 105 Wis. 41, 46, 81 N. W. 120, 49 L. R. A. 483; Cochran v. Arnold, 58 Pa. 399; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. Traction Co., 196 Pa. 25, 46 Atl. 99, 79 Am. St. Rep. 685; State v. Fuller, 96 Mo. 165, 9 S. W. 583; Keene v. Van Reuth, 48 Md. 184; Saunders v. Farmer, 62 N. H. 572; People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 526, 8 Pac. 84; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Com'rs of Sumner County, 51 Kan. 617, 33 Pac. 312; Crowder v. Town of Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 28 N. E. 94, 13 L. R. A. 647; Otoe County Fair & Driving Park Ass'n v. Doman, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 179, 95 N. W. 327; Terry v. Packing & Provision Co., 105 Ill. App. 663; People v. Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 61 Pac. 86; Harris v. Land Co., 128 Ala. 652, 29 South. 611. Collateral attack has been permitted in a suit to enjoin the collection of assessments for turnpike construction on the ground of want of legal organization; Busenback v. Road Co., 43 Ind. 265; also as a defense to a suit against an original associate for his stock subscription; Indianapolis Furnace & Mining Co. v. Herkimer, 46 Ind. 142; Dorris v. Sweeney, 60 N. Y. 463 (where it was said that one contracting with a de facto corporation after its formation cannot set up its invalidity); and where capital stock agreed upon is not fully subscribed, a subscriber who has not participated in, or had notice of, the organization, is not estopped from setting up the illegality of the assessment for his subscriptions; Haskell v. Worthington, 94 Mo. 560, 7 S. W. 481. In Buffalo & A. R. Co. v. Cary, 26 N. Y. 75, it was held that very slight proof of user (election of officers by the persons calling themselves directors) was sufficient to prevent a subscriber from setting up the defense of defective organization in a suit against him for his stock subscription. The validity of a conveyance to or by a corporation de facto cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding; Finch v. Ullman, 105 Mo. 255, 16 S. W. 863, 24 Am. St. Rep. 383, where it was said that "this rule is not based on estoppel . . . but on the requirements of public policy that the security of titles be not impaired."

Collateral attack is usually permitted in defence against an attempt by a de facto corporation to exercise the right of eminent domain; Tulare Irrigation District v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773; In re Union El. R. Co. of Brooklyn, 112 N. Y. 61, 19 N. E. 664, 2 L. R. A. 359; Williamson v. Bldg. & Loan Fund Ass'n, 89 Ind. 389; Kinston & C. R. Co. v. Stroud, 132 N. C. 413, 43 S. E. 913 (see Wellington & P. R. Co. v. Lumber Co., 114 N. C. 690, 19 S. E. 646); Powers v. R. Co., 33 Ohio St. 429; St. Joseph & I. R. Co. v. Shambaugh, 106 Mo. 557, 17 S. W. 581; Hampton v. Water Supply Co., 65 N. J. L. 158, 46 Atl. 650; contra, Eddleman v. Power Co., 217 Ill. 409, 75 N. E. 510; Terre Haute & P. R. Co. v. Robbins, 247 Ill. 376, 93 N. E. 398; Detroit & T. S. L. R. Co. v. Campbell, 140 Mich. 384, 103 N. W. 856; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. R. Co., 144 Ala. 639, 39 South. 473, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 144; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. R. Co., 23 Utah 474, 65 Pac. 735, 90 Am. St. Rep. 705; and see Portland & G. Turnpike Co. v. Bobb, 88 Ky. 226, 10 S. W. 794; and it is open to collateral attack where there is no law under which it could become a corporation de jure; Clark v. Coal Co., 165 Ind. 213, 73 N. E. 1083, 112 Am. St. Rep. 217. As to the right of a de facto corporation to exercise the power of eminent domain, see 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 144, note.

In some cases where a tort was committed for which the remedy would have been against the corporation, if de jure, because of the defective organization the associates were held personally liable; Vredenburg v. Behan, 33 La. Ann. 627; Smith v. Warden, 86 Mo. 382; and a similar remedy against associates has been given for breach of contract where the intention was for corporate action, but the other party did not know it; Guckert v. Hacke, 159 Pa. 303, 28 Atl. 247; New York Nat. Exch. Bank v. Crowell, 177 Pa. 313, 35 Atl. 613 (see Vanhorn v. Corcoran, 127 Pa. 255, 268, 18 Atl. 16, 4 L. R. A. 386); Christian & Craft Grocery Co. v. Lumber Co., 121 Ala. 340, 25 South. 566; Slocum v. Head, 105 Wis. 431, 81 N. W. 673, 50 L. R. A. 324; Field v. Cooks, 16 La. Ann. 153; but if he elects to proceed against them as a corporation and fails he is estopped afterwards to sue them as individuals; Clausen v. Head, 110 Wis. 405, 85 N. W. 1028, 84 Am. St. Rep. 933.

The immunity from personal liability of the associates who form a de facto corporation is limited to transactions with those who deal with them as a corporation, entered into in good faith, and it is based upon that and the estoppel arising from the dealing with the supposed organization as a corporation, generally believed to be and treated as such; Slocum v. Head, 105 Wis. 431, 434, 81 N. W. 673, 50 L. R. A. 324; Gartside Coal Co. v. Maxwell, 22 Fed. 197.

An injunction has been refused against a de facto corporation exercising powers which would belong to it if de jure; Elizabethtown Gas Light Co. v. Green, 49 N. J. Eq. 329, 331, 332, 24 Atl. 560; but equity has assumed jurisdiction to ascertain whether the organization of a corporation is legal; Union Water Co. v. Kean, 52 N. J. Eq. 111, 27 Atl. 1015.

Such a corporation may "maintain an action against any one, other than the state, who has contracted with the corporation, or who has done it a wrong;" Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 137 U. S. 568, 572, 11 Sup. Ct. 185, 34 L. Ed. 784; Tar River Nav. Co. v. Neal, 10 N. C. 520, 537; and in some states there are statutes forbidding one suing or sued by a corporation to set up the lack of legal organization, as e. g. Ia-

Code (1897) § 1636; Ky. Comp. St. 1903, § 566; Comp. Laws S. D. § 2892, which last statute is held to be merely declaratory of the law as it previously existed; Davis v. Stevens, 104 Fed. 235.

It may seek an injunction to restrain irreparable injury to property; Williams v. Ry. Co., 130 Ind. 71, 29 N. E. 408, 15 L. R. A. 64, 30 Am. St. Rep. 201; Cincinnati, L. & C. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 75 Ill. 113; or sue any one, other than the state, either for breach of contract or a wrong done to it; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 137 U. S. 568, 572, 11 Sup. Ct. 185, 34 L. Ed. 784; as for infringement of a patent; American Cable Ry. Co. v. City of New York, 68 Fed. 227; for the protection of its property from a tortfeasor; Searsburgh Turnpike Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 315, 323; for trespass on personal property; Persse & Brooks Paper Works v. Willett, 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 131; for conversion; Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 65 N. Y. 570; or as indorsee or assignee of a note or chose in action; Wilcox v. R. Co., 43 Mich. 584, 590, 5 N. W. 1003; Cozzens v. Brick Co., 166 Ill. 213, 46 N. E. 788; Haas v. Bank, 41 Neb. 754, 60 N. W. 85; or for use and occupation of land; Philippine Sugar Estates Development Co. v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cl. 225.

Where the existence of the corporation is only collaterally in issue, slight proof only is required to make a prima facie case of de facto incorporation; Lucas v. Bank, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 147; Memphis & St. F. Plank Road Co. v. Rives, 21 Ark. 302; Mix v. Bank, 91 Ill. 20, 33 Am. Rep. 44; Eakright v. R. Co., 13 Ind. 404; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Glendon Co., 120 Mass. 97; United States Vinegar Co. v. Schlegel, 143 N. Y. 537, 543, 38 N. E. 729; President, etc., of Bank of Manchester v. Allen, 11 Vt. 302.

A de facto corporation may be a conduit of title, to protect a mortgagee; Hackensack Water Co. v. De Kay, 36 N. J. Eq. 559; Dugan v. Inv. Co., 11 Colo. 113, 17 Pac. 105; Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Trust & Deposit Co., 94 Ga. 306, 21 S. E. 701, 32 L. R. A. 208, 47 Am. St. Rep. 153; or a grantee; Society Perun v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 481, 3 N. E. 357 (where the state had maintained quo warranto); or a lessee; City of Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 358, 3 Pac. 693; and the grantee of such corporation has maintained a writ of entry; Saunders v. Farmer, 62 N. H. 572; Lusk v. Riggs, 70 Neb. 713, 97 N. W. 1033; id., 70 Neb. 718, 102 N. W. 88; Crenshaw v. Ullman, 113 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 1077; or ejectment; Finch v. Ullman, 105 Mo. 255, 16 S. W. 863, 24 Am. St. Rep. 383; though against one who has not dealt with the associates as a corporation; Chiniquy v. Catholic Bishop, 41 Ill. 148; East Norway Lake Church v. Froislie, 37 Minn. 447, 35 N. W. 260.

A de facto corporation may proceed against its grantor for reformation of a deed; Oteo County Fair & Driving Park Ass'n v. Doman, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 179, 95 N. W. 327; or to have land discharged from the lien of a judgment against its grantor; Keyes v. Smith, 67 N. J. L. 190, 51 Atl. 122; and may acquire, hold and convey land; New York, B. & E. R. Co. v. Motil, 81 Conn. 466, 71 Atl. 563.

If the associates deal as partners and continue to do so after being incorporated, without giving notice, they are still liable as partners; Perkins v. Rouss, 78 Miss. 343, 29 South. 92; Martin v. Fewell, 79 Mo. 401, 412; and where one has no knowledge of the existence of a charter, and there is nothing to put him on inquiry, he may hold the supposed incorporators personally liable as partners; Guckert v. Hacke, 159 Pa. 303, 28 Atl. 249.

The theory that a de facto corporation has no real existence has no foundation, either in reason or authority. A de facto corporation is a reality. It has an actual and substantial legal existence. It is, as the term implies, a corporation; Society Perun v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 481, 490, 3 N. E. 357.

See discussions of de facto corporations in 20 Harv. L. Rev. 456; 25 id. 623.

De Facto Court. A court established by statute apparently valid, which has organized with a judge appointed, and has exercised authority as a court. Burt v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 472, 18 N. W. 285, 289.

"A de facto court cannot exist by virtue of a statute under a written constitution which ordains one supreme court, and defines the qualifications and duties of its judges, and prescribes the mode of appointing them. The attempt of the legislature to abolish the constitutional court of appeals and establish a new one was ineffectual to create either a de facto or de jure court for want of legislative power"; Hildreth's Heirs v. McIntire's Devisee, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 206, 19 Am. Dec. 61.

De Facto Judge. One duly elected, qualified and acting as such, under conditions on which one might be properly appointed, but who failed to comply with some necessary act to qualify him, as taking the oath of office. State v. Miller, 111 Mo. 542, 20 S. W. 243. There must be a duly constituted office and a vacancy therein before the election or appointment; Caldwell v. Barrett, 71 Ark. 310, 74 S. W. 748.

One has been recognized as a de facto judge, though the statute under which he was appointed was unconstitutional and void, when the office was originally created under a valid law; Walcott v. Wells, 21 Nev. 47, 24 Pac. 367, 9 L. R. A. 59, 37 Am. St. Rep. 478. And when the incumbent was ill and an acting judge was appointed, qualified, assumed the duties and the public acquiesced, he was held to be a de facto judge; Dredla v. Baache, 60 Neb. 655, 83 N. W. 916.

DE FAIRE ÉCHELLE. In French Law. A clause commonly contained in French in-insurance policies, which is equivalent to a license for a vessel to touch and trade at intermediate ports. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 491.

DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO (Lat. for burning a heretic). A writ which lay where a heretic had been convicted of heresy, had refused to abjure or had abjured, and had relapsed into heresy. 4 Bla. Com. 46.

DE HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAM (Lat. for taking a man in withernam). A writ to take a man who had carried away a bondman or bondwoman into another country beyond the reach of a writ of replevin. 3 Bla. Com. 129.

DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO (Lat. for replevying a man). A writ which lies to replevy a man out of prison, or out of the custody of a private person, upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. Fitzh. N. B. 66; 3 Bla. Com. 129. If the latter eluded his captive he could be summarily imprisoned by a capias in withernam. It was inefficient against wrongful imprisonment because it excepted the party if he had been arrested on the king's order.

The statute—which had gone nearly out of use, having been superseded by the writ of habeas corpus—has been revived within a few years in some of the United States in an amended and more effectual form. It can be used only for the benefit of the person imprisoned. 1 Kent 404, n.; Hutchings v. Van Bokkelen, 34 Me. 126.

See MAINPRIZE.

A case is mentioned in Jackson & Gross, Land. & Ten. § 788, where this writ was issued by the supreme court of Pennsylvania while the writ of habeas corpus was suspended during the war between the states.

DE IDIOTA INQUIRENDO. An old common-law writ, long obsolete, to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. 2 Steph. Com. 509.

DE INCREMENTO (Lat. of increase). Costs de incremento, costs of increase—that is, which the court assesses in addition to the damages established by the jury. See COSTS DE INCREMENTO.

DE INJURIA (Lat. The full term is, de injuria sua propria absque tali causa, of his own wrong without such cause; or, where part of the plea is admitted, absque residuo causæ, without the rest of the cause).

In Pleading. The replication by which in an action of tort the plaintiff denies the effect of excuse or justification offered by the defendant.

It can only be used where the defendant pleads matter merely in excuse and not in justification of his act. It is confined to those instances in which the plea neither denies the original existence of the right which the defendant is charged with having violated, nor alleges that it has been released or extinguished, but sets up some new matter as a sufficient excuse or cause for that which would otherwise and in its own nature be wrongful. It cannot, therefore, be properly used when the defendant's plea alleges any matter in the nature of title, interest, authority, or matter of record; 8 Co. 66; 1 B. & P. 76; Hyatt v. Wood, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 159, note, 4 Am. Dec. 258; Griswold v. Sedgwick, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 126; Oystead v. Shed, 12 Mass. 506; Ridgefield Park R. Co. v. Ruckman, 38 N. J. L. 98; Steph. Pl. 276; Pepper, Pl. 35.

The English and American cases are at variance as to what constitutes such legal authority as cannot be replied to by de injuria. Most of the American cases hold that this replication is bad whenever the defendant insists upon a right, no matter from what source it may be derived; and this seems to be the more consistent doctrine.

If the plea in any sense justifies the act, instead of merely excusing it, de injuria cannot be used; Coburn v. Hopkins, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 577; Stickle v. Richmond, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 78; Allen v. Scott, 13 Ill. 80. The English cases, on the other hand, hold that an authority derived from a court not of record may be traversed by the replication de injuria; 3 B. & Ad. 2.

The plaintiff may confess that portion of a plea which alleges an authority in law or an interest, title, or matter of record, and aver that the defendant did the act in question de injuria sua propria absque residuo causæ, of his own wrong without the residue of the cause alleged; Stickle v. Richmond, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 78; Curry v. Hoffman, 2 Am. Law Reg. 246; Steph. Pl. 276.

The replication de injuria puts in issue the whole of the defence contained in the plea; and evidence is, therefore, admissible to disprove any material averment in the whole plea; McKelv. Pl. 50; 8 Co. 66; 11 East 451; 10 Bingh. 157; Tubbs v. Caswell, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 129; Erskine v. Hohnbach, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 613, 20 L. Ed. 745. See 2 Cr. M. & R. 338. In England, however, by a uniform course of decisions in their courts, evidence is not admissible under the replication de injuria to a plea; for instance, of moderate castigavit or molliter manus imposuit, to prove that an excess of force was used by the defendant; but it is necessary that such excess should be specially pleaded. There must be a new assignment; 2 Cr. M. & R. 338; 1 Bingh. 317; 1 Bingh. N. C. 380; 3 M. & W. 150.

In this country, on the other hand, though some of the earlier cases followed the English doctrine, later cases decide that the plaintiff need not plead specially in such a case. It is held that there is no new cause to assign when the act complained of is the same that is attempted to be justified by plea. Therefore the fact of the act being moderate is a part of the plea, and is one of the points brought in issue by de injuria; and evidence is admissible to prove an excess; Hannen v. Edes, 15 Mass. 351; Bennett v. Appleton, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 371; Elliot v. Kilburn, 2 Vt. 474; Bartlett v. Churchill, 24 Vt. 218; Vreeland v. Berry, 21 N. J. L. 183.

Though a direct traverse of several points going to make up a single defence in a plea will be bad for duplicity, yet the general replication de injuria cannot be objected to on this ground, although putting the same number of points in issue; 3 B. & Ad. 1; Marshall v. Aiken, 25 Vt. 330; 2 Bingham. N. C. 579; 3 Tyrwh. 491. Hence this mode of replying has a great advantage when a special plea has been resorted to, since it enables the plaintiff to traverse all the facts contained in any single point, instead of being obliged to rest his cause on an issue joined on one fact alone.

In England it is held that de injuria may be replied in assumpsit; 2 Bingham. N. C. 579.

In this country it has been held that the use of de injuria is limited to actions of tort; Coffin v. Bassett, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 357. But in New Jersey it may be used in actions ex contractu wherever a special plea in excuse of the alleged breach of contract can be pleaded, as a general traverse to put in issue every material allegation in the plea; Ridgefield Park R. Co. v. Ruckman, 38 N. J. L. 98. Whether de injuria can be used in actions of replevin seems, even in England, to be a disputed question. The following cases decide that it may be so used; 9 Bingham. 756; 3 B. & Ad. 2; contra, 1 Chit. Pl. 622.

The improper use of de injuria is held to be only a ground of general demurrer; 6 Dowl. 502; but see 3 M. & W. 230; Coffin v. Bassett, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 357. Where it is improperly employed, the defect will be cured by a verdict; Lytle v. Lee, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 112; Hob. 76; 1 T. Raym. 50. See Crogate's Case, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 247.

DE JUDAISMO, STATUTUM. The name of a statute passed in the reign of Edward I., which enacted severe penalties against the Jews. Barringt. Stat. 197.

DE JURE. Rightfully; of right; lawfully; by legal title. Contrasted with de facto (which see). 4 Bla. Com. 77.

Of right: distinguished from de gratia (by favor). By law: distinguished from de æquitate (by equity).

The term is variously applied; as, a king or officer de jure, or a wife de jure.

A government de jure, but not de facto, is one deemed lawful, which has been supplanted; a government de jure and also de facto is one deemed lawful, which is present or established; a government de facto is one deemed unlawful, but which is present or established. Any established government, be it deemed lawful or not, is a government de facto. Austin, Jur. sec. vi. 336. See DE FACTO.

DE LA PLUS BELLE (Fr. of the fairest). A kind of dower; so called because assigned from the best part of the husband's estate. It was connected with the military tenures, and was abolished, with them, by stat. 12 Car. II. cap. 24. Littleton § 48; 2 Bla. Com. 132, 135; Scrib. Dower 18; 1 Washb. R. P. 149, n. See DOWER. In Law French, de la plus beale.

DE LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS (Lat. for allowing liberties). A writ, of various forms, to enable a citizen to recover the liberties to which he was entitled. Fitzh. N. B. 229; Reg. Orig. 262.

DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO (Lat. to inquire as to lunacy). The name of a writ directed to the sheriff, directing him to inquire by good and lawful men whether one therein named is a lunatic or not. See Hutchinson v. Sandt, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 234, 26 Am. Dec. 127; Den v. Clark, 10 N. J. L. 217, 18 Am. Dec. 417; Hart v. Deamer, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 497; In re McAdams, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 292; In re Kings County Insane Asylum, 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 425; In re Hill, 31 N. J. Eq. 203.

An inquisition in lunacy proceedings must show that the imbecility of the mind is such as to render the imbecile unfit for the government of himself and his property; In re Lindsley, 44 N. J. Eq. 564, 15 Atl. 1, 6 Am. St. Rep. 913.

The English practice is now regulated by the Lunacy Acts (16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 86), under which the lord chancellor, upon petition or information, grants a commission in the nature of this writ; 2 Steph. Com. 511. In the U. S. the practice is similar, and a commission of lunacy is appointed. See Ray's Med. Jur. Ins.; Ordon. Jud. Asp. Ins. 225; In re Staudermann, 3 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 187.

DE MANUCAPTIONE (Lat. of mainprize). A writ, now obsolete, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance,—usually called mainpernors—and to set him at large. Fitzh. N. B. 250; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 141; Coke, Bail & Mainp. c. 10; Reg. Orig. 268 b. According to its form, it was only available for persons indicted for larceny before the sheriff by inquest of office.

DE MEDIETATE LINGUÆ. A jury half aliens and half natives. See JURY.

DE MEDIO (Lat. of the mesne). A writ in the nature of a writ of right, which lies where upon a subinfeudation the mesne (or middle) lord suffers his under-tenant or tenant paravail to be distrained upon by the lord paramount for the rent due him from the mesne lord. Booth, Real Act. 136; Fitzh. N. B. 135; 3 Bla. Com. 234; Co. Litt. 100 a.

DE MELIORIBUS DAMNIS (Lat.). Of the better damages. When a plaintiff has sued several defendants, and the damages have been assessed severally against each, he has the choice of selecting the best, as he cannot recover the whole. This is done by making an election de melioribus damnis.

DE MERCATORIBUS. THE STATUTE. The statute of Acton Burnell. See ACTON BURNELL.

DE MINIS. Writ of threats. A writ which lay where a person was threatened with personal violence, or the destruction of his property, to compel the offender to keep the peace. Reg. Orig. 88 b. 89; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 79, G. 80; Black, L. Dict.

DE MODO DECIMANDI (Lat. of a manner of taking tithes).

A prescriptive manner of taking tithes, different from the general law of taking tithes in kind. It is usually by a compensation either in work or labor, and is generally called a modus; Cro. Eliz. 446; 2 P. Wms. 462; 2 Russ. & M. 102; 4 Y. & C. 269, 283; 2 Bla. Com. 29; 3 Steph. Com. 130.

DE NATURA BREVIUM (Lat.). Concerning the Nature of Writs. The title of more than one text-book of English Mediæval law. Maitland, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amér. Leg. Hist. 549. See REGISTER OF WRITS.

DE NON DECIMANDO (Lat. of not taking tithes). An exemption by custom from paying tithes is said to be a prescription de non decimando. A claim to be entirely discharged of the payment of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. Cro. Eliz. 511; 3 Bla. Com. 31.

DE NOVI OPERIS NUNCIATIONE (Lat.). In Civil Law. A form of injunction or interdict which lies in some cases for the party aggrieved, where a thing is intended to be done against his right. Thus, where one buildeth a house contrary to the usual and received form of building, to the injury of his neighbor, there lieth such an injunction, which being served, the offender is either to desist from his work or to put in sureties that he shall pull it down if he do not in a short time avow, i. e. show, the lawfulness thereof. Ridley, Civ. & Eccl. Law, pt. 1, c. 1, 8.

DE NOVO (Lat.). Anew; afresh. When a judgment upon an issue in part is reversed on error for some mistake made by the court in the course of the trial, a venire de novo is awarded, in order that the case may again be submitted to a jury.

DE ODO ET ATIA (Lat. of hatred and ill will). A writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to inquire whether a person charged with murder was committed upon just cause of suspicion, or merely propter odium et atiam; and if upon the inquisition due cause of suspicion did not appear, then there issued another writ for the sheriff to admit him to bail. 3 Bla. Com. 128. "A writ for one who says he is imprisoned on a false accusation of crime." Maitland, in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amér. Leg. Hist. 589.

This was one of the many safeguards by which the English law early endeavored to protect the innocent against the oppression of the powerful through a misuse of its forms. The writ was to issue of course to any one, without denial, and gratis. Bracton, l. 3, tr. 2, ch. 8; Magna Carta, c. 26; Stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.), c. 29. It has now passed out of use. 3 Bla. Com. 129. It was superseded by habeas corpus. See ASSIZE; HABEAS CORPUS.

DE PARCO FRACTO (Lat. of pound-breach). A writ which lay where cattle taken in distress were rescued by their owner after being actually impounded. Fitzh. N. B. 100; 3 Bla. Com. 146; Reg. Orig. 116 b; Co. Litt. 47 b.

DE PARTITIONE FACIENDA (Lat. for making partition). The ancient writ for the partition of lands held by tenants in common.

DE PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA (Lat. for making a perambulation). A writ which lay where there was a dispute as to the boundaries of two adjacent lordships or towns, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take with him twelve discreet and lawful knights of his county and make the perambulation and set the bounds and limits in certainty. Fitzh. N. B. 309, D. A similar provision existed in regard to town-lines in Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, by statute. See PERAMBULATION.

DE PLEGIIS ACQUIETANDIS (Lat. for clearing pledges). A writ which lay where one had become surety for another to pay a sum of money at a specified day, and the principal failed to pay it. If the surety was obliged to pay, he was entitled to this writ against his principal. Fitzh. N. B. 37 C; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 65.

DE PRÆROGATIVA REGIS (Lat. of the king's prerogative). The statute 17 Edw. I. st. 1, c. 9, defining the prerogatives of the crown on certain subjects, but especially directing that the king shall have ward of the lands of idiots, taking the profits without waste and finding them necessaries. 2 Steph. Com. 509.

DE PROCEDENDO AD JUDICIUM. A writ proceeding out of chancery and ordering the judges of any court to proceed to judgment. 3 Bla. Com. 109.

DE PROPRIETATE PROBANDA (Lat. for proving property). A writ which issues in a case of replevin, when the defendant claims property in the chattels replevied and the sheriff makes a return accordingly. The writ directs the sheriff to summon an inquest to determine on the validity of the claim; and, if they find for the defendant, the sheriff merely returns their finding. The plaintiff is not concluded by such finding; he may come into the court and traverse it. Hamm. N. P. 456.

This writ has been superseded in England by the "summons to interplead;" in Pennsylvania and Delaware the "claim property bond" is a convenient substitute for the old practice, and similar to this is the practice under the New York Code. Morr. Repl. 304.

It was pointed out in Weaver v. Lawrence, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 156, 1 L. Ed. 79, that in England there were two kinds of replevin—when the writ issued out of chancery, and under the statute of Marlbridge, which enabled the sheriff to replevin without a writ; in the latter case the writ de proprietate probanda issued at once on claim of property being presented and was tried by inquest; if the finding was for defendant, the sheriff forbore.

In replevin at common law the writ de proprietate probanda did not issue until after return on a pluries writ of replevin and the finding on it for defendant, being only an inquest of office, did not prevent a new replevin.

DE QUOTA LITIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A contract by which one who has a claim difficult to recover agrees with another to give a part, for the purpose of obtaining his services to recover the rest. 1 Duval, n. 201. See CHAMPERTY.

DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM (Lat. of a reasonable part of the goods). A writ, long since obsolete, to enable the widow and children of a decedent to recover their proper shares of his personal estate. 2 Bla. Com. 492. The writ is said to be founded on the customs of the counties, and not on the common-law allowance. Fitzh. N. B. 122, L. See CUSTOM OF LONDON.

DE RATIONABILIBUS DIVISIS (Lat. for reasonable boundaries). A writ which lies to determine the boundaries between the lands of two proprietors which lie in different towns. The writ is to be brought by one against the other. Fitzh. N. B. 128, M; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 48.

DE RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE (Lat. of right of advowson; called, also, le droit de advocacione). A writ which lay to restore the right of presentation to a benefice, for him who had an advowson, to himself and heirs in fee simple, if he was disturbed in the presentation. Year B. 39 Hen. VI. 20 a; Fitzh. N. B. 30, D.

DE REPARATIONE FACIENDA (Lat.). The name of a writ which lies by one tenant in common against the other, to cause him to aid in repairing the common property. 8 B. & C. 269.

DE RETORNO HABENDO (Lat.). The name of a writ issued after a judgment has been given in replevin that the defendant should have a return of the goods replevied. The judgment for defendant at common law is pro retorno habendo. Plaintiff's pledges are also so called. See Morr. Repl.; REPLEVIN.

DE SALVA GUARDIA (Lat. of safeguard). A writ to protect the persons of strangers seeking their rights in English courts. Reg. Orig. 26.

DE SCUTAGIO HABENDO (Lat. of having scutage). A writ which lay in case a man held lands of the king by knight's service, to which homage, fealty, and escuage were appendant, to recover the services or fee due in case the knight failed to accompany the king to the war. It lay also for the tenant in capite, who had paid his fee, against his tenants. Fitzh. N. B. 83, C.

DE SECTA AD MOLENDINUM (Lat. of suit to a mill). A writ which lieth to compel one to continue his custom of grinding at a mill. 3 Bla. Com. 235; Fitzh. N. B. 122, M; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 55.

DE SON TORT (Fr.). Of his own wrong. This term is usually applied to a person who, having no right to meddle with the affairs or estate of a deceased person, yet undertakes to do so, by acting as executor of the deceased. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DE SON TORT DEMESNE (Fr.). Of his own wrong. See DE INJURIA.

DE SUPERONERATIONE PASTURÆ (Lat. of surcharge of pasture). A writ lying where one who had been previously impleaded in the county court was again impleaded in the same court for surcharging common of pasture, and the cause was removed to Westminster Hall. Reg. Jur. 36 b.

DE TALLAGIO NON CONCEDENDO (Lat. of not allowing talliage). The name given to the statutes 25 and 34 Edw. I., restricting the power of the king to grant talliage. Co. 2d Inst. 532; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 104. See TALLIAGE.

DE UNA PARTE (Lat.). A deed de una parte is one where only one party grants, gives, or binds himself to do a thing to another. It differs from a deed inter partes (q. v.). See DEED POLL.

DE UXORE RAPTA ET ABDUCTA (Lat. of a wife ravished and carried away). A kind of writ of trespass. Fitzh. N. B. 89, O; 3 Bla. Com. 139.

DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO (Lat. of inspecting the womb). A writ to inspect the body where a woman feigns to be pregnant, to see whether she is with child. It lies for the heir presumptive to examine a widow suspected to be feigning pregnancy in order to enable a supposititious heir to obtain the estate. 1 Bla. Com. 456; 2 Steph. Com. 287; Cro. Eliz. 556; Cro. Jac. 685; 2 P. Wms. 693; 21 Viner, Abr. 547. There was a like procedure in Rome in cases of divorce; Voet. Com. 25, 42.

A jury of 12 matrons was impanelled to decide whether she was quick with child; if so found, sentence was suspended; Archb. Cr. Pr. 23d ed. 229.

It lay also where a woman sentenced to death pleaded pregnancy; 4 Bla. Com. 395. This writ has been recognized in America; 2 Chandl. Am. Cr. Tr. 381.

DE VICINETO (Lat. from the neighborhood). The sheriff was anciently directed in some cases to summon a jury de vicineto; 3 Bla. Com. 360.

DE WARRANTIA CHARTÆ (Lat. of warranty of charter). This writ lieth properly where a man doth enfeof another by deed and bindeth himself and heirs to warranty. Now, if the defendant be impleaded in an assize, or in a writ of entry in the nature of an assize, in which actions he cannot vouch, then he shall have the writ against the feoffor or his heirs who made such warranty; Fitzh. N. B. 134, D; Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 55. Abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

DE WARRANTIA DIEI. A writ which lay for a party in the service of the king who was required to appear in person on a certain day, commanding the justices not to record his default, the king certifying to the fact of such service. Fitzh. N. B. 36.

DEACON. The lowest degree of holy orders in the Church of England. 2 Steph. Com. 600.

DEAD BODY. A corpse.

There is no right of property, in the ordinary sense of the word, in a dead human body; Co. Inst. 202; 4 Bla. Com. 235; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759; Pierce v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 667; 3 Edw. Ch. 155; 5 W. R. 318; 2 Wms. on Ex., 7th Am. ed. 165 n.; but there are rights attached to it which the law will protect; 10 Cent. L. J. 304; and for the health and protection of society, it is a rule of the common law, and this has been confirmed by statutes in civilized states and countries, that public duties are imposed upon public officers, and private duties upon the husband or wife and the next of kin of the deceased, to protect the body from violation and see that it is properly interred, and to protect it after it is interred; 1 Witthaus & Becker's Med. Jur. 297.

It has been suggested that the right of the living in their dead might be classified with those rights which arise out of the family relation; 5 Harv. L. Rev. 285; 13 id. 63; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238, 14 L. R. A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370. In Pierce v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 667, it is said there is a quasi property right. The clear legal right of exemption from wrongful acts is in itself the property. An injury to such right need not include an injury to physical property, or to person or to character, but is of itself sufficient to support an action; Koerber v. Patek, 123 Wis. 453, 102 N. W. 40, 68 L. R. A. 956. Executors have a right to possession of it and it is their duty to bury it; 2 Wms. on Ex. 7th Am. ed. 165; Hapgood v. Houghton, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 154; Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. 293, 82 Am. Dec. 506; but this case is referred to in a subsequent one in the same court as not deciding what is stated in the syllabus, which is characterized as "much too broad and as an improvident generalization"; Pettigrew v. Pettigrew, 207 Pa. 313, 56 Atl. 878, 64 L. R. A. 179, 99 Am. St. Rep. 795.

The right of the widow to control the place of burial is also sustained in other cases; O'Donnell v. Slack, 123 Cal. 285, 55 Pac. 906, 43 L. R. A. 388; Buchanan v. Buchanan, 28 Misc. Rep. 261, 59 N. Y. Supp. 810, which, while recognizing the right of the widow, held that she could not maintain replevin for the body against one who had caused it to be properly buried; and where the decedent did not in his lifetime live with his wife and there was no executor or administrator, the sister was held entitled to control the burial. It was also held in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 123 Ga. 62, 51 S. E. 24, 3 Ann. Cas. 128, that the widow has an interest in the unburied body of her deceased husband which the courts will recognize. The right to make testamentary direction concerning the disposal of the body has been conferred by statute in several states; e. g. New York, Maine, Oklahoma, and Minnesota. The question of the right of disposal of the body is ably discussed by Mr. R. S. Guernsey in 10 Cent. L. J. 303, 325, and he concludes upon the authorities that in the absence of testamentary disposition the right and duty of burial devolves upon relatives "as follows: 1. Husband or wife. 2. Children. 3. If none—(1) Father. (2) Mother. 4. Brothers and sisters. 5. Next of kin according to the course of the common law, according to the law of descent of personal property;" id. 327. Probably the rule may be fairly stated that there being no husband or wife of the deceased, the nearest of kin in order of right to administration is charged with the duty of burial. And to the same effect it is said: First, the paramount right is in the surviving husband or widow, and if the parties were living in the normal relations of marriage, it will require a very strong case to justify a court in interfering with the wishes of the survivor. Secondly, if there is no surviving husband or wife, the right is in the next of kin in the order of their relation to the decedent, as, children of a proper age, parents, brothers and sisters, or more distant kin, modified, it may be, by circumstances of special intimacy or association with the decedent.

Thirdly, how far the desires of the decedent should prevail against those of a surviving husband or wife is an open question, but as against remoter connections, such wishes, especially if strongly and recently expressed, should usually prevail. Fourthly, with regard to a re-interment in a different place, the same rules should apply, but with a presumption against removal growing stronger with the remoteness of connection with the decedent and reserving always the right of the court to require reasonable cause to be shown for it; Pettigrew v. Pettigrew, 207 Pa. 313, 56 Atl. 878, 64 L. R. A. 179, 99 Am. St. Rep. 795.

Where a deceased person had not lived with his wife and there was no executor or administrator, his sister was permitted to control his burial; Kitchen v. Wilkinson, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 75.

The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant is bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable misdemeanor, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial; 2 Den. C. C. 325; or preventing a dead body from being buried; 2 Term 734; 4 East 460; 1 Russ. Cr. 415, n.; or interring one found in a river without first sending for the coroner; 1 Ld. Ken. 250; or to cast one into a river; Kanavan's Case, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 226. And every householder in whose house a dead body lies is bound by the common law, if he has the means to do so, to inter the body decently; and this principle applies where a person dies in the house of a parish or a union; 12 A. & E. 773. The expense for such burial may be paid out of the effects of deceased; 3 Camp. 298.

It is the duty of the coroner after death by violence to cause an autopsy to be made; the surgeon who makes it can recover from the county for his labor; Allegheny County v. Shaw, 34 Pa. 301; Board of Com'rs of Bartholomew County v. Jameson, 86 Ind. 154. If the work be done with ordinary care, he is not liable to the family for a mutilation of the body, even though acting without their consent; Young v. College of Physicians & Surgeons, 81 Md. 358, 32 Atl. 177, 31 L. R. A. 540; and though he removes and keeps in his possession by direction of the coroner, portions of the body; Palmer v. Broder, 78 Wis. 483, 47 N. W. 744. Where a rule of a board of health requires a certificate as to the cause of death before issuing a burial permit, an attending physician is not liable for performing an autopsy without the family's consent; Meyers v. Clarke, 122 Ky. 866, 90 S. W. 1049, 93 S. W. 43, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727; so where a mere incision was made to ascertain the cause of death, as authorized by the board of health and a city ordinance; Rushing v. Medical College, 4 Ga. App. 823, 62 S. E. 563.

The purchaser of land upon which is located a burial ground may be enjoined from removing bodies therefrom against the wishes of the relatives or next of kin of the deceased. Every interment is a concession of the privilege which cannot afterward be repudiated, and the purchaser's title to the ground is fettered with the right of burial; First Presbyterian Church v. Church, 2 Brewster (Pa.) 372. But the right of municipal or state authorities, with the consent of the owner of the burial lot or in the execution of eminent domain, to remove dead bodies from cemeteries is well settled; Craig v. Church, 88 Pa. 42, 32 Am. Rep. 417; Hamilton v. City of New Albany, 30 Ind. 482; Page v. Symonds, 63 N. H. 17, 56 Am. Rep. 481.

The law of Indiana (2 R. S. p. 473) prohibits the removal of a dead body without the consent of a near relative or of the deceased in his lifetime. It is held there that the bodies of the dead belong to the surviving relations in the order of inheritance, as property; Bogert v. Indianapolis, 13 Ind. 134. The laws of Louisiana, California, Connecticut, Vermont, and Ohio, recognize the interest of the relatives of a deceased person in his body.

In 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 502, a learned report by S. B. Ruggles lays down these conclusions, substantially:

1. Neither a corpse nor its burial is subject to ecclesiastical cognizance.

2. The right to bury a corpse and preserve it is a legal right.

3. Such right, in the absence of testamentary disposition, is in the next of kin (so in Bogert v. Indianapolis, 13 Ind. 138).

4. The right to protect the corpse includes the right to preserve it by burial, to select the place of sepulture, and to change it at pleasure.

5. If the burial-place be taken for public use, the next of kin must be indemnified for removal and reinterment, etc. Approved by the Sup. Ct. N. Y. (1856).

The exhumation of the body of the deceased should be ordered, if at all, only on a strong showing that, without its examination, a fraud is likely to be accomplished, as where an insurance company has exhausted every other legal means of exposing a fraud; Grangers' Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 34 Am. Rep. 446. But the right of interment and the right to disinter are subordinate to public health, and disinterment may be compelled by public authorities whenever conditions become such as that the public health is threatened; or where an examination may disclose facts which prove an accused person innocent of a crime; Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 114 S. W. 635, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

In a murder trial, the court may, at the prisoner's instance, order an exhumation and autopsy, if in the interest of justice; Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 114 S. W. 635, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513; such order was refused in Moss v. State, 152 Ala. 30, 44 South. 598, because it appeared that two reputable physicians, available at the trial, had examined the body before burial. There is said to be no law requiring a court, at the prisoner's request, but at the expense of the state, to order exhumation; Salisbury v. Com., 79 Ky. 425. In Com. v. Grether, 204 Pa. 203, 53 Atl. 753, the court refused to set aside a conviction of murder in the first degree because the district attorney and not the coroner had caused the body to be exhumed. In an insurance case, exhumation was ordered to obtain evidence bearing on the question of suicide; the marshal was directed to exhume the body and the court appointed a pathologist and a chemist to make the examination; it was held also that such order could only be made in a case where the widow was a party; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Griesa, 150 Fed. 398. The right to make the order in an insurance case was recognized in People v. Fitzgerald, 105 N. Y. 146, 11 N. E. 378, 59 Am. Rep. 483; Grangers' Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 34 Am. Rep. 446; but in the latter case the order was refused on the ground of delay; see Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 114 S. W. 635, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

To disinter a dead body, without lawful authority, even for the purpose of dissection, is a misdemeanor, for which the offender may be indicted at common law; 1 D. & R. 13; State v. McClure, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 328; Com. v. Slack, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 304; Kanavan's Case, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 226. This offence is punished by statute in most of the states; see 1 Russ. 414, n. A; as is its unauthorized sale for gain and profit; Thompson v. State, 105 Tenn. 177, 58 S. W. 213, 51 L. R. A. 883, 80 Am. St. Rep. 875. To seize a dead body on pretence of arresting for debt is contra bonos mores; 4 East 460. There can be no larceny of a dead body; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 652; 12 Co. 106; but may be of the clothes or shroud upon it; Wonson v. Sayward, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 402, 23 Am. Dec. 691; 12 Co. 113; Co. 3d Inst. 110; Kanavan's Case, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 226; State v. Doepke, 68 Mo. 208, 30 Am. Rep. 785.

After the right of burial has once been exercised by the person charged with the duty of burial, or where such person has consented to the burial by another person, no right to the corpse remains except to protect it from unlawful interference; Peters v. Peters, 43 N. J. Eq. 140, 10 Atl. 742; Lowrie v. Plitt, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 303; 10 B. & S. 298. But see Weld v. Walker, 130 Mass. 422, 39 Am. Rep. 465. It has been held that it then becomes a part of the ground to which it has been committed; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759; Wilson v. Read, 74 N. H. 322, 68 Atl. 37, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332, 124 Am. St. Rep. 973; contra, Cohen v. Congregation Shearith Is- rael in City of New York, 85 App. Div. 65, 82 N. Y. Supp. 918. In England, where a son had removed, without leave, the body of his mother from the burial-ground of a congregation of Protestant dissenters, to bury it in church ground, it was held that he was guilty of a misdemeanor at common law, and that it was no defence that his motives were pious and laudable; 1 Dears. & B. 160, 7 Cox C. C. 214.

A widow who allows her husband to be buried in a certain place may not disturb his remains; her right to the body of her deceased husband being terminated by the burial, and any further disposition of such body belonging thereafter exclusively to his next of kin; Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. 293, 82 Am. Dec. 506; but see a criticism of that case supra. Where one in accordance with his own wishes was buried in his own lot by his widow, and she removed his remains, she was ordered, in equity to restore them; Pierce v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 672, and note. A son is not allowed to remove his father's remains against his mother's wishes; Johnston v. Marinus, 18 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 78. After interment, the control over a dead body is in the next of kin living. But if they differ about its disposal, equity will not help its removal. Where a corpse has been properly buried, it is doubtful if even the next of kin can remove it; Lowry v. Plitt, 16 Am. L. Reg. 155, and note. Where a wife allowed her husband's remains to be placed temporarily in a vault in New York, and his father removed them to his own vault, held, that, in the absence of a request by the deceased husband in his lifetime, the widow might control the place of burial, but that she could not, under the circumstances, disturb their repose and take them to Kentucky; Southworth v. Southworth, in the New York Supreme Court, 1881, not reported, referred to in an article in 17 Can. L. J. 184. The husband having in a time of great distress of mind after his wife's death consented to her burial in a lot of the husbands of two of her sisters, and sought to remove her body to the lot owned by himself and his co-heirs, the defendants, being the lot owners, refused permission, and on application for injunction to restrain their interference, it was held that he had never consented to her burial in the lot as a final resting place, and that the defendants might be required by a court of chancery to permit the removal. Chief Justice Gray said: Neither the husband nor the next of kin, have, strictly speaking, any right of property in a dead body; but controversies between them as to the place of its burial are, in this country where there are no ecclesiastical courts, within the jurisdiction of a court of equity; Weld v. Walker, 130 Mass. 423, 33 Am. Rep. 465; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759;

Where a widow ordered a funeral of her husband, it was held that she was liable for the expense, although she was an infant at the time, the court holding that the expenses fell under the head of necessities, for which infants' estates are liable; 13 M. & W. 252.

C. (N. Y.) 75, containing a list of law literature on this and kindred topics; notes to Moak's Eng. Rep. 656; CEMETERY; CREMATION; MEASURE OF DAMAGES; FUNERAL EXPENSES.

DEAD-BORN. A dead-born child is to be considered as if it had never been conceived or born; in other words, it is presumed it never had life, it being a maxim of the common law that mortuus exitus non est exitus (a dead birth is no birth). Co. Litt. 29 b. See Marsellis v. Thalhimier, 2 Paige, (Ch. (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66; 4 Ves. 334.

This is also the doctrine of the civil law, Dig. 50. 16. 129. Non nasci, et natum mori, paria sunt (not to be born, and to be born dead, are equivalent). La. Civ. Code, art. 28; Domat, liv. préf. t. 2, s. 1, nn. 4, 6.

DEAD FREIGHT. The amount paid by a charterer for that part of the vessel's capacity which he does not occupy although he has contracted for it.

When the charterer of a vessel has shipped part of the goods on board, and is not ready to ship the remainder, the master, unless restrained by his special contract, may take other goods on board, and the amount which is not supplied, required to complete the cargo, is considered dead freight. The dead freight is to be calculated according to the actual capacity of the vessel. 3 Chit. Com. Law 399; 2 Stark. 450; McCull. Com. Dic. See L. R. 6 Q. B. 528. See FREIGHT.

DEAD LETTER. Acts that have become obsolete by long disuse are often so called. See OBSOLETE.

DEAD LETTERS. Letters transmitted through the mails according to direction, and remaining for a specified time uncalled for by the persons addressed, are called dead letters.

DEAD MAN'S PART. That portion of the personal estate of a person deceased which by the custom of London became the administrator's.

If the decedent left wife and children, this was one-third of the residue after deducting the widow's chamber; if only a widow, or only children, it was one-half; 1 P. Wms. 341; Salk. 246; if neither widow nor children, it was the whole; 2 Show. 175. This provision was repealed by the statute 1 Jac.

II, c. 17, and the same made subject to the statute of distributions. 2 Bla. Com. 518. See CUSTOMS OF LONDON; LEGITIME.

DEAD'S PART. In Scotch Law. The part remaining over beyond the shares secured to the widow and children by law. Of this the testator had the unqualified disposal. Stair, Inst. lib. iii. tit. 4, § 24; Bell Dict.; Paterson, Comp. §§ 674, 848, 902. It obtained in the province of York till 1692. See LEGITIME.

DEAD-PLEDGE. A mortgage; mortuum vadum.

DEADLY WEAPON. See DANGEROUS WEAPON; ARMS.

DEAF AND DUMB. A person deaf and dumb is doli capax; but with such persons who have not been educated, and who cannot communicate their ideas in writing, a difficulty sometimes arises on the trial.

A case occurred of a woman deaf and dumb who was charged with a crime. She was brought to the bar, and the indictment was then read to her; and the question, in the usual form, was put, Guilty or not guilty? The counsel for the prisoner then rose, and stated that he could not allow his client to plead to the indictment until it was explained to her that she was at liberty to plead guilty or not guilty. This was attempted to be done, but was found impossible, and she was discharged from the bar simpliciter. Case of Jean Campbell, 1 Wh. & St. Med. Jur. § 468. When the party indicted is deaf and dumb, he may, if he understands the use of signs, be arraigned and the meaning of the clerk who addresses him conveyed to him by signs, and his signs in reply explained to the court, so as to justify his trial and the infliction of punishment; Com. v. Hill, 14 Mass. 207; 1 Leach 102; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 417. See State v. Harris, 53 N. C. 136, 78 Am. Dec. 272. It was formerly said that persons deaf and dumb were presumably idiots; 1 Hale, P. C. 34; but that doctrine was formulated at a period when the subject of the education of such unfortunate persons had received little or no attention. One deaf and dumb is not consequently insane, nor is he presumed to be an idiot; Alexier v. Matzke, 151 Mich. 36, 115 N. W. 251, 123 Am. St. Rep. 255, 14 Ann. Cas. 52; and his capacity appearing, he may be tried; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 395; the ordinary presumption of sound mind and criminal responsibility, as was said by Gilpin, C. J., in a case of homicide by a person so afflicted, "does not apply to a deaf and dumb person when charged with the commission of a crime. On the contrary, the legal presumption is then directly reversed; for in such case it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove to the satisfaction of the jury that the accused had capacity and reason sufficient to enable him to distinguish between right and wrong as to the act at the time when it was committed by him, and had a knowledge and consciousness that the act he was doing was wrong and criminal and would subject him to punishment; 1 Houst. Cr. Rep. 291. In that case the prisoner was acquitted "under circumstances wherein plainly they would not have done it if he had been endowed with hearing and speech;" 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 395.

A person deaf and dumb may be examined as a witness, provided he can be sworn; that is, if he is capable of understanding the terms of the oath, and assents to it, and if, after he is sworn, he can convey his ideas, with or without an interpreter, to the court and jury; Phill. Ev. 14. If he is able to communicate his ideas perfectly by writing, he will be required to adopt that as the more satisfactory method; but, if his knowledge of that method is imperfect, he will be permitted to testify by means of signs; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 366; Tayl. Ev. 1170.

Such person may execute a deed; 1 H. L. Cas. 724; Barnett v. Barnett, 54 N. C. 221; but it is said in an old case that he is prima facie unable to make a contract or deed; Brown v. Brown, 3 Conn. 209, 8 Am. Dec. 187; in Culley v. Jones, 164 Ind. 168, 73 N. E. 94, the question of capacity was left to the jury. See a note in 14 Ann. Cas. 52.

Where a defendant is deaf and dumb and cannot hear the testimony of the witnesses of the state, the presiding judge should permit some reasonable mode of having their evidence communicated to him; Ralph v. State, 124 Ga. 81, 52 S. E. 298, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 509; where it was said that in such case opportunity should be given for the communication to the defendant of the testimony, but the exact method of doing it must be left to the discretion of the court.

A deaf person was convicted of murder. Held due process of law; Felts v. Murphy, 201 U. S. 123, 26 Sup. Ct. 366, 50 L. Ed. 689.

DEAF, DUMB, AND BLIND. See IDIOT.

DEAFFOREST, DISAFFOREST. In Old English Law. To discharge from being forest. To free from forest laws.

DEALER. A dealer in the popular, and therefore in the statutory sense of the word, is not one who buys to keep, or makes to sell, but one who buys to sell again. Norris v. Com., 27 Pa. 494; Com. v. Campbell, 33 Pa. 385.

DEAN. An ecclesiastical officer, who derives his name from the fact that he presides over ten canons, or prebendaries, at least. He is addressed as Very Reverend.

There are several kinds of deans, namely: deans of chapters; deans of peculiars; rural deans; deans in the colleges; honorary deans; deans of provinces.

DEAN AND CHAPTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. The council of a bishop, to assist him with their advice in the religious and also in the temporal affairs of the see. 3 Co. 75;

1 Bla. Com. 382; Co. Litt. 103, 300; Termes de la Ley; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 120.

DEAN OF THE ARCHES. The presiding judge of the court of the arches. He was also an assistant judge in the court of admiralty. 1 Kent 371; 3 Steph. Com. 727. See DOCTORS COMMONS; COURT OF THE ARCHES.

DEATH. The cessation of life. The ceasing to exist.

Civil death is the state of a person who, though possessing natural life, has lost all his civil rights, and as to them, is considered as dead.

A person convicted and attainted of felony and sentenced to the state prison for life is, in the state of New York, in consequence of the act of 29th of March, 1799, and by virtue of the conviction and sentence of imprisonment for life, to be considered as civilly dead; Platner v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 118; Troup v. Wood, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 223, 260. And a similar doctrine anciently prevailed in other cases at common law in England. See Co. Litt. 133; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 132, n.

Natural death is the cessation of life.

It is also used to denote a death which occurs by the unassisted operation of natural causes, as distinguished from a violent death, or one caused or accelerated by the interference of human agency.

In Medical Jurisprudence. The cause, phenomena, and evidence of violent death are of importance.

An ingenious theory as to the cause of death has been brought forward by Philip, in his work on Sleep and Death, in which he claims that to the highest form of life three orders of functions are necessary,—viz.: the muscular, nervous, and sensorial; that of these the two former are independent of the latter, and continue in action for a while after its cessation; that they might thus continue always, but for the fact that they are dependent on the process of respiration; that this process is a voluntary act, depending upon the will, and that this latter is embraced in the sensorial function. In this view, death is the suspension or removal of the sensorial function, and that leads to the suspension of the others through the cessation of respiration. Philip, Sleep & D.; Dean, Med. Jur. 413 et seq.

Its phenomena, or signs and indications. Real is distinguishable from apparent death by the absence of the heart-beats and respiration. These conditions are, however, not always easy to determine positively when the following tests may be applied:—1. Temperature of body the same as the surrounding air. 2. Intermittent shocks of electricity at different tensions give no indications of muscular irritability. 3. Movements of the joints of the extremities and of the jaw showing more or less rigor-mortis. 4. A bright needle plunged into the muscles and left there showing no signs of oxidation on withdrawal (Cloquet's test). 5. The opening of a vein showing that the blood vessels are empty, or that in the veins of dependent parts of the body the blood has coagulated. 6. The subcutaneous injection of ammonia causing a dirty brown stain (Monte Verde's test). 7. A fillet applied to the arm causing no filling of the veins on the distal side of the fillet (Richardson's test). 8. "Diaphanous test"; after death there is an absence of the translucence seen in the living when the hand is held before a strong light with the fingers extended and in contact. 9. "Eye test"; after death there is loss of pupillary reaction to light and to mydriatics, and there is also loss of corneal transparency; H. P. Loomis in Witthaus & Becker, Med. Jur.

Its evidence when produced by violence. This involves the inquiry as to the cause of death in all cases of the finding of bodies divested of life through unknown agencies. It seeks to gather all the evidence that can be furnished by the body and surrounding circumstances bearing upon this difficult and at best doubtful subject. It more immediately concerns the duties of the coroner, but is liable to come up subsequently for a more thorough and searching investigation. As this is a subject of great, general, and growing interest, no apology is deemed necessary for presenting briefly some of the points to which inquiry should be directed, together with a reference to authorities where the doctrines are more thoroughly discussed.

The first point for determination is, whether the death was the act of God or the result of violence. Sudden death is generally produced by a powerful invasion of the living forces that develop themselves in the heart, brain, or lungs—the first being called syncope, the second apoplexy, and the third asphyxia. Dean, Med. Jur. 426.

The last two are the most important to be understood in connection with the subject of persons found dead.

In death from apoplexy, the sudden invasion of the brain by effused blood destroys innervation, by which the circulation is arrested. Death from apoplexy is disclosed by the appearances revealed by dissection, particularly in the brain.

Death by asphyxia is still more important to be understood. It is limited to cases where the heart's action is made to cease through the interruption of the respiration. It is accomplished by all the possible modes of excluding atmospheric air from the lungs. The appearances in the body indicating death from asphyxia are, violet discolorations, eyes prominent, firm, and brilliant, cadaveric rigidity early and well marked, venous system of the brain full of blood, lungs distended with thick dark-colored blood, liver, spleen, and kidneys gorged, right cavities of the heart distended, left almost empty.

Many indications as to whether the death is the act of God or the result of violence may be gathered from the position and circumstances in which the body is found. As thorough an examination as possible should be first made of the body before changing its position or that of any of the limbs, or varying in any respect its relations with surrounding bodies. This is more necessary if the death has been apparently caused by wounds. Then the wounds require a special examination before any change is made in position, in order from their nature, character, form, and appearance to determine the instrument by which they were inflicted, and also their agency in causing the death. Their relations with external objects may indicate the direction from which they were dealt, and, if incised, their extent, depth, vessels severed, and hemorrhage produced may be conclusive as to the cause of death.

A thorough examination should be made of the clothes worn by the deceased, and any parts torn or presenting any unusual appearance should be carefully noted. A list should be made of all articles found on the body, and of their state and condition. The body itself should undergo a very careful examination. This should have reference to the color of the skin, the temperature of the body, the existence and extent of the cadaveric rigidity of the muscular system, the state of the eyes and of the sphincter muscles, noting at the same time whatever swellings, ecchymoses, or livid, black, or yellow spots, wounds, ulcers, contusions, fractures, or luxations, may be present. The fluids that have exuded from the nose, mouth, ears, sexual organs, etc., should be carefully examined: and when the deceased is a female, it will be proper to examine the sexual organs with care, with a view of ascertaining whether before death the crime of rape had or had not been committed.

Another point to which the attention should be directed is, the state of the body in reference to the extent and amount of decomposition that may have taken place in it, with the view of determining when the death took place. This is sometimes important to identify the murderer. The period after death at which putrefaction supervenes became a subject of judicial examination in Desha's case, reported in Dean, Med. Jur. 423 et seq., and more fully in 2 Beck, Med. Jur. 44 et seq. Another interesting inquiry, where persons are found drowned, is presented in the inquiry as to the existence of adipocere, a compound of a yellowish-white color, consisting of calcareous or ammoniacal soap, which is formed in bodies immersed in water in from eight weeks to three years from the cessation of life. Tayl. Med. Jur., Hartsh. ed. 542; 1 Ham. Leg. Med. 104.

Another point towards which it is proper to direct examination regards the situation and condition of the place where the body is found, with the view of determining two facts: First, whether it be a case of homicide, suicide, or visitation of God; and second, whether, if one of homicide, the murder occurred there or at some other place, the body having been brought there and left. The points to be noted here are whether the ground appears to have been disturbed from its natural condition; whether there are any, and what, indications of a struggle; whether there are any marks of footsteps, and, if any, their size, number, the direction to which they lead, and whence they came; whether any traces of blood or hair can be found; and whether any, or what, instruments or weapons, which could have caused death, are found in the vicinity; and all such instruments should be carefully preserved, so that they may be identified. Dean, Med. Jur. 257; 2 Beck, Med. Jur. 107, nn. 136, 250.

As the decision of the question relating to the cause of death is often important and difficult to determine, it may be proper to notice some of its signs and indications in a few of the most prominent cases where it is induced by violence.

Death by drowning is caused by asphyxia from suffocation, by nervous or syncopal asphyxia, or by asphyxia from cerebral congestion.

In the first, besides other indications of asphyxia, the face is pale or violet, a frothy foam at the mouth, froth in the larynx, trachea, and bronchi, water in the trachea and, sometimes, in the ramifications of the bronchi, and also in the stomach. In the second, the face and skin are pale, the trachea empty, lungs and brain natural, no water in the stomach. In the third, the usual indications of death by apoplexy are found on examination of the brain. See 1 Ham. Leg. Med. 120.

Death by hanging is produced by asphyxia, suspending respiration by compressing the larynx, by apoplexy, pressing upon the veins and preventing the return of blood from the head, by fracture of the cervical vertebræ, laceration of trachea or larynx, or rupture of the ligaments of the neck, or by compressing the nerves of the neck. The signs and indications depend upon the cause of death. Among these are, face livid and swollen, lips distorted, eyelids swollen, eyes red and projecting, tongue enlarged, livid, compressed, froth about the lips and nostrils, a deep ecchymosed mark of the cord about the neck, sometimes ecchymosed patches on different parts of the body, fingers contracted or clenched.

Death by strangulation presents much the same appearances, the mark of the cord being lower down on the neck, more horizontal, and plainer and more distinctly ecchymosed.

Death by cold leaves few traces in the system. Pale surface, general congestion of internal organs, sometimes effused serum in the ventricles of the brain.

Death by burning may show the usual signs consequent upon exposure to great heat, redness, blistering, charring. The unaffected part of the body is usually pale. The extent of the body surface burnt, not the degree of burning, determines death.

Death by lightning usually exhibits a contused or lacerated wound where the electric fluid entered and passed out. Sometimes an extensive ecchymosis appears.

Death by starvation produces general emaciation; eyes and cheeks sunken; bones projecting; face pale and ghastly; eyes red and open; skin, mouth, and fauces dry; stomach and intestines empty; gall-bladder large and distended; body exhaling a fetid odor; heart, lungs, and large vessels collapsed; early commencement of the putrefactive process.

These and all other questions relating to persons found dead will be found fully discussed in works on medical jurisprudence.

The Legal Consequences. Persons who have been once shown to have been in life are always presumed thus to continue until the contrary is shown; so that the burden is on the party asserting the death to make proof of it; 2 East 312; 2 Rolle 461. But proof of a long continued absence unheard from and unexplained will lay a foundation for a presumption of death; Butrick v. Tilton, 155 Mass. 461, 29 N. E. 1088; Bank of Louisville v. Board of Trustees of Public Schools, 83 Ky. 219, 5 S. W. 735. Various periods of time are found in the adjudged cases to warrant such presumption. It was held to arise after twenty-seven years; 3 Bro. C. C. 510; twenty years, sixteen years; 5 Ves. 458; Marden v. Boston, 155 Mass. 359, 29 N. E. 588; fourteen years; Miller v. Beates, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 490, 8 Am. Dec. 651; twelve years; King v. Paddock, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; eleven years; Baden v. McKenny, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 268. The general rule, as now understood, is that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when the person was last known to be living; and after the lapse of that period there is a presumption of death; Smith v. Knowlton, 11 N. H. 197; Clarke's Ex'rs v. Canfield, 15 N. J. Eq. 119; Eagle v. Emmet, 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 117; Chamb. Best Ev. 304, note, collecting the cases; Francis v. Francis, 180 Pa. 644, 37 Atl. 120, 57 Am. St. Rep. 668; 4 U. C. Q. B. 510; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 41; 5 B. & Ad. 86; Henderson v. Bonar, 11 S. W. 809, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 219; French v. McGinnis, 69 Tex. 19, 9 S. W. 323. In most of the states the subject is regulated by statute. It is held also that there must be diligent inquiry among those who would probably hear from such absentee, to raise this presumption; Modern Woodmen of America v. Gerdorn, 72 Kan. 391, 82 Pac. 1100, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809; Wentworth v. Wentworth, 71 Me. 74; In re Morrison's Estate, 183 Pa. 155, 38 Atl. 895; In re Board of Education of N. Y., 173 N. Y. 321, 66 N. E. 11. See Modern Woodmen of America v. Gerdorn, 72 Kan. 391, 82 Pac. 1100, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, and cases cited. In In re Freeman's Estate, 18 Pa. Dist. R. 194, it was said that a presumption of death in consonance with the English rule arises at the end of an unexplained absence of seven years, but contrary to the English rule, a counter-presumption also arises of a continuance of life during and up to the very end of that period, subject to be modified by proof of the presence of imminent peril which menaced the life of the absent one and probably terminated it within the period.

There are cases, however, where a presumption of death may be raised from even a shorter absence; Waite v. Coaracy, 45 Minn. 159, 47 N. W. 537; Cambrelleng v. Purton, 125 N. Y. 610, 26 N. E. 907; Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 662, 46 L. Ed. 922; and while seven years is the period in which the presumption of continued life ceases, yet this period may be shortened by proof of such facts and circumstances as, submitted to the test of experience, would produce a conviction of death within a shorter period; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 71 Fed. 258, 18 C. C. A. 107; Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 628, 24 L. Ed. 1086; Hyde Park v. Canton, 130 Mass. 505; Cox v. Ellsworth, 18 Neb. 664, 26 N. W. 460, 53 Am. Rep. 827.

Though there is controversy on the point, the better opinion is that there is no presumption as to the time of death; Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 628, 24 L. Ed. 1086; Chamb. Best Ev. 305; 2 Brett, Com. 941; 2 M. & W. 894; and the onus is on the person whose case requires proof of death at a particular period; Howard v. State, 75 Ala. 27; Whiteley v. Assurance Society, 72 Wis. 170, 39 N. W. 369; Spencer v. Roper, 35 N. C. 333; 8 U. C. Q. B. 291. It seems that such continued absence for seven years from the particular state of his residence, without showing an absence from the U. S., is sufficient; Newman v. Jenkins, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 515; Iunis v. Campbell, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 373; Spurr v. Trimble, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 278; Wambaugh v. Schenk, 2 N. J. L. 229; Woods v. Woods' Adm'rs, 2 Bay (S. C.) 476; and to establish the presumption of death, the last known place of residence is the place to look for the person; Morrison's Estate, 183 Pa. 155, 38 Atl. 895; but the statutory presumption of the death of a person will not be received until all reasonable doubt of his death, at a given time, is removed; Smith v. Combs, 49 N. J. Eq. 420, 24 Atl. 9. There are cases, however, in which an absence of seven years will not raise a presumption of death without issue, as where it is probable that the failure to communicate with friends is intentional; In re Taylor, 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 960; Doe v. Stockley, 6 Houst. (Del.) 447, where the court refused to instruct the jury that there was a presumption of the death of an entire family after an absence of forty-five or fifty years. And the statutory presumption of death after seven years does not apply to children of tender years incapable of voluntary absence or concealment; Manley v. Pattison, 73 Miss. 417, 19 South. 236, 55 Am. St. Rep. 543. As to this presumption generally, see 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 512.

The common-law presumption of death after a lapse of years is not sufficient in a criminal prosecution to prove that the wife was unmarried; People v. Weinstock, 140 N. Y. Supp. 453. See ESCHEAT; ABSENTEE, as to the power of the legislature to provide for the administration of estates of persons absent and presumed to be dead.

The record of the probate of a will is not competent evidence of death except where all parties to a subsequent action were also parties before the surrogate; Carroll v. Carroll, 60 N. Y. 121, 19 Am. Rep. 144, and note. But it is held that where a foreign court of competent jurisdiction has made a grant of administration on the presumption of death, such grant may be accepted by the court of probate as sufficient proof; [1892] Prob. 255.

Letters of administration were held to be evidence of death; Ruoff v. Bank, 40 Misc. 549, 82 N. Y. Supp. 881; Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Timm, 93 Ind. 158. So is a certificate of the register of births and deaths; Succession of Jones, 12 La. Ann. 397.

A letter contained in an envelope requesting a return to the writer, if not called for, and showing the post office stamp that it had been returned to the writer, is admissible as affording ground for an inference, more or less strong, of the death of the addressee; Hurlburt v. Hurlburt's Estate, 63 Vt. 667, 22 Atl. 850.

Questions of difficulty have arisen where several persons, respectively entitled to inherit from one another, happen to perish all together by the same event, such as a shipwreck, a battle, or a conflagration, without any possibility of ascertaining who died first. In such cases the French civil code and the civil code of Louisiana lay down rules (the latter copying from the former) which are deduced from the probabilities resulting from the strength, age, and difference of sex of the parties.

If those thus perishing together were under fifteen, the eldest shall be presumed the survivor. If they were all above sixty, the youngest shall be presumed the survivor. If some were under fifteen and others above sixty, the former shall be presumed the survivors. If those who have perished together had completed the age of fifteen and were under sixty, the male shall be presumed the survivor where the ages are equal or the difference does not exceed one year. If they were of the same sex, that presumption shall be admitted which opens the succession in the order of nature; and thus the younger must be presumed to have survived the elder. French Civ. Code, arts. 720-722; La. Civ. Code, arts. 930-933; Hollister v. Cordero, 76 Cal. 649, 18 Pac. 855.

The English common law has never adopted these provisions, or gone into the refinement of reasoning upon which they are based. It requires the survivorship to be proved by facts, and not by any settled legal rule or prescribed presumption. In some of the cases that have arisen involving this bare question of survivorship, the court have advised a compromise, denying that there was any legal principle upon which it could be decided. In others, the decision has been that they all died together, and that none could transmit rights to others; 1 W. Bl. 640; Fearne, Posth. Works 38, 39; 2 Phill. 261; Cro. Eliz. 503; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 748; 5 B. & Ad. 91; 1 Y. & C. Ch. 121; Russell v. Hallett, 23 Kan. 276; Stinde v. Goodrich, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 87; [1892] Prob. 142; Ash v. Hare, 73 Me. 403; that is, the one who bears the burden of proof of survivorship falls in his case; Newell v. Nichols, 75 N. Y. 78, 31 Am. Rep. 424; Russell v. Hallett, 23 Kan. 276. Where a mother and daughter die in the same year, but there is no evidence of the precise date of the death of the mother, an assumption that she died before the daughter is not warranted; Cook v. Caswell, 81 Tex. 678, 17 S. W. 385. Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances, whenever the evidence is sufficient to support a finding as to survivorship; Estate of Ehle, 73 Wis. 445, 41 N. W. 627.

As to contracts. These are, in general, not affected by the death of either party. The executors or administrators of the decedent are required to fulfil all his engagements, and may enforce all those in his favor. But to this rule there are the following exceptions, in which the contracts are terminated by the death of one of the parties:—

The contract of marriage. See MARRIAGE.

The contract of partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

Those contracts which are altogether personal: as, where the deceased has agreed to accompany the other party to the contract on a journey, or to serve another; Pothier, Obl. c. 7, art. 3, §§ 2, 3; Howe Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Rosensteel, 24 Fed. 583; Lacy v. Getman, 119 N. Y. 109, 23 N. E. 452, 6 L. R. A. 728, 16 Am. St. Rep. 806; or to instruct an apprentice; Bacon, Abr. Executor, P; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law 82; Ans. Contr. 325; Shields v. Owens, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 61; also an instance of this species of contract in 2 B. & Ad. 303. In all those cases where one is acting for another and by his authority, such as agencies and powers of attorney, where the agency or power is not coupled with an interest, the death of the party ordinarily works a revocation; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Mohr, 83 Pa. 228, 24 Am. Rep. 161. Where the power is to transfer stock, signed by the seller of the stock, it is not revoked by his death; Fish- er v. Coal Co., 31 W. N. C. (Pa.) 502. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

The continued existence of both parties for the stipulated term is the basis of a contract; and on the death of a master no action will lie against the administrator for refusing to continue a contract of employment; Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578; Lacy v. Getman, 119 N. Y. 109, 23 N. E. 452, 6 L. R. A. 728, 16 Am. St. Rep. 806; L. R. 4 C. P. 744; Burdett v. Yale, 6 Allen (Mass.) 125; Harris v. Johnson, 98 Ga. 434, 25 S. E. 525; Babcock v. Goodrich, 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 52. But in Harrison v. Conlan, 10 Allen (Mass.) 85, the pastor of a church employed an organist to play for three months for $50. The employer died and the organist did not play thereafter, though ready to do so. It was held in an action against the personal representatives of the pastor that the obligation to pay was not discharged by his death, but that the organist could recover only pro rata compensation for the portion of the three months during which he had played. Where a landowner hired another for a specified term to raise crops, the contract was held not to end with the employer's death, but to be binding on his personal representatives, if the employment was continued; though most of the services were rendered after the employer's death, the employee was entitled to recover his compensation: Pugh v. Baker, 127 N. C. 2, 37 S. E. 82. In Mendenhall v. Davis, 52 Wash. 169, 100 Pac. 336, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 17 Ann. Cas. 179, a buyer paid cash and notes for the implements and good will of the seller's dentistry business and for the seller's agreement to render for a specified time personal service in that business; the seller died before the expiration of the period and the buyer was held to have a right to counterclaim against his liability on the notes the damages he had suffered by failure to receive the services.

As to torts. In general, when the tortfeasor or the party injured dies, the cause of action dies with him; but when the deceased might have waived the tort and maintained assumpsit against the defendant, his personal representative may do the same thing. See ACTIO PERSONALIS MORITUR CUM PERSONA, where this subject is more fully examined. As to the right of action for death by wrongful act, see infra.

As to crimes. When a person accused of crime dies before trial, no proceedings can be had against his representatives or his estate.

As to inheritance. By the death of a person seised of real estate or possessed of personal property, his property real and personal, after satisfying his debts, vests, when he has made a will, as he has directed by that instrument; but if he dies intestate, his real estate goes to his heirs at law under the statute of descents, and his personal to his administrators, to be distributed to the next of kin, under the statute of distributions.

In suits. At common law an original suit abated by reason of the death of the plaintiff; 6 Wait, Act. & Def. 400; Torry v. Robertson, 24 Miss. 192; but in most of the states and England it is otherwise, and the personal representatives may become parties and prosecute the suit; Wms. Ex., 7th Am. ed. pt. ii. b. iii. ch. 4, and American note thereto, pp. 91, 99. The English practice and rules under the procedure acts will be found in the chapter of Williams on Executors above cited and a reference to the American statutes in the note thereto. In case of the death of a plaintiff the usual practice is to make a suggestion of it to the court which is entered of record; and in case of the death of a defendant his executor or administrator may be made a party, either by scire facias, or motion for an order of revivor, or other proceeding for giving due notice to the representative, according to the varying practice of the several states. See ABATEMENT.

As to the death of one of the parties in a divorce suit, see DIVORCE.

The death of a defendant will discharge the special bail; Tidd, Pr. 243; but when he dies after the return of the ca. sa. and before it is filed, the bail are fixed; 6 Term 284; Boggs v. Teackle, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 332; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 485; Davidson v. Taylor, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 604, 6 L. Ed. 743; Olcott v. Lilly, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 407; Goodwin v. Smith, 4 N. H. 29.

At common law there was no right of action for death by wrongful act; Green v. R. Co., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Major v. Ry. Co., 115 Ia. 309, 88 N. W. 815; Duncan v. St. Luke's Hospital, 113 App. Div. 68, 98 N. Y. Supp. 867.

Lord Ellenborough, in Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493, held that "in a civil court the death of a human being cannot be complained of as an injury." Homicide is always a purely criminal matter. In the early English law it was regarded more as a civil than a criminal offence, and damages were paid to the family of the decedent known as wergilds. As, during the continuance of this custom, a process for the recovery of the wergilds was certainly given, it seems that when these offences grew no longer redeemable, the private process was still continued, in order to secure the infliction of punishment upon the offender, though the party injured was allowed no pecuniary compensation; Jac. L. Dict. tit. Appeal. This process was known as an appeal of murder, and was permitted by statute to co-exist with the criminal action. The defendant, if found guilty did not pay any damages to the plaintiff, but was punished as in a criminal case. The real advantage to the plaintiff lay in the fact that he could release his rights, and that such releases were frequently of great pecuniary value; 7 Harv. L. Rev. 170. This appeal for murder existed as late as 1818 in the case of Ashford v. Thornton, 1 B. & Ald. 405, where the court held that the appellor had a right to bring the case by writ of appeal, but that the appellee had an equal right to his plea of wager of battel. The appellor declined to accept the decision of the court giving the appellee trial by battel and the latter was discharged. This led to the enactment of a statute the next year abolishing appeal of murder, treason, etc., as well as wager of battel (59 Geo. III. ch. 46). Until 1846 there was no civil remedy. In that year Lord Campbell's Act was passed (9 & 10 Vict. ch. 93), known as the Fatal Accidents Act, allowing a recovery for death caused by negligence or wrongful act. See APPEAL.

In the United States, like statutes have been passed modelled on this act. They differ principally in respect of the person who may bring the action. Their purpose is to provide the means for recovering damages caused by that which is essentially and in its nature a tort. Such statutes are not penal but remedial—for the benefit of the persons injured by the death.

An action to recover damages for a tort is not local, but transitory, and can, as a general rule, be maintained wherever the wrongdoer can be found; Stewart v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 448, 18 Sup. Ct. 105, 42 L. Ed. 537. It may well be that, where a purely statutory right is created, the special remedy provided by the statute for the enforcement of that right must be pursued, but where the statute simply takes away a common-law obstacle to a recovery for what is admitted to be a tort, it would seem not unreasonable to hold that an action for that tort can be maintained where the statute of the state in which the cause of action arose is not in substance inconsistent with the statutes or public policy of the state in which the right of action is sought to be enforced; Stewart v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 445, 18 Sup. Ct. 105, 42 L. Ed. 537, citing Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 12 Sup. Ct. 905, 36 L. Ed. 829; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 14 Sup. Ct. 978, 38 L. Ed. 958.

Where the negligence which causes the accident occurs in one state or country, and the accident itself in another, it is the law of the latter place that governs; Rundell v. La Compagnie Gén. Trans., 100 Fed. 655, 40 C. C. A. 625, 49 L. R. A. 92 (in admiralty). It is held that a new action is created for the benefit of the persons named in the statute, and not a continuation of a right of action belonging to decedent before his death; In re Mayo's Estate, 60 S. C. 401, 38 S. E. 634, 54 L. R. A. 660. So a cause of action for personal injuries which survives is held distinct from a cause of action in favor of surviving relatives; Brown v. R. Co., 102 Wis. 137, 77 N. W. 748, 78 N. W. 771, 44 L. R. A. 579; Lubrano v. Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 32 Atl. 205, 34 L. R. A. 797; the two actions, though prosecuted by the same personal representative, are not in the same right, and a recovery in one is not a bar to a recovery in the other; Mahoning Valley R. Co. v. Van Alstine, 77 Ohio St. 395, 83 N. E. 601, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 893. That there is but one ground of liability, the wrongful act, and as all claims for damages grow out of the one wrong, it is unreasonable to say that the legislature intended there should be two causes of action based upon it, was held in Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131. In Brown v. R. Co., 102 Wis. 137, 77 N. W. 748, 78 N. W. 771, 44 L. R. A. 579, it is said of that case: "True, in the circumstances named, there is but one wrongful act, but that is not the sole ground of action in the right of the deceased or the survivor. It takes the wrongful act and the loss to make the complete cause of action, and as the loss to the person upon whom the injury is inflicted must be recovered by or in his right, and the loss to the surviving relatives by or in their right, the causes of action are clearly distinct." "If several persons are made to suffer pecuniary loss by one wrongful act, each may very properly have his independent cause of action and remedy for the loss resulting to him, and, generally, in order to do complete justice, in the absence of some provision for a recovery for the benefit of all and a distribution of the proceeds, separate causes of action must necessarily exist."

The principles on which the decedent's cause of action rested at common law are the same irrespective of the cause of his death. It died with him, but is revived by the statute in favor of his administrator. It includes nothing more than the intestate's cause of action. That act simply revives but does not enlarge the common-law right of the decedent. The provision for surviving relatives introduced principles wholly unknown to the common law, namely, that the value of a man's life to his wife and next of kin constitute part of his estate; Needham v. R. Co., 38 Vt. 294, where it is said that the damages to the widow and next of kin begin where the damage to the intestate ended—with his death. In Clare v. R. Co., 172 Mass. 211, 51 N. E. 1083, it was held that a judgment in an action by an administrator for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff's intestate, and not for his death, is not a bar to the prosecution of an action for damages for his death. But it was further held that where one has both a common-law and a statutory right of action for injuries, and has elected to pursue the statutory remedy, an action on the other is barred; and while the right to maintain the statutory action for death is recognized, yet where damages have already been recovered under the common-law remedy, the statutory right is barred.

It has been held that where the death is instantaneous an action cannot be maintained under the survival statutes; Sweetland v. R. Co., 117 Mich. 329, 75 N. W. 1066, 43 L. R. A. 568; and where the decedent survived the injury about twelve hours, it was held by a divided court that a judgment based on the death act could not be sustained, as that act could apply only to cases where the death was instantaneous, and that in other cases the action must be based on what was termed the survival act; Dolson v. R. Co., 128 Mich. 444, 87 N. W. 629; Belding v. R. Co., 3 S. D. 369, 53 N. W. 750; Sawyer v. Perry, 88 Me. 42, 33 Atl. 660.

Where the plaintiff's husband released the defendant from liability for personal injuries received by her such a release was held a bar to a recovery, when five years later such injuries resulted in her death, on the ground that the wife was privy to the husband, and therefore estopped by his release; and that payment, like pardon, relates back to the original act; Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Cassin, 111 Ga. 575, 36 S. E. 881, 50 L. R. A. 694.

Collateral relations must show that they suffered pecuniary loss in order to permit a recovery of more than nominal damages; Anderson v. R. Co., 35 Neb. 95, 52 N. W. 840; Paulmier v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 151; In re California Nav. & Imp. Co., 110 Fed. 670; Burk v. R. Co., 125 Cal. 364, 57 Pac. 1065, 73 Am. St. Rep. 52; Serensen v. R. Co., 45 Fed. 407; or reasonable expectation thereof; Thomas v. R. Co., 6 Civ. Proc. R. (N. Y.) 353; The O. L. Hallenbeck, 119 Fed. 468. The amount the deceased would probably have added to his estate has been adopted as the measure of recovery; Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. v. Woolridge, 174 Ill. 330, 51 N. E. 701; and probabilities, not possibilities, of benefits; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Drumm, 32 Ind. App. 547, 70 N. E. 286.

The loss of parental care will not be considered in awarding damages; McCabe v. Lighting Co., 27 R. I. 272, 61 Atl. 667; contra, Anthony Ittner Brick Co. v. Ashby, 198 Ill. 562, 64 N. E. 1109. As to whether the pain and suffering of the deceased or the grief and wounded feelings of his surviving relatives will be considered in the estimate of damages, see MENTAL SUFFERING.

The mother of an illegitimate child cannot recover; McDonald v. R. Co., 71 S. C. 352, 51 S. E. 138, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640, 110 Am. St. Rep. 576; where the statute gives the right to the mother and other specified relatives; Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 78 Miss. 209, 28 South. 853, 51 L. R. A. 836, 84 Am. St. Rep. 624; Marshall v. R. Co., 46

Fed. 269; although by statute, an illegitimate child and his mother may inherit from each other; Harkins v. R. Co., 15 Phila. (Pa.) 286. These cases follow the English rule, which denies the right of action on the ground that "child" in an act of parliament always applies exclusively to a legitimate child; 2 Hurlst. & C. 735.

On the other hand, where the statute allowed an illegitimate child and its mother to inherit from each other, the mother should be permitted to recover; Marshall v. R. Co., 120 Mo. 275, 25 S. W. 179; so also where the statute gave the right of recovery to the widow and next of kin; Security Title & Trust Co. v. R. R. Co., 91 Ill. App. 332.

When the legislature has created a right of action for wrongful death for the benefit of the next of kin, and has declared that the father, if living, is the next of kin of minor children who leave neither widow nor children, an action for the death of such child must be for the sole benefit of the father, although he has deserted his family, to whose support the deceased child was at the time of his death contributing; Swift & Co. v. Johnson, 138 Fed. 867, 71 C. C. A. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161; Pineo v. R. Co., 99 N. Y. 644, affirming 34 Hun (N. Y.) 80. It is said, however that he may have only nominal damages in such case; Cook v. Gunpowder Co., 70 N. J. L. 65, 56 Atl. 114; and his right to recover at all is denied in Southern R. Co. v. Flemister, 120 Ga. 524, 48 S. E. 160.

At common law, neither husband nor wife may recover damages for the negligent killing of the other where death is instantaneous, either for loss of services or consortium; Armstrong v. Beadle, Fed. Cas. No. 541; Howell v. Board of Com'rs, 121 N. C. 362, 28 S. E. 362; Johnson v. Electric Co., 39 Wash. 211, 81 Pac. 705; Wyatt v. Williams, 43 N. H. 102; Grosso v. R. Co., 50 N. J. L. 317, 13 Atl. 233; Womack v. Banking Co., 80 Ga. 132, 5 S. E. 63; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 7 Sup. Ct. 140, 30 L. Ed. 358; Mowry v. Chaney, 43 Ia. 609; Sherlag v. Kelley, 200 Mass. 232, 86 N. E. 293, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633, 128 Am. St. Rep. 414; Green v. R. Co., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, where it is said no action for loss of service can be sustained in case of instantaneous death, because there is no time during her life when it can be said that the husband has lost the society and service of his wife in consequence of the injury complained of. Recovery can be had if death is not instantaneous; Eden v. R. Co., 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 204; Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Green v. R. Co., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. See McMillan v. Lumber Co., 115 Wis. 332, 91 N. W. 979, 60 L. R. A. 589, 95 Am. St. Rep. 947. In Ohio the action can be maintained in the courts of that state only when the deceased was an Ohio citizen; Baltimore & O. R. Co.

v. Chambers, 73 Ohio St. 16, 76 N. E. 91, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1012, affirmed in Chambers v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 142, 28 Sup. Ct. 34, 52 L. Ed. 143, where it was held that the plaintiff was not denied access to the Ohio courts because she was not a citizen of that state, but because her cause of action was not cognizable in those courts.

Generally, under the statutes, the remedy is open to non-residents; In re Mayo's Estate, 60 S. C. 401, 38 S. E. 634, 54 L. R. A. 660. Non-resident aliens are within the operation of such statute permitting the father, mother, widow or next of kin of one killed by another's negligence (or the personal representatives of the deceased, for their benefit) to maintain an action, although the statute does not expressly declare that they shall be entitled to its benefit; Rietveld v. R. Co., 129 Ia. 249, 105 N. W. 515; Trotta's Adm'r v. Johnson, 121 Ky. 827, 90 S. W. 540, 12 Ann. Cas. 222; Masciulli v. Union Carbide Co., 151 Mich. 693, 115 N. W. 721; Kellyville Coal Co. v. Petraytis, 195 Ill. 215, 63 N. E. 94, 88 Am. St. Rep. 191; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fajardo, 74 Kan. 314, 86 Pac. 301, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681; Ferrara v. Contract Co., 51 Wash. 119, 98 Pac. 93, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1089. The courts of Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Indiana denied this right; Deni v. R. Co., 181 Pa. 525, 37 Atl. 558, 59 Am. St. Rep. 676; Maforano v. R. Co., 216 Pa. 402, 65 Atl. 1077, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 271, 116 Am. St. Rep. 778; affirmed in 213 U. S. 268, 29 Sup. Ct. 424, 53 L. Ed. 792; McMillan v. Lumber Co., 115 Wis. 332, 91 N. W. 979, 60 L. R. A. 589, 95 Am. St. Rep. 947; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Osgood (Ind.) 70 N. E. 839. The federal courts sitting in Pennsylvania followed the Pennsylvania courts; Zeiger v. R. Co., 151 Fed. 348, affirmed in 158 Fed. 809, 86 C. C. A. 69. In Brannigan v. Mining Co., 93 Fed. 164, the United States circuit court for Colorado followed the Pennsylvania decisions in construing the Colorado statute.

In England, too, the rulings have been conflicting. It was held that Lord Campbell's Act does not give a right of action for the benefit of a non-resident alien; [1898] 2 Q. B. 430; but a later case disapproved this ruling and a right of recovery on behalf of a non-resident alien widow was sustained; [1901] 2 K. B. 606.

It was sought in Malorano v. R. Co., 216 Pa. 402, 65 Atl. 1077, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 271, 116 Am. St. Rep. 778, to overrule the earlier Pennsylvania decisions by contending that the plaintiff was protected by the existing treaty between the United States and Italy providing that citizens of Italy shall enjoy in states of the Union in the protection and security of their persons and property the same rights which are enjoyed by citizens of the United States. But it was held that such a treaty conferred such rights only upon those citizens of Italy who bring their persons or property within the jurisdiction of the United States; that the plaintiff in this case, being a citizen and resident of Italy, could not recover damages for her husband's death. This was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court; 213 U. S. 268, 29 Sup. Ct. 424, 53 L. Ed. 792.

In New York it was held that since in Pennsylvania no right of action for wrongful death existed in favor of non-resident aliens, upon the principles of comity non-residents could not maintain an action in New York and recover for the death of a person in Pennsylvania; Gurofsky v. R. Co., 121 App. Div. 126, 105 N. Y. Supp. 514.

By a treaty between United States and Italy of 1913, non-resident aliens are given a right of action for injury or death caused by negligence or fault, and they enjoy the same rights as are granted to United States citizens, under like conditions.

It was held in The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 7 Sup. Ct. 140, 30 L. Ed. 358, that no damages can be recovered in admiralty for the death by negligence of a human being on the high seas, or on waters navigable from the seas, in the absence of an act of congress or a state statute. The maritime law, of this country, at least, gives no such right; Butler v. Steamship Co., 130 U. S. 555, 9 Sup. Ct. 612, 32 L. Ed. 1017. It was held that where the law of a state to which a vessel belonged (the law of the domicile or flag) gives a right of action for wrongful death if such death occurred on the high seas, such right of action will be enforced in admiralty as a claim against the fund arising in a proceeding to limit liability; The Hamilton, 207 U. S. 398, 28 Sup. Ct. 133, 52 L. Ed. 264. In La Bourgogne, 210 U. S. 95, 28 Sup. Ct. 664, 52 L. Ed. 973, it was held that the law of France, which authorizes recovery for loss of life against a vessel in fault, will be enforced by the courts of the United States in a proceeding to limit liability for claims against a French vessel found to be in fault for a collision in a fog on the high seas, although the French courts, in applying to the facts found the international rule as to the speed of vessels in a fog, had held such vessel not to be in fault. See 21 Harv. L. Rev. 1, as to the enforcement of a right of action acquired under foreign law for death upon the high seas.

DEATH-BED DEED. A deed made by one who was at the time sick of a disease from which he afterwards died. Bell, Dict.

DEATH DUTIES. Used in England to designate inheritance taxes. See TAX.

DEATH'S PART. See DEAD'S PART; DEAD MAN'S PART.

DEATH WARRANT. See EXECUTION.

DEBAUCH. To corrupt one's manners, to make lewd, to mar or spoil; to seduce and vitiate a woman. Koenig v. Nott, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 329.

In an action for damages for crim. con., the allegation being that defendant seduced and debauched the plaintiff's wife, whereby her affections were alienated, etc., if the charge of adultery be not proved, the word debauch in the petition will not support a verdict for damages for alienation of affection; Wood v. Mathews, 47 Ia. 409.

It is a word of French origin which has come into use in our language in the sense of enticing and corrupting.

DEBENTURE (from debentur mihi, Lat., with which various old forms of acknowledgments of debt commenced). A certificate given in pursuance of law, by the collector of a port of entry, for a certain sum due by the United States, payable at a time therein mentioned, to an importer for drawback of duties on merchandise imported and exported by him, provided the duties on the said merchandise shall have been discharged prior to the time aforesaid. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3037-40.

In some government departments a term used to denote a bond or bill by which the government is charged to pay a creditor or his assigns the money due on auditing his account.

An instrument in writing, generally under seal, creating a definite charge on a definite or indefinite fund or subject of property, payable to a given person, etc., and usually constituting one of a series of similar instruments. Cavanagh, Mon. Sec. 267. See 56 L. J. R. Ch. D. 815; Brice, Ultra Vires (2d ed.) 279.

A charge in writing on certain property, with the repayment at a time fixed, of money lent by a person therein named at a given interest.

It is frequently resorted to by public companies to raise money for the prosecution of their undertakings.

Any instrument (other than a covering or trust deed) which either creates or agrees to create a debt in favor of one person or corporation, or several persons or corporations, or acknowledges such debt. Simonson, Debentures, 5, where this is given as the result of a critical examination and discussion of the cases bearing on the definition of the term.

As a rule, both text writers and courts content themselves with a statement of inability to define them. An English writer says: "No one seems to know exactly what debenture means;" Buckley, Companies Act 169; and Chitty, J., said in one case that "a debenture means a document which either creates a debt or acknowledges it, and any document which fulfils either of these conditions is a debenture;" 37 Ch. D. 260, 264; but in the same case North, J., would not go so far. In another case the same judge (Chitty) said: "The term itself imports a debt and acknowledgment of a debt, and generally if not always imports an obligation to pay;" 36 Ch. D. 215; and again in another case he thus expresses the doubt existing as to the exact legal idea involved in the expression: "So far as I am aware, the term debenture has never received any precise legal definition. It is, comparatively speaking, a new term. I do not mean a new term in the English language, because there is a passage in Swift (quoted in Latham's Dict.) where the term debenture is used." The lines referred to are:

"You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,
Have desperate debentures on your fame:
And little would be left you, I'm afraid,
If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid."

And the judge continued: "But although it is not a term with any legal definition, it is a term which has been used by lawyers frequently with reference to instruments under acts of parliament, which, when you turn to the acts themselves, are not so described;" 56 L. J. Ch. 817.

"Debentures, which are the commonest form of security issued by English corporations, are defined to be instruments under seal creating a charge according to their wording upon the property of the corporation, and to that extent conferring a priority over subsequent creditors and over existing creditors not possessed of such charge. This is the true and proper use of the term; although it is frequently applied on the one hand to instruments which do not confer a charge and which are nothing more nor less than ordinary unsecured bonds, and on the other to instruments which are more than a mere charge, being in effect mortgages, and are properly termed mortgage debentures." Jones, Corp. B. & M. § 32.

In the case of an instrument engaging for the payment of "the amount of this debenture," with coupons for interest payable half-yearly, Grove, J., said: "In the several dictionaries which we are in the habit of consulting, no satisfactory definition can be found, and neither of the learned counsel has been able to afford us any. I do not remember the term being used otherwise than in an acknowledgment of indebtedness by a corporate body having power by act of parliament or otherwise to increase its capital by borrowing money." It was something different from a promissory note, having a different stamp duty, different form, and a special mode of paying interest. The paper was held a debenture and subject to a higher stamp duty than a promissory note. In the same case Lindley, J., said that what were known as debentures were of various kinds;—mortgage debentures which were charges on some kinds of property, debenture bonds which were not, debentures which were nothing more than an acknowledgment of indebtedness and "a thing like this which is something more." 7 Q. B. D. 165.

Manson, treating of "The Growth of the Debenture" in 13 L. Q. R. 418, says that its origin was a mere acknowledgment of indebtedness from the crown, first for wages, etc., of servants, then to soldiers for arrears due them, and in various cases for amounts due from the exchequer and the custom house; it was in its primitive meaning just what its derivation from debentur implies—an admission of indebtedness, importing, as quoted supra from Chitty, J., an obligation or covenant to pay. From this root, slender as it is," continues the same writer, "have branched all the variety of forms. . . . Debentures to Bearer, Registered Debentures, Perpetual Debentures, Mortgage Debentures, Debenture Bonds, Debenture Stock, Trust or Covering Deeds, Debenture Stock Certificate to Bearer." Originally not one of a series, now inseparably connected with serial form. "An issue of debentures is in effect one great contributory charge made up of a series of securities, identical in form and amount." id.

Its character springs from its genesis, as the writer above quoted remarks, and is moulded by the combination of necessities: (1) Of giving security to the holders; (2) of leaving the company free to manage its business. From this combination arises the idea of the "floating charge" which binds the property of the company and the continuance of which as a mere charge is based upon the continued existence of the company as a going concern. See FLOATING CHARGE. The property charged, changing as it does in specie from time to time is by English courts termed the UNDERTAKING, which title see.

If the company makes by default or is wound up or "ceases to be a going concern," the right of the holders arises to ask for a receiver and to realize their interest; 56 L. J. Ch. 536, 35 W. R. 574; L. R. 15 Ch. D. 465. A sale of its entire property assets, good will, etc., is not in the ordinary course of business and was enjoined; id.

"A floating charge, though it nets all the available assets, is only an equitable security, and . . . may vanish altogether. Hence, where the sum borrowed is large, it has become usual to supplement the floating charge by a mortgage of specific property embodied in what is commonly called a covering or trust deed;" 13 L. Q. R. 422; which has two purposes: (1) To fasten the security upon the property; (2) to organize the debenture holders into a compact body and name trustees to act for them; id.

The mere fact that an instrument is on its face termed a debenture does not make it such, if on an examination of its substance it is found not to contain an acknowledgment of, or agreement to pay, a debt; 36 Ch. D. 215; 37 id. 260.

Debentures may be issued by a single person, a firm, or corporation, and it is an attribute implied in the definition of debenture that the holders are entitled without priority among themselves. They are, it is said, usually made a primary charge on the corporate property or undertaking, and as such will have priority over judgments obtained by general creditors and over the claims of shareholders; Cav. Mon. Sec. 358.

"Such debentures are in effect statutory mortgages. . . . In England each creditor is secured by a separate mortgage, while in America one secures all; and by statute in England, holders of mortgage debentures have no priority inter se." Jones, Corp. B. & M. Sec. 32.

Sometimes the nature of a debenture holder's charge is that of a floating mortgage or security attaching only to the subjects which are for the time being the property of the company, and not preventing the latter from disposing of the subject charged free from incumbrance; id.; L. R. 15 Ch. D. 465; 10 id. 530.

A debenture is distinguished (1) from a mortgage which is an actual transfer of property, (2) from a bond which does not directly affect property, and (3) from a mere charge on property which is individualized and does not form part of a series of similar charges; Cav. Mon. Sec. 267, citing L. R. 10 Ch. D. 530, 681; 15 id. 465; 21 id. 762; L. R. 7 App. Cas. 673. Debentures strictly so called differ from mortgages in not conferring on the grantee the legal title or any of the ordinary rights of ownership of the property upon which the charge is created. A leading American writer says of this class of securities as understood in England that the charge created by them confers only equitable rights either as against other creditors or as against the corporation creating them. It is a test whether an instrument is a debenture or mortgage to ascertain whether the holder has any legal right to interfere with the company's use or control of the property in whatever way it pleases. If the instrument confers a charge which can be protected and enforced only in equity it is strictly a debenture; Jones, Corp. B. & M. § 32. See 10 H. L. C. 191. Of course, the effect and extent of the charge depend entirely upon the language used; L. R. 2 Ch. D. 337.

A debenture holder in England differs from a mortgagee in that the latter has a lien upon tolls and traffic receipts and may have a receiver appointed while the former has not; Jones, Corp. B. & M. § 232; 2 Ir. Eq. 524; L. R. 7 Ch. 655.

Debentures issued by an English company owning land in Italy and binding their "assets, property, and effects" were held to create no mortgage or lien; 26 W. R. 123; and debenture bonds, principal and interest payable to bearer, secured by mortgage of the company to certain persons as trustees for the holders, which was void for non-recording, were held to create no charge; 19 Q. B. D. 568.

Where a company had power "to issue bonds, debentures, or mortgage debentures," which would entitle holders to be paid pari passu out of the company's property, evidences of debt expressed as "obligations" by which the company bound "themselves and their successors and all their estate property, etc.," were held to be debentures and to create a charge; 10 Ch. Div. 530.

As issues of debentures are frequently, if not in most cases, made payable to the bearer, the question has been much litigated in England whether in that form they are transferable by delivery. There being no statute under which they are negotiable, they must be so if at all under the law merchant (q. v.). Debentures were at first held not negotiable under that law; L. R. 8 Q. B. 374; but in the Exchequer Chamber upon a critical examination the decision was otherwise; L. R. 10 Ex. 346; which was affirmed by the House of Lords, which distinguished the cases and did not review the earlier case; 1 App. Cas. 476; and finally it was held that debentures issued in England by a home company payable to bearer are negotiable by the law merchant and their transfer gives a good title against anybody to a bona fide purchaser; [1898] Q. B. 658. The same ruling was applied to those of a foreign company, commonly treated as negotiable in the market; [1892] 3 Ch. 527.

Where a number of debentures are sealed one after another in numerical order they prima facie rank in priority accordingly, but if it is so provided, they rank pari passu; 21 Ch. D. 762; 38 id. 156, 171; Buckley, Companies Acts 172. They are generally issued in a series, but need not be so, as a single debenture may be issued to one man; 36 Ch. D. 221.

Debentures are not issued until they are delivered; id.; 34 Ch. D. 58. A contract to make or take debentures will not be specifically enforced, but the party is left to his action for damages; [1897] 1 Q. B. 692, affirmed [1898] A. C. 309.

The exact nature of debentures has been much discussed in England as arising in cases where the question was whether a paper required registration under the Bills of Sales Act which excepted from its provisions "debentures" issued by any mortgage, loan, or other incorporated company and secured upon the capital stock of goods, chattels, and effects of such company.

A memorandum of agreement which contained a covenant by a company to pay to each of nine persons, who were mentioned in it as lenders, the sum set opposite their names pari passu, and charged all the property of the company, was a debenture; 36 Ch. D. 215; and the covering deed which usually accompanies debentures as a security for the payment of the debentures when due is not a debenture; 34 Ch. D. 43; though why it should be so held, it has been remarked, it is difficult to see in view of the judicial definitions of the word "debenture" quoted supra; Simonson, Debentures, 4 (and see remarks of Lord North; 37 Ch. D. 281, 291); but it need not be registered under the Bills of Sales Act; [1891] 1 Ch. (A. C.) 627; [1896] 2 Ch. 212.

A mere memorandum in writing by a coal and fireclay working and brick-making company, of a deposit with bankers of title deeds, as a security for balances due or to become due, but which did not admit any specific debt, or contain an agreement to pay otherwise than by an agreement to execute a legal mortgage, was not a debenture; 37 Ch. D. 281.

The act referred to speaks of "debentures issued . . . and secured upon," and an English writer of authority considers that this means a borrowing money for the benefit of several lenders; Buckley, Companies Acts 170; but it has been held that the statutory term debenture applied when there were several lenders but only one security given for the benefit of all; 36 Ch. D. 215; it may consist of one document, not necessarily of a series of documents; id.; and a single security to a single lender, not purporting in terms to be a debenture, was one in law; 37 Ch. D. 260. A security, to a lender on some part of a company's property is not one, while an issue secured upon its entire stock in trade and undertaking is, and between these two is to be sought the line of demarcation; Buckley, Companies Acts 172.

The remedy upon a default was formerly by an action to realize the security commenced by one holder on behalf of all and the appointment of a receiver and manager to carry on the business; this was followed by a winding up petition, but more recently the proceeding has been for a decree of foreclosure; [1897] 1 Ch. 11. A power of sale may be, and usually is, included in the trust deed; 13 L. Q. Rev. 424.

Debenture holders with a floating charge were held to be superior to execution creditors; [1891] 1 Ch. 627, C. A. 3 id. 260.

As to spent debentures, see BONDS. See COVERING DEED. See PROMISSORY NOTES as to sealed debentures.

See Simonson, Debentures.

DEBENTURE BONDS. See DEBENTURES.

DEBENTURE STOCK. An issue of stock usually irredeemable and transferable in any amount, not including a fraction of a pound.

The terminability and fixity in amount of debentures being inconvenient to lenders has led to their being in many cases superseded by debenture stock. Whart. Lex.

The issue of debenture stock is not borrowing at all; it is the sale, in consideration of a sum of money, of the right to receive a perpetual annuity; 9 Ch. D. 337; Buckley, Companies Acts 172; and none the less so if redeemable at the option of the company; id.

DEBET ET DETINET (Lat. he owes and withholds). An action of debt is said to be in the debet et detinet when it is alleged that the defendant owes and unjustly withholds or detains the debt or thing in question. The action is so brought between the contracting parties. See DETINET.

DEBET ET SOLET (Lat. he owes and is used to). Where a man sues in a writ of right or to recover any right of which he is for the first time disseised, as of a suit at a mill or in case of a writ of quod permittat, he brings his writ in the debet et solet. Reg. Orig. 144 a; Fitzh. N. B. 122, M.

DEBET SINE BREVE (Lat. He owes without declaration filed). Used in relation to a confession of judgment.

DEBIT. A term used in book-keeping, to express the left hand page of the ledger, or of an account to which are carried all the articles supplied or amounts paid on the subject of an account, or that are charged to that account.

The balance of an account where it is shown that something remains due to the party keeping the account.

An amount which is set down as a debt or owing.

DEBITA LAICORUM (Lat.). Debts of the laity. Those which may be recovered in civil courts.

DEBITUM IN PRÆSENTI SOLVENDUM IN FUTURO (Lat.). An obligation of which the binding force is complete and perfect, but of which the performance cannot be required till some future period.

DEBT (Lat. debere, to owe; debitum, something owed). In Contracts. A sum of money due by certain and express agreement. 3 Bla. Com. 154. See Fisher v. Consequa, 2 Wash. C. C. 386, Fed. Cas. No. 4,816.

All that is due a man under any form of obligation or promise. Gray v. Bennett, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 522. See Appeal of City of Erie, 91 Pa. 402.

Active debt. One due to a person. Used in the civil law.

Ancestral debt. One of an ancestor which the law compels the heir to pay. Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 10 L. Ed. 873; A. & E. Encyc.

Doubtful debt. One of which the payment is uncertain. Clef des Lois Romaines.

Fraudulent debt. A debt created by fraud implies confidence and deception. It implies that it arose out of a contract, express or implied, and that fraudulent practices were employed by the debtor, by which the creditor was defrauded. Howland v. Carson, 28 Ohio St. 628.

Hypothecary debt. One which is a lien upon an estate.

Judgment debt. One which is evidenced by matter of record.

Liquid debt. One which is immediately and unconditionally due.

Passive debt. One which a person owes.

Privileged debt. One which is to be paid before others in case a debtor is insolvent.

The privilege may result from the character of the creditor, as where a debt is due to the United States; or the nature of the debt, as funeral expenses, etc. See PREFERENCE; PRIVILEGE; LIEN; PRIORITY; DISTRIBUTION.

Specialty. A debt by specialty or special contract is one whereby a sum of money becomes, or is acknowledged to be, due by deed or instrument under seal; 2 Bla. Com. 465; Probate Court for Dist. of Orleans v. Child, 51 Vt. 86.

A debt may be evidenced by matter of record, by a contract under seal, or by a simple contract. The distinguishing and necessary feature is that a fixed and specific amount is owing and no future valuation is required to settle it; 3 Bla. Com. 154; Matter of Denny, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 220.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover a sum certain. 2 Greenl. Ev. 279; Andr. Steph. Pl. 77, n.

It lies wherever the sum due is certain or ascertained in such a manner as to be readily reduced to a certainty, without regard to the manner in which the obligation was incurred or is evidenced; Crockett v. Moore, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 145; Lee v. Gardiner, 26 Miss. 521; Home v. Sempie, 3 McLean, 150, Fed. Cas. No. 6,658; Bullard v. Bell, 1 Mas. 243, Fed. Cas. No. 2,121; U. S. v. Claffin, 97 U. S. 546, 24 L. Ed. 1052; Baum v. Tonkin, 110 Pa. 569, 1 Atl. 535.

It is thus distinguished from assumpsit, which lies as well where the sum due is uncertain as where it is certain, and from covenant, which lies only upon contracts evidenced in a certain manner.

It is said to lie in the debet and detinet (when it is stated that the defendant owes and detains) or in the detinet (when it is stated merely that he detains). Debt in the detinet for goods differs from detinue, because it is not essential in this action, as in detinue, that the specific property in the goods should have been vested in the plaintiff at the time the action is brought. Dy. 24 b.

It is used for the recovery of a debt eo nomine and in numero; though damages, which are in most instances merely nominal, are usually awarded for the detention; 1 H. Bla. 550; Cowp. 588.

The action lies in the debet and detinet to recover money due, on a record or a judgment of a court of record; Salk. 109; Eby v. Burkholder, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 9; Allen v. Lyman, 27 Vt. 20; Austin v. Townes, 10 Tex. 24; although a foreign court; Moore v. Adie's Adm'r, 18 Ohio 430; McIntire v. Caruth, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 395; Jordan v. Robinson, 15 Me. 167; Cole v. Dec. 177; Sims v. Alderson, 8 Leigh (Va.) 479; including awards by a statutory commission; Knowles v. Inhabitants of Eastham, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 429; on specialties; 1 Term 40; Little v. Mercer, 9 Mo. 218; Salter v. Richardson, 37 B. Monr. (Ky.) 204; Allen v. R. Co., 32 N. H. 446; Nash v. Nash, 16 Ill. 79; including a recognizance; Dowlin v. Standifer, 1 Hempst. 290, Fed. Cas. No.

4,041 a; Bentley v. Lyman, 21 Conn. 81; State v. Folsom, 26 Me. 209; see Pate v. People, 15 Ill. 221; Gale v. Boyle, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 138; Nesbitt v. Ware, 30 Ala. 68; on a promissory note; Bentley v. Dickson, 1 Ark. 165; Loose v. Loose, 36 Pa. 538; on a bill of exchange; Hollingsworth v. Milton, 8 Leigh (Va.) 50; on simple contracts, whether express; Lee v. Gardiner, 26 Miss. 521; Barclay v. Moore, 17 Ala. 634; Gift v. Hall, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 480; although the contract might have been discharged on or before the day of payment in articles of merchandise; Young v. Hawkins, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 171; or implied; Bull. N. P. 167; Van Deusen v. Blum, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 229, 29 Am. Dec. 582; Thompson v. French, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 452; Houghton v. Stowell, 28 Me. 215; Dillingham v. Skein, 1 Hempst. 181, Fed. Cas. No. 3,912 a; Gray v. Johnson, 14 N. H. 414; to recover a specific reward offered; Disborough v. Outcalt, 1 N. J. Eq. 310. An action of debt is the proper remedy of a landlord against his tenant in possession to recover a statutory penalty for willfully cutting trees without the owner's consent; Rogers v. Brooks, 99 Ala. 31, 11 South. 753; and also in favor of the beneficiaries in a certificate of membership in a mutual benefit association; Abe Lincoln Mut. Life & Accident Society v. Miller, 23 Ill. App. 341; but it does not lie on a decree of foreclosure, which orders the money secured by the mortgage to be paid, or in default thereof the mortgaged premises to be sold and the proceeds paid into court; Burges v. Souther, 15 R. I. 202, 2 Atl. 441.

It lies in the detinet for goods; Dy. 24 b; Dowlin v. Standifer, 1 Hempst. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 4,041 a; Snell v. Kirby, 3 Mo. 21, 22 Am. Dec. 456; and by an executor for money due the testator; 1 Wms. Saund. 1; see Brown's Adm'r v. Brown, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 247; or against him on the testator's contracts; Childress v. Emory, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 642, 5 L. Ed. 705.

The declaration, when the action is founded on a record, need not aver consideration. When it is founded on a specialty, it must contain the specialty; Huber v. Burke, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 238; but need not aver consideration; Nash v. Nash, 16 Ill. 79; Barrett v. Carden, 65 Vt. 431, 26 Atl. 530, 36 Am. St. Rep. 876; but when the action is for rent, the deed need not be declared on; Gray v. Johnson, 14 N. H. 414. When it is founded on a simple contract, the consideration must be averred; and a liability or agreement, though not necessarily an express promise to pay, must be stated; 2 Term 28, 30.

The plea of nil debet is the general issue when the action is on a simple contract, on statutes, or where a specialty is matter of inducement merely; Stilson v. Tobey, 2 Mass. 521; Minton v. Woodworth, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 474; King v. Ramsay, 13 Ill. 619;

McConnell v. Bank, 6 Ark. 250; Dyer v. Cleaveland, 18 Vt. 241; U. S. v. Cumpston, 3 McLean 163, Fed. Cas. No. 14,902; Hyatt v. Robinson, 15 Ohio 372; Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Clough, 8 N. H. 22; Clark v. Mann, 33 Me. 268; Stipp v. Cole, 1 Ind. 146; Matthews v. Redwine, 23 Miss. 233. Non est factum is the common plea when on specialty, denying the execution of the instrument; 2 Ld. Raym. 1500; Chambers v. Games, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 320; Brooks v. Bobo, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) 38; People v. Rowland, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 449; Brobst v. Welker, 8 Pa. 467; Utter v. Vance, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 514; Boynton v. Reynolds, 3 Mo. 79; and nul tiel record when on a record, denying the existence of the record; Mervin v. Kumbel, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 293; Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 232, 17 Am. Dec. 356. As to the rule when the judgment is one of another state, see Clark v. Mann, 33 Me. 268; Williams v. Preston, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 600, 20 Am. Dec. 179; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Town of St. Albans v. Bush, 4 Vt. 58, 23 Am. Dec. 246; Lanning v. Shute, 5 N. J. L. 778; Clarke's Adm'r v. Day, 2 Leigh (Va.) 172; as well as the titles FOREIGN JUDGMENT, CONFLICT OF LAWS.

As to the situs of a debt in attachment and garnishment proceedings, see LEX REI SITE.

Other matters must, in general, be pleaded specially; Hays v. Muir, 1 Ind. 174.

The judgment is, generally, that the plaintiff receive his debt and costs when for the plaintiff, and that the defendant receive his costs when for the defendant; Chapman v. Wright, 20 Ill. 120; Rutter v. State, 1 Ia. 99; Downs v. Ladd, 4 How. (Miss.) 40. It is reversible error to render judgment not only for the debt sued on, but for damages, as in assumpsit and for interest on the judgment; Reece v. Knott, 3 Utah 451, 24 Pac. 757. See JUDGMENT.

DEBTEE. One to whom a debt is due; a creditor: as, debtee executor. 3 Bla. Com. 18.

DEBTOR. One who owes a debt; he who may be constrained to pay what he owes.

DEBTOR'S ACT, 1869. The statute 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, abolishing imprisonment for debt in England, and for the punishment of fraudulent debtors. 2 Steph. Com. 159-164. (Not to be confounded with the Bankruptcy Act of 1869.) Mozl. & W. Dict.

DEBTOR'S SUMMONS. In English Law. A summons issuing from a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, upon the creditor proving a liquidated debt of not less than £50, which he has failed to collect after reasonable effort, stating that if the debtor fail, within one week if a trader, and within three weeks if a non-trader, to pay or compound for the sum specified, a petition may be presented against him, praying that he may be adjudged a bankrupt. Bkcy. Act, 1869, s. 7; Robson, Bkcy.; Mozl. & W. Dict.

DECALOGUE. The ten commandments.

DECANATUS, DECANIA, DECANA (Lat.). A town or tithing, consisting originally of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings compose a hundred. 1 Bla. Com. 114; Medley, Orig. Illus. Eng. Const. Hist.

Decanatus, a deanery, a company of ten. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.

Decania, Decana, the territory under the charge of a dean.

DECANUS (Lat.). A dean; an officer having charge of ten persons. In Constantinople, an officer who has charge of the burial of the dead. Nov. Jus. 43, 59; Du Cange. The term is of extensive use, being found with closely related meanings in the old Roman, the civil, ecclesiastical, and old European law. It is used of civil and ecclesiastical as well as military affairs. There were a variety of decani.

Decanus monasticus, the dean of a monastery.

Decanus in majori ecclesia, dean of a cathedral church.

Decanus militaris, a military captain of ten soldiers.

Decanus episcopi, a dean presiding over ten parishes.

Decanus friborgi, dean of a fribourg, tithing, or association of ten inhabitants. A Saxon officer, whose duties were those of an inferior judicial officer. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.

DECAPITATION (Lat. de, from, caput, a head). The act of beheading. In some countries a method of capital punishment. See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

DECEDENT. A deceased person.

The signification of the word has become more extended than its strict etymological meaning. Strictly taken, it denotes a dying person, but is always used in the more extended sense given, denoting any deceased person, testate or intestate.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DECEIT. A fraudulent misrepresentation or contrivance, by which one man deceives another, who has no means of detecting the fraud, to the injury and damage of the latter. It need not be made in words, if the impression be made on the mind of the other party, upon which he acts, without the exact expression in words of the understanding sought to be created; 17 C. B. n. s. 482; Mizner v. Kussell, 29 Mich. 229. Suspicion by the maker that his statements are false is the legal equivalent of knowledge of their falsity and fraudulency; Shackett v. Bickford, 74 N. H. 57, 65 Atl. 252, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646, 124 Am. St. Rep. 933.

Fraud, or the intention to deceive, is the very essence of this injury; Stewart v. Ranch Co., 128 U. S. 383, 9 Sup. Ct. 101, 32

L. Ed. 439; for if the party misrepresenting was himself mistaken, no blame can attach to him; Poll. Torts 353; Farmers' Stock-Breeding Ass'n v. Scott, 53 Kan. 534, 36 Pac. 978; Wachsmuth v. Wachsmuth, 45 Ill. App. 244. The representation must be made malò animò; but whether or not the party is himself to gain by it is wholly immaterial.

It may be by the deliberate assertion of a falsehood to the injury of another, by failure to disclose a latent defect, or by concealing an apparent defect; but, as a rule, mere silence on the part of one party to a transaction as to facts which are important to the other is not deceit, if he is under no obligation to disclose them; Big. Torts 12; L. R. 6 H. L. 377.

Where the seller asked the buyer whether there was any news (of the treaty of Peace in 1815) that would enhance the price of tobacco and the buyer remained silent, it should have gone to the jury to say whether any imposition was practised, the court saying that while the buyer need not, as matter of law, communicate special information known only to him, he must take care not to impose on the seller; Laidlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. 178, 4 L. Ed. 214. In U. S. v. Bell Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 323, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450, it was held that if, with intent to deceive, either party to a contract of sale conceals or suppresses a material fact which he is in good faith bound to disclose, that is evidence of or equivalent to a false representation. General assertions, by a vendor or lessor, that the property offered for sale or to be leased is valuable or very valuable, although, such assertions turn out to be untrue, are not misrepresentations amounting to deceit, nor are they to be regarded as statements of existing facts, upon which an action of deceit may be based, but rather as expressions of opinions or beliefs; Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215; or as prophecies as to financial prosperity; Kimber v. Young, 137 Fed. 744, 70 C. C. A. 178; Deming v. Darling, 148 Mass. 504, 20 N. E. 107, 2 L. R. A. 743.

The party deceived must have been in a situation such as to have no means of detecting the deceit. But see Carpenter v. Wright, 52 Kan. 221, 34 Pac. 798.

A person cannot sustain an action for deceit where no harm comes to him; Alden v. Wright, 47 Minn. 225, 49 N. W. 767; Roonie v. Jennings, 2 Misc. 257, 21 N. Y. Supp. 938, nor can he where he does not rely on the misrepresentations; Fowler v. McCann, 86 Wis. 427, 56 N. W. 1085.

In order to constitute deceit it is necessary either that the false representations should be known by the person making them to be untrue, or that he should have no reason to believe them true. Mere ignorance of their falsity is no excuse; Burge v. Stroberg, 42 Ga. 88; see Carondelet Iron Works

v. Moore, 78 Ill. 65; Hess v. Young, 59 Ind. 379; Cooper v. Lovering, 106 Mass. 77; Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53; Newell v. Horn, 45 N. H. 422; Long v. Warren, 68 N. Y. 426. Deceit may be committed not only with the careful intention of one who knows what he asserts to be true or false, but also with the reckless intention of one who does not know what he represents to be true or false, but who, for one reason or another, is willing that his reckless representations should be believed; Stimson v. Helps, 9 Colo. 33, 10 Pac. 290; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 26, 10 L. Ed. 42; Busterud v. Farrington, 36 Minn. 320, 31 N. W. 360.

The mere expression of opinion is not deceit, though untrue and made in most positive language; 3 T. R. 51; 2 East 92; Credle v. Swindell, 63 N. C. 305; Hazard v. Irwin, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 95; but the expression of opinion as knowledge may render one liable for fraud; Cabot v. Christie, 42 Vt. 121, 1 Am. Rep. 313; or where the means of forming a correct opinion are within the reach of one party only; Hedin v. Medical & Surgical Institute, 62 Minn. 146, 64 N. W. 158, 35 L. R. A. 417, 54 Am. St. Rep. 628; and the rule has been avoided by the court's finding in a statement of opinion some implied representation of fact; Spead v. Tomlinson, 73 N. H. 46, 59 Atl. 376, 68 L. R. A. 432. Thus a cattle-dealer who expresses an apparent opinion as to the weight of cattle he desires to sell, knowing it to be untrue, is guilty of deceit; Birdsey v. Butterfield, 34 Wis. 62.

Though false representations as to the value of land are not alone sufficient to sustain an action for damages, yet if made in connection with others as to the net revenues derived, they are sufficient to support such an action; Henderson v. Henshall, 54 Fed. 320, 4 C. C. A. 357; and an action for false representation as to title, in a sale of lands, may be maintained though the deed contains no covenants; Barnes v. Ry. Co., 54 Fed. 87, 4 C. C. A. 199.

An action for deceit can only be based upon the misrepresentation of matters of fact, not of matters of law; unless the party who made the misrepresentation did it with knowledge both of the law and of the other's ignorance of it; Townsend v. Cowles, 31 Ala. 434; Dillman v. Nadleoffer, 119 Ill. 567, 7 N. E. 88; Burt v. Bowles, 69 Ind. 1; L. R. 4 Ch. D. 702; Moreland v. Atchison, 19 Tex. 303; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203.

If the party complaining of misrepresentations had the same sources of information as the one who made them, he must avail himself of his means of knowledge, or he cannot recover; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 379, 20 L. Ed. 627; Brown v. Leach, 107 Mass. 364; Pigott v. Graham, 48 Wash. 348, 93 Pac. 435, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1176; Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 12 Sup. Ct. 164, 35 L. Ed. 931; Warner v.

Benjamin, 89 Wis. 290, 62 N. W. 179. A clause in a contract providing that the plaintiff should verify defendant's plans does not as a matter of law bar the plaintiff's recovery; but whether or not the plaintiff acted in reliance on the defendant's plans is a question for the jury; [1907] A. C. 351.

But a contracting party may rely upon express statements of fact, the truth of which is known or presumed to have been known to the other party, even where the means of information are open to him; Big. Torts 26; especially when the representation has a natural tendency to prevent investigation or is made the basis of the contract; id.; where one contracting party has a mental or physical infirmity, or where the parties do not stand upon an equal footing, the duty of investigating the truth of statements may be less; id. 28.

The plaintiff must also have acted upon the representation, and sustained injury by so doing; 4 H. & N. 225; Wells v. Waterhouse, 22 Me. 131; Lindsey v. Lindsey, 34 Miss. 432; Phipps v. Buckman, 30 Pa. 401; Enfield v. Colburn, 63 N. H. 218; and they must have been made to him; Iasigi v. Brown, 17 How. (U. S.) 183, 15 L. Ed. 208; Lindsey v. Lindsey, 34 Miss. 432; Hunnewell v. Duxbury, 154 Mass. 286, 28 N. E. 267, 13 L. R. A. 733. One who purchases stock in the market, upon the faith of a prospectus received from persons not connected with the corporation, cannot enforce a liability against the directors for false representations therein; L. R. 6 H. L. 377; but where a prospectus is put out by a company to sell its stock, any one of the public may act on it; Big. Torts 33.

The false representations upon which deceit is predicated must also, in order to support the action, be material and relevant, and be the determining factor of the transactions; L. R. 2 Ch. 611; 5 De G., M. & G. 126; Bond v. Ramsey, 89 Ill. 29; Noel v. Horton, 50 Ia. 687; Teague v. Irwin, 127 Mass. 217; Miller v. Barber, 66 N. Y. 558. It must appear that the fraud was an inducing cause of the contract; 9 App. Cas. 190.

Where the effect of the misrepresentations was to bring the parties into relations with each other, express evidence of an intent to defraud is unnecessary; but where by false representations one suffers damage in a transaction with a third person, there must be express evidence that the party making the representation intended it to be acted on, or that the plaintiff was justified in assuming that he so intended; Big. Torts 31. It is sufficient if the representation was made with the direct intent that it should be communicated to the plaintiff, or to a class of which he was one; L. R. 6 H. L. 377.

In order to sustain an action for deceit there must be proof of fraud and nothing short of that will suffice. Secondly. Fraud is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made (1) knowingly, or (2) without belief in its truth, or (3) recklessly careless whether it be true or false; Lord Herschell, in Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337. Although treating the second and third as distinct cases, he says: "I think the third is but an instance of the second, for one who makes a statement under such circumstances can have no real belief of the truth of what he states. To prevent a false statement being fraudulent, there must, I think, always be an honest belief in its truth and this probably covers the whole ground, for one who knowingly alleges that which is false has obviously no such honest belief. Thirdly. If fraud be proved, the motive of the guilty person is immaterial. It matters not that there was no intention to cheat or to injure the person to whom the statement was made." In that case (Derry v. Peek) a special act incorporating a tramway company provided that carriages might be moved by animal power and, with the consent of the Board of Trade, by steam power. The directors issued a prospectus containing a statement that by their special act the company had a right to use steam power, which statement was made in the honest belief that it was true, and the Board of Trade having refused their consent to the use of steam power, persons who had taken shares on the faith of the statement brought an action of deceit against the directors; the House of Lords, reversing the Court of Appeal, held that the defendants were not liable.

In an action of deceit the plaintiff must prove that the untrue statement of the defendant was made with a fraudulent intent; [1912] A. C. 186. It is not sufficient that there is blundering carelessness, however gross, unless there is willful recklessness; [1891] 2 Ch. 449. Recklessly making a statement, intending it to be acted upon, not caring whether it is true or false, may be said to show that a man has a wicked mind and is acting fraudulently; [1893] 1 Q. B. 491, Lord Esher, M. R. His mind is wicked not because he is negligent, but because he is dishonest in not caring about the truth of his statement; id., per Bowen, L. J.; Shackett v. Bickford, 74 N. H. 57, 65 Atl. 252, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646, 124 Am. St. Rep. 933; the grounds of belief and the means of knowledge in possession of the person making the statement are to be considered in determining the honesty of the belief; Hindman v. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 C. C. A. 108.

Derry v. Peek was followed in Kountze v. Kennedy, 147 N. Y. 124, 41 N. E. 414, 29 L. R. A. 360, 49 Am. St. Rep. 651, where it was held that where an act is attributable to an honest belief, a fraudulent intent is lacking and a charge of deceit fails. In Watson v. Jones, 41 Fla. 241, 25 South. 678, the leading English case was not followed; it was there held that the defendant's situation or means of knowledge made it his duty to know; to the same effect, Seale v. Baker, 70 Tex. 283, 7 S. W. 742, 8 Am. St. Rep. 592; Munroe v. Pritchett, 16 Ala. 785, 50 Am. Dec. 203; Jordan v. Pickett, 78 Ala. 331; Johnson v. Gulick, 46 Neb. 817, 65 N. W. 883, 50 Am. St. Rep. 629.

There may be a duty to use care in the accuracy of representations where the plaintiffs are reasonable in relying upon them and the defendants knew that they would do so and would be damaged if such representations were false; Harriott v. Plimpton, 166 Mass. 585, 44 N. E. 992; Edwards v. Lamb, 69 N. H. 599, 45 Atl. 480, 50 L. R. A. 160; L. R. 5 Exch. 1.

As society becomes more complex and the consequences of negligence more far reaching, the obligation of using care becomes stricter in morals, and will have to become stricter in law, notwithstanding Derry v. Peek; 7 L. Q. R. 107. See 14 Harv. L. R. 184, as to liability for the negligent use of language.

In Nash v. Trust Co., 163 Mass. 574, 40 N. E. 1039, 28 L. R. A. 753, 47 Am. St. Rep. 489, it was held that a defendant who had written a letter reasonably to be understood as warranting a title, might show that the letter was intended to convey another meaning. Field, C. J., and Holmes, J., dissented, arguing, as does Sir Frederic Pollock in 5 L. Q. R. 410, that a man should be bound by a reasonable interpretation of his words when he knows others will act upon them. See 9 Harv. L. Rev. 214.

One who makes a representation positively, without knowing whether it is false or true, is liable for deceit; L. R. 7 H. L. 102; Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 359.

To tell half the truth and to conceal the other half, amounts to a false statement, and differs in no respect from the case of false representations; Mitchell v. McDougall, 62 Ill. 501; Stewart v. Rancho Co., 128 U. S. 383, 388, 9 Sup. Ct. 101, 32 L. Ed. 439; Williams v. Spurr, 24 Mich. 335; L. R. 6 H. L. 403; Mallory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156, 82 Am. Dec. 625.

An action of tort for deceit in the sale of property does not lie for false and fraudulent representations concerning profits that may be made from it in the future; Pedrick v. Porter, 5 Allen (Mass.) 324.

While an honest belief in the truth of representations is a defence to an action for deceit at common law, it is no defence to a bill in equity to set aside the transaction; 7 Beav. 149; Seeley v. Reed, 25 Fed. 361; Kyle v. Kavanagh, 103 Mass. 356, 4 Am. Rep. 560. It is also a ground for objecting to the enforcement of the contract, and even for a rescission of the contract upon the ground of mistake; Big. Torts 23.

Private corporations are held liable for the wrongful acts and neglect of their agents or servants, done in the course of their employment; Lamin v. Homestead Ass'n, 49 Md. 241, 33 Am. Rep. 246. In England the rule is that if the person has been induced to purchase shares of a corporation by misrepresentations of its directors and suffers damage thereby, he must bring an action of deceit against such directors individually; while in the U. S. it seems to be the rule that a corporation may be sued in such cases; Fogg v. Griffin, 2 Allen (Mass.) 1; Peebles v. Guano Co., 77 N. C. 233, 24 Am. Rep. 447; Zabriskie v. R. Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 381, 16 L. Ed. 488; Planters' Rice-Mill Co. v. Olmstead, 78 Ga. 586, 3 S. E. 647; Moran v. Miami County, 2 Black (U. S.) 722, 17 L. Ed. 342; Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. L. 288, 39 Am. Rep. 581. "If the director of a company puts shares forth into the world, and deliberately adopts a scheme of falsehood and fraud, the effect of which is that parties buy the shares in consequence of the falsehood," the action for deceit lies; Pollock, C. B., in 4 H. & N. 538; 2 Q. B. D. 48. See also 2 M. & W. 519; 3 B. & Ad. 114.

The general principles on which the right of action for deceit is based are thus stated in Webb's Poll. Torts 355:

"To create a right of action for deceit there must be a statement made by the defendant, or for which he is answerable as principal, and with regard to that statement all the following conditions must concur:

"It is untrue in fact.

"The person making the statement, or the person responsible for it, either knows it to be untrue, or is culpably ignorant (that is, recklessly and consciously ignorant) whether it be true or not.

"It is made to the intent that the plaintiff shall act upon it, or in a manner apparently fitted to induce him to act upon it.

"The plaintiff does act in reliance on the statement in the manner contemplated or manifestly probable, and thereby suffers damage.

"There is no cause of action without both fraud and actual damage, or the damage is the gist of the action.

"And according to the general principles of civil liability, the damage must be the natural and probable consequence of the plaintiff's action on the faith of the defendant's statement.

"The statement must be in writing and signed in one class of cases, namely, where it amounts to a guaranty; but this requirement is statutory, and as it did not apply to the court of chancery, does not seem to apply to the high court of justice in its equitable jurisdiction."

The remedy for a deceit, unless the right of action has been suspended or discharged, is by an action of trespass on the case. The old writ of deceit was brought for acknowledging a fine, or the like, in another name, and, this being a perversion of law to an evil purpose and a high contempt, the act was laid contra pacem, and a fine imposed upon the offender. See Brooke, Abr. Disceit; Viner, Abr. Disceit.

When two or more persons unite in a deceit upon another, they may be indicted for a conspiracy. See, generally, 1 Rolle, Abr. 106; Com. Dig.; 1 Viner, Abr. 560; 8 id. 490; Bigelow, Torts 9; Cooley, Torts 554.

It has been held that an action will not lie for fraudulent misrepresentations of a vendor of real estate as to the price he paid therefor; Mooney v. Miller, 102 Mass. 217; Schumaker v. Mather, 133 N. Y. 590, 30 N. E. 755; Wilkinson v. Clauson, 29 Minn. 91, 12 N. W. 147; Hartman v. Flaherty, 80 Ind. 472; nor ordinarily for false statements as to value of stock; Ellis v. Andrews, 56 N. Y. 83, 11 Am. Rep. 379; Boulden v. Stilwell, 100 Md. 543, 60 Atl. 609, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, nor for a false certificate of classification of a sailing yacht; 60 L. J. Q. B. 526; nor a representation that a stallion would not produce sorrel colts; Scroggin v. Wood, 87 Ia. 497, 54 N. W. 437; nor generally for a broken promise; Fenwick v. Grimes, 5 Cra. C. C. 603, Fed. Cas. No. 4734; Dickinson v. Atkins, 100 Ill. App. 401; Cerny v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 78 Neb. 134, 110 N. W. 882, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640; Curdy v. Berton, 79 Cal. 425, 21 Pac. 853, 5 L. R. A. 189, 12 Am. St. Rep. 157. In Harrington v. Rutherford, 38 Fla. 321, 21 South. 283, the rule was followed, though the promise was broken without excuse. A fraudulent representation, to vitiate a contract induced by it, is a representation of a past or existing fact, but a promise is not a representation, and, when not a part of the contract, will not affect it; Estes v. Shoe Co., 155 Mo. 577, 56 S. W. 316; and there is a distinction between a representation of an existing fact which is untrue, and a promise to do or not to do something in the future. In order to avoid a contract, the former must be relied upon; Sleeper v. Wood, 60 Fed. 888, 9 C. C. A. 289; McConnell v. Pierce, 116 Ill. App. 103; Love v. Teter, 24 W. Va. 741. If deceit, in order to be actionable, must relate to existing or past facts, it is evident that a promise made in the course of negotiations, if never performed, is not of itself either fraud or the evidence of fraud; Hubbard v. Long, 105 Mich. 442, 63 N. W. 644. Many cases hold that a promise made without intent to perform, and with the secret intent not to perform, is fraudulent, and that an action of deceit will lie; Traber v. Hicks, 131 Mo. 180, 32 S. W. 1145; Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 197; Cerny v. Paxton & Gallagher Co., 78 Neb. 134, 110 N. W. 882, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640. A promise to do an act in the future certainly carries with it a representation of present intention to perform; see 9 Harv. L. Rev. 424; and that "a representation of present intention is a statement of fact has rarely been disputed since Bowen, L. J., declared in L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 459, that 'the state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion.' If, then, this misrepresentation of a present fact is accompanied by the other elements of deceit, it seems clear, on principle, that the action should be allowed;" see 9 Harv. L. Rev. 424; Bigelow, Fraud 484.

It is, too, generally held that a preconceived design in a buyer not to pay for the goods is such fraud as will vitiate the sale; Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301. The real fraud is the express or implied false representation of an intention to pay; Ayres v. French, 41 Conn. 142; Chicago, T. & M. C. Ry. Co. v. Titterington, 84 Tex. 218, 19 S. W. 472, 31 Am. St. Rep. 39; Goodwin v. Horne, 60 N. H. 485; Wilson v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 257; Gross v. McKee, 53 Miss. 536.

It has been held that an action for deceit would lie for breach of promise of marriage; Pollock v. Sullivan, 53 Vt. 507, 38 Am. Rep. 702, where the defendant was married at the time. An action for deceit will lie against one who fraudulently induces a woman to enter into a void marriage relation with him, by assurances that an existing marriage with another is void; Sears v. Wegner, 150 Mich. 388, 114 N. W. 224, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 819.

"Treating a promise to perform some act in the future as a statement of intention, and treating intention as an existing fact, it follows that if at the time the promise was made there was an intention to perform, subsequent non-performance would constitute fraud; while, on the other hand, if at the time the promise was made no such intention existed there would be a false representation of a material fact;" see 57 Am. L. Reg. 325.

False representations concerning the financial responsibility of another, made for the purpose of procuring him credit, negligently and carelessly, without investigation, when investigation would disclose their falsity, are held to imply a fraudulent intent and are actionable; Nevada Bank of San Francisco v. Bank, 59 Fed. 338; but not when made by a friendly adviser acting without compensation; Knight v. Rawlings, 205 Mo. 412, 104 S. W. 38, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212, 12 Ann. Cas. 325.

In an action of deceit in inducing plaintiff by false representations to take an assignment of a lease executed by one who has no title to the land, no offer of restitution need be made; Cheney v. Powell, 88 Ga. 629, 15 S. E. 750. But one who seeks to rescind a contract of sale because of fraud, but retains the property so sold, cannot maintain an action for deceit; Roome v. Jennings, 2 Misc. 257, 21 N. Y. Supp. 938; Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 24 Sup. Ct. 259, 48 L. Ed. 419; Schagun v. Mfg. Co., 162 Fed. 209, 89 C. C. A. 139; St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350.

As to a principal's liability for an agent's deceit, where there has been no authorization, express or implied, there are numerous conflicting decisions. In 19 Harv. L. Rev. 391, it is said the question commonly arises in litigation for damages caused by the over-issue of stock certificates, or by the fraudulent issue of bills of lading. In these cases there is no apparent authority given by the principal to do the acts complained of. Yet some cases have allowed a recovery on the ground that the agent had apparent authority by his own representations, so that the principal is estopped to deny absence of authority. The English doctrine, followed by the supreme court in the case of bills of lading and approved of in the case of fraudulent issue of stock, denies liability because of the absence of any authority whatever in the agent; Robertson v. Salomon, 130 U. S. 415, 9 Sup. Ct. 559, 32 L. Ed. 995. As, however, the act complained of is not contractual in its nature, but tortious, the question of liability should depend, not upon authority conferred or apparently conferred, but solely on whether the agent is acting in the course of his employment—the ordinary rule in cases of tort. "The difficulty, then, is to determine whether the agent is in fact acting within the scope of his employment. In the case of the over-issue of stock, it would appear to be plainly the duty of the agent to give just such information as that upon which the holder of the spurious stock has relied, since one of the chief purposes for which a corporation is organized is to enable the shares to be transferred freely"; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 391. "In view of the wide-spread use of the bill of lading as a symbol of property, it seems better to regard it as analogous to a negotiable instrument, relied upon by third parties in much the same way as stock certificates;" id.

In Cornfoot v. Fowke, 6 M. & W. 358, it was held that where an agent unknowingly makes an untrue statement, not expressly authorized by the principal, but the true state of facts are, however, known by the principal, the principal is not liable. But it is said that if this case is not overruled by the remarks since made upon it in 2 Sm. L. Cas. 81, 86, and by Willes, J., in (1867) L. R. 2 Ex. 262, it has been cut down to a decision on a point of pleading, which perhaps cannot, and certainly will not, ever arise; Wald's Pollock on Contracts, Williston's ed. 700; and in the last edition of Leake on Contracts it is said in the preface that "the time has now arrived when Cornfoot v. Fowke may be consigned to oblivion."

See an article in 4 Mich. L. Rev. 199; BILL OF LADING.

DECEM TALES (Lat. ten such). A writ requiring the sheriff to appoint ten like men (apponere decem tales), to make up a full jury when a sufficient number do not appear. See TALES DE CIRCUMSTANTIBUS.

DECEMVIRI LITIBUS JUDICANDIS. In Roman Law. Ten judges (five being senators and five knights), appointed by Augustus to act as judges in certain cases. Calvinus, Lex.; Anthon, Rom. Ant.

DECENNARIUS (Lat.). One who held one-half a virgate of land. Du Cange. One of the ten freeholders in a decennary. Du Cange; Calvinus, Lex.

Decennier. One of the decennarii, or ten freeholders making up a tithing. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange, Decenna; 1 Bla. Com. 114. See DECANUS.

DECENNARY (Lat. decem, ten). A district originally containing ten men with their families.

King Alfred, for the better preservation of the peace, divided England into counties, the counties into hundreds, and the hundreds into tithings or decennaries: the inhabitants whereof, living together, were sureties or pledges for each other's good behavior. One of the principal men of the latter number presided over the rest, and was called the chief pledge, borsholder, borrow's elder, or tithing-man.

DECEPTIONE. A writ that lieth properly against him that deceitfully doth anything in the name of another, for one that receiveth damage or hurt thereby. It is either original or judicial. Fitzh. N. B.

DECIES TANTUM (Lat.). An obsolete writ, which formerly lay against a juror who had taken money for giving his verdict. Called so, because it was sued out to recover from him ten times as much as he took.

DECIMÆ (Lat.). The tenth part of the annual profit of each living, payable formerly to the pope. There were several valuations made of these livings at different times. The decimæ (tenths) were appropriated to the crown, and a new valuation established, by 26 Hen. VIII, c. 3; 1 Bla. Com. 284.

DECIMATION. The punishment of every tenth soldier by lot.

DECINERS. Those that had the oversight and check of ten friburgs for the maintenance of the king's peace. Cunningham.

DECISION. A judgment given by a competent tribunal. The French lawyers call the opinions which they give on questions propounded to them, decisions. See Inst. 1. 2. 8; Dig. 1. 2. 2; Hanna v. Com'rs of Putnam County, 29 Ind. 170; Estey v. Sheckler, 36 Wis. 434; also JUDGMENT.

This word is variously defined. It is said that the decision of a court is its judgment; Adams v. R. Co., 77 Miss. 194, 24 South. 200, 317, 28 South. 956, 60 L. R. A. 33; its opinion is the reason given therefor or the views of the judge in relation to a certain subject; In re Estate of Winslow, 12 Misc. 254, 34 N. Y. Supp. 637. The two words are sometimes used interchangeably; Pierce v. State, 109

Ind. 535, 10 N. E. 302; Estey v. Sheckler, 36 Wis. 434; Board of Education of City of Emporia v. State, 7 Kan. App. 620, 52 Pac. 466. The judgment is recorded upon its rendition, and can be changed only through an application to the court. The decision is the property of the judges, subject to modification until transcribed in the records; Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 27, 73 Am. Dec. 565; Coffey v. Gamble, 117 Ia. 545, 91 N. W. 813. The term decision is held to be a popular and not a technical word and to mean little more than a concluded opinion. It does not by itself amount to judgment or order as used in section 29 of the Local Government Act of 1888. It is an exercise of a consultative jurisdiction and is not appealable; [1891] 1 Q. B. 725.

The word decision includes: Dismissal of an action for insufficiency of evidence; Volmer v. Stagerman, 25 Minn. 234; dismissal of appeal; Estey v. Sheckler, 36 Wis. 434; the findings of the court upon which a decree or judgment may be entered; Matter of Winslow, 12 Misc. 254, 34 N. Y. Supp. 637; an order of a probate court classifying a demand against the estate; Wolfley v. McPherson, 61 Kan. 492, 59 Pac. 1054; a subsequent order vacating it and relegating the demand to a different class; id.

It is, among other things, an order determining the judgment to be entered; Garr, Scott & Co. v. Spaulding, 2 N. D. 414, 51 N. W. 867. It has a broader significance than judgment; Wolfley v. McPherson, 61 Kan. 492, 59 Pac. 1504. A "decision upon the merits" is one upon the justice of the case and not upon technical grounds merely; Mulhern v. R. Co., 2 Wyo. 465. "Surely a non-suit is not a decision;" id. A ruling upon the admission of evidence is not included in the words "decision or intermediate order"; State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091, 44 Pac. 399; the word is sometimes treated as synonymous with judgment; Estey v. Sheckler, 36 Wis. 434; Board of Education of City of Emporia v. State, 7 Kan. App. 620, 52 Pac. 466; Pierce v. State, 109 Ind. 535, 10 N. E. 302; it has been said that "in an abstract sense there is a shade of difference between the import of the word 'decision' and the word 'judgment'"; the former "is the resolution of the principles which determine the controversy; the judgment is the formal paper applying them to the rights of the parties"; Buckeye Pipe Line Co. v. Fee, 62 Ohio St. 543, 555, 57 N. E. 446, 78 Am. St. Rep. 743. As used in a statute characterizing the findings of fact and conclusions of law as a "written decision" it means something which must precede the judgment and upon which it is entered as upon a verdict; Corbett v. Job, 5 Nev. 201.

The decisions of courts are not the law, but only evidences of the law, stronger or weaker according to the number and uniformity of adjudications, the unanimity or dissension of the judges, the solidity of the reasons, and the perspicuity and precision with which the reasons are expressed; Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 6 Am. Dec. 290; United States Savings & Loan Co. v. Harris, 113 Fed. 27; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865; Phipps v. Harding, 70 Fed. 468, 17 C. C. A. 203, 30 L. R. A. 513; Falconer v. Simmons, 51 W. Va. 172, 41 S. E. 193.

But on the other hand the term "law" is said to include the decisions of the courts; Miller v. Dunn, 72 Cal. 462, 14 Pac. 27, 1 Am. St. Rep. 67. Possibly, if not probably, the difference is one of expression rather than of substance.

DECISORY OATH. See OATH.

DECLARANT. One who makes a declaration.

DECLARATION. In Pleading. A specification, in a methodical and logical form, of the circumstances which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action. 1 Chit. Pl. 248; Co. Litt. 17 a, 303 a; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (B); Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C, 7; Lawes, Pl. 35; Steph. Pl. 36; Dixon v. Sturgeon, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 28.

In real actions, it is most properly called the count; in a personal one, the declaration; Steph. Pl. 36; Doctr. Plac. 83; Lawes, Pl. 33. See Fitzh. N. B. 16 a, 60 d. The latter, however, is now the general term,—being that commonly used when referring to real and personal actions without distinction; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2815.

In an action at law, the declaration answers to the bill in chancery, the libel (narratio) of the civilians, and the allegations of the ecclesiastical courts.

It may be general or special: for example, in debt on a bond, a declaration counting on the penal part only is general; one which sets out both the bond and the condition and assigns the breach is special; Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 50.

The parts of a declaration are the title of the court and term; the venue, see VENUE; the commencement, which contains a statement of the names of the parties and the character in which they appear, whether in their own right, the right of another, in a political capacity, etc., the mode in which the defendant has been brought into court, and a brief recital of the form of action to be proceeded in; 1 Saund. 318, n. 3, 111; 6 Term 130; the statement of the cause of action, which varies with the facts of the case and the nature of the action to be brought, and which may be made by means of one or of several counts; 3 Wils. 185; Neal v. Lewis, 2 Bay (S. C.) 206, 1 Am. Dec. 640; one count may incorporate, by reference, certain general averments which are in a previous count in the same pleading; Green v. Clifford, 94 Cal. 49, 29 Pac. 331; see COUNT; the conclusion, which in personal and mixed actions should be to the damage (ad damnum, which title see) of the plaintiff; Comyus, Dig. Pleader (C, 84); 10 Co. 116 b, 117 a; 1 M. & S. 236; unless in scire facias and in penal actions at the suit of a common informer, but which need not repeat the capacity of the plaintiff; Martin v. Smith, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 16, 21, 6 Am. Dec. 395; the profect of letters testamentary in case of a suit by an executor or administrator; Bacon, Abr. Executor (C); Dougl. 5, n.; Webb v. Danforth, 1 Day (Conn.) 305; and the pledges of prosecution, which are generally disused, and, when found, are only the fictitious persons, John Doe and Richard Roe.

The requisites or qualities of a declaration are that it must correspond with the process; and a variance in this respect was formerly the subject of a plea in abatement, see ABATEMENT; it must contain a statement of all the facts necessary in point of law to sustain the action, and no more; Co. Litt. 303 a; Plowd. 84, 122; Pep. Pl. 8. See Coffin v. Coffin, 2 Mass. 363; Cowp. 682; 6 East 422; Viner, Abr. Declaration; Barrett v. Lingle, 45 La. Ann. 935. The omission of a complaint to allege a material fact is cured where such fact is shown by the answer.

The circumstances must be stated with certainty and truth as to parties; Bentley v. Smith, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 170; 1 M. & S. 304; Simonds v. Speed, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 390; Jackson v. Alexander, 8 Tex. 109; Totty's Ex'r v. Donald, 4 Munf. (Va.) 430; time of occurrence, and in personal actions it must, in general, state a time when every material or traversable fact happened; Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sanders, 36 N. H. 252; Givan v. Swadley, 3 Ind. 484; Haven v. Shaw, 23 N. J. L. 309; Hyslop v. Jones, 3 McLean, 96, Fed. Cas. No. 13,953; and when a venue is necessary, time must also be mentioned; 5 Term 620; Com. Dig. Pleader (C, 19); Barnes v. Matteson, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 375; though the precise time is not material; U. S. v. Vigol, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 346, 1 L. Ed. 409; Cheetham v. Lewis, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 43; Simpson v. Talbot, 25 Ala. 469; unless it constitute a material part of the contract declared upon, or where the date, etc., of a written contract is averred; 2 Campb. 307; Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sanders, 36 N. H. 252; Haven v. Shaw, 23 N. J. L. 309; or in ejectment, in which the demise must be stated to have been made after the title of the lessor of the plaintiff and his right of entry accrued; 2 East 257; Van Alen v. Rogers, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 283, 1 Am. Dec. 113; the place, see VENUE; and, generally, as to particulars of the demand, sufficient to enable the defendant to ascertain precisely the plaintiff's claim; 2 B. & P. 265; 2 Saund. 74 b; Posey v. Hair, 12 Ala. 567; Van Rensselaer v. Jones, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 643; Corey v. Bath, 35 N. H. 530; Heirn v. McCaughan, 32 Miss. 17, 66 Am. Dec. 588; Fulwood v. Graham, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 493.

In Evidence. A statement made by a party to a transaction, or by one having an interest in the existence of some fact in relation to the same.

Such declarations are regarded as original evidence and admissible as such—first, when the fact that the declaration was made is the point in question; Bartlet v. Delprat, 4 Mass. 702; Pelletreau v. Jackson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 110; Phelps v. Foot, 1 Conn. 387; 2 B. & Ad. 845; 9 Bingh. 359; 1 Br. & B. 269; second, including expressions of bodily feeling, where the existence or nature of such feelings is the object of inquiry, as expressions of affection in actions for crim. con.; 1 B. & Ald. 90; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469; see 2 C. & P. 22; Roosa v. Loan Co., 132 Mass. 439; representations by a sick person of the nature, symptoms, and effects of the malady under which he is laboring; 6 East 188; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469; see 9 C. & P. 275; Bacon v. Inhabitants of Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 581; Wilkinson v. Moseley, 30 Ala. 562; Feagin v. Beasley, 23 Ga. 17; Wadlow v. Perryman's Adm'r, 27 Mo. 279; State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 377, 73 Am. Dec. 312; Collins v. Waters, 54 Ill. 485; in prosecution for rape, the declarations of the woman forced; 1 Russ. Cr. 565; 2 Stark. 241; Laughlin v. State, 18 Ohio 99, 51 Am. Dec. 444; third, in cases of pedigree, including the declarations of deceased persons nearly related to the parties in question; 2 C. & K. 701; 1 De G. & S. 40; Jewell v. Jewell, 1 How. (U. S.) 231, 11 L. Ed. 108; Jackson v. Browner, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 37; Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 347, 7 Am. Dec. 277; Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 371; Dupoyster v. Gagan, 84 Ky. 403; 1 S. Eastman*, 107 Ill. 535; family records; 5 Cl. & F. 24; 7 Scott, N. R. 141; Douglass v. Sanderson, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 116, 1 L. Ed. 312; Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. 381; Jackson v. Cooley, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 128; fourth, cases where the declaration may be considered as a part of the res gestæ; Tucker v. Peaslee, 36 N. H. 167; Banfield v. Parker, id. 353; George v. Thomas, 16 Tex. 74; 67 Am. Dec. 612; Hardee v. Langford, 6 Fla. 13; 14 Cox, Cr. Cas. 341; Clayton v. Tucker, 20 Ga. 452; Deveney v. Baxter, 157 Mass. 9, 31 N. E. 690; Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Worthington, 95 Ala. 598, 10 South. 839; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Herick, 49 Ohio St. 25, 29 N. E. 1052; Hermes v. R. Co., 80 Wis. 590, 50 N. W. 584, 27 Am. St. Rep. 69; Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412, 54 N. W. 895; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118; State v. Martin, 124 Mo. 527, 28 S. W. 12 (in which the cases are reviewed); including those made by persons in the possession of land; 5 B. & Ad. 223; 16 M. & W. 497; Inhabitants of West Cambridge v. Inhabitants of Lexington, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 536; Weldman v.

Kohr, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 174; Snelgrove v. Martin, 2 McCord (S. C.) 241; Crane v. Marshall, 16 Me. 27, 33 Am. Dec. 631; Perkins v. Webster, 2 N. H. 287; Doe v. Campbell, 23 N. C. 482; Abney v. Kingsland & Co., 10 Ala. 355, 44 Am. Dec. 491; Stark v. Boswell, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 405, 41 Am. Dec. 752; Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29; Brush v. Blanchard, 19 Ill. 31; Sharp v. Maxwell, 30 Miss. 589; Cunningham v. Fuller, 35 Neb. 58, 52 N. W. 836; and entries made in the ordinary course of business by those whose duty it was to make such entries; as field-book entries by a deceased surveyor; [1905] 2 Ch. 164; reversing [1904] 2 Ch. 525. The question on which the two courts differed was whether the case was within the principle of Price v. Torrington, 1 Salk. 285, 1 Smith, Leading Cases 139, which was recognized as the leading case for the admission of such entries made by a deceased person. But it must be shown that it was the duty of the deceased person to do the particular thing and to record contemporaneously the fact of having done it; [1904] 2 Ch. 534; 2 Ont. App. 247; 8 id. 564. The limitation of duty thus adhered to in England and Canada, though suggested in earlier American cases; Nichols v. Goldsmith, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 161; "did not with us survive"; 2 Wigm. Ev. § 1524.

Such entries have been admitted in this country in a great variety of cases; as a private memorandum of marriages kept by a clergyman and the baptismal registry of a church; Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 18 L. Ed. 186; American Life Ins. Co. & Trust Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507; Hunt v. Order of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671, 31 N. W. 576, 8 Am. St. Rep. 855; Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 Allen (Mass.) 161; Meconce v. Mower, 37 Kan. 298, 15 Pac. 155; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 708; the minutes of a church conference; Pettyjohn's Ex'r v. Pettyjohn, 1 Houst. (Del.) 332; Rayburn v. Elrod, 43 Ala. 700; Nason v. First Church, 66 Me. 100; the diary of an attorney; Burke v. Baker, 188 N. Y. 561, 80 N. E. 1033; a log book; U. S. v. Mitchell, 3 Wash. C. C. 95, Fed. Cas. No. 15,792; contra, Cameron v. Rich, 5 Rich. L. (S. C.) 352, 52 Am. Dec. 747; a physician's entries in the ward book of an asylum; State v. Hinkley, 9 N. J. L. J. 118; a school register; Falls v. Gamble, 66 N. C. 455; a diploma to show that a physician had his degree; Holmes v. Halde, 74 Me. 28, 43 Am. Rep. 567.

The following have been held inadmissible as such entries: Commercial rating of a commercial agency; Richardson v. Stringfellow, 100 Ala. 416, 14 South. 283; Baker v. Ashe, 80 Tex. 356, 16 S. W. 36; Henderson v. Miller, 36 Ill. App. 232; the book of a car inspector; Hicks v. Southern Ry., 63 S. C. 559, 41 S. E. 753; a nurse's record of what transpired at the testator's sick bed; In re Flint's Estate, 100 Cal. 391, 34 Pac. 863; a school catalogue; State v. Daniels, 44 N. H. 383; the certificate of a weigher's assistant, not himself an official; Prew v. Donahue, 118 Mass. 438. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 115.

Originally such statements, to be admissible, must have been in writing, and the first authority for the admission of oral statements is a dictum of Lord Campbell in the Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & Fin. 113, for which the only authority cited, 3 B. & Ad. 890, was a case of written evidence, but it was followed by the admission of a statement in the nature of a report by a constable to his superior officer; 13 Cox C. C. 293. Oral statements of deceased physicians were admitted to show the disease of which the insured had died in a suit on a life insurance policy; McNair v. Ins. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 144; but such statements as to the nature of her illness, when offered by respondent in a petition for dissolution of marriage in support of cross charges, were rejected as not made in the course of duty; 22 T. L. R. 52; and verbal reports of a foreman to a superintendent as to matters material to the issue were admitted; Williams v. Walton & Whann Co., 9 Houst. (Del.) 322, 32 Atl. 726. See 19 Harv. L. Rev. 301.

Declarations by a party of his intention, where that is of itself a distinct and material fact in a chain of circumstances, are admissible; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706; such declarations being acts from which intention may be inferred; Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 189, 31 N. E. 961, 24 L. R. A. 235; Buel v. State, 104 Wis. 149, 80 N. W. 78.

Declarations regarded as secondary evidence or hearsay are yet admitted in some cases: first, in matters of general and public interest, common reputation being admissible as to matters of public interest; 6 M. & W. 234; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; but reputation amongst those only connected with the place or business in question, in regard to matters of general interest merely; 1 Cr. M. & R. 929; 2 B. & Ad. 245; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 412, 9 L. Ed. 475; Southwest School Dist. v. Williams, 48 Conn. 504; McCall v. U. S., 1 Dak. 320, 46 N. W. 608; and the matter must be of a quasi public nature; 10 B. & C. 637; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 412, 9 L. Ed. 475; Brander v. Ferriday, 16 La. 296; see REPUTATION; second, in cases of ancient possession where ancient documents are admitted, if found in a place in which and under the care of persons with whom such papers might reasonably (in the opinion of the trial judge; 1 Chase Steph. Dig. Evid. 156) be expected to be found; Inhabitants of Greenfield v. Inhabitants of Camden, 74 Me. 56; Applegate v. Lexington & C. County Min. Co., 117 U. S. 255, 6 Sup. Ct. 742, 29 L. Ed. 892; Quinn v. Eagleston, 108 Ill. 248; if they purport to be a part of the transaction to which they relate; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 144;

see ANCIENT WRITINGS; third, in case of declarations and entries made against the interest of the party making them, whether made concurrently with the act or subsequently; 3 B. & Ad. 893; Cramer v. Gregg, 40 Ill. App. 442; Irish-American Bank v. Ludlum, 49 Minn. 235, 51 N. W. 1047; Keesey v. Old, 82 Tex. 22, 17 S. W. 928; Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384, 33 N. E. 228; but such declarations and entries, to be so admitted, must appear or be shown to be against the pecuniary interest of the party making them; 11 Cl. & F. 85; 2 Jac. & W. 789; 3 Bingh. N. C. 308; Drawdy v. Hesters, 130 Ga. 161, 60 S. E. 451, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 190; and if so they may be admitted, whether or not made in the ordinary course of business, as where a solicitor charges himself with receipts on his client's behalf; 53 W. R. 169; but letters written and signed by one deceased, or a memorandum made by him, are not admissible by a party claiming under him if not shown to have been communicated to the party claiming adversely; Elsberg v. Sowards, 66 Hun 28, 21 N. Y. Supp. 10; it was established by the Sussex Peerage Case, 1 Cl. & Fin. 85, that the interest must be either pecuniary or proprietary; this excluded the admission by a clergyman that he had unlawfully solemnized a marriage, which was so far against his interest that it would have subjected him to punishment; this ruling has been generally accepted, but that it is so has been said to be "highly unfortunate"; 1 Gr. on Ev. (16th Ed. by Wigmore) § 152 d; fourth, dying declarations.

Dying declarations, made in cases of homicide where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declarations, are admissible; 2 B. & C. 605; 2 Mood. & R. 53; Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 31, 3 Am. Dec. 390; Wilson v. Boerene, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 286; Anthony v. State, Meigs (Tenn.) 265, 33 Am. Dec. 143; if made under a sense of impending death; 2 Leach 563; Montgomery v. State, 11 Ohio 424; Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229, 35 Am. Dec. 54; Com. v. McPike, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 181, 50 Am. Dec. 727; Smith v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 9; Logan v. State, id. 24; State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 22 S. W. 378; State v. Aldrich, 50 Kan. 666, 32 Pac. 408; Wallace v. State, 90 Ga. 117, 15 S. E. 700; State v. Cronin, 64 Conn. 293, 29 Atl. 536. And see 3 C. & P. 269; 6 id. 386; Vass v. Com., 3 Leigh (Va.) 786, 24 Am. Dec. 695; State v. Poll, 8 N. C. 442, 9 Am. Dec. 655; State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 16 S. E. 332; King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 20 S. W. 169; Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 13 Sup. Ct. 50, 36 L. Ed. 917. Ordinarily they are admissible only in trials for homicide of the declarant, but they have been admitted on trial for attempted abortion on the woman who made them; State v. Meyer, 65 N. J. L. 237, 47 Atl. 486, 86 Am. St. Rep. 634; Montgomery

v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 41 Am. Rep. 815, where the question is discussed at large and the conclusion reached that because death resulted and that fact entered into the statutory crime, they were admissible. It was held otherwise in People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95, and in State v. Harper, 35 Ohio St. 78, 35 Am. Rep. 596, such declarations were excluded because, although the woman died, her death was not the subject of the charge. The declarations must have been made by the person alleged to have been murdered; State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 418; Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 321, 13 Am. Rep. 740, where husband and wife were killed and it was held error to admit declarations of the latter on trial for murder of the former; but it has also been held that, where two or more were killed at the same time, declarations of one were admissible at the trial for the murder of the other; State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. (S. C.) 321; 2 Moo. & Rob. 53. In the Pennsylvania case the court distinguished it from these cases, "supposing them to be good law." The declarations must be connected with the death which is the subject of the trial; People v. Wong Chuey, 117 Cal. 624, 49 Pac. 833; and must concern the res gesta, not previous relations; People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 242, 64 N. E. 814. They must be made under an actual apprehension of impending death; People v. Evans, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 492; People v. Brecht, 120 App. Div. 769, 105 N. Y. Supp. 436 (in both of which statements were rejected because declarants had not wholly abandoned hope); State v. Hennessy, 29 Nev. 320, 90 Pac. 221, 13 Ann. Cas. 1122 (where they were admitted); after hope of recovery is gone; Small v. Com., 91 Pa. 304; and even a faint hope excludes them; Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 296; People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, 44 Am. Rep. 549; but subsequent lingering, with some expression of hope, does not, if at the time they were made there was no hope; Swisher v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 963, 21 Am. Dec. 330. A statement made in writing before hope was abandoned and confirmed afterwards was admissible; Wilson v. Com., 60 S. W. 400, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1251; State v. McEvoy, 9 S. C. 208. The fear of death need not be expressed to the person who receives the declaration, if its existence is otherwise established; Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355, 56 L. R. A. 353, 84 Am. St. Rep. 506. A statement reduced to writing may be supplemented by others made orally at the same time; Herd v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 575, 67 S. W. 495 (criticised, 11 Y. L. J. 430); contra; 1 Str. 499; Whart. Hom. § 766; Gr. Ev. § 160.

Although the time elapsing between the declarations and death is proper to be considered, they will not be made inadmissible by a few subsequent hours of life; People v. Weaver, 108 Mich. 649, 66 N. W. 567; State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 37 Pac. 174, 42 Am.

St. Rep. 322; or even some days; 6 C. & P. 386; Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455; Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 66; State v. Jones, 38 La. Ann. 792; Baxter v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 657; State v. Yee Wee, 7 Idaho, 188, 61 Pac. 588.

It is not necessary that the declarant state that he is expecting immediate death; it is enough if, from all the circumstances, it satisfactorily appears that such was the condition of his mind at the time of the declarations; State v. Wilson, 24 Kan. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 257; but there must be a belief that there is no hope of recovery; Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 296; People v. Brecht, 120 App. Div. 769, 105 N. Y. Supp. 436; State v. Welsor, 117 Mo. 570, 21 S. W. 443; 65 J. P. 426; 67 id. 151, where the expression "I'm dying" was used and the declarations were excluded, while in 71 id. 152, the same expression was used and they were admitted; as they were also when declarant said he did not know what expectation of recovery he had; State v. Thompson, 49 Or. 46, 88 Pac. 583, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1015. The belief that death is inevitable supplies the place of an oath; Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 106; People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29; Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 636. Accordingly, although the common law rule was said to require that declarant should have a belief in God and a future state; 1 Str. 499; 17 Y. L. J. 403; that rule was considered abrogated in the cases just cited and the want of such belief has been held to be no ground for excluding declarations; State v. Hood, 63 W. Va. 182, 59 S. E. 971, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 448, 129 Am. St. Rep. 964; while other cases hold otherwise, though belief is presumed until the contrary is proved; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463; but if admitted in such case, they should not be relied on; State v. Elliott, 45 Ia. 486. Reckless and profane language will not render declarations inadmissible; Kirby v. State, 151 Ala. 66, 44 South. 38; but will affect their credibility; Nesbit v. State, 43 Ga. 238; and cross-examination will be allowed as to that, as being material in showing both a reckless and irreverent state of mind and hostility towards the accused; Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 105.

The declaration may have been made by signs; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 161 b; and in answer to questions; 7 C. & P. 238; 2 Leach 563; Vass v. Com., 3 Leigh (Va.) 786, 24 Am. Dec. 695. They may be in writing; State v. Kindle, 47 Ohio St. 358, 24 N. E. 485; King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 20 S. W. 169. The substance only need be given by the witness; Montgomery v. State, 11 Ohio, 424; Ward v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 101; but the declaration must have been complete; Vass v. Com., 3 Leigh (Va.) 786, 24 Am. Dec. 695; Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 13 Sup. Ct. 50, 36 L. Ed. 917; and the circumstances under which it was made must be shown to the court; 3 C. & P. 629; 7 id. 187; State v. Poll, 8 N. C. 444, 9 Am. Dec. 655; Hill v. Com., 2 Gratt. (Va.) 594; McDaniel v. State, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 401, 47 Am. Dec. 93.

It is for the court to determine whether the preliminary conditions make the evidence admissible; State v. Cronin, 64 Conn. 293, 29 Atl. 536; State v. Doris, 51 Or. 136, 94 Pac. 44, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660; and this includes the question of impending death; Roten v. State, 31 Fla. 514, 12 South. 910; 1 Stark. 521, and note (where the case of Rex v. Woodcock, Leach 593, contra, is discredited); People v. Smith, 104 N. Y. 491, 504, 10 N. E. 873, 58 Am. Rep. 537; and this decision of the court comprises both fact and law, as to the first of which it is final and as to the second subject to review; State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12; Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560 (Holmes, C. J.); but having been admitted, the weight of the evidence is for the jury; State v. Sexton, 147 Mo. 89, 48 S. W. 452; and this includes consideration of the circumstances under which they were made; Bush v. State, 109 Ga. 120, 34 S. E. 298; State v. Phillips, 118 Ia. 660, 92 N. W. 876; and it is error to charge that they should be treated as of the same weight and value as evidence produced under the usual tests and safeguards; People v. Kraft, 148 N. Y. 631, 43 N. E. 80. The conclusions of the trial court, as to the admissibility of the declarations, should not be disturbed unless it is manifest that the facts did not warrant them; Gipe v. State, 165 Ind. 433, 75 N. E. 881, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 419, 112 Am. St. Rep. 238; Swisher v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 963, 21 Am. Rep. 330.

Such declarations are inadmissible when the witness does not pretend to give either the words or substance of what the deceased said, or all that he said; State v. Johnson, 118 Mo. 491, 24 S. W. 229, 40 Am. St. Rep. 405. The admissibility of the declaration is not affected by the fact that subsequently to their being made and before death the declarant entertained a belief in recovery; 14 Cox, Cr. Cas. 565, 28 Engl. Rep. 587, and note; State v. Shaffer, 23 Or. 555, 32 Pac. 545.

Dying declarations must be confined to the statement of facts, not conclusions; State v. Horn, 204 Mo. 528, 103 S. W. 69; or opinions; State v. Horn, 204 Mo. 528, 103 S. W. 69 (where a statement that declarant shot the accused in self-defense was excluded as a mere conclusion); although it is to be noted that the application of the "opinion rule" to such declarations has been vigorously disputed; 2 Wig. Ev. § 1447. It is also to be noted that the controversy usually turns on whether the expression used is fact or opinion.

The admission of dying declarations has been uniformly held not to contravene the constitutional right of the accused to be confronted with the witnesses against him;

Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 243, 15 Sup. Ct. 337, 39 L. Ed. 409; Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 321, 13 Am. Rep. 740; State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131; Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 246; 2 Wigm. Ev. § 1398, and note, citing the cases.

They are admitted either for or against the accused; Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 13 Sup. Ct. 50, 36 L. Ed. 917; State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441.

It has been held that they may be discredited by evidence of previous contradictory statements; State v. Lodge, 9 Houst. (Del.) 542, 33 Atl. 312; but with expressions of doubt and one judge dissenting, and the case has been criticised; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 432.

For full discussion of dying declarations and collections of cases, see 2 Wigm. Ev. §§ 1430-1451; 56 L. R. A. 353, note; also an article by Wilbur Larremore urging that their admission should be abolished by statute; 41 Am. L. Rev. 660.

Other Declarations. Declarations as to the physical or mental condition of the declarant are sometimes admitted as an exception to the rule against hearsay, as the natural and necessary evidence of bodily or mental feelings, where those are material as facts to be proved. The underlying principle is thus expressed by Mellish, L. J., in the St. Leonard's Will case: "Whenever it is material to prove the state of a person's mind, or what was passing in it, and what were his intentions, then you may prove what he said, because that is the only means by which you can find out what his intentions were." L. R. 1 P. Div. 154, 251. Thus such declarations as to one's own physical condition, as of the existence of pain, have been admitted in a suit by declarant because, as it was said, they "in their very nature must be evidence, though emanating from the party himself who seeks to prove them in his own favor"; Phillips v. Kelly, 29 Ala. 628. Exclamations of pain and suffering were held properly admitted because "this is the natural and ordinary mode in which physical pain and suffering are made known to others, and the only mode by which their nature and extent can be ascertained"; Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180, which was an action against a surgeon for malpractice causing death. Such declarations or exclamations are admitted when made to a physician in the course of treatment; State v. Gedicke, 43 N. J. L. 86; but not when he was "called in, not to give medical aid, but to make up medical testimony," and the time was post litem motam; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537, 31 Am. Rep. 321; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Lambertson, 60 N. J. L. 452, 38 Atl. 683, where declarations were held clearly incompetent, though even under such circumstances natural expressions of present pain might not be.

It is suggested in a note on the last two cases that such testimony is admissible without the qualifications of being made to a physician and before the controversy arose; 11 Harv. L. Rev. 467. As to the former point the Alabama case sustains the contention, but the tendency is to extend the cases to which the post litem motam rule is to be applied and, as appears infra, its limitations are too narrowly stated in the note cited. In the Michigan case, Judge Christiancy leaves the question open whether it applies to this class of cases.

Declarations, to be admissible as original evidence, must have been made at the time of doing the act to which they relate; Enos v. Tuttle, 3 Conn. 250; Scaggs v. State, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 722; In re Taylor, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 611; Cherry v. McCall, 23 Ga. 193; O'Kelly v. O'Kelly, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 436; Banfield v. Parker, 36 N. H. 353; Tompkins v. Saltmarch, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 275; 1 B. & Ad. 135. For cases of entries in books, see Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 234; Ingraham v. Bockius, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 285, 11 Am. Dec. 730; Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427; Hamilton v. State, 36 Ind. 280, 10 Am. Rep. 22.

To authorize their admission as secondary evidence, the declarant must be dead: 11 Price 162; 1 C. & K. 58; Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 334; and the declaration must have been made before any controversy arose; 3 Campb. 444; 10 B. & C. 657; 4 M. & S. 486; Hamilton v. Smith, 74 Conn. 374, 50 Atl. 884; Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 328, 7 L. Ed. 164. The rule that such declarations must have been made ante litem motam was applied to cases of pedigree in the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 401; and to matters of public interest in 3 id. 444; and, pari ratione, the Connecticut cases above cited apply the same principle to boundary cases, the latest one in date excluding declarations made after the controversy arose which would have contradicted those of the same person made before it, which were admitted. In the opinion of the supreme court approving this ruling, Judge Baldwin said that, while it may seem hard that the earlier declarations could not be met by proof of the later inconsistent ones, "the latter, having been uttered after the dispute which resulted in this suit had arisen, do not carry that absolute assurance of sincerity and impartiality on which is rested this exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence." And yet the opinion had stated that at the time of the later declarations, which were thus excluded, suit had not been brought, and there was no claim that declarant knew of any dispute.

It must also appear that the declarant was in a condition or situation to know the facts, or that it was his duty to know them; 9 B. & C. 935; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 193, note. The test to be applied to dying declarations to determine their admissibility is whether a living witness would have been permitted to testify to the matters contained in the declaration; State v. Foot You, 24 Or. 61, 32 Pac. 1031, 33 Pac. 537.

The declarations of an agent respecting a subject-matter, with regard to which he represents the principal, bind the principal; Story, Ag. §§ 134-137; 2 Q. B. 212; Batchelder v. Emery, 20 N. H. 165; Winter v. Burt, 31 Ala. 33; Wellington v. R. R., 158 Mass. 185, 33 N. E. 393; if made in the line of his duty and within the scope of his authority; Weeks v. Inhabitants of Needham, 156 Mass. 289, 31 N. E. 8; Pittsburgh & L. S. Iron Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 92 Mich. 252, 52 N. W. 628; Van Doren v. Bailey, 48 Minn. 305, 51 N. W. 375; if made during the continuance of the agency with regard to a transaction then pending; 8 Bingh. 451; Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 336, 5 L. Ed. 100; Hannay v. Stewart, 6 Watts (Pa.) 487; Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101; Hayward Rubber Co. v. Dunklee, 30 Vt. 29; Raiford v. French, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 367; Winter v. Burt, 31 Ala. 33; Burgess v. Inhabitants of Wareham, 7 Gray (Mass.) 345; Vail v. Judson, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 165; Idaho Forwarding Co. v. Forwarding Ins. Co., 8 Utah, 41, 29 Pac. 826, 17 L. R. A. 586; and similar rules extend to partners' declarations; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 112; Fail v. McArthur, 31 Ala. 26; Tucker v. Peaslee, 36 N. H. 167; Slipp v. Hartley, 50 Minn. 118, 52 N. W. 386, 36 Am. St. Rep. 629. See PARTNER.

Where several defendants are interested in the relief prayed against them, admissions of one of them, made against his own interest, are admissible in evidence to affect him, although they would not be evidence to affect his co-defendants. See Grace v. Nesbitt, 109 Mo. 9, 18 S. W. 1118; Redding v. Wright, 49 Minn. 322, 51 N. W. 1056; Roberts v. Kendall, 3 Ind. App. 339, 29 N. E. 487.

As to declarations made over a telephone, see TELEPHONE.

When more than one person is concerned in the commission of a crime, as in cases of riots, conspiracies, and the like, the declarations of either of the parties, made while acting in the common design, are evidence against the whole; 3 B. & Ald. 566; Com. v. Crowninshield, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 497; State v. Thibau, 30 Vt. 100; Mack v. State, 32 Miss. 405; Poole v. Gerrard, 9 Cal. 593; McKenzie v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 568, 25 S. W. 426, 40 Am. St. Rep. 795; People v. Collins, 64 Cal. 293, 30 Pac. 847; but the declarations of one of the rioters or conspirators made after the accomplishment of their object and when they no longer acted together, are evidence only against the party making them; 2 Russ. Cr. 572; 1 Mood. & M. 501; Brown v. U. S., 150 U. S. 93, 14 Sup. Ct. 37, 37 L. Ed. 1010; Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 58, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343. And see 2 C. & P. 232; Chelmsford Co. v. Demarest, 7 Gray (Mass.) 1; Com. v. Ingraham, id. 46. If one of two persons accused of having together committed a crime of murder makes a voluntary confession in the presence of the other, under such circumstances that he would naturally have contradicted it if he did not assent, the confession is admissible in evidence against both; Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343.

See HEARSAY EVIDENCE; BOUNDARY; MARRIAGE; DOMICIL; REPUTATION; PEDIGREE; CONFESSION. And for an extensive collection of cases on the points herein stated see Chamb. Best. Ev. §§ 496-505 and the American notes thereto.

In Scotch Law. The prisoner's statement before a magistrate.

When used on trial, it must be proved that the prisoner was in his senses at the time of making it, and made it of his own free will; 2 Hume 328; Alison, Pr. 557. It must be signed by the witnesses present when it was made; Alison, Pr. 557, and by the prisoner himself; Ark. Just. 70. See Paterson, Comp. §§ 952, 970.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

A public act by which, through the Continental Congress, the thirteen British colonies in America declared their independence, in the name and by the authority of the people, on the fourth day of July, 1776, wherein are set forth:—

Certain natural and inalienable rights of man; the uses and purposes of governments; the right of the people to institute or to abolish them; the sufferings of the colonies, and their right to withdraw from the tyranny of the king of Great Britain;

The various acts of tyranny of the British king;

The petitions for redress of those injuries, and the refusal to redress them; the recital of an appeal to the people of Great Britain, and of their being deaf to the voice of justice and consanguinity;

An appeal to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of the intentions of the representatives;

A declaration that the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is and ought to be dissolved;

A pledge by the representatives to each other of their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

The effect of this declaration was the establishment of the government of the United States as free and independent.

DECLARATION OF INTENTION. The act of an alien who goes before a court of record and in a formal manner declares that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whereof at the time he may be a citizen or subject. See Act of June 29, 1906; R. S. § 2174.

This declaration must, in ordinary cases, be made at least two years before his admission. Id. But there are exceptions to this rule. See NATURALIZATION.

DECLARATION OF LONDON. A declaration concerning the laws of naval war, agreed upon February 26, 1909, by the powers assembled at the London Naval Conference. The preamble states that the Declaration was made in view of the desirability of an agreement upon the rules to be applied by the International Prize Court established by the Second Hague Conference. A preliminary provision states that it is agreed that the rules adopted "correspond in substance with the generally recognized principles of international law." The subjects dealt with by the Declaration include Blockade, Contraband, Un-neutral Service, Destruction of Neutral Prizes, Transfer to Neutral Flag, Enemy Character, Convoy, Search, and Compensation. The Declaration was signed by all the powers represented at the Conference, but ratifications have not yet been exchanged. Higgins, 538-613.

DECLARATION OF PARIS. A declaration respecting international maritime law set forth by the leading powers of Europe at the Congress of Paris April 16, 1856. The several articles are:

1. Privateering is and remains abolished.
2. The neutral flag covers enemy's goods, except contraband of war.
3. Neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not liable to confiscation under a hostile flag.
4. Blockades, to be binding, must be effective.

The states not represented at the Congress were invited to adhere to the Declaration, and the majority did so. The United States refused to accept the Declaration, owing to the rejection by the Congress of the "Marcy Amendment" exempting private property from capture at sea. But the United States adhered to the rules of the Declaration during the war with Spain in 1898. The Convention Relative to the Conversion of Merchant-Ships into War-Ships, adopted at The Hague in 1907, was directed against a threatened evasion of the Declaration of Paris in the form of Volunteer Navies. Higgins, 1-4.

DECLARATION OF ST. PETERSBURG.

A declaration made at St. Petersburg in 1868 on behalf of certain of the powers in relation to the prohibition of the use of explosive bullets in time of war.

DECLARATION OF TRUST. The act by which an individual acknowledges that a property, the title of which he holds, does in fact belong to another, for whose use he holds the same.

The instrument in which such an acknowledgment is made.

Such a declaration is not always in writing; though it is highly proper it should be so; Hill, Trust, 49, note y; Sugden, Pow. 200; 1 Washb. R. P. See Tiedm. Eq. Jur. 296; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; TRUST.

It differs from a declaration of a use. (1) The word "use" is restricted and refers only to real estate. (2) Use was of common occurrence in times when there existed no method by which the moral rights and claims of the cestui que use could be enforced, whereas trust, when employed in pari materia with use, has always contained within it a necessary implication that the rights and claims of the cestui que trust would be enforced in equity, and, since the coming into operation of the Judicature Act of 1873, in England, in courts of law also; Stroud Jud. Dict. See Uses.

DECLARATION OF WAR. The public proclamation of the government of a state, by which it declares itself to be at war with the foreign power mentioned, and which forbids all and every one to aid or assist the common enemy.

The power of declaring war is vested in congress by the constitution, art. 1, s. 8, § 12. There is no form or ceremony necessary except the passage of the act. A manifesto stating the causes of the war is usually published; but war exists as soon as the act takes effect.

The necessity of a declaration of war has long been a subject of controversy between publicists. In ancient times it was customary to precede hostilities by a public declaration communicated to the enemy, and to send a herald to demand satisfaction. II Phillipson 197. In modern times wars have more often begun without any declaration, but several instances of declarations during the 19th century show a return to the former practice. At the Hague Conference of 1907 a convention was adopted providing that the contracting powers should not commence hostilities "without a previous and unequivocal warning, which shall take the form either of a declaration of war, giving reasons, or of an ultimatum with conditional declaration of war." Higgins, 198-205.

DECLARATORY. Something which explains or ascertains what before was uncertain or doubtful: as, a declaratory statute, which simply declares or explains the law or the right, as it stood previous to the statute; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 28; they are usually passed to put an end to a doubt as to what the law is, and declare what it is and what it has been. 1 Bla. Com. 86. Very many of the state statutes in this country are declaratory of the common law, and were not passed to quiet a doubt but to incorporate into the law of the state well-settled common-law principles. As to declaratory statutes, see STATUTES.

DECLARE. Often used of making a positive statement, as "declare and affirm." Bassett v. Denn, 17 N. J. L. 432. To assert; to publish; to utter; to announce clearly some opinion or resolution. Knecht v. Ins. Co., 90 Pa. 121, 35 Am. Rep. 641. For its use in pleading, see DECLARATION.

DECLINATORY PLEA. A plea of sanctuary or of benefit of clergy. 4 Bla. Com. 333. Abolished, 6 & 7 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 6; Mozl. & W. Dict. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

DECOCTION. The operation of boiling certain ingredients in a fluid for the purpose of extracting the parts soluble at that temperature; the product of this operation.

In a case in which the indictment charged the prisoner with having administered to a woman a decoction of a certain shrub called savin, it appeared that the prisoner had administered an infusion, and not a decoction. The prisoner's counsel insisted that he was entitled to an acquittal on the ground that the medicine was misdescribed; but it was held that infusion and decoction are ejusdem generis, and that the variance was immaterial. 3 Camp. 74, 75.

DECOCTOR. In Roman Law. A bankrupt; a person who squandered the money of the state. Calvinus, Lex.

DECOLLATIO. Decollation; beheading.

DÉCONFES. In French Law. A name formerly given to those persons who died without confession, whether they refused to confess or whether they were criminals to whom the sacrament was refused. Droit de Canon, par M. l'Abbé André; Dupin, Gloss. to Loisel's Institutes.

DECOY. A pond used for the breeding and maintenance of water-fowl. 11 Mod. 74, 130; 3 Salk. 9; Holt 14; 11 East 571.

DECOY LETTER. A letter prepared and mailed on purpose to detect offenders against the postal and revenue laws. U. S. v. Whittier, 5 Dill. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 16,688.

The use of decoy letters by inspectors of mails for the purpose of ascertaining the depredations upon the mails is proper and justifiable as a means to that end; U. S. v. Dorsey, 40 Fed. 752.

A postal employé who takes from the mail under his charge a package containing things of value, though placed in the mail as a decoy and addressed to a person having no existence, is punishable, under R. S. secs. 3891, 5467, for taking a letter or package entrusted to him; U. S. v. Wight, 38 Fed.

106; U. S. v. Dorsey, 40 Fed. 752; contra, U. S. v. Denicke, 35 Fed. 407; U. S. v. Matthews, 35 Fed. 890, 1 L. R. A. 104. The fact that they were decoy letters is immaterial on a prosecution for embezzlement; Walster v. U. S., 42 Fed. 891.

The offence of sending letters by mail giving information where obscene pictures can be obtained does not lose its criminal character, though the letters were sent in response to a decoy letter, since it does not appear that the accused was solicited to use the mails and thus to commit an offence; U. S. v. Grimm, 50 Fed. 528.

A decoy letter placed in a sealed envelope and addressed to a fictitious person in a place where there was no post-office was wrapped up in a newspaper, enclosed in an ordinary paper wrapper, sealed and properly stamped and directed as the envelope inside the packet, and in this condition was handed by a post-office inspector and placed by him as a decoy in a basket kept for improperly illegibly addressed mail matter. It was held that this was not a mailing of the packet, and that it did not become mail matter; U. S. v. Rapp, 30 Fed. 818. A letter with a fictitious address which cannot be delivered is "not intended to be conveyed by mail" within the meaning of R. S. sec. 3891, providing a penalty for embezzling; U. S. v. Denicke, 35 Fed. 407.

Decoys are permissible to entrap criminals, or to present opportunity to those having criminal intent to, or who are willing to, commit crime, but not to create criminals; U. S. v. Healy, 202 Fed. 349 (selling liquor to an Indian).

DECREE. The judicial decision of a litigated cause by a court of equity. It is also applied to the determination of a cause in courts of admiralty and probate. It is accurate to use the word judgment as applied to courts of law and decree to courts of equity, although the former term is now used in a larger sense to include both. There is, however, a distinction between the two which is well understood, and may wisely be preserved as tending to keep before the mind the distinction between the two jurisdictions—quite as fundamental with respect to the final determination of a cause as to the forms of procedure and the principles of jurisprudence applied by the two tribunals. Even the modern tendency of courts of law to avail themselves of equitable forms of procedure and principles of decision has left undisturbed the well-defined line of demarcation between the judgment at law and the decree in equity. It is stated by an able writer, thus: "A judgment at law was either simply for the plaintiff or for the defendant. There could be no qualifications or modifications of the judgment. But such a judgment does not always touch the true justice of the cause or put the parties in the position they ought to occupy. While the plaintiff may be entitled, in a given case, to general relief, there may be some duty connected with the subject of litigation which he owes to the defendant, the performance of which, equally with the fulfilment of his duty by the defendant, ought, in a perfect system of remedial law, to be exacted. This result was attained by the decree of a court of equity which could be so moulded, or the execution of which could be so controlled and suspended, that the relative duties and rights of the parties could be secured and enforced;" Bisph. Eq. § 7.

It necessarily springs from the nature of the chancery jurisdiction that its determinations should be cast in a mould differing, toto caelo, from a judgment at law, and it would hardly be an exaggeration to say that the essential character of the decree, as described by the author quoted, is to be found in the literal application of the fundamental maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity." Accordingly, it is said that a court of equity will always reach, by a direct decree, what would otherwise be accomplished by a circuitry of proceedings; Dodd v. Wilson, 4 Del. Ch. 410. And even when a complainant is entitled to relief which it is inequitable to grant except upon a condition to be performed by him springing from an obligation of equity and good conscience, though not from legal right, a chancellor may make a decree only upon such condition; Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 557, 19 L. Ed. 501; Bisph. Eq. § 43. In such case, when something remains to be done by the party in order to entitle him to relief, while no present decree can be made, as the decree must be absolute and final and not contingent, the court will enter an interlocutory decree and suspend the entry of a final decree until the performance of such condition; Pleasanton v. Raughley, 3 Del. Ch. 124; and in default thereof in a reasonable time dismiss the bill; Pleasanton v. Raughley, 4 Del. Ch. 43. The doctrine of the wife's equity is a familiar instance of this principle.

Decrees are either interlocutory or final. This distinction is well recognized and important; Cornely v. Marckwald, 131 U. S. 159, 9 Sup. Ct. 744, 33 L. Ed. 117; Richmond v. Atwood, 52 Fed. 10, 2 C. C. A. 607, 17 L. R. A. 615 (citing many cases and discussing the distinction at large). In the strictest sense all decrees are interlocutory until signed and enrolled; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 6th Am. ed. 987, n. 1; but it is not in this sense that the terms are in practice used. But while there is a distinction well understood, it is not always easy of exact definition. The existence of the two classes is, however, necessary in American chancery courts, as the right of appeal is frequently confined to final decrees, as in the federal courts. The former is entered on some plea or issue arising in the cause which does not decide the main question; the latter settles the matter in dispute; and a final decree has the same effect as a judgment at law; 2 Madd. 462; 1 Ch. Ca. 27; 2 Vern. 89; 4 Brown, P. C. 287. See 7 Vin. Abr. 394; 7 Comyns, Dig. 445; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 223; McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 75, 85. For forms of decrees, see Seton, Decrees; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 986.

The federal equity rule No. 71 (in effect Feb. 1, 1913, 33 Sup. Ct. xxxviii) provides that decrees shall not recite the pleadings nor any other prior proceedings.

Final Decree. One which finally disposes of a cause, so that nothing further is left for the court to adjudicate. See 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 994, n.

A decree which determines the particular cause. It is not confined to those which terminate all litigation on the same right. 1 Kent 316.

A decree which leaves the case in such condition that, if on appeal there be an affirmance, nothing remains for the court below, but to execute it. Lodge v. Twell, 135 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 745, 34 L. Ed. 153; Mower v. Fletcher, 114 U. S. 127, 5 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 117; see Haseltine v. Central Bank, 183 U. S. 131, 22 Sup. Ct. 49, 46 L. Ed. 117.

A decree which disposes ultimately of the suit. Ad. Eq. 375. After such decree has been pronounced, the cause is at an end, and no further hearing can be had; id. 388; Lakin v. Lawrence, 195 Mass. 27, 80 N. E. 578.

No court can reverse or annul its decree after the term in which it was entered, nor can a decree be changed or modified so as substantially to vary or affect it; Illinois v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 77, 22 Sup. Ct. 300, 46 L. Ed. 440, citing prior cases; [1904] 1 K. B. 6; Bissell Carpet-Sweeper Co. v. Sweeper Co., 72 Fed. 545, 19 C. C. A. 25; Marshall Engine Co. v. Engine Co., 203 Mass. 410, 89 N. E. 548; nor even on petition for rehearing where error in the findings is shown; Pettit v. One Steel Lighter, 104 Fed. 1002; except to correct clerical mistakes; Cameron v. McRoberts, 3 Wheat. 591; Illinois v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 77, 22 Sup. Ct. 300, 46 L. Ed. 440; [1901] 1 K. B. 694; or to reinstate a cause dismissed by mistake; id. The Palmyra, 12 Wheat. 10, 6 L. Ed. 531; and a mistake in an order may be rectified while an appeal is pending; [1903] P. 88. In equity jurisdiction of the cause is sometimes retained to make further orders for executing the decree which may result in modifying details of the original decree; Mootry v. Grayson, 104 Fed. 613, 44 C. C. A. 83; and in admiralty a bill of review may be allowed after the term, on petition of the libellant, who, being himself free from fraud or negligence, is the victim of what is equivalent to fraud; Hall v. Chisholm, 117 Fed. 807, 55 C. C. A. 31, where the cases are reviewed; in this case certiorari was refused; Chisholm v. Hall, 191 U. S. 571, 24 Sup. Ct. 843, 48 L. Ed. 307.

A decree may be impeached for fraud in obtaining it, but for this purpose a bill of review is not available, being a continuance of the original litigation; an original bill must be resorted to as a new and independent litigation and it will lie pending an appeal from the original decree; Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 155 Fed. 524, 84 C. C. A. 38. In such case relief can be granted only on the ground of fraud in procuring the decree and not of error in granting it; McSherry Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 160 Fed. 948, 89 C. C. A. 26.

Prior to the establishment of the circuit courts of appeals there was an appeal to the United States supreme court only from final decrees of the circuit courts; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 692; and the same is still true of appeals from those courts; U. S. Rev. Stat. 1 Supp. 903; except that special provision is made for an appeal within a limited time directly to the circuit court of appeals from an order granting or refusing an interlocutory injunction or appointing a receiver, notwithstanding that an appeal from a final decree might be taken directly to the supreme court; Jud. Code § 129, U. S. Comp. St. Supp. (1911) 194. An order modifying an interlocutory decree for a broad perpetual injunction, so as to permit a limited sale of the articles of which the sale was restrained, is appealable under this act; Bissell Carpet-Sweeper Co. v. Sweeper Co., 72 Fed. 545, 19 C. C. A. 25, where the right of appeal and the different kinds of decrees in England and the United States are elaborately discussed. The omission of the word "final" in section 5 of the Act of March 3, 1891, does not extend the right of appeal to any question of jurisdiction in advance of final judgment or decree; McLish v. Roff, 141 U. S. 661, 12 Sup. Ct. 118, 35 L. Ed. 893. Accordingly, the question what is a final decree is one of constant occurrence and importance as determining the jurisdiction of the appellate courts. The same question arises under the constitutional and statutory regulations of appeals in many of the states, although in some of them the right of appeal is not limited to final decrees; e. g. Delaware, where it is extended to interlocutory decrees or orders, if prayed before the first day of the following term, while it may be taken from a final decree within two years after it is signed.

Another reason why the distinction is important is that a final decree, entered of record and not directed to be without prejudice is a bar to another bill filed between the same parties for the same subject-matter; Cochran v. Couper, 2 Del. Ch. 27.

In England the question whether a decree or order is final or interlocutory is in many cases material, as affecting the right or the time of appeal, and it has been much discussed with some contrariety of opinion. In [1903] 1 K. B. 547 (C. A.), Lord Alverstone, C. J., stated "the real test" to be whether the order did in fact finally dispose of the right of the parties, without respect to what would have been the effect of the order if the case had been decided the other way, and the court of appeal unanimously so decided, following the decision in 9 Q. B. D. 62, and disapproving a later ruling in [1891] 1 Q. B. (C. A.) 734, where it was held that an order would be considered interlocutory unless "whichever way it went it would finally determine the right of the parties," and which was cited as authority in [1902] 1 Ch. 29. Subsequently it was said by Cozens-Hardy, M. R., in [1907] 2 Ch. 145, that only a short time before the full court was summoned "with a view to laying down some definite pronouncement or rule" on the question "what order is interlocutory and what is final," characterized by him as "undoubtedly one of very great difficulty," but the court had declined to do so, confining itself to the decision of the particular case, and this course he proposed to follow. In the case to which he referred, [1906] 2 K. B. 569, Collins, M. R., emphatically disapproved of "the enunciation of any general rule on the question what orders are final and what interlocutory," and considered that it should only be done by general rule of court.

In this country the same difficulty of exact definition was expressed by Mr. Justice Brown, who said that "probably no question of equity practice has been the subject of more frequent discussion in this court," and he reviewed the cases, remarking that they "are not altogether harmonious"; McGourkey v. Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 536, 13 Sup. Ct. 170, 36 L. Ed. 1079; the principal ones being also collected by Mr. Justice Blatchford in Keystone Manganese & Iron Co. v. Martin, 132 U. S. 91, 10 Sup. Ct. 32, 33 L. Ed. 275.

Where the whole law of a case is settled by a decree, and nothing remains to be done, unless a new application be made at the foot of the decree, the decree is a final one so far as respects a right of appeal; French v. Shoemaker, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 86, 20 L. Ed. 270; and so is a decree dismissing a bill with costs, although they be afterwards taxed and decree entered for them; Fowler v. Hamill, 139 U. S. 549, 11 Sup. Ct. 663, 35 L. Ed. 266; but a decree of foreclosure and sale is not final, in the sense which allows an appeal from it, so long as the amount due upon the debt must be determined, and the property to be sold ascertained and defined; North Carolina R. Co. v. Swasey, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 405, 23 L. Ed. 136; see Jones v. Davenport, 45 N. J. Eq. 77, 17 Atl. 570; nor is an order remanding a case to the state court; Joy v. Adelbert College, 146 U. S. 355, 13 Sup. Ct. 186, 36 L. Ed. 1003; but a decree for foreclosure and sale of mortgaged premises is final and may be appealed from without waiting for the return and confirmation of the sale by a decretal order; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 503, 11 L. Ed. 1076. And so is a decree ordering the dismissal of a libel if not amended within ten days, where an appeal is taken without amending it; The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 495, 41 L. Ed. 897. When the finality is in doubt, and was negatived by the court below, but is claimed in the Supreme Court, the doubt will be resolved against finality; McGourkey v. Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 536, 13 Sup. Ct. 170, 38 L. Ed. 1079.

A decree fixing the priority of claims against an insolvent corporation, and directing the sale of its property for their payment, is a final decree within equity rule 88, relating to rehearings; Hoffman v. Knox, 50 Fed. 484, 1 C. C. A. 535. A decree is final which disposes of every matter of contention between the parties, except as to the amount of one severable item, not relating to appellant, and refers the case to a master to ascertain that; Hill v. R. Co., 140 U. S. 52, 11 Sup. Ct. 690, 35 L. Ed. 331.

If the decree decides the rights to property and orders it to be delivered up or sold, or adjudges a sum of money to be paid, and the party is entitled to have such decree carried into immediate execution, it is a final decree; Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. (U. S.) 203, 12 L. Ed. 404. In such cases it is held that the decree is final upon the merits, and the ulterior proceedings, as in the foreclosure case, constitute but a mode of executing the original decree; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 503, 11 L. Ed. 1076.

The multiplicity of cases on this subject is too great for citation here, but the principle applied is illustrated by those cited, and as to a particular case the course of decisions must be critically examined. Cases will be found collected in notes to U. S. Rev. Stat. § 692 and to 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 6th Am. ed. ch. xxvi. sec. 1. See JUDGMENT.

A consent decree binds only the consenting parties; Myllius v. Smith, 53 W. Va. 173, 44 S. E. 542; and is not binding upon the court; Ex parte Loung June, 160 Fed. 259. It cannot be modified without consent, even at the same term; Seiler v. Mfg. Co., 50 W. Va. 208, 40 S. E. 547; and the consent may be withdrawn before entry; Herold v. Craig, 59 W. Va. 353, 53 S. E. 466.

Interlocutory Decree. An adjudication or order made upon some point arising during the progress of a cause which does not determine finally the merits of the question or questions involved. Neither the courts nor the text-writers have satisfactorily defined this term. As was well said by Baldwin, J., "The difficulty is in the subject itself; for, by various gradations, the interlocutory decree may be made to approach the final decree, until the line of discrimination becomes too faint to be readily perceived." Cocke's

Adm'r v. Gilpin, 1 Rob. (Va.) 27. The real matter of importance is to define what is a final decree, and that being done, it may be generally stated that every other order or decree made during the progress of a cause in chancery is interlocutory. The test which is to be derived from the cases can hardly be better stated than in a late case, thus:

Where something more than the ministerial execution of the decree as rendered is left to be done, the decree is interlocutory, and not final, even though it settles the equities of the bill; Lodge v. Twell, 135 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 745, 34 L. Ed. 153.

As every decree inter partes is either final or interlocutory, all that has been said upon the former head, with the citations, must also be read in connection with this.

Decree Pro Confesso. An order or decree of a court of chancery that the allegations of the bill be taken as confessed, as against a defendant in default, and permitting the plaintiff to go on to a hearing ex parte.

"A decree pro confesso is one entered when the defendant has made default by not appearing in the time prescribed by the rules of court. A decree nisi is drawn by the plaintiff's counsel, and is entered by the court as it is drawn. A decree, when the bill is taken pro confesso, is pronounced by the court after hearing the pleadings and considering the plaintiff's equity;" Freem. Judg. § 11.

Such a decree is also entered when the defendant, having appeared, has not answered. The effect of such a decree is that the facts set forth in the bill are taken as true, and a decree made thereon according to the equity of the case. It was formerly the practice to put the plaintiff to his proof of the substance of the bill; Rose v. Woodruff, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 547; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th Am. ed. 517, n.; but the practice of taking the bill pro confesso is now generally established; id. 518; and the subject is, in most courts of chancery, regulated by rule of court.

In such decree, in admiralty as well as in equity, the amount of damages must be ascertained from the evidence and not from the allegations of the libel or bill; Cape Fear Towing & Transp. Co. v. Pearsall, 90 Fed. 435, 33 C. C. A. 161.

The usual modern practice is substantially that provided in Equity Rules 16, 17, of the United States courts (33 Sup. Ct. xxiii). Upon motion, it appearing from the record that the facts warrant it, an order is entered that the bill be taken pro confesso, and the cause proceeds ex parte, and the court may proceed to a final decree after thirty days from the entry of the order.

Such a decree cannot be entered when the bill contains a great lack of precision; Marshall v. Tenant, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 155, 19 Am. Dec. 126; but only when the allegations of the bill are specific, and the defendant has been properly served; Harmon v. Campbell, 30 Ill. 25; Boston v. Nichols, 47 Ill. 353; Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 316, 56 Am. Dec. 505; Russell v. Lathrop, 122 Mass. 302.

When only one defendant answers, but he disproves the whole case made by the bill, a decree pro confesso cannot be entered against those who fail to answer; Ashby v. Bell's Adm'r, 80 Va. 811.

A decree pro confesso cannot be safely entered against an infant; 30 Beav. 148; Bank of U. S. v. Ritchie, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 128, 8 L. Ed. 890; Daily's Adm'r v. Reid, 74 Ala. 415; Quigley v. Roberts, 44 Ill. 503; Tucker v. Bean, 65 Me. 352; Wells v. Smith, 44 Miss. 296; Mills v. Dennis, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 367; though this is sometimes done on consent of his solicitor; Walsh v. Walsh, 116 Mass. 377, 17 Am. Rep. 162.

Equity Rule 8 (S. C. of U. S.; 33 Sup. Ct. xxi) provides: "If a mandatory order, injunction, or decree for specific performance of any act or contract be not complied with, the court or a judge, besides, or instead of, proceedings against the disobedient party for a contempt or by sequestration, may by order direct that the act required to be done, be done, so far as practicable, by some other person appointed by the court or judge, at the cost of the disobedient party, and the act, when so done, shall have like effect as if done by him." See WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

In Legislation. In some countries, as in France, some acts of the legislature or of the sovereign, which have the force of law are called decrees: as, the Berlin and Milan decrees.

DECREE NISI. In English Law. A decree for a divorce, not to take effect till after such time, not less than six months from the pronouncing thereof, as the court shall from time to time direct. During this period any person may show cause why the decree should not be made absolute; 29 Vict. c. 32, s. 3; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7; 2 Steph. Com. 281; Mozl. & W. Dict.

The term is also sometimes applied to a decree entered provisionally to become final at a time therein named, unless cause is shown to the contrary.

DECREPIT (Fr. décrépit; Lat. decrepitus). Infirm; disabled, incapable, or incompetent, from either physical or mental weakness or defects, whether produced by age or other cause, to such an extent as to render the individual comparatively helpless in a personal conflict with one possessed of ordinary health and strength. Hall v. State, 16 Tex. App. 11, 49 Am. Rep. 824.

DECRETAL ORDER. An order made by the court of chancery, upon a motion or petition, in the nature of a decree. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 638.

DECRETALES BONIFACII OCTAVI. A supplemental collection of the canon law, published by Boniface VIII. in 1298, called, also, Liber Sextus Decretalium (Sixth Book of the Decretals). 1 Kaufm. Mackeldey, Civ. Law 82, n. See DECRETALS.

DECRETALES GREGORII NONI. The decretals of Gregory the Ninth. A collection of the laws of the church, published by order of Gregory IX. in 1227. It is composed of five books, subdivided into titles, and each title is divided into chapters. They are cited by using an X (or extra); thus, Cap. & X de Regulis Juris, etc. 1 Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law 83, n.; Butler, Hor. Jur. 115.

DECRETALS. Canonical epistles, written by the pope alone, or by the pope and cardinals, at the instance or suit of one or more persons, for the ordering and determining of some matter in controversy, and which have the authority of a law in themselves.

The decretals were published in three volumes. The first volume was collected by Raymundus Barcinus, chaplain to Gregory IX., about the year 1227, and published by him to be read in schools and used in the ecclesiastical courts. The second volume is the work of Boniface VIII., compiled about the year 1298, with additions to and alterations of the ordinances of his predecessors. The third volume is called the Clementines, because made by Clement V., and was published by him in the council of Vienna, about the year 1308. To these may be added the Extravagantes of John XXII. and other bishops of Rome, which, relatively to the others, are called Novellæ Constitutiones. Ridley's View, etc. 99, 100; 1 Fournel, Hist. des Avocats 194, 195.

The false decretals were forged in the names of the early bishops of Rome, and first appeared about A. D. 845-850. The author of them is not known. They are mentioned in a letter written in the name of the council of Quierzy, by Charles the Bald, to the bishops and lords of France. See Van Espen Fleury, Droit de Canon, by André.

The decretals constitute the second division of the Corpus Juris Canonici.

DECRETUM GRATIANI. A collection of ecclesiastical law made by Gratian, a Bolognese monk, in 1139-1152. It is the oldest of the collections constituting the Corpus Juris Canonici. 1 Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law 81; 1 Bla. Com. 82; Butler, Hor. Jur. 113.

DECURIO. In Roman Law. One of the chief men or senators in the provincial towns. The decuriones, taken together, had the entire management of the internal affairs of their towns or cities, with powers resembling in some degree those of our modern city councils. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 54; Calvinus, Lex.

DEDBANA. An actual homicide or manslaughter. Toml.

DEDI (Lat. I have given). A word used in deeds and other instruments of conveyance when such instruments were made in Latin.

The use of this word formerly carried with it a warranty in law, when in a deed; for example, if in a deed it was said, "dedi (I have given), etc., to A B," there was a warranty to him and his heirs. But this is no longer so. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 4. Brooke,

Abr. Guaranty, pl. 85. The warranty thus wrought was a special warranty, extending to the heirs of the feeoffee during the life of the donor only. Co. Litt. 384 b; 4 Co. 81; 5 id. 17; 3 Washb. R. P. 671. Dedi is said to be the aptest word to denote a feoffment; 2 Bla. Com. 310. The future, dabo, is found in some of the Saxon grants. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 44. See GRANT.

DEDI ET CONCESSI (Lat. I have given and granted). The aptest words to work a feoffment. They are the words ordinarily used, when instruments of conveyance were in Latin, in charters of feoffment, gift, or grant. These words were held the aptest; though others would answer; Co. Litt. 384 b; 1 Steph. Com. 114; 2 Bla. Com. 53, 316. See COVENANT.

DEDICATION. An appropriation of land to some public use, made by the owner, and accepted for such use by or on behalf of the public. Bartean v. West, 23 Wis. 416; Trustees of M. E. Church of Hoboken v. City of Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696; Smith v. City of San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 463, 30 Pac. 591; Brown v. Gunn, 75 Ga. 441.

The intentional appropriation of land by the owner to some proper public use, reserving to himself no rights therein inconsistent with the full exercise and enjoyment of such use. Northport Wesleyan Grove Camp Meeting Ass'n v. Andrews, 104 Me. 342, 71 Atl. 1027, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976.

It was unknown to the civil law; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662, 9 L. Ed. 573; and is said to have been the only method of conferring certain rights on the public at common law; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 425; Stevens v. Nashua, 46 N. H. 192.

It need not be by deed or in writing, but may be by act in pais, and the fee need not pass, since it has reference to possession and not to ownership; Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 25, 59 Am. Rep. 645. See cases collected in 9 L. R. A. 551, note.

Express dedication is that made by deed, vote, or declaration.

Implied dedication is that presumed from an acquiescence in the public use, or from some act of the owner which operates against him by way of estoppel in pais; Wood v. Seeley, 32 N. Y. 116; Brown v. Manning, 6 Ohio, 298, 27 Am. Dec. 255.

To be valid it must be made by the owner of the fee; 5 B. & Ald. 454; Ward v. Davis, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 502; 4 Campb. 16; Forney v. Calhoun County, 84 Ala. 215, 4 South. 153; or, if the fee be subject to a naked trust, by the equitable owner; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 431, 8 L. Ed. 452; Williams v. Society, 1 Ohio St. 478; and to the public at large; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 425; State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 480, 21 Am. Dec. 560; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662, 9 L. Ed. 573; Doe v. Jones, 11 Ala. 63. The existence of a corporation as grantee is not required, as the public is an ever-existing grantee capable of taking for public use; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 431, 8 L. Ed. 452; Trustees of M. E. Church of Hoboken v. City of Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696; Rutherford v. Taylor, 38 Mo. 317; Town of Warren v. Town of Jacksonville, 15 Ill. 236, 58 Am. Dec. 610.

In making the appropriation, no particular formality is required, but any act or declaration, whether written or oral, which clearly expresses an intent to dedicate, will amount to a dedication, if accepted by the public, and will conclude the donor from ever after asserting any right incompatible with the public use; Washb. Easem. 133; 11 M. & W. 827; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 431, 8 L. Ed. 452; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 450; Hobbs v. Lowell, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 405, 31 Am. Dec. 145; State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 480, 21 Am. Dec. 560; Trustees of Dover v. Fox, 9 B. Monr. (Ky.) 201; Mayor & Council of Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239; Missouri Institute for Education of Blind v. How, 27 Mo. 211; Oswald v. Grenet, 22 Tex. 94; Smith v. City of San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 463, 30 Pac. 591; Dobson v. Hohenadel, 148 Pa. 367, 23 Atl. 1128; Taylor v. Philippl, 35 W. Va. 554, 14 S. E. 130; Land v. Smith, 44 La. Ann. 931, 11 South. 577; Western Ry. of Alabama v. R. Co., 96 Ala. 272, 11 South. 483, 17 L. R. A. 474; Wolfe v. Town of Sullivan, 133 Ind. 331, 32 N. E. 1017; the vital principle of the dedication being the intention (animus dedicandi), which must be unequivocally manifested, and clearly and satisfactorily appear; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642; Village of White Bear v. Stewart, 40 Minn. 284, 41 N. W. 1045; Baker v. Vanderburg, 99 Mo. 378, 12 S. W. 462; Shellhouse v. State, 110 Ind. 509, 11 N. E. 484; Waugh v. Leech, 28 Ill. 491; Lee v. LaFe, 14 Mich. 12, 90 Am. Dec. 220; Forney v. Calhoun County, 84 Ala. 215, 4 South. 153; Hope v. Barnett, 78 Cal. 9, 20 Pac. 245; State v. Adkins, 42 Kan. 203, 21 Pac. 1069. But it must be determined from the acts and explanatory declarations of the party in connection with the surrounding circumstances; he cannot subsequently testify as to what were his real intentions; Fossion v. Landry, 123 Ind. 136, 24 N. E. 96; Lamar County v. Clements, 49 Tex. 347. If there be doubt as to whether there was a dedication to public use, or only for a temporary purpose, the intention of the owner may be proved; Lamar County v. Clements, 49 Tex. 347.

A mere acquiescence by the owner of land in its occasional and varying use for travel by the public is insufficient to establish a dedication thereof, as a street by adverse user; Com. v. R. Co., 135 Pa. 256, 19 Atl. 1051. And, without any express appropriation by the owner, a dedication may be presumed from twenty years' use of his land by the public, with his knowledge; Hoole v. Atty.

Gen., 22 Ala. 190; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; Larned v. Larned, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 421; Smith v. State, 23 N. J. L. 130; Green v. Oakes, 17 Ill. 249; Com. v. Cole, 26 Pa. 187; or from any shorter period, if the use be accompanied by circumstances which favor the presumption, the fact of dedication being a conclusion to be drawn, in each particular case, by the jury, who as against the owner have simply to determine whether by permitting the public use he has intended a dedication; 5 Taunt. 125; Denning v. Roome, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 651; Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. (U. S.) 10, 13 L. Ed. 25; State v. Hill, 10 Ind. 219; Whittaker v. Ferguson, 16 Utah, 240, 51 Pac. 980; Dimon v. People, 17 Ill. 416; 4 El. & Bl. 737. Public use of a right of way over public land for seven years is sufficient under U. S. R. S. § 2477; O'Kanagan County v. Cheetham, 37 Wash. 682, 80 Pac. 262, 70 L. R. A. 1027. But this presumption, being merely an inference from the public use, coupled with circumstances indicative of the owner's intent to dedicate, is open to rebuttal by the proof of circumstances indicative of the absence of such an intent; Bowers v. Mfg. Co., 4 Cush. (Mass.) 332; State v. Inhabitants of Strong, 25 Me. 297; Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. (U. S.) 10, 13 L. Ed. 25; 7 C. & P. 578; City of St. Louis v. Wetzel, 110 Mo. 260, 19 S. W. 534; McKey v. Hyde Park, 134 U. S. 84, 10 Sup. Ct. 512, 33 L. Ed. 860. Mere non-user for less than the statutory period is not enough unless coupled with evidence of intention; Wood v. Hurd, 34 N. J. L. 91; Hoole v. Atty. Gen., 22 Ala. 190; 3 Bing. 447.

The statute of frauds does not apply to the dedication of lands to the public; Godfrey v. City of Alton, 12 Ill. 29, 52 Am. Dec. 476; Rees v. Chicago, 38 Ill. 338; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642.

Before acceptance, a dedication may be revoked; Bridges v. Wyckoff, 67 N. Y. 130; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541; but only when no rights of other persons intervene. The death of the owner is a revocation of a proffered dedication of streets, and an acceptance thereafter by the village gives it no right in the streets; People v. Kellogg, 67 Hun 546, 22 N. Y. Supp. 490. Where one who has offered to dedicate land for a public street, conveys such land before his offer is accepted, the conveyance operates as a revocation of the offer; Chicago v. Drexel, 141 Ill. 89, 30 N. E. 774; Schmitt v. San Francisco, 100 Cal. 302, 34 Pac. 961.

There must be acceptance of either a common-law or a statutory dedication, either of which is incomplete without it; Schmitz v. Village of Germantown, 31 Ill. App. 284; Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54, 47 N. W. 600. The American courts differ to some extent as to whether an acceptance must be more or less formal, by some competent authority, or may be shown by general public use or indirect official recognition or both. The underlying principles are discussed in the leading case of Cincinnati v. White's Lessee, which held that no particular form or ceremony of acceptance is essential, but that "all that is required is the assent of the owner of the land, and the fact of its being used for the public purposes intended by the appropriation"; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 431, 8 L. Ed. 452; David's Heirs v. New Orleans, 16 La. Ann. 401, 79 Am. Dec. 586; Cole v. Sprowl, 35 Me. 161, 56 Am. Dec. 696; but the acts which amount to it must be plain and unequivocal; Baker v. Johnston, 21 Mich. 349. It need not be by the town or other municipal corporation, nor need it be very specific, but acts by the public at large are sufficient; Attorney General v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 323, 28 N. E. 346, 13 L. R. A. 251; as the construction of sewers through land dedicated for a street, and filing liens against abutting owners; Philadelphia v. Thomas' Heirs, 152 Pa. 494, 25 Atl. 873; or general ordinance or resolution accepting all streets and parks dedicated, where land is marked as such on a recorded plat; Los Angeles v. McCollum, 156 Cal. 148, 103 Pac. 914; or sold under the description of bounding on a certain street; City of Eureka v. Armstrong, 83 Cal. 623, 22 Pac. 928, 23 Pac. 1085; but the use of a street by the public, to constitute acceptance, must be under a claim of right; City of Eureka v. Croghan, 81 Cal. 524, 22 Pac. 693.

Acceptance is presumed if beneficial, and this is shown by user; Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 521, 10 N. E. 325, 58 Am. Rep. 143; Guthrie v. New Haven, 31 Conn. 308; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541; Boyce v. Kalbaugh, 47 Md. 334, 28 Am. Rep. 464; Summers v. State, 51 Ind. 201. The dedication of a private way to the public without acceptance does not constitute a public way; Slater v. Gunn, 170 Mass. 509, 49 N. E. 1017, 41 L. R. A. 268; Rozell v. Andrews, 103 N. Y. 150, 8 N. E. 513; Bell v. City of Burlington, 68 Ia. 296, 27 N. W. 245; St. Louis v. University, 88 Mo. 155; Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. 141.

There is no established standard as to what use by the public will be sufficient to constitute an acceptance of a dedication; it is such use as would naturally follow from the character of the place; Winslow v. Cincinnati, 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 89; the use need only be such as the public needs demand; Taraldson v. Town of Lime Springs, 92 Ia. 187, 60 N. W. 658. Use by a comparatively small number of persons on foot during the summer season of a short way from a street to the seashore, being the kind of use intended by the dedicator, is sufficient; Phillips v. City of Stamford, 81 Conn. 408, 71 Atl. 361, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114; otherwise of an alley through private land, used in bringing in household supplies and removing refuse: Brinck v. Collier, 56 Mo. 160; of a wood so grown up with brush as to be impassable by wagons and but little used; Rosenberger v. Miller, 61 Mo. App. 422; of a road to some extent for two or three weeks; Laughlin v. City of Washington, 63 Ia. 652, 19 N. W. 819; a use by a few persons only and merely for local purposes; Green v. Town of Canaan, 29 Conn. 157; and a permitted use by neighbors for hauling wagons; Fairchild v. Stewart, 117 Ia. 734, 89 N. W. 1075. Long continued use by a few persons does not necessarily show an intention on the part of the public authorities to accept the dedication; City of Rock Island v. Starkey, 189 Ill. 515, 59 N. E. 971. See Phillips v. City of Stamford, 81 Conn. 408, 71 Atl. 361, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114.

In the case of a highway, the question has been raised whether the public itself, as the body charged with the repair, is the proper party to make the acceptance. In England, it has been decided that an acceptance by the public, evidenced by mere use, is sufficient to bind the parish to repair, without any adoption on its part; 5 B. & Ad. 469; 2 N. & M. 583. In this country there are cases in which the English rule seems to be recognized; Remington v. Millerd, 1 R. I. 93; though the weight of decision is to effect that the towns are not liable, either for repair or for injuries occasioned by the want of repair, until they have themselves adopted the way thus created, either by a formal acceptance or by indirectly recognizing it, as by repairing it or setting up guide-posts therein; Thomp. Highw. 52; Page v. Town of Weathersfield, 13 Vt. 424; Com. v. Kelly, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 632; Common Council of Indianapolis v. McClure, 2 Ind. 147; Wright v. Tukey, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 290; Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401, 16 S. E. 246; Philadelphia v. Thomas' Heirs, 152 Pa. 494, 25 Atl. 873; Gage v. R. Co., 84 Ala. 224, 4 South. 415; City of Galveston v. Williams, 69 Tex. 449, 6 S. W. 860; Rozell v. Andrews, 103 N. Y. 150, 8 N. E. 513; Bell v. City of Burlington, 68 Ia. 296, 27 N. W. 245; City of St. Louis v. University, 88 Mo. 155; Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. 141. It has been held that the acceptance, improvement, and user by a city of a street or a portion of a street as platted is equivalent to an acceptance of the whole tract platted; Heitz v. City of St. Louis, 110 Mo. 618, 19 S. W. 735.

The authorities on this subject relate largely to the dedication of land for a highway. Such was the subject matter in the English cases on which the doctrine rests; Dovaston v. Payne, 2 H. Bl. 527, 2 Sm. L. Cas. 1388; 11 East 376, where eight years user was held to show sufficient acceptance; and 2 Str. 909, where four years was held insufficient; while in a much litigated case six years sufficed; 18 Q. B. 870. The English cases have not shown a disposition to extend the principle of dedication except so far as to recognize it in the case of charitable uses (q. v.) under 43 Eliz. c. 4, or the general equity jurisdiction. There are cases of bridges; 14 East 317; 1 Man. & Gr. 392; 3 M. & S. 526; and one over a ditch; 2 Str. 1004; and a wharf or landing; 5 B. & Ald. 268; but all these are closely allied to roads or ways.

But in this country there has grown up what is often referred to as the American doctrine, greatly extending the scope and operation of the doctrine of dedication under which it is applied equally well to any other purpose which is for the benefit of the public at large, as for a square, a common, a landing, a cemetery, a school, or a monument; and the principles which govern in all these cases are the same, though they may be somewhat diversified in the application, according as they are invoked for one or another of these objects; Hunter v. Trustees of Sandy Hill, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 407; Klinkener v. School Directors of McKeesport, 11 Pa. 444; Huber v. Gazley, 18 Ohio 18; Langley v. Town of Gallipolis, 2 Ohio St. 107; Mayor, etc., of the City of Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239; Olcott v. Banfill, 4 N. H. 537; Deu v. Drummer, 20 N. J. L. 86, 40 Am. Dec. 213; Rowan's Ex'rs v. Town of Portland, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 234; Ward v. Davis, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 502; Doe v. Town of Attica, 7 Ind. 641; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 153, 60 Am. Dec. 407; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145; Attorney General v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 323, 28 N. E. 346, 13 L. R. A. 251; Board of Com'rs of Miami County v. Wilgus, 42 Kan. 457, 22 Pac. 615; Carpenteria School District v. Heath, 56 Cal. 478; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 566, 7 L. Ed. 521; State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 480, 21 Am. Dec. 560; Redwood Cemetery Ass'n v. Bandy, 93 Ind. 246; Village of Mankato v. Willard, 13 Minn. 13 (Gil. 1), 97 Am. Dec. 208.

As to cases upon which rests the extension of the doctrine to large parks and cemeteries, see note in 16 Harv. L. Rev. 128.

It is usually said that land dedicated for one purpose cannot be used for another; so land dedicated for a public square cannot be used for the erection of a city hall; Church v. City of Portland, 18 Or. 73, 22 Pac. 528, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259 and note.

Equity will enjoin the diversion of land from the purpose to which it was dedicated; Le Clercq v. Trustees of Town of Gallipolis, 7 Ohio, 217, pt. 1, 28 Am. Dec. 641; and the legislature cannot divert it to a different use; id.; but land dedicated for a specific public use may be used for other purposes reasonably in accord therewith, as modified by changed conditions and circumstances; Codman v. Crocker, 203 Mass. 146, 89 N. E. 177, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980, where an act authorizing a subway under a part of Boston Common was held not a diversion of the property from the purpose of its dedication "for the common use of the inhabitants of Boston as a training field and cow pasture."

A promise to donate land for public purposes has been enforced, as where the promisee has made improvements; L. R. 4 Ch. D. 73; Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34, 3 Am. Rep. 657; Neale v. Neale, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 19 L. Ed. 590; or where a school house was erected on the faith of the promise; Greenwood v. School Dist. No. 4, 126 Mich. 81, 85 N. W. 241. As the inchoate right of dower is defeated by condemnation of lands to public use; see EMINENT DOMAIN; it seems to be held that dower is barred by the dedication of land to such use; Venable v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 103, 20 S. W. 493, 18 L. R. A. 68; French v. Lord, 69 Me. 537; Gwynne v. Cincinnati, 3 Ohio 24, 17 Am. Dec. 576; see 18 L. R. A. 79, note.

The doctrine of dedication has been characterized as an anomaly in our law, due to the public policy of effectuating individual action for public benefit; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 356. And again, it is said that, so far from being hampered in its application by mere technical distinctions, the doctrine was called into existence for the very purpose of escaping from technical rules and limitations. Its very vitality and its justification for existence lie in the disregard of existing technical limitations and in recognition of the necessity for a resort to broad views. Consequently, as fast as any new subject or phase of public rights has been presented to the courts, they have never hesitated to apply the doctrine to the new situation; 16 Harv. L. Rev. 338, where it is urged that it should be extended to rights not merely of using another's real estate, but of stripping it (or having it stripped) by or for the use of the general public of portions of the soil—as of coal or oil; and it is suggested that on compliance with certain conditions, viz.: 1. Of leaving the private owners in possession and management (as in the case of a public easement acquired by dedication over a private wharf), and, 2. Of paying for the coal or oil as taken, such a dedication might be required by legislation.

A common method of dedicating land for public purposes, particularly in connection with laying out towns, is by recording plats on which are marked streets, public squares and the like, and this is held either by statute or, where there is none, at common law, to be a sufficient dedication to the public; City of Madison v. Mayers, 97 Wis. 399, 73 N. W. 43, 40 L. R. A. 635, 65 Am. St. Rep. 127; London & S. F. Bank v. City of Oakland, 90 Fed. 691, 33 C. C. A. 237; and such dedication upon a plat acknowledged and recorded of land for county buildings has been held to vest the fee in the county, although the town failed to become the county seat; Brown v. Manning, 6 Ohio, 298, 27 Am. Dec. 255. So the sale of land by plat designating streets and public squares operates as a dedication; Price v. Stratton, 45 Fla. 535, 33 South. 644; Florida E. C. R. Co. v. Worley, 49 Fla. 297, 38 South. 618; Corning & Co. v. Woolner, 206 Ill. 190, 69 N. E. 53; Marsh v. Village of Fairbury, 163 Ill. 401, 45 N. E. 236; Van Dwyne v. Mfg. Co., 71 N. J. Eq. 375, 64 Atl. 149; Weisbrod v. R. Co., 18 Wis. 35, 86 Am. Dec. 743; Com.

v. Beaver Borough, 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112; Baltimore v. Frick, 82 Md. 77, 33 Atl. 435; Meier v. R. Co., 16 Or. 500, 19 Pac. 610, 1 L. R. A. 856. And see 9 L. R. A. 551, note. But that it may so operate at common law there must be an acceptance by the public in a reasonable time; Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54, 47 N. W. 600.

To constitute a common-law dedication by plat requires the same certainty of description (or accuracy of indication on the plat) as in other forms of conveyance; Sanders v. Village of Riverside, 118 Fed. 720, 55 C. C. A. 240, where it is said that "a dedication is a mode of conveyance." When a plat has been altered before filing so as apparently to cut off one half of the street shown on it as originally drawn, it operates as a dedication of what remains only; Elliot v. Atlantic City, 149 Fed. 849.

An offer to dedicate, followed by public user under a claim of right, is a sufficient dedication and acceptance; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. City of Syracuse, 157 Fed. 700; Cook v. Harris, 61 N. Y. 448; Kennedy v. Le Van, 23 Minn. 513; Buchanan v. Curtis, 25 Wis. 99, 3 Am. Rep. 23; Price v. Town of Breckenridge, 92 Mo. 378, 5 S. W. 20; and where the intention is clear a dedication was held complete without acceptance or user; Point Pleasant Land Co. v. Cranmer, 40 N. J. Eq. 81.

The mere making of a survey or a map of a plat, which is not recorded or exhibited to the public and upon which no lots are sold, is not a dedication of the streets thereon; Kruger v. Constable, 128 Fed. 908, 63 C. C. A. 634; and filing maps on which a street was laid out did not make such a street a public highway so far as the public was concerned; Loughman v. R. Co., 83 App. Div. 629, 81 N. Y. Supp. 1097. But filing the plat in a public repository or publishing it and selling lots by reference to it is a dedication; Kruger v. Constable, 116 Fed. 722; and if the lots are sold with reference to a plat showing streets, the purchasers are entitled to have them remain open, whether accepted by the public or not; Village of Augusta v. Tyner, 197 Ill. 242, 64 N. E. 378; Conrad v. Land Co., 126 N. C. 776, 36 S. E. 282; and so of a park; Florida E. C. R. Co. v. Worley, 49 Fla. 297, 38 South. 618. Where lots are sold bounded on an unopened street, the public has a right to the street, though there was no acceptance or user by the public; Harrington v. City of Manchester, 76 N. H. 347, 82 Atl. 716.

The sale by plat is a dedication; Cummings v. St. Louis, 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130; and acceptance is presumed from purchases by various persons; Carter v. City of Portland, 4 Or. 339; and the plat need not be acknowledged or recorded; Meier v. Ry. Co., 16 Or. 500, 19 Pac. 610, 1 L. R. A. 856. After a sale by plat there can be no revocation;

Brown v. Stark, 83 Cal. 636, 24 Pac. 162. The dedication by plat may apply either to a town site or a small tract. In the former the purchasers and the public are identical, but in the latter there may be an estoppel in favor of purchasers and no acceptance by the public; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 488; but the private rights of the purchasers cannot be enforced by the municipality; Village of Augusta v. Tyner, 197 Ill. 242, 64 N. E. 378.

With respect to the rule that the purchaser of lots by plat is entitled to have streets kept open as shown on a plat, a question may arise whether his right applies only to adjoining streets or to all streets on the plat. As to the former his right is unquestioned, and many cases hold it to be clear in the latter class; Collins v. Land Co., 128 N. C. 563, 39 S. E. 21, 83 Am. St. Rep. 720; Wolfe v. Town of Sullivan, 133 Ind. 331, 32 N. E. 1017; Taylor v. Com., 29 Gratt. (Va.) 780; In re Opening of Pearl St., 111 Pa. 565, 5 Atl. 430; contra; 11 Ont. App. 416; Mahler v. Brunder, 92 Wis. 477, 66 N. W. 502, 31 L. R. A. 695; Hawley v. Baltimore, 33 Md. 270; Pearson v. Allen, 151 Mass. 79, 23 N. E. 731, 21 Am. St. Rep. 426.

The mere filing of a map purporting to show the original plan of a town, but never authenticated nor proved in any manner to be such, is not sufficient evidence of dedication; Terrell v. Town of Bloomfield, 20 S. W. 289, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 577; but the streets of a defective plat may be dedicated to the public by conveyances made of lots according to the plat; Smith v. City of St. Paul, 72 Minn. 472, 75 N. W. 708.

Whether a corporation may dedicate land to a public use is a question not extensively discussed. It seems to be permitted when the dedication is for a use consistent with the object for which the charter is granted; Maywood Co. v. Village of Maywood, 118 Ill. 61, 6 N. E. 866; Mayor, etc., of Jersey City v. Banking Co., 12 N. J. Eq. 547; but not otherwise; Stacy v. Hotel & Springs Co., 223 Ill. 546, 79 N. E. 133, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966, and note; and a railroad may, by dedication, establish a street or road across its tracks; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. City of Spokane, 64 Fed. 506, 12 C. C. A. 246; Green v. Town of Canaan, 29 Conn. 157; Southern Pac. Co. v. City of Pomona, 144 Cal. 339, 77 Pac. 929; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. City of Bayonne, 52 N. J. L. 503, 20 Atl. 69. A trustee of a town site located on public land (under U. S. R. S. § 2387) has no right to dedicate land for a street as against the individual occupants for whom he takes title; McCloskey v. Pacific Coast Co., 180 Fed. 794, 87 C. C. A. 568, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673.

Reservations, conditions and restrictions are in some cases sustained, the courts sometimes going to great lengths; Hughes v. Bingham, 135 N. Y. 347, 32 N. E. 78, 17 L. R. A. 454; 11 M. & W. 827; Bayard v. Hargrove, 45 Ga. 342; City of Morrison v. Hinkson, 87

Ill. 587, 29 Am. Rep. 77; Warren v. City of Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24; Rutherford v. Taylor, 38 Mo. 315; but the growing tendency is to hold the condition void; Trustees of M. E. Church of Hoboken v. City of Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696; 5 Q. B. 26. The limitation may be sufficient to defeat the dedication by showing an absence of the animus dedicandi; White v. Bradley, 66 Me. 254; so the reservation of a right to revoke and devote the land to other uses was held not a good dedication; City of San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541. See 21 Harv. L. Rev. 356, where cases on restrictions and conditions are discussed.

See STREET; HIGHWAY; PARK; BRIDGE, and a general note in 27 Am. Dec. 559.

DEDIMUS ET CONCESSIMUS (Lat. we have given and granted). Words used by the king, or where there were more grantors than one, instead of dedi et concessi.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM (Lat. we have given power). The name of a writ to commission private persons to do some act in the place of a judge: as, to administer an oath of office to a justice of the peace, to examine witnesses, and the like. Cowell; Com. Dig. Chancery (K, 3), (P, 2), Fine (E, 7); Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Bla. Com. 351.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNO FACIENDO (Lat.). The name of a writ which was formerly issued by authority of the crown in England to authorize an attorney to appear for a defendant, without which a party could not, until the statute of Westminster 2, appear in court by attorney. By that statute, 13 Edw. I. c. 10, all persons impleaded may make an attorney to sue for them, in all pleas moved by or against them, in the superior courts there enumerated. 3 M. & G. 184, n.

DEDITITII (Lat.). In Roman Law. Criminals who had been marked in the face or on the body with fire or an iron so that the mark could not be erased, and were subsequently manumitted. Calvinus, Lex.

DEDUCTION FOR NEW. The allowance (usually one-third) on the cost of repairing a damage to the ship by the extraordinary operation of the perils of navigation, the renovated part being presumed to be better than before the damage. In some parts, by custom or by express provision in the policy, the allowance is not made on a new vessel during the first year, or on a new sheathing, or on an anchor or chain-cables; 1 Phill. Ins. § 50; 2 id. §§ 1369, 1431; Gray v. Wain, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 229, 7 Am. Dec. 642; Fisk v. Ins. Co., 18 La. 77; Orrok v. Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Depau v. Ins. Co., 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 63, 15 Am. Dec. 431.

DEED. A written instrument under seal, containing a contract or agreement which has been delivered by the party to be bound and accepted by the obligee or covenantee.

Co. Litt. 171; 2 Bla. Com. 295; Shepp. Touchst. 50.

A writing containing a contract sealed and delivered to the party thereto. 3 Washb. R. P. 239.

A writing under seal by which lands, tenements, or hereditaments are conveyed for an estate not less than a freehold. 2 Bla. Com. 294.

A writing or instrument, written on paper or parchment, sealed and delivered, to prove and testify the agreement of the parties whose deed it is to the things contained in the deed. American Button-Hole Overseaming S. M. Co. v. Burlack, 35 W. Va. 647, 14 S. E. 319. See Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 129, 11 S. W. 157.

Any instrument in writing under seal, whether it relates to the conveyance of real estate or to any other matter,—as, for instance, a bond, single bill, agreement, or contract of any kind,—is as much a deed as is a conveyance of real estate, and, after delivery and acceptance, is obligatory; Taylor v. Glaser, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 504; Taylor v. Morton, 5 Dana (Ky.) 365; Davis v. Brandon, 1 How. (Miss.) 154. The term is, however, often used in the latter sense above given, and perhaps oftener than in its more general signification.

Deeds of feoffment. See FEOFFMENT.

Deeds of grant. See GRANT.

Deeds indented are those to which there are two or more parties who enter into reciprocal and corresponding obligations to each other. See INDENTURE.

Deeds of release or of quitclaim. See RELEASE; QUITCLAIM.

Deeds poll are those which are the act of a single party and which do not require a counterpart. See DEED POLL.

Deeds under the statute of uses. See BARGAIN AND SALE; COVENANT TO STAND SEISED; LEASE AND RELEASE.

According to Blackstone, 2 Com. 313, deeds may be considered as conveyances at common law,—of which the original are feoffment; gift; grant; lease; exchange; partition; the derivative are release; confirmation; surrender; assignment; defeasance,—or conveyances which derive their force by virtue of the statute of uses; namely, covenant to stand seized to uses; bargain and sale of lands; lease and release; deed to lead and declare uses; deed of revocation of uses.

For a description of the various forms in use in United States, see 2 Washb. R. P. 607.

Requisites of. Deeds must be upon paper or parchment; Warren v. Lynch, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 246; must be completely written before delivery: Perminer v. McDaniel, 1 Hill (S. C.) 267, 26 Am. Dec. 179; 6 M. & W. 216, Am. ed. note; 3 Washb. R. P. 239; but see Cribben v. Deal, 21 Or. 211, 27 Pac. 1046, 28 Am. St. Rep. 746; BLANK; and filing in grantee's name after delivery in escrow is sufficient; Burk v. Johnson, 146 Fed. 209, 76 C. C. A. 567; they may be partly written and partly printed, or entirely printed; must be between competent parties, see PARTIES; and certain classes are excluded from holding lands, and, consequently, from being grantees in a deed; see 1 Washb. R. P. 73; 2 id. 564; must have been made without restraint; Inhabitants of Worcester v. Eaton, 13 Mass. 371, 7 Am. Dec. 155; 2 Bla. Com. 291; must contain the names of the grantor and grantee; Hoffman v. Porter, 2 Brock. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 6,577; Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 613; Shaw v. Loud, 12 Mass. 447; Boone v. Moore, 14 Mo. 420; Games v. Dunn, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 322, 10 L. Ed. 476; Dunn v. Games, 1 McLean 321, Fed. Cas. No. 4,176; Elliot v. Sleeper, 2 N. H. 525; but a variance in the names set forth in the deed will not invalidate it; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 148 Pa. 216, 23 Atl. 985; must relate to suitable property; Browne, Stat. Frauds § 6; 3 Washb. R. P. 331; must contain the requisite parts, see infra; must at common law be sealed; Sioard v. Davis, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 124, 8 L. Ed. 342; Thornt. Conv. 205; see Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 166; Munds v. Cassidey, 98 N. C. 558, 4 S. E. 353, 355 (i. e. in order to constitute it a deed, though an unsealed instrument may operate as a conveyance of land; Mitchell, R. P. 453; Barnes v. Multnomah County, 145 Fed. 695); and should, for safety, be signed, even where statutes do not require it; 3 Washb. R. P. 239; but see Newton v. Emerson, 66 Tex. 142, 18 S. W. 348. Previous to the Statute of Frauds, signing was not essential to a deed, provided it was sealed. The statute makes it so; 2 Bla. Com. 306; contra, Shep. Touch. n. (24), Preston's ed., which latter is of opinion that the statute was intended to affect parol contracts only, and not deeds. See Wms. R. P. 152; 2 Q. B. 580. Sir F. Pollock (Contracts 171) is of opinion that a deed does not require a signature, citing 4 Ex. 631; 3 Bla. Com. 306. Where the grantor is present and authorizes another, either expressly or impliedly, to sign his name to a deed, it then becomes his deed, and is as binding upon him; Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 483, 52 Am. Dec. 740; Kime v. Brooks, 31 N. C. 218; Frost v. Deering, 21 Me. 158.

They must be delivered (see DELIVERY; ESCROW; delivery is said not to be necessary in the case of a body corporate, for the affixing of the common seal to the deed is tantamount to delivery; L. R. 2 H. L. 296); and accepted; Canning v. Pinkham, 1 N. H. 353; Buffum v. Green, 5 N. H. 71, 20 Am. Dec. 562; Jackson v. Bodle, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 187; 13 Cent. L. J. 222; Richardson v. Grays, 85 Ia. 149, 52 N. W. 10; Schwab v. Rigby, 38 Minn. 395, 38 N. W. 101. A deed may be delivered by doing something and saying nothing, or by saying something and doing nothing, or it may be by both; Flint v. Phipps, 16 Or. 437, 19 Pac. 543. Deeds conveying real estate must by statute in some states be acknowledged and recorded; Lewis v. Herrera, 208 U. S. 309, 28 Sup. Ct. 412, 52 L. Ed. 506. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT; RECORD. In Pennsylvania this is unnecessary to its validity as between the parties; Cable v. Cable, 146 Pa. 451, 23 Atl. 223.

"A deed is irrevocable and binding on the promisor from the moment of its delivery by him, even before any acceptance by the promisee. The promisor does not, strictly speaking, thereby create an obligation, but rather declares himself actually bound. The very object of the Anglo-Norman writing under seal was to dispense with any other kind of proof; Pollock, Contr. 7.

The requisite number of witnesses is also prescribed by statute in most of the states.

Formal parts. The premises embrace the statement of the parties, the consideration, recitals inserted for explanation, description of the property granted, with the intended exceptions. The habendum begins at the words "to have and to hold," and limits and defines the estate which the grantee is to have. The reddendum, which is used to reserve something to the grantor, see EXCEPTION: the conditions, see CONDITION; the covenants, see COVENANT; WARRANTY; and the conclusion, which mentions the execution, date, etc., properly follow in the order observed here; 3 Washb. R. P. 365.

The construction of deeds is favorable to their validity; the principal includes the incident; punctuation is not regarded; a false description does not harm; the construction is least favorable to the party making the conveyance or reservation; the habendum is rejected if repugnant to the rest of the deed. Shepp. Touchst. 89; 3 Kent 422. There is a tendency in the modern decisions to uphold conveyances where not clearly repugnant to some well defined rule of law; Love v. Blauw, 61 Kan. 496, 59 Pac. 1059, 48 L. R. A. 257, 78 Am. St. Rep. 334; Abbott v. Holway, 72 Me. 298; Dismukes v. Parrott, 56 Ga. 513; Uhl v. R. Co., 51 W. Va. 106, 41 S. E. 340; Sherwood v. Whiting, 54 Conn. 330, 8 Atl. 80, 1 Am. St. Rep. 116; Love v. Blauw, 61 Kan. 496, 59 Pac. 1059, 48 L. R. A. 257, 78 Am. St. Rep. 334, where an instrument conveying lands to the grantor's children, but the estate not to vest in them until the death of the grantor, was held not to be testamentary, but to be a deed presently passing an estate in remainder to the grantees, reserving a life estate to the grantor. To the same effect; Hunt v. Hunt, 119 Ky. 39, 82 S. W. 998, 68 L. R. A. 180, 7 Ann. Cas. 788.

The true test in such cases is the intention of the maker; Love v. Blauw, 61 Kan. 496, 59 Pac. 1059, 48 L. R. A. 257, 78 Am. St. Rep. 334; Nolan v. Otney, 75 Kan. 311, 89 Pac. 690, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317; Hunt v. Hunt, 119 Ky. 39, 82 S. W. 998, 68 L. R. A. 180, 7 Ann. Cas. 788, where it is said to be the sounder policy in case of doubt to declare the instrument a deed, and thus make it effectual, when holding it to be testamentary would, for want of the requisite number of witnesses, render it nugatory; West v. Wright, 115 Ga. 277, 41 S. E. 602. Such an instrument was held a deed, though the delivery was made dependent upon the performance of a condition as well as upon the happening of a contingency; Hutton v. Cramer, 10 Ariz. 110, 85 Pac. 483, 103 Pac. 497, where the condition (that the grantee should give the grantor a respectable burial) was incapable of performance in the lifetime of the grantor; so in McCurry v. McCurry (Tex.) 95 S. W. 35; but a conveyance reciting that the grantee should come into possession of the property after the death of the grantor on condition that the grantee should care for the grantor as long as he should live, was held to be testamentary; Culy v. Upham, 135 Mich. 131, 97 N. W. 405, 106 Am. St. Rep. 388; in Arnegaard v. Arnegaard, 7 N. D. 475, 75 N. W. 797, 41 L. R. A. 258, held, that if the grantor reserves the right to recall the deed, the transaction is testamentary; and so in Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185, 26 N. W. 426, 60 Am. Rep. 291, it is held no valid delivery can be accomplished by the deposit of a deed with a custodian who is directed to hold it, not only until the grantor dies, but until the grantee does something on his part, and then deliver it, unless the required act is one intended to be performed or capable of performance while the grantor is yet alive.

An undelivered deed may not be proved to be a will by extrinsic evidence that it was executed with testamentary intent; Noble v. Fickes, 230 Ill. 594, 82 N. E. 950, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1203, 12 Ann. Cas. 282. An instrument using words of conveyance in presenti will be considered as an agreement to convey, and not a conveyance, if it is manifest that further conveyance was contemplated; Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 55, 18 Sup. Ct. 279, 42 L. Ed. 658, cited in Mineral Development Co. v. James, 97 Va. 414, 34 S. E. 37. The question is one of intention; Phillips v. Swank, 120 Pa. 76, 13 Atl. 712, 6 Am. St. Rep. 691; Jackson v. Moncrief, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 26.

All the terms of a deed should be construed together; Lowdermilk Bros. v. Bostick, 98 N. C. 299, 3 S. E. 844; Bradley v. Zehmer, 82 Va. 685; St. Louis v. Rutz, 138 U. S. 226, 11 Sup. Ct. 337, 34 L. Ed. 941; and the words therein should be taken most strongly against the party using them; Douglass v. Lewis, 131 U. S. 75, 9 Sup. Ct. 634, 33 L. Ed. 53; Homer v. Schonfeld, 84 Ala. 313, 4 South. 105; where two clauses in a deed are repugnant, the first prevails; Blair v. Muse, 83 Va. 238, 2 S. E. 31; and if possible a deed should be so construed as to give it effect; Cleveland v. Sims, 69 Tex. 153, 6 S. W. 634.

"Sells" in a deed does not pass title; Taylor v. Burns, 203 U. S. 120, 27 Sup. Ct. 40, 51 L. Ed. 116.

livery at a date subsequent to that shown on the face of the instrument; id.

The lex rei sitæ governs in the conveyance of lands, both as to the requisites and forms of conveyance. See LEX REI SITÆ.

Recitals in deeds of payment of the considerations expressed therein are not proof of such payments as against persons not parties thereto; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup. Ct. 239, 35 L. Ed. 1063; nor is a consideration always necessary to the validity of a deed of land; Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 129, 11 S. W. 157. An alteration in the description of property in a deed cannot be made without re-execution, reacknowledgment, and redelivery, after the deed has been delivered and recorded; Moelle v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 21, 13 Sup. Ct. 426, 37 L. Ed. 350.

In the Reading Railroad Company Receivership (1895) the court ordered the trustees to execute six original deeds, for convenience in recording, any one of which might be recorded, each to be an original, and all to constitute one deed.

The grantee in a deed is bound by its covenant, though he does not sign; Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185, 26 N. W. 426, 60 Am. Rep. 291; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 587.

See DELIVERY; ESCROW; LOST INSTRUMENT; ATTESTATION; ALIENATION; ANCIENT WRITING.

DEED TO DECLARE USES. A deed made after a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.

DEED TO LEAD USES. A deed made before a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.

DEED POLL. A deed which is made by one party only.

A deed in which only the party making it executes it or binds himself by it as a deed. 3 Washb. R. P. 311.

The term is now applied in practice mainly to deeds by sheriffs, executors, administrators, trustees, and the like.

The distinction between deed poll and indenture has come to be of but little importance. The ordinary purpose of a deed poll is merely to transfer the rights of the grantor to the grantee. It was formerly called charta de una parte, and usually began with these words, Sciant presentes et futuri quod ego, A, etc.; and now begins, "Know all men by these presents (taken from the early language of writs; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 193) that I, A B, have given, granted, and enfeoffed, and by these presents do give, grant, and enfeoff," etc. Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 1, s. 23. See INDENTURE.

DEED OF SETTLEMENT. A deed formerly used in England for the formation of joint stock companies constituting certain persons trustees of the partnership property and containing regulations for the management of its private affairs. They are now regulated by articles of association.

DEEM. To decide; to judge; to sentence. When by statute certain acts are deemed to be crimes of a particular nature, they are such crimes, and not a semblance of it, nor a mere fanciful approximation to or designation of the offence. Com. v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 247.

When a thing is to be "deemed" something else, it is to be treated as that something else with the attendant consequences, but it is not that something else; 60 L. J. Q. B. 380. When a statute enacts that something shall be deemed to have been done, which in fact and truth was not done, the court is bound to ascertain for what purpose and between what persons the statutory fiction is to be resorted to; 50 L. J. Ch. 662.

DEEMSTERS. Judges in the Isle of Man, who decide all controversies without process, writings, or any charges. They were chosen by the people, and are said by Spelman to be two in number. Spelman, Gloss.; Camden, Brit.; Cowell.

DEFACE. To mar or disfigure. It has been held that to write on a license anything, whether true or false, other than the particulars required, defaces it; 15 L. J. C. P. 18; [1895] 1 Q. B. 639.

DEFALCATION. The act of a defaulter.

The reduction of the claim of one of the contracting parties against the other, by deducting from it a smaller claim due from the former to the latter.

The law operates this reduction in certain cases; for, if the parties die or are insolvent, the balance between them is the only claim; but if they are solvent and alive, the defendant may or may not defalcate at his choice. See SET-OFF. For the etymology of this word, see Brackenbridge, Law Misc. 186. Defalcation was unknown at common law; Com. v. Clarkson, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 291.

DEFAMATION. The speaking or writing words of a person so as to hurt his good fame, de bona fama aliquid detrahere. Written defamation is termed libel, and oral defamation slander, which titles see. It is a term more used in England than in this country.

See LIBEL; SLANDER.

DEFAULT. The non-performance of a duty, whether arising under a contract or otherwise. In its largest and most general sense, it seems to mean failing. 1 B. & P. 258.

The non-appearance of a plaintiff or defendant at court within the time prescribed by law to prosecute his claim or make his defence.

When the plaintiff makes default, he may be nonsuited; and when the defendant makes default, judgment by default may be rendered against him. Comyns, Dig. Pleader, E 42, B. 11. See JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT; 7 Viner, Abr. 429; Doctr. Plac. 208; Grah. Pr. 631.

DEFEASANCE. An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed or of an estate. That which is in the same deed is called a condition; and that which is in another deed is a defeasance. Comyns, Dig. Defeasance.

The defeasance may be subsequent to the deed in case of things executory; Co. Litt. 237 a; 2 Saund. 43; but must be a part of the same transaction in case of an executed contract; Co. Litt. 236 b; Lund v. Lund, 1 N. H. 39, 8 Am. Dec. 29; Swetland v. Swetland, 3 Mich. 482; Kelly v. Thompson, 7 Watts (Pa.) 401. Yet, where an instrument of defeasance is executed subsequently in pursuance of an agreement made at the time of making the original deed, it is sufficient; 2 Washb. R. P. 489; as well as where a deed and the defeasance bear different dates but are delivered at the same time; Devl. Deeds 1102; Bodwell v. Webster, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 411; Reitenbaugh v. Ludwick, 31 Pa. 131; Hale v. Jewell, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 435, 22 Am. Dec. 212; Freeman v. Baldwin, 13 Ala. 246. The instrument of defeasance must at law be of as high a nature as the principal deed; Eaton v. Green, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 526; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 261; Kelly v. Thompson, 7 Watts (Pa.) 401; Richardson v. Woodbury, 43 Me. 206. It must recite the deed it relates to, or at least the most material part thereof; and it is to be made between the same persons that were parties to the first deed; Shaw v. Erskine, 43 Me. 371. Defeasances of deeds conveying real estate are generally subject to the same rules as deeds, as to record and notice to purchasers; Brown v. Dean, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 208; Friedley v. Hamilton, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 70, 17 Am. Dec. 638; Purrington v. Pierce, 38 Me. 447; but in some states actual notice is not sufficient without recording; Mich. Rev. Stat. 261; Minn. Stat. at L. 1873, 34, § 23.

In equity, a defeasance could be proved by parol and a deed, absolute on its face, shown to be in legal effect a mortgage; Pearson v. Sharp, 115 Pa. 254, 9 Atl. 38; but such evidence must be clear, explicit, and unequivocal, and the parol defeasance must be shown to have been contemporaneous with the deed; id. In Pennsylvania, all defeasances are now required to be in writing, executed as deeds and recorded within sixty days after the deed. Act of June 8, 1881.

DEFECT. A lack or absence of something essential to completeness. 66 L. J. Q. B. The want of something required by law.

In pleading, matter sufficient in law must be deduced and expressed according to the forms of law. Defects in matters of substance cannot be cured, because it does not appear that the plaintiff is entitled to recover; but when the defects are in matter of form, they are cured by a verdict in favor of the party who committed them; Robinson v. Clifford, 2 Wash. C. C. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 11,948; Hunnicutt v. Carsley, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 153; Read v. Inhabitants of Chelmsford, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 128; Worster v. Proprietors of Canal Bridge, id. 541; Russell v. Slade, 12 Conn. 455; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 76, 7 L. Ed. 47; Stanley v. Whipple,

2 McL. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 13,286; Bacon, Abr. Verdict, X. See Nell v. Board of Trustees, 31 Ohio St. 15; Richtmyer v. Richtmyer, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 55; Great Western Compound Co. v. Ins. Co., 40 Wis. 373.

DEFECTUM, CHALLENGE PROPTER. See CHALLENGE.

DEFECTUM SANGUINIS. See ESCHEAT.

DEFENCE. Torts. A forcible resistance of an attack by force.

A man is justified in defending his person, that of his wife, children, and servants, and for this purpose he may use as much force as may be necessary, even to killing the assailant, remembering that the means used must always be proportioned to the occasion, and that an excess becomes itself an injury; 3 M. & W. 150; Jamison v. Moseley, 69 Miss. 478, 10 South. 582; People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 11 South. 550, 17 L. R. A. 705; Kelly v. State, 27 Tex. App. 562, 11 S. W. 627; Duncan v. State, 49 Ark. 543, 6 S. W. 164; Estep v. Com., 86 Ky. 39, 4 S. W. 820, 9 Am. St. Rep. 260; but it must be in defence, and not in revenge; 1 C. & M. 214; Poll. Torts 255; State v. McGraw, 35 S. C. 283, 14 S. E. 630; for one is not justified in shooting another, if such other party is retreating or has thrown away his weapon; Meurer v. State, 129 Ind. 587, 29 N. E. 392; nor is a mere threat to take one's life, with nothing more, a sufficient defence or excuse for committing homicide; State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481.

A man may also repel force by force in defence of his personal property, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony, as robbery, by any force short of taking the aggressor's life; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 875; or short of wounding or the employment of a dangerous weapon; Com. v. Donahue, 148 Mass. 529, 20 N. E. 171, 2 L. R. A. 623, 12 Am. St. Rep. 591. In the latter case Holmes, J., said: "We need not consider whether this explanation is quite adequate. There are weighty decisions which go further than those above cited, and which can hardly stand on the right of self-defence, but involve other considerations of policy." See Powers v. People, 42 Ill. App. 427.

With respect to the defence or protection of the possession of real property, although it is justifiable even to kill a person in the act of attempting to commit a forcible felony, as burglary or arson, yet this justification can only take place when the party in possession is wholly without fault; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 440, 444; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 259, 277. And where an illegal forcible attack is made upon a dwelling-house with the intention merely of committing a trespass, and not with any felonious intent, it is generally lawful for the rightful occupant to oppose it by force; 7 Bing. 305; 20 Eng. C. L. 139. See, generally, 1 Chit. Pr. 589; Grotius, lib. 2, c. 1; Rutherford, Inst. b. 1, c. 16; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1019; Bishop; Clark; Wharton, Criminal Law; Thompson, Cases of Self-Defence; ASSAULT; SELF-DEFENCE; JUSTIFICATION.

In Pleading and Practice. The denial of the truth or validity of the complaint. A general assertion that the plaintiff has no ground of action, which is afterwards extended and maintained in the plea. 3 Bla. Com. 296; Co. Litt. 127; Wilson v. Poole, 33 Ind. 448.

In this sense it is similar to the contestatio litis of the civilians, and does not include justification. In a more general sense it denotes the means by which the defendant prevents the success of the plaintiff's action, or, in criminal practice, the indictment. The word is commonly used in this sense in modern practice.

Half defence was that which was made by the form "defends the force and injury, and says" (defendit vim et injuriam, et dicit).

Full defence was that which was made by the form "defends the force and injury when and where it shall behoove him, and the damages, and whatever else he ought to defend" (defendit vim et injuriam quando et ubi curia considerabit, et damna et quicquid quod ipse defendere debet, et dicit), commonly shortened into "defends the force and injury when," etc. 3 B. & P. 9, n.; Co. Litt. 127 b; Willes 41. It follows immediately upon the statement of appearance, "comes" (venit), thus: "comes and defends." By a general defence the propriety of the writ, the competency of the plaintiff, and the jurisdiction of the court were allowed; by defending the force and injury, misnomer was waived; by defending the damages, all exceptions to the person of the plaintiff; and by defending either when, etc., the jurisdiction of the court was admitted. 3 Bla. Com. 298.

The distinction between the forms of half and full defence was first lost sight of; 8 Term 633; Willes 41; 3 B. & P. 9; 2 Saund. 209 c; and no necessity for a technical defence exists, under the modern forms of practice.

DEFENDANT. A party sued in a personal action. The term does not in strictness apply to the person opposing or denying the allegations of the demandant in a real action, who is properly called the tenant. The distinction, however, is very commonly disregarded; and the term is further frequently applied to denote the person called upon to answer, either at law or in equity, and as well in criminal as civil suits.

See Clagget v. Blanchard, 8 Dana (Ky.) 41; Schuyler County v. Mercer County, 4 Gilman (Ill.) 20; Almy v. Platt, 16 Wis. 169; Leavitt v. Lyons, 118 Mass. 470; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 122 Mass. 8; 56 L. J. Ch. D. 400; Waddell v. Lanier, 54 Ala. 440.

DEFENDANT IN ERROR. The distinctive term appropriate to the party against whom a writ of error is sued out.

DEFENDARE. To answer for; to be responsible for. Medley.

DEFENDEMUS (Lat. we will defend). A word anciently used in feoffments or gifts, whereby the donor and his heirs were bound to defend the donee against any servitude or incumbrance on the thing granted, other than contained in the donation. Cowell.

DEFENDER. In Scotch and Canon Law. A defendant.

DEFENDER (Fr.). To deny; to defend; to conduct a suit for a defendant; to forbid; to prevent; to protect.

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH. A title originally given to the kings of England by the Pope. It was first given by Leo X. to Henry VIII. It is still part of the title.

DEFENERATION. The act of lending money on usury. Wharton.

DEFENSA. A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property and peculiar for that use and service. Cowell.

DÉFENSE AU FOND EN DROIT (called, also, défense en droit). A demurrer. 2 Low. C. 278. See, also, 1 Low. C. 216.

DÉFENSE AU FOND EN FAIT. The general issue. 3 Low. C. 421.

DEFENSIVE ALLEGATION. In Ecclesiastical Practice. The answer of the party defending to the allegations of the party moving the cause. 3 Bla. Com. 100.

DEFENSIVE WAR. A war in defence of national right,—not necessarily defensive in its operations. 1 Kent 50.

DEFENSOR. In Civil Law. A defender; one who takes upon himself the defence of another's cause, assuming his liabilities.

An advocate in court. In this sense the word is very general in its signification, including advocatus, patronus, procurator, etc. A tutor or guardian. Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A guardian or protector. Spelman, Gloss. The defendant; a warrantor. Bracton.

In Canon Law. The advocate of a church. The patron. See ADVOCATUS. An officer having charge of the temporal affairs of the church. Spelman, Gloss.

DEFENSOR CIVITATIS (Lat. defender of the state). In Roman Law. An officer whose business it was to transact certain business of the state.

Those officers were so called who, like the tribunes of the people at first, were chosen by the people in the large cities and towns, and whose duty it was to watch over the order of the city, protect the people and the decuriones from all harm, protect sailors and naval people, attend to the complaints of those who had suffered injuries, and discharge various other duties. As will be seen, they had considerable judicial power. Du Cange; Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 16.

DEFENSUM. A prohibition; an enclosure. Medley, Eng. Const. Hist.

DEFERRED STOCK. See Stock.

DEFICIT (Lat. is wanting). The deficiency which is discovered in the accounts of an accountant, or in the money which he has received.

DEFICIT, DEFICIENCY. That part of a debt which a mortgage was given to secure and not realized from the sale of the mortgaged property. Goldsmith v. Brown, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 492. See Johnson v. McKinnon, 54 Fla. 221, 45 South. 23, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, 127 Am. St. Rep. 135, 14 Ann. Cas. 180.

DEFINE. In legislation, to determine or fix. People v. Bradley, 36 Mich. 452 (as applied to boundaries). To enumerate. U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 160, 5 L. Ed. 57. To declare that a certain act shall constitute an offence is defining that offence; U. S. v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 488, 7 Sup. Ct. 628, 30 L. Ed. 728.

DEFINITE. Bounded; determinate; fixed.

A definite failure of issue occurs when a precise time is fixed by a will for a failure of issue. An indefinite failure of issue is the period when the issue of the first taker shall become extinct and when there shall no longer be any issue of the grantee, but without reference to a particular time or event; Huxford v. Milligan, 50 Ind. 546.

DEFINITION. An enumeration of the principal ideas of which a compound idea is formed, to ascertain and explain its nature; that which denotes and points out the substance of a thing. Ayliffe, Pand. 59.

Definitions are always dangerous, because it is always difficult to prevent their being inaccurate, or their becoming so: omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit.

All ideas are not susceptible of definition, and many legal terms cannot be defined. This inability is frequently supplied, in a considerable degree, by descriptions.

It has been said that a definition is the most difficult of all things. There is far greater probability of a correct use of terms than of a correct definition of them; a correct use renders definition unnecessary. 20 Sol. Journ. 869, quoted in Thayer, Evid. 190, with a comment that legal scholarship will be best used to clarify and restate the law.

The meaning of ordinary words, when used in acts of parliament, is to be found, not so much in a strict etymological propriety of language, nor even in popular use, as in the subject or occasion on which they are used, and the object which is intended to be attained; L. R. 1 Ex. D. 143; for words used with reference to one set of circumstances may convey an intention quite different from what the selfsame set of words used in reference to another set of circumstances would or might have produced; L. R. 3 App. Cas. 68.

"A general dictionary of the English language is not authority to show, on a trial, the meaning of a word which is relied on as deriving a peculiar meaning from mercantile usage;" 7 C. & P. 701; approved in L. R. 5 Exch. 179, 184.

The definitions of the standard lexicographers are authority as indicating the popular use of words; Burnam v. Banks, 45 Mo. 351. Regard must always be had to the circumstances under which a word is used in a statute; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 267. Where inconsistent with code statutes, a definition is modified; Ellis v. Prevost, 13 La. 230. Legal definitions for the most part are generalizations derived from judicial experience. To be complete and adequate they must sum up the results of all that experience; Mickle v. Miles, 31 Pa. 21.

DEFINITIVE. That which terminates a suit; final. A definitive sentence or judgment is put in opposition to an interlocutory judgment.

A distinction has been drawn in the United States supreme court between a final and a definitive judgment in regard to the condemnation of a prize in a court of admiralty; U. S. v. The Peggy, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 103, 2 L. Ed. 49; but for all practical purposes a definitive judgment or decree is final; Appeal of Gesell, 84 Pa. 238. See DECREE; JUDGMENT.

DEFLOURATION. The act by which a woman is deprived of her virginity.

When this is done unlawfully and against her will, it bears the name of rape (which see); when she consents, it is fornication (which see); or if the man be married it is adultery on his part; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 48; Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 509, 32 Am. Dec. 284; State v. Hutchinson, 36 Me. 261; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410; Republica v. Roberts, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 124, 1 L. Ed. 316.

DEFORCEMENT. The holding any lands or tenements to which another has a right.

In its most extensive sense the term includes any withholding of any lands or tenements to which another person has a right; Co. Litt. 277; Phelps v. Baldwin, 17 Conn. 212; so that this includes as well an abatement, an intrusion, a disseisin, or a discontinuance, as any other species of wrong whatsoever, by which the owner of the freehold is kept out of possession. But, as contradistinguished from the former, it is only such a detainer of the freehold from him who has the right of property as falls within none of the injuries above mentioned; 3 Bla. Com. 173; Archb. Civ. Pl. 13; Dane, Abr. Index.

DEFORCIANT. One who wrongfully keeps the owner of lands and tenements out of the possession of them. 2 Bla. Com. 350.

DEFORCIARE. To withhold lands or tenements from the rightful owner. This is a word of art which cannot be supplied by any other word. Co. Litt. 331 b; 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 3; Bract. lib. 4, 238; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 11.

DEFOSSION. The punishment of being buried alive. Black, L. Dict.

DEFRAUD. To defraud is to withhold from another that which is justly due to him, or to deprive him of a right by deception or artifice. Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 186. It is not synonymous with "hinder and delay"; Crow v. Beardsley, 68 Mo. 435. See FRAUD.

DEFRAUDACION. In Spanish Law. The crime committed by a person who fraudulently avoids the payment of some public tax.

DEGRADATION. The act of depriving a priest of his orders or benefices or of both, either by word of mouth or by public reproach, and a solemn ceremony of stripping from the offender the vestments of his office.

The mode of proceeding in the trial of clergymen is determined by canons in the various dioceses.

The same term is applied to the loss, by a peer, of his rank as such, as when he is deprived thereof by act of parliament. 2 Steph. Com. 608. Degradation must be distinguished from disqualification for bankruptcy, under stat. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 50.

DEGRADING. Sinking or lowering a person in the estimation of the public.

As to compelling a witness to answer questions tending to degrade him, see WITNESS; 13 Howell, St. Tr. 17, 334; 16 id. 161; 1 Phill. Ev. 269. To write or print of a man what will degrade him in society is a libel; 1 Dowl. 674; 2 M. & R. 77. See INCRIMINATION.

DEGREE (Fr. degré, from Lat. gradus, a step in a stairway; a round of a ladder).

A remove or step in the line of descent or consanguinity.

As used in law, it designates the distance between those who are allied by blood: it means the relations descending from a common ancestor, from generation to generation, as by so many steps. Hence, according to some lexicographers, we obtain the word pedigree (q. v.) par degréz (by degrees), the descent being reckoned par degréz. Minshew. Each generation lengthens the line of descent one degree; for the degrees are only the generations marked in a line by small circles or squares, in which the names of the persons forming it are written. See CONSANGUINITY; LINE; Ayliffe, Parerg. 209; Toullier, Droit Civ. Franc. liv. 3, t. 1, c. 3, n. 158; Aso & M. Inst. b. 2, t. 4, c. 3, § 1.

In criminal law, the word is used to distinguish different grades of guilt and punishment attached to the same act, committed under different circumstances, as murder in the first and second degrees.

The state or civil condition of a person. State v. Bishop, 15 Me. 122.

The ancient English statute of additions, for example, requires that in process, for the better description of a defendant, his state, degree, or mystery shall be mentioned.

An honorable state or condition to which a student is advanced in testimony of proficiency in arts and sciences. See COLLEGE; DIPLOMA.

They are of pontifical origin. See 1 Schmidt, Thesaurus, 144; Vicat, Doctores; Minshew, Dict. Bachelor; Merlin, Répertoire Univ.; Van Espen. pt. 1, tit. 10; Giannone, Istoria di Napoli, lib. xi. c. 2, for a full account of this matter.

For the degrees of negligence, see NEGLIGENCE; BAILEE; BAILMENT.

DEHORS (Fr. out of; without). Something out of the record, agreement, will, or other thing spoken of; something foreign to the matter in question. See ALIunde.

DEI GRATIA. By the grace of God. An expression used in the titles of sovereigns denoting a claim of authority derived from divine right. It was anciently a part of the titles of inferior magistrates and other officers, civil and ecclesiastical, but was afterwards considered a prerogative of royalty. Abbott; A. M. Eaton, in Report of Am. Bar Assoc. (1902) 313.

DEI JUDICIUM. See JUDICIUM DEI.

DEJACION. In Spanish Law. A general term applicable to the surrender of his property to his creditors by an insolvent. The renunciation of an inheritance. The release of a mortgage upon payment, and the abandonment of the property insured to the insurer.

DEL CREDERE COMMISSION. One under which the agent, in consideration of an additional payment, engages to become surety to his principal for not only the solvency of the debtor, but the punctual discharge of the debt. 21 W. R. 465; L. R. 6 Ch. App. 397. He is liable, in the first instance, without any demand from the debtor. The principal cannot sue the del credere factor until the debtor has refused or neglected to pay; 1 Term 112; Paley, Ag. 39. See Pars. Contr.; Story; Wharton; Mechem, Agency.

He is virtually a surety; 8 Ex. 40; and the purchaser is the primary debtor; Gindre v. Kean, 7 Misc. 582, 28 N. Y. Supp. 4. He is distinguished from other agents by the fact that he guarantees that those persons to whom he sells shall perform the contracts which he makes with them; L. R. 6 Ch. 403.

DELATE. In Scotch Law. To accuse. Bell, Dict.

DELATIO. In Civil Law. An accusation or information. Du Cange.

DELATOR. An accuser or informer. Du Cange.

DELATURA. In Old English Law. An accusation. Cunningham. The reward of an informer. Whilshaw.

DELAWARE. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America, being the first to adopt the constitution.

In 1623, Cornelius May, with some Dutch emigrants, established a trading-house, but the settlers soon removed to North river. Ten years afterwards De Vries arrived at Cape Henlopen, but the natives shortly destroyed the settlement. In the spring of 1638 the Swedes under Minuit established a settlement at the mouth of the Minquas river, which was called by them the Christiana, in honor of their queen. They purchased all the lands from Cape Henlopen to the falls near Trenton, and named the country New Sweden. Stuyvesant, the Dutch governor of New York, ended the Swedish authority in 1654. The Dutch held the country until 1664, when it fell into the hands of the English, and was granted by Charles II. to his brother James, Duke of York. In 1682, William Penn obtained a patent from the Duke of York, releasing all his title claimed through his patent from the crown to a portion of the territory. By this grant Penn became possessed of New Castle and the land lying within a circle of twelve miles around it, and subsequently of a tract of land beginning twelve miles south of New Castle and extending to Cape Henlopen. In consequence of a dispute between Penn and Lord Baltimore, the south and west lines, dividing his possessions from Maryland, were traced in 1761, under a decree of Lord-Chancellor Hardwicke, by the surveyors Mason and Dixon; and this line, extended westward between Maryland and Pennsylvania, has become historical as Mason and Dixon's Line (q. v.).

Delaware was divided into three counties, called New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, and by enactment of Penn was annexed to Pennsylvania under the name of the Three Lower Counties upon Delaware. These counties remained for twenty years a part of Pennsylvania, each county sending six delegates to the general assembly. They separated in 1703, with the consent of the proprietary, and were governed by a separate legislature of their own, pursuant to the liberty reserved to them by a clause of their original charter.

Delaware was the first state to ratify the federal constitution, on December 7, 1787.

In 1776 a state constitution was framed, a second in 1792, and a third in 1831, which remained in force until 1897. The agitation for constitutional changes was begun before 1850, and in 1853 a convention was held and a constitution adopted which was, on submission to a popular vote, defeated. After the civil war the efforts to obtain a convention were resumed, but were unsuccessful until 1896.

The present constitution was adopted June 4, 1897, by a constitutional convention which was duly called to meet in December, 1896, delegates having been elected at the general election of that year. The constitution contains the usual declaration of rights, no change being made in that article. Minor amendments were adopted in 1913, relating to the legislative journals and the judiciary.

DELAY. To procrastinate; detain or stop; to prolong.

See HINDER AND DELAY.

As to delay in presenting checks, see CHECK.

As to delay in the execution of contract work, see NEGLIGENCE; BREACH OF CONTRACT; PERFORMANCE; TIME.

DELECTUS PERSONÆ (Lat. the choice of the person). The right of a partner to decide what new partners, if any, shall be admitted to the firm. Story, Partn. §§ 5, 195.

This doctrine excludes even executors and representatives of partners from succeeding to the state and condition of partners; Kingman v. Spurr, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 237; 3 Kent 55; Lindl. Partn. 590.

DELEGATE. One authorized by another to act in his name; an attorney.

A person elected, by the people of an organized territory of the United States, to congress, who has a seat in congress and a right of debating, but not of voting. Ord. July 13, 1787; 2 Story, U. S. Laws 2076.

A person chosen to any deliberative assembly. It is, however, in this sense generally limited to occasional assemblies, such as conventions and the like, and does not usually apply to permanent bodies, as houses of assembly, etc. In Maryland the more numerous branch of the Legislature is called the House of Delegates.

As to its meaning when used as a verb, see DELEGATION.

DELEGATION. In Civil Law. A kind of novation by which the original debtor, in order to be liberated from his creditor, gives him a third person, who becomes obliged in his stead to the creditor or to the person appointed by him. See NOVATION.

Perfect delegation exists when the debtor who makes the obligation is discharged by the creditor.

Imperfect delegation exists when the creditor retains his rights against the original debtor. 2 Duvergny, n. 169.

It results from the definition that a delegation is made by the concurrence of at least three parties, viz.: the party delegating—that is, the former debtor who procures another debtor in his stead; the party delegated, who enters into the obligation in the place of the former debtor, either to the creditor or to some other person appointed by him; and the creditor, who, in consequence of the obligation contracted by the party delegated, discharges the party delegating. Sometimes there intervenes a fourth party; namely, the person indicated by the creditor in whose favor the person delegated becomes obliged, upon the indication of the creditor and by the order of the person delegating. Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 2, art. 6; Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 454. See La. Civ. Code 2188, 2189; Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 116; Buster v. Newkirk, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 76; Wentworth v. Wentworth, 5 N. H. 410; Sterling v. Trading Co., 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 179.

The party delegated is commonly a debtor of the person delegating, and, in order to be liberated from the obligation to him, contracts a new one with his creditor. In this case there is a novation both of the obligation of the person delegating, by his giving his creditor a new debtor, and of the person delegated, by the new obligation which he contracts. Pothier, ut supra.

In general, where the person delegated contracts a valid obligation to the creditor, the delegant is entirely liberated, and the creditor has no recourse against him in case of the substitute's insolvency. There is an exception to this rule when it is agreed that the debtor shall at his own risk delegate another person; but even in that case the creditor must not have omitted using proper diligence to obtain payment whilst the substitute continued solvent. Pothier.

Delegation differs from transfer and simple indication. The transfer which a creditor makes of his debt does not include any novation. It is the original debt which passes from one of the parties, who makes the transfer to the other, who receives it, and only takes place between these two persons, without the consent of the debtor necessarily intervening. Again, when the debtor indicates to the creditor a person from whom he may receive payment of the debt, and to whom the debtor gives the creditor an order for the purpose, it is merely a mandate, and neither a transfer nor a novation. So, where the creditor indicates a person to whom his debtor may pay the money, the debtor does not contract any obligation to the person indicated, but continues the debtor of his creditor who made the indication. Pothier. See NOVATION.

At Common Law. The transfer of authority from one or more persons to one or more others.

Any person, sui juris, may delegate to another in authority to act for him in a matter which is lawful and otherwise capable of being delegated; Comyns, Dig. Attorney, c. 1; 9 Co. 75 b; Story, Ag. § 6.

When a bare power or authority has been given to another, the latter cannot, in general, delegate that authority, or any part of it, to a third person, for the obvious reason that the principal has relied upon the intelligence, skill, and ability of his agent, and cannot have the same confidence in a stranger; Story, Ag. § 13; 2 Kent 633; Broom, Leg. Max. 839; Shankland v. Washington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 390, 8 L. Ed. 166; Ex parte Winsor, 3 Sto. 411, 425, Fed. Cas. No. 17,884; Entz v. Mills, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 453; Brewster v. Hobart, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 303; Wilson v. R. Co., 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 58; Mason v. Wait, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 127, 133; Smith v. Lowther, 35 W. Va. 300, 13 S. E. 999; Whitlock v. Washburn, 62 Hun 369, 17 N. Y. Supp. 60. A power to delegate his authority may, however, be given to the agent by express terms of substitution; Commercial Bank of Lake Erie v. Norton, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 505. If the power of the agent is created by writing, he cannot go beyond it; Henry v. Lane, 128 Fed. 243, 62 C. C. A. 625.

Sometimes such power is implied, as in the following cases: First, when, by the law, such power is indispensable in order to accomplish the end proposed: as, for example, when goods are directed to be sold at auction, and the law forbids such sales except by licensed auctioneers; Laussatt v. Lippincott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 386, 9 Am. Dec. 440. Second, when the employment of such substitute is in the ordinary course of trade: as, where it is the custom of trade to employ a shipbroker or other agent for the purpose of procuring freight and the like; 2 M. & S. 301; Gray v. Murry, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 167; Laussatt v. Lippincott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 386, 9 Am. Dec. 440. Third, when it is understood by the parties to be the mode in which the particular thing would or might be done; 9 Ves. 234, 251, 252; 2 M. & S. 301, 303, note. See the Guiding Star, 53 Fed. 936. Fourth, when the powers thus delegated are merely mechanical in their nature; Commercial Bank of Lake Erie v. Norton, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 501; Sugd. Pow. 176. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

As to the form of the delegation, for most purposes it may be either in writing, not under seal, or verbally without writing; or the authority may be implied. When, however, the act is required to be done under seal, the delegation must also be under seal unless the principal is present and verbally or impliedly authorizes the act; Story, Ag. § 51; Mech. Ag. 81; Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 483, 52 Am. Dec. 740.

Judicial power cannot be delegated; Cohen v. Hoff, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 500; Fertilizer Co. v. Taylor, 112 N. C. 141, 17 S. E. 69; a statute authorizing an attorney to sit in the place of a judge who was disqualified, by reason of prejudice or interest, is void; Van Slyke v. Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 390, 20 Am. Rep. 50.

Of Legislative Power. It is the general rule that legislative power cannot be delegated by the legislature to any other body or authority; Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395; Farnsworth Co. v. Lisbon, 62 Me. 451; Willis v. Owen, 43 Tex. 41; Appeal of Locke, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; State v. Wilcox, 45 Mo. 458; State v. Parker, 26 Vt. 362; Rice v. Foster, 4 Harring. (Del.) 479; Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 506; Cooley, Const. Lim. 141; U. S. v. Bridge Co., 45 Fed. 178; City of St. Joseph v. Wilshire, 47 Mo. App. 125; see Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294; but the taking effect of a statute may be made to depend upon some subsequent event; The Aurora v. U. S., 7 Cra. (U. S.) 382, 3 L. Ed. 378; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Clunet, 23 Md. 449; Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 583, Fed. Cas. No. 8,519.

It has often been said that it is elementary law that legislative power cannot be delegated. The difficulty is in determining what authority or discretion may be conferred on a body other than the legislature without contravening constitutional principle. The general question was the subject of extended discussion in a case sustaining the validity of an act conferring upon railroad commissioners the power to determine what are reasonable rates for transportation; State v. Ry. Co., 38 Minn. 281, 37 N. W. 782.

In that case the court quotes from a previous decision (State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737) the general rule against the delegation of legislative power, as requiring the legislature to pass upon two things, the authority to make, and the expediency of, the enactment. The court then proceeds to lay down a limitation for the rule growing out of the necessity of the exercise of discretion and judgment in the exercise of certain powers. Attention is directed to the difficulty in many cases of discriminating between what is properly legislative and what may be executive or administrative duty, and it is said that, while still recognizing the difference between the departments of government, "the maker of the law may commit something to the discretion of the other departments, and the precise boundary of this power is a subject of delicate and difficult inquiry into which a court will not necessarily enter." Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 46, 6 L. Ed. 253. The principle is repeatedly recognized by all courts that the legislature may authorize others to do things which it might properly, but cannot conveniently or advantageously, do itself. All laws are carried into execution by officers appointed for the purpose; some with more, others with less, but all clothed with power sufficient for the efficient execution of the law. These powers often necessarily involve in a large degree the exercise of discretion and judgment even to the extent of investigating and determining the facts, and acting upon and in accordance with the facts as thus found. In fact, this must be so, if the legislature is to be permitted effectually to exercise its constitutional powers. If this was not permissible, the wheels of government would often be blocked and the sovereign state find itself hopelessly entangled in the meshes of its own constitution." A number of examples are given of statutes granting discretionary powers to officers charged with the execution of the laws; power given to boards in control of public institutions to make contracts, adopt rules, etc.; the assessment of property for the purpose of taxation; the exercise of the police power in requiring and granting licenses, and the conclusion is stated in the exact words of Judge Ranney, quoted infra.

The decision of the Minnesota case was reversed upon grounds not affecting this general statement of the doctrine of the delegation of legislative power; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970.

This question was elaborately considered by the supreme court in Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294. In this case it was held that the authority conferred by a tariff act upon the president to suspend by proclamation the free introduction of sugar, etc., when he should be satisfied that any country producing such articles imposed duties or other exactions upon agricultural or other products of the United States, did not conflict with the recognized principle that congress could not delegate its legislative power to the president. The law was complete when it was declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency, the president was the mere agent to ascertain the event upon which the legislative will was to take effect. The court quotes with approval the language, often cited, of Ranney,

J., in Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. County Com'rs, 1 Ohio St. 88: "The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made." Two Pennsylvania cases are quoted with approval as follows: "Half the statutes on our books are in the alternative, depending on the discretion of some person or persons to whom is confided the duty of determining whether the proper occasion exists for executing them. But it cannot be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law." Moers v. City of Reading, 21 Pa. 188, 202. "To assert that a law is less than a law, because it is made to depend on a future event or act, is to rob the legislature of the power to act wisely for the public welfare whenever a law is passed relating to a state of affairs not yet developed, or to things future and impossible to fully know." The proper distinction, the court said, was this: "The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which cannot be known to the law-making power, and must, therefore, be subject to inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation." Appeal of Locke, 72 Pa. 491, 498, 13 Am. Rep. 716.

While it is difficult to define the line which separates legislative power to make laws and administrative authority to make regulations, congress may delegate power to fill up details where it has indicated its will in the statute, and it may make violations of such regulations punishable as indicated in the statute. Regulations of the secretary of agriculture as to grazing sheep on forest reserves have the force of law; and violation thereof is punishable under R. S. Sec. 5388; U. S. v. Grimaud, 220 U. S. 506, 31 Sup. Ct. 480, 55 L. Ed. 563. The authority given by congress to the secretary of war to prescribe rules and regulations for the use, administration, and control of canals, etc., owned or operated by the United States, is held not to be a delegation of legislative power, and rules made pursuant thereto have the force of law; U. S. v. Ormsbee, 74 Fed. 207. So authority given to the same officer to decide as to whether bridges over navigable rivers interfere with navigation is not a delegation of legislative power; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S. 364, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523; U. S. v. City of Moline, 82 Fed. 592; and see Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 385, 3 Sup. Ct. 228, 27 L. Ed. 971; nor is the determination of the treasury department of standards of teas that may be imported; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 Sup. Ct. 349, 48 L. Ed. 525. Congress may confer upon the department of commerce and labor the power to determine the right of a Chinese person to enter the United States and may make the decision of that department conclusive on the federal courts in habeas corpus proceedings even where citizenship is the ground on which the right of entry is claimed; U. S. v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

Where the decision of questions of fact is committed by congress to the judgment of the head of a department, his decision is conclusive; and even upon mixed questions of law and fact, or of law alone, there is a strong presumption of its correctness and the courts will not ordinarily review it, although they may occasionally do so; Bates & Guild Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 48 L. Ed. 894, where the court refused to interfere with the decision of the postmaster general as to the postal rates to be charged on a certain publication. The findings of the land department are treated by the courts as conclusive, though such proceedings involve, to a certain extent, the exercise of judicial power; Burfenning v. R. Co., 163 U. S. 321, 16 Sup. Ct. 1018, 41 L. Ed. 175; Johnson v. Drew, 171 U. S. 93, 18 Sup. Ct. 800, 43 L. Ed. 88. And since the land department is constituted a special tribunal with judicial functions, neither injunction nor mandamus will lie against an officer of that department to control him in discharging an official duty requiring the exercise of his judgment and discretion; U. S. v. Hitchcock, 190 U. S. 316, 23 Sup. Ct. 698, 47 L. Ed. 1074, citing Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 473, 25 L. Ed. 800; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 347, 19 L. Ed. 62; U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 Sup. Ct. 12, 32 L. Ed. 354; U. S. v. Windom, 137 U. S. 636, 11 Sup. Ct. 197, 34 L. Ed. 811.

There seems to be a presumption that officers of state making rules under statutory powers have not exceeded their authority; Lord Esher in (1887) 18 Q. B. Div. 383, 400.

The legislature may confer upon commissions the power to determine for what purposes, and upon what terms, conditions, and limitations, an increase of capital stock may be made by railroad corporations; State v. Ry. Co., 100 Minn. 445, 111 N. W. 289, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250. It may not authorize such commission to allow an increase of capital stock for such purposes and on such terms as it may deem advisable, or in its discretion to refuse it; this being an attempt to delegate legislative power; id.

It may provide, in appeals from orders of the state railroad commission, that the burden of proof shall rest upon the party seeking to set aside the decision of the commissioners of showing that the order is unreasonable and unjust, and that the record shall be prima facie evidence that the order is just and reasonable; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ry. Commission, 85 Neb. 818, 124 N. W. 477, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444.

It may enact a law, complete in itself, designed to accomplish a general public purpose, and may expressly authorize designated officials, within definite valid limitations to provide rules and regulations for the complete operation and enforcement of the law within its expressed general purpose; State v. R. Co., 56 Fla. 617, 47 South. 969, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639.

The legislature may confer upon the state auditor the right to issue licenses for book-making on horse races to persons of good character; State v. Williams, 160 Mo. 333, 60 S. W. 1077; may require consent of park commissioners for orations in a park; Com. v. Abrahams, 156 Mass. 57, 30 N. E. 79; or of a city committee for orations on a common; Com. v. Davis, 140 Mass. 485, 4 N. E. 577; or of the clerk of a market for the use of a stand on the street; In re Nightingale, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 168; may require a permit in writing from the board of health to keep swine; Inhabitants of Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 563, 24 N. E. 860; or from the commissioners of the town to erect wooden buildings; Commissioners of Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262, 22 Atl. 266; or from the president of the board of trustees of a municipality to beat drums in the travelled streets of a city; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529. A commission may be authorized to select and adopt a uniform series of text-books for the schools of a state; Leeper v. State, 103 Tenn. 500, 53 S. W. 962, 48 L. R. A. 167; or voting machines for use in elections; Elwell v. Comstock, 99 Minn. 261, 109 N. W. 113, 698, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 9 Ann. Cas. 270; The McTammany Voting Machine, 23 R. I. 630, 50 Atl. 265; City of Detroit v. Board of Inspectors of Election, 139 Mich. 548, 102 N. W. 1029, 69 L. R. A. 184, 111 Am. St. Rep. 430; Lynch v. Malley, 215 Ill. 574, 74 N. E. 723, 2 Ann. Cas. 837; Opinion of Justices to House of Representatives, 178 Mass. 605, 60 N. E. 129, 54 L. R. A. 430 (by a divided court). A statute authorizing measures preventive of smallpox confers authority upon a board to compel vaccination during an epidemic; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 56 N. E. 89, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195; and one giving general sanitary power authorizes a board to keep adulterated milk out of a city; Polinsky v. People, 73 N. Y. 65.

A provision that a boiler inspector's act shall not apply to boilers inspected by insurance companies and certified by their authorized inspectors to be safe; State v. McMahon, 65 Minn. 453, 68 N. W. 77; and an act providing that hogs shall not run at large in a county, if the county courts on petition of voters direct that the act be enforced therein; Haigh v. Bell, 41 W. Va. 19, 23 S. E. 666, 31 L. R. A. 131; are valid.

Acts held not to be a delegation of legislative power and therefore valid, are authorizing the fish commissioners to give permits to take fish for propagation at times and by methods otherwise prohibited; People v. Brooks, 101 Mich. 98, 59 N. W. 444; requiring carriers of passengers to furnish their agents with certificates of authority to sell tickets, on which a license shall be issued by the state; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 347, 59 N. W. 317, 24 L. R. A. 498; authorizing a court to issue certificates of incorporation to municipalities; In re Town of Union Mines, 39 W. Va. 179, 19 S. E. 398; permitting the board of supervisors of counties to determine whether a county shall come within or remain without the provisions of an act to establish law libraries; Board of Law Library Trustees v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 571, 34 Atl. 244; providing that an act in relation to public roads shall not go into effect until recommended by the grand jury; Haney v. Bartow County Com'rs, 91 Ga. 770, 18 S. E. 28; authorizing railroad and warehouse commissioners to make a schedule of a maximum rate of charges for each railroad company in the state; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 37 N. E. 247, 24 L. R. A. 141, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278; authorizing the union of two railroad companies and that the united company may discontinue such operations of the road as the directors deem necessary; Farnum v. R. R., 66 N. H. 569, 29 Atl. 541; authorizing railroad commissioners to regulate freights; Georgia R. R. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694; or to make reasonable regulations for the prevention of excessive charges and unjust discrimination; Atlantic Exp. Co. v. R. Co., 111 N. C. 463, 16 S. E. 393, 18 L. R. A. 393, 32 Am. St. Rep. 805; or to fix rates; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 160 Mich. 355, 125 N. W. 549; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Campbell, 173 Fed. 957; Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 172 Ind. 113, 87 N. E. 966; Trustees of Village of Saratoga Springs v. Power Co., 191 N. Y. 123, 83 N. E. 693, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713; or to order a company to remove grade crossings and on its failure to do so to determine the portion of the expense thereof which is to be paid by the company; Appeal of New York & N. E. R. Co., 62 Conn. 527, 26 Atl. 122; to provide that the mayors of cities of a certain class may be elected by the people or appointed by the council as provided by ordinance; Brown v. Holland, 30 S. W. 629, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 149; to authorize park commissioners to determine where and of what material sidewalks and road beds shall be constructed; Turner v. City of Detroit, 104 Mich. 326, 62 N. W. 405; to authorize a state medical board to exercise powers of registration and examination; France v. State, 57 Ohio St. 1, 47 N. E. 1041, 38 Ohio L. J. 239.

A legislative body may delegate to an official the power to find some fact or situation on which the operation of the law is conditioned and to make and enforce regulations for enforcing the act; St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co. v. U. S., 188 Fed. 191, 110 C. C. A. 63 (C. C. A. 8th). It cannot delegate its lawmaking power or its indispensable discretion to modify a statute; id.

Statutes declaring that railroad rates and service shall be reasonable, and creating a commission with power to investigate existing rates and service, and to fix and determine what rates and what service are reasonable, the statute then providing that the rates and service so fixed shall be in force, have been generally upheld, as a valid exercise of the legislative power; Stone v. Trust Co., 116 U. S. 307, 6 Sup. Ct. 334, 388, 1191, 29 L. Ed. 636; Reagan v. Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014; Georgia R. R. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 37 N. E. 247, 24 L. R. A. 141, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278; Hopper v. Ry. Co., 91 Ia. 639, 60 N. W. 487; State v. R. Co., 80 Minn. 191, 83 N. W. 60, 89 Am. St. Rep. 514; Railroad Commission of Texas v. Ry. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 38 S. W. 750; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 160 Mich. 355, 125 N. W. 549.

The legislature may declare the general rule of law to be in force and take effect upon the subsequent establishment of the facts necessary to make it operative, or to call for its application, as the bankruptcy law of the United States with reference to legislative action regarding exemption laws existing or to be thereafter enacted; Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 181, 22 Sup. Ct. 857, 46 L. Ed. 1113; or a law may be made to take effect conditionally, depending upon the action of the legislature of another state fixing the amount to be enacted; Phoenix Ins. Co. of New York v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672; or it may be conditioned upon the legislative act of a city council; Adams v. City of Beloit, 105 Wis. 363, 81 N. W. 869, 47 L. R. A. 441; or upon action of the executive; In re Griner, 16 Wis. 424; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294; or upon judicial action involving the determination of questions of fact; In re Incorporation of Village of North Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 616, 67 N. W. 1033, 33 L. R. A. 638; or upon administrative action; State v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 390, 70 N. W. 347, 37 L. R. A. 157, 60 Am. St. Rep. 123; or upon a declaration of fact or the creation of a condition by vote of the electors of a municipality; State v. Hinkel, 131 Wis. 103, 111 N. W. 217.

Authority to transfer cases pending in a territorial court to the federal courts may be delegated to a constitutional convention, upon the admission of the territory as a state; Hecht v. Metzler, 82 Fed. 340.

Acts held invalid as an improper delegation by the legislature of the police power are: An act directing the insurance commissioner to prescribe a standard policy and forbidding the use of any other; O'Neil v. Ins. Co., 166 Pa. 72, 30 Atl. 943, 26 L. R. A. 715, 45 Am. St. Rep. 650; acts authorizing insurance commissioners to adopt a printed form of fire policy with conditions indorsed thereon, which, as nearly as possible, in type and form shall conform to that adopted by another state; Dowling v. Ins. Co., 92 Wis. 63, 65 N. W. 738, 31 L. R. A. 112; Anderson v. Fire Assur. Co., 59 Minn. 182, 60 N. W. 1095, 63 N. W. 241, 28 L. R. A. 609, 50 Am. St. Rep. 400, in which it was admitted that an act similar to that of Pennsylvania would be invalid, but it was unsuccessfully contended that the legislative direction to conform as nearly as possible to a specified policy would take the case out of the principle laid down by the Pennsylvania court. So also was an act permitting a justice to put a person charged with drunkenness as a disorderly person under recognizance to take the treatment of a private corporation administering a cure for drunkenness, and providing that on reports showing compliance, he should be acquitted and discharged; Senate of Happy Home Clubs v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Mich. 117, 57 N. W. 1101, 23 L. R. A. 144.

A law providing for the adjustment of state bonds, and authorizing judges to decide which of two sections of the act should take effect, gives them legislative power and is void; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737; in this case the subject was very elaborately argued, and the distinction between legislative and judicial power is very clearly stated by the court. See supra.

The legislature cannot leave to commissioners the power to decide in what proportion the expense of laying out and opening a public avenue should be imposed on townships of a county or wards of a city; State v. County Com'rs, 37 N. J. L. 12.

The legislature may not delegate the power to make a law prescribing a penalty, but it is competent for the legislature to authorize the railroad commission to prescribe duties upon which the law may operate in imposing a penalty and in effectuating the purpose designed in enacting the law. Where a penalty is imposed by law, it may be incurred for the penal violation of a rule prescribed by the railroad commission within their express authority; State v. R. Co., 56 Fla. 617, 47 South. 969, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, where the commissioners adopted a rule that all railroads would be liable to the shipper to a charge of $1 per day for detaining cars. Such a charge was held not a penalty, but a monetary obligation incurred for breach of duty that may be enforced by the shipper.

Congress may not delegate its general legislative power to the District of Columbia; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637; nor its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the congress; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Transit Co., 224 U. S. 215, 32 Sup. Ct. 436, 56 L. Ed. 729, citing Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 Sup. Ct. 349, 48 L. Ed. 525; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S. 364, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523; U. S. v. Grimaud, 220 U. S. 506, 31 Sup. Ct. 480, 55 L. Ed. 563.

Leaving to the interstate commerce commission the carrying out of details in the exercise of its discretion is not a delegation of legislative authority; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Transit Co., 224 U. S. 194, 32 Sup. Ct. 436, 56 L. Ed. 729. The commission may require common carriers to adopt a uniform system of accounting and bookkeeping and to make annual reports embracing not only their joint rail and water business, but the other business of the carriers as well, such as their port to port business, both intrastate and interstate, and the business of operating amusement parks; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Transit Co., 224 U. S. 194, 32 Sup. Ct. 436, 56 L. Ed. 729.

It is said that the power vested in boards of health to forbid by general regulations the exercise within their respective towns of any trade which is a nuisance is in its nature quasi-judicial. Its exercise requires the officers charged with the duty to use their discretion and judgment in adjudicating on the subject-matter. This is the decisive test that the authority vested in them is judicial and not ministerial merely; Belcher v. Farrar, 8 Allen (Mass.) 325. In Nelson v. State Board of Health, 186 Mass. 330, 71 N. E. 693, it is said there are two classes of regulations—the general and the special. The general regulations are said to be quasi-legislative, while those regarding a particular case are termed quasi-judicial. Where commissioners determined that sawdust from a particular mill might not be discharged into a stream because of injury to fish therein, the court held the commissioners' order to be a legislative one and so valid without notice or hearing; Conn. v. Sisson, 189 Mass. 247, 75 N. E. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752, 109 Am. St. Rep. 630. Since the decision in this case, a Massachusetts Act requires commissioners before making an order forbidding the discharge of sawdust into a stream, to give notice thereof and a hearing thereon and giving to persons aggrieved thereby a right of appeal to the superior court sitting in equity. See 20 Harv. L. R. 116, where the query is made: Have the commissioners become judicial since the passage of the Act?

Power may be conferred upon a state officer, as such, to execute a duty imposed under an act of congress; Dallemagne v. Mol-san, 197 U. S. 169, 25 Sup. Ct. 422, 49 L. Ed. 709.

The legislature may delegate to a commission the power to determine the boundaries of the sections of a city in which buildings of different heights as determined by the legislature shall be erected; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, 79 N. E. 745, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1160; it may confer upon examining boards appointed by the mayors in certain cities in the state, the power to examine plumbers as to their fitness; People v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 39 N. E. 686, 27 L. R. A. 718; but it cannot delegate to a board authority to require a knowledge of embalming as a condition to receiving an undertaker's license; Wyeth v. Board of Health, 200 Mass. 474, 86 N. E. 925, 128 Am. St. Rep. 439, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 147. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

It may empower the courts on the application of local authorities and, after notice to railway companies, to order that gates be erected at the intersection of a railroad and a street; People v. R. Co., 134 N. Y. 506, 31 N. E. 873.

Sir F. Pollock (First Book of Jurisp. 244) points out the difference in constitutional law between delegated and devolved, applying the latter term, for instance, to the powers given by parliament to the legislatures of British colonies which are plenary within the appointed limits, such a legislature not being "a mere delegate or agent of the imperial parliament."

As to the delegation of power by directors of a corporation to an executive committee, or of a bank to its executive officers, see DIRECTORS; NATIONAL BANK; OFFICER; CASHIER.

As to the delegation of legislative power in the government of the Philippine Islands, see PHILIPPINES.

As to questions relating to the submission of legislation to a popular vote, see LEGISLATIVE POWER, and see also INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

DÉLESTAGE. In French Marine Law. A discharging of ballast from a vessel.

DELIBERATE. To examine, to consult, in order to form an opinion. Thus, a jury deliberate as to their verdict.

DELIBERATION. The act of the understanding by which a party examines whether a thing proposed ought to be done or not to be done, or whether it ought to be done in one manner or another.

The deliberation relates to the end proposed, to the means of accomplishing that end, or to both. It is a presumption of law that all acts are done with due deliberation,—that the party intended to do what he has done. But he may show the contrary. In contracts, for example, he may show that he has been taken by surprise; and when a criminal act is charged, he may prove that it was an accident and not with deliberation,—that, in fact, there was no intention or will. See 18 Am. Dec. 778, n.

By the use of this word in describing the crime of murder in the first degree, the idea is conveyed that the perpetrator weighs the motives for the act, and its consequences, the nature of the crime, or other things connected with his intentions, with a view to a decision thereon, that he carefully considers all these, and the act is not suddenly committed; State v. Boyle, 28 Ia. 524. See State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 13; Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16; INTENT; MURDER; MALICE; COOLING TIME; WILL.

In Legislation. Counsel or consultation touching some business in an assembly having the power to act in relation to it.

DELICT. In Civil Law. The act by which one person, by fraud or malignity, causes some damage or tort to some other.

In its most enlarged sense, this term includes all kinds of crimes and misdemeanors, and even the injury which has been caused by another, either voluntarily or accidentally, without evil intention. But more commonly by delicts are understood those small offences which are punished by a small fine or a short imprisonment.

Private delicts are those which are directly injurious to a private individual.

Public delicts are those which affect the whole community in their hurtful consequences.

Quasi delicts are the acts of a person, who, without malignity, but by an inexcusable imprudence, causes an injury to another. Pothier, Obl. n. 116; Erskine, Pr. 4. 4. 1.

DELICTUM (Lat.). A crime or offence; a tort or wrong, as in actions ex delicto. 1 Chit. Pl. A challenge of a juror propter delictum is for some crime or misdemeanor that affects his credit and renders him infamous. 3 Bla. Com. 363; 2 Kent 241. Some offence committed or wrong done. 1 Kent 552; Cowp. 199, 200. A state of culpability. Occurring often, in the phrase "in pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis." So, where both parties to a broken contract have been guilty of unlawful acts, the law will not interfere, but will leave them in pari delicto. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 111.

DELIMIT. To mark or lay out the limits or boundary line of a territory or country.

DELINQUENT. One who has been guilty of some crime, offence, or failure of duty.

DELIRIUM FEBRILE. In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of mental aberration incident to febrile disease, and sometimes to the last stages of chronic diseases.

The aberration is mostly of a subjective character, maintained by the inward activity of the mind rather than by outward impressions. "Regardless of persons or things around him, and scarcely capable of recognizing them when aroused by his attendants, the patient retires within himself, to dwell upon the scenes and events of the past, which pass before him in wild and disorderly array, while the tongue feebly records the varying impressions, in the form of disjointed, incoherent discourse, or of senseless rhapsody." Ray, Med. Jur. 346. It comes on gradually, being first manifested by talking while asleep, and by a momentary forgetfulness of persons and things on waking. Fully aroused, however, the mind becomes clear and tranquil, and so continues until the return of sleep, when the same incidents recur. Gradually the mental disorder becomes more intense, and the intervals between its returns of shorter duration, until they disappear altogether. Occasionally the past is revived with wonderful vividness, and acquisitions are displayed which the patient, before his illness, had entirely forgotten. Instances are related of persons speaking in a language which, though acquired in youth, had long since passed from their memory. See the definition of delirium by Bland, Ch., in Owing's case, 1 Bland, (Md.) Ch. 386, 17 Am. Dec. 311.

The only acts which are liable to be affected by delirium are wills, which are often made in the last illness during the periods when the mind is apparently clear. Under such circumstances it may be questioned whether the apparent clearness was or was not real; and it is a question not always easily answered. In the early stages of delirium the mind may be quite clear no doubt, in the intervals, while it is no less certain that there comes a period at last when no really lucid interval occurs and the mind is reliable at no time. The person may be quiet, and even answer questions with some degree of pertinence, while a close examination would show the mind to be in a dreamy condition and unable to appreciate any nice relations. In all these cases the question to be met is, whether the delirium which confessedly existed before the act left upon the mind no trace of its influence; whether the testator, calm, quiet, clear, and coherent as he seemed, was not quite unconscious of the nature of the act he was performing. The state of things implied in these questions is not fanciful. In every case it may possibly exist, and the questions must be met.

After obtaining all the light which can be thrown on the mental condition of the testator by nurses, servants, and physicians, then the character of the act itself and the circumstances which accompany it require a careful investigation. If it should appear that the mind was apparently clear, and that the act was a rational act rationally done, consistent one part with another, and in accordance with wishes or instructions previously expressed, and without any appearance of foreign influence, then it would be established. A different state of things would to that extent raise suspicion and throw discredit on the act. Yet at the very best it will occasionally happen, so dubious sometimes are the indications that the decision will be largely conjectural. 1 Hagg Eccl. 146, 256, 502, 577; 2 id. 142; 3 id. 790; 1 Lee Eccl. 130; 2 id. 229. See INSANITY.

DELIRIUM TREMENS (called, also, mania-a-potu). In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of mental disorder, usually accompanied by tremor, incident to habits of intemperate drinking, which generally appears as a sequel to a period of unusual excess or after a few days' abstinence from stimulating drink. It may also be caused in intemperate subjects by an accident, fright, or acute inflammatory disease, such as pneumonia.

The nature of the connection between this disease and abstinence is not yet clearly understood. Where the former succeeds a broken limb, or any other severe accident that confines the patient to his bed and obliges him to abstain, it would seem as if its development were favored by the constitutional disturbance then existing. In other cases, where the abstinence is apparently voluntary, there is some reason to suppose that it is really the incubation of the disease, and not its cause.

Its approach is generally indicated by a slight tremor and faltering of the hands and lower extremities, a tremulousness of the voice, a certain restlessness and sense of anxiety which the patient knows not how to describe or account for, disturbed sleep, and impaired appetite. These symptoms having continued two or three days, at the end of which time they have usually increased in severity, the patient ceases to sleep altogether, and soon becomes delirious at intervals. After a while the delirium becomes constant, as well as the utter absence of sleep. There is usually an elevation of temperature of two or three degrees. This state of watchfulness and delirium continues three or four days, when, if the patient recover, it is succeeded by sleep, which at first appears in uneasy and irregular naps, and lastly in long, sound, and refreshing slumbers. If sleep does not supervene about this time, the disease may prove fatal.

The mental aberration of delirium tremens is marked by some peculiar characters. Almost invariably the patient manifests feelings of fear and suspicion, and labors under continual apprehensions of being made the victim of sinister designs and practices. He imagines that people have conspired to rob and murder him, and insists that he can hear them in an adjoining room arranging their plans and preparing to rush upon him, or that he is forcibly detained and prevented from going to his own home. One of the most common hallucinations in this disease is that of constantly seeing devils, snakes, or vermin around him and on him. Under the influence of the terrors inspired by these notions, the wretched patient often endeavors to cut his throat, or jump out of the window, or murder his wife, or some one else whom his disordered imagination identifies with his enemies.

Delirium tremens must not be confounded with other forms of mental derangement which occur in connection with intemperate habits. Hard drinking may produce a paroxysm of maniacal excitement, or a host of hallucinations and delusions, which disappear after a few days' abstinence from drink and are succeeded by the ordinary mental condition. In U. S. v. McGlue, 1 Curt. cc. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,679, for instance, the prisoner was defendant on the plea that the homicide for which he was indicted was committed in a fit of delirium tremens. There was no doubt that he was laboring under some form of insanity; but the fact, which appeared in evidence, that his reason returned before the recurrence of sound sleep, rendered it very doubtful whether the trouble was delirium tremens, although in every other respect it looked like that disease.

By repeated decisions the law has been settled in this country that delirium tremens annuls responsibility for any act that may be committed under its influence: provided, of course, that the mental condition can stand the tests applied in other forms of insanity. The law does not look to the remote causes of the mental affection; and the rule on this point is, that if the act is not committed under the immediate influence of intoxicating drinks, the plea of insanity is not invalidated by the fact that it is the result of drinking at some previous time. Such drinking may be morally wrong; but the same may be said of other vicious indulgences which give rise to much of the insanity which exists in the world; Whart. Cr. L. § 48; Beasley v. State, 50 Ala. 149, 20 Am. Rep. 292; Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263; Roberts v. People, 19 Mich. 401; Carter v. State, 12 Tex. 500, 62 Am. Dec. 539; Fisher v. State, 64 Ind.

435; U. S. v. McGlue, 1 Curt. cc. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 13,679; U. S. v. Drew, 5 Mas. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 14,993; State v. Wilson, Ray, Med. Jur. 620; State v. Harrigan, 9 Houst. (Del.) 369, 31 Atl. 1052; Ayres v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 396. In England, the existence of delirium tremens has been admitted as an excuse for crime for the same reasons; Reg v. Watson and Reg v. Simpson, 2 Tayl. Med. Jur. 599; 14 Cox, Cr. Cas. 565. In the case of Birdsall, 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 588, it was held that delirium tremens was not a valid defence, because the prisoner knew, by repeated experience, that indulgence in drinking would probably bring on an attack of the disease; see also in Roberts v. People, 19 Mich. 401. See DRUNKENNESS.

DELIVERANCE. In Practice. A term used by the clerk in court to every prisoner who is arraigned and pleads not guilty, to whom he wishes a good deliverance. In modern practice this is seldom used.

DELIVERY. The transfer of a deed from the grantor to the grantee, or some person acting in his behalf, in such a manner as to deprive the grantor of his right to recall it at his option.

An absolute delivery is one which is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor.

A conditional delivery is one which passes the deed from the possession of the grantor, but is not to be completed by possession in the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event. A delivery in this manner is an escrow (q. v.).

No particular form is required to effect a delivery. It may be by acts merely, by words merely, or by both combined; but in all cases an intention that it shall be a delivery must exist; Com. Dig. Fait (A); 6 Sim. 31; Lindsay v. Lindsay, 11 Vt. 621; Arrison v. Harmstead, 2 Pa. 191; Verplank v. Sterry, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 536, 7 Am. Dec. 348; Mills v. Gore, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 28; Hughes v. Easten, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 572, 20 Am. Dec. 230; Hayes v. Boylan, 141 Ill. 400, 30 N. E. 1041, 33 Am. St. Rep. 326; Nazro v. Ware, 38 Minn. 443, 38 N. W. 359; Steffian v. Bank, 69 Tex. 513, 6 S. W. 623; Flint v. Phipps, 16 Or. 437, 19 Pac. 543. The unconditional delivery of a deed to a third person for the use of a lunatic grantee, not under guardianship, followed by circumstances indicating acceptance by the grantee, is valid; Campbell v. Kuhn, 45 Mich. 513, 8 N. W. 523, 40 Am. Rep. 479. "Anything which signifies the intention of the grantor to part with his control or dominion over the paper, so that it may become a muniment of title in the grantee, operates as a legal delivery. With respect to the measure of proof required, a difference is recognized in the cases depending upon the character of the deed, whether it be voluntary or made to give effect to a sale. In the former case the intention to part with the control of the deed is not presumed and a delivery must be proved strictly. . . . But if the conveyance be for a valuable consideration and absolute on its face, the intention to consummate the conveyance by the delivery of the deed as a muniment of title is inferred from the grantor's parting with the possession of it, whether it be to the grantee directly or to some third person—if he part with it without any condition or reservation." Bates, Ch., in Jamison v. Craven, 4 Del. Ch. 326. In the absence of direct evidence, the delivery of a deed will be presumed from the concurrent acts of the parties recognizing a transfer of title; Gould v. Day, 94 U. S. 405, 24 L. Ed. 232; Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. 336, 28 Atl. 781; Williams v. Williams, 148 Ill. 426, 36 N. E. 104. So long as a deed is within the control and subject to the dominion of the grantor, there is no delivery, without which there can be no deed; Byars v. Spencer, 101 Ill. 429, 40 Am. Rep. 212; Lang v. Smith, 37 W. Va. 725, 17 S. E. 213. The possession of a deed by the grantee therein, is prima facie evidence of its delivery; Campbell v. Carruth, 32 Fla. 264, 13 South. 432; McClellan v. Zwingli, 70 Hun 600, 24 N. Y. Supp. 371; Lewis v. Watson, 98 Ala. 479, 13 South. 570, 22 L. R. A. 297, 39 Am. St. Rep. 82. The deed of a corporation was said to be delivered by affixing the corporate seal; Co. Litt. 22, n., 36, n.; Cro. Eliz. 167; 2 Rolle, Abr. Fait (I); L. R. 2 H. L. 296.

It may be made by an agent as well as by the grantor himself; Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Mass. 307, 6 Am. Dec. 67; Belden v. Carter, 4 Day (Conn.) 66, 4 Am. Dec. 185; 5 B. & C. 671; or to an agent previously appointed; Western R. Corp. v. Babcock, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 356; or subsequently recognized; Turner v. Whidden, 22 Me. 121; Shirley's Lessee v. Ayres, 14 Ohio, 307, 45 Am. Dec. 546; but a subsequent assent on the part of the grantee will not be presumed; Hulick v. Scovil, 4 Gilman (Ill.) 177; Canning v. Pinkham, 1 N. H. 353; Church v. Gilman, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 656, 30 Am. Dec. 82. Where a father in purchasing land has the deed executed in the name of his minor son, the delivery of the deed to the father is sufficient delivery to the son; Hall v. Hall, 107 Mo. 101, 17 S. W. 811.

The delivery of a deed to a third person for the grantee's benefit, followed by an assertion of title by the grantee, is a good delivery; Haenni v. Bleisch, 146 Ill. 262, 34 N. E. 153; as is also such a delivery where the third person is to be custodian, but where the deed is not to go into force until after the grantor's death; Campbell v. Morgan, 68 Hun 490, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1001.

The cases holding that a deed delivered to a third person to take effect on the death of the grantor is valid are collected by Mr. Jones in his work on Real Property, vol. 2, § 1234; see also Wittenbrock v. Cass, 110 Cal. 1, 42 Pac. 300; Gish v. Brown, 171 Pa. 479, 33 Atl. 60; Baker v. Baker, 159 Ill.

394, 42 N. E. 867; Benzler v. Rieckhoff, 97 Ia. 75, 66 N. W. 147; Haeg v. Haeg, 53 Minn. 33, 55 N. W. 1114; Hutton v. Cramer, 10 Ariz. 110, 85 Pac. 483, 103 Pac. 497; and there are authorities which uphold such transfers even though the grantor reserves a right to recall the deed at any time before his death, provided he does not do so; Belden v. Carter, 4 Day (Conn.) 66, 4 Am. Dec. 185; but it is held that these cases are indefensible on principle, and that such a transaction is testamentary; Arnegard v. Arnegard, 7 N. D. 475, 75 N. W. 797, 41 L. R. A. 258; Phelps v. Pratt, 225 Ill. 85, 80 N. E. 69, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945. Actual delivery passes title, and such title is thereafter as much beyond the control of the grantor as though he had never owned the land; id.; Arnegard v. Arnegard, 7 N. D. 475, 75 N. W. 797, 41 L. R. A. 258, citing Connard v. Colgan, 55 Ia. 538, 8 N. W. 351; Seibel v. Rapp, 85 Va. 28, 6 S. E. 478; Douglas v. West, 140 Ill. 455, 31 N. E. 403. For this reason it has been held that the declarations of the grantor subsequent to an alleged delivery are not competent to impeach it. If he has in fact transferred the title, he cannot, by his unsworn declarations made in his own interest, in effect lay the foundation for securing a restoration of the title without the act or even consent of the grantee; Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Blight v. Schenck, 10 Pa. 285, 51 Am. Dec. 478.

When the maker of a deed parts with the possession of it to anybody, there is a presumption that it was delivered; and it is for the maker to show that it was delivered in escrow; Robbins v. Rascoe, 120 N. C. 79, 26 S. E. 807, 38 L. R. A. 238, 58 Am. St. Rep. 774. As to delivery to a third person to take effect on the grantor's death, some of the cases proceed on the theory that the fee does not pass to the grantee until the delivery of the deed to him, and that then his title relates back to the original delivery. But the better rule is said to be that the deed is immediately operative as against the grantor, and that the condition that delivery to the grantee shall not be made until after the grantor's death is equivalent to the reservation of a life estate in his favor in the land itself; Arnegard v. Arnegard, 7 N. D. 475, 75 N. W. 797, 41 L. R. A. 258. In Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185, 26 N. W. 426, 60 Am. Rep. 291, it is said a deed of conveyance in present terms is inconsistent with the retention of a life estate, and from the time when the deed is delivered as a conveyance the whole title goes with it and becomes irrevocable.

To complete a delivery, acceptance must take place, which may be presumed from the grantee's possession; Clarke v. Ray, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 319; Ward v. Lewis, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 518; Canning v. Pinkham, 1 N. H. 353; Southern Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cole, 4 Fla. 359; Pitts v. Sheriff, 108 Mo. 110, 18 S. W. 1071; from the relationship of a person holding the deed to the grantee; Bryan v. Wash, 2 Gilman (Ill.) 557; Souverbye v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 240; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Jaques, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 456; and from other circumstances; Merrills v. Swift, 18 Conn. 257, 46 Am. Dec. 315; McKinney v. Rhoads, 5 Watts (Pa.) 343. The execution and recording of a deed, and delivery of it to the register for that purpose, do not vest the title in the grantee; he must first ratify these acts; Younge v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 636, 18 L. Ed. 262; Maynard v. Maynard, 10 Mass. 456, 6 Am. Dec. 146; Hutton v. Smith, 88 Ia. 238, 55 N. W. 326; but see Glaze v. Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349, 49 N. W. 595; but they are prima facie evidence of delivery; Kille v. Ege, 79 Pa. 15; Davis v. Garrett, 91 Tenn. 147, 18 S. W. 113; Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204, 53 N. W. 957; Knox v. Clark, 15 Colo. App. 356, 62 Pac. 334.

Ratification of the Recording of an Undelivered Deed. An undelivered deed wrongfully recorded passes no title; Calhoun County v. Emigrant Co., 93 U. S. 124, 23 L. Ed. 826; Gulf Coal & Coke Co. v. Coal & Coke Co., 145 Ala. 228, 40 South. 397; Everts v. Agnes, 6 Wis. 453; Smith v. Bank, 32 Vt. 341, 76 Am. Dec. 179; but a deed secured by the grantee and placed on record without delivery may be ratified by the grantor by treating the property as belonging to the grantee, and inducing him to assert title under the belief that he has the title; Phelps v. Pratt, 225 Ill. 85, 80 N. E. 69, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945; such a delivery was held to have been ratified by the grantor where he had notice of the recording and remained quiet for several years; McNulty v. McNulty, 47 Kan. 208, 27 Pac. 819; Pittman v. Sotley, 64 Ill. 155; and where he received and retained the purchase money or a portion thereof; Harkness v. Cleaves, 113 Ia. 140, 84 N. W. 1033; and where the grantor assents to the grantee's raising money to be secured by a mortgage upon the property; Lyman v. Smith, 4 Lack. Leg. News (Pa.) 207; to the same effect, Mays v. Shields, 117 Ga. 814, 45 S. E. 68, where it is said the grantor cannot recognize the grantee's possession as valid for some purposes, and disclaim it for others; and to the same effect, Dixon v. Bank, 102 Ga. 461, 31 S. E. 96, 66 Am. St. Rep. 193.

Negligence by the grantor of an undelivered deed in keeping it in a place to which the grantee had access will not estop him from denying its validity as against a purchaser in good faith from the grantee, where the latter surreptitiously abstracted the deed and recorded it; Garner v. Risinger, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 378, 81 S. W. 343; Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55, 11 Am. Rep. 546. It has been held that nothing short of an explicit ratification by the grantor of the delivery, or such acquiescence after full knowledge of the facts as would raise a presumption of an express ratification, could give the deed vitality; Hadlock v. Hadlock, 22 Ill. 388. And it has been held that failure of successors in title to one whose undelivered deed to real estate has been recorded by the grantee will not estop them from denying the title of a stranger who purchases the property in reliance upon the record; Gulf Coal & Coke Co. v. Coal & Coke Co., 145 Ala. 228, 40 South. 397.

See 14 Harv. L. Rev. 456; ASSENT.

There can ordinarily be but one valid delivery; Verplank v. Sterry, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 536, 7 Am. Dec. 348; which can take place only after complete execution; McKee v. Hicks, 13 N. C. 379; Moelle v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 21, 13 Sup. Ct. 426, 37 L. Ed. 350. But there must be one; Stiles v. Brown, 16 Vt. 563; 2 Washb. R. P. 581; and from that one the deed takes effect; Geiss v. Odenheimer, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 278, 2 Am. Dec. 407; Cutts v. Mfg. Co., 18 Me. 190. Elsev v. Metcalfe, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 323. Where the date of acknowledgment of a mortgage differed from its date, delivery will be of the former date, in the absence of any evidence; Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. R. Co., 107 Fed. 311, 46 C. C. A. 305.

In Contracts. The transfer of the possession of a thing from one person to another.

Originally, delivery was a clear and unequivocal act of giving possession, accomplished by placing the subject to be transferred in the hands of the transferee or his agent, or in their respective warehouses, vessels, carts, and the like; but in modern times it is frequently symbolical, as by delivery of the key to a room containing goods; Wilkes v. Ferris, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 335, 4 Am. Dec. 364; Leedom v. Phillips, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 529; 2 Ves. Sen. 445; see, also, 7 East 558; 3 B. & P. 233; Debinson v. Emmons, 158 Mass. 592, 33 N. E. 706; by marking timber on a wharf, or goods in a warehouse, or by separating and weighing or measuring them; Barney v. Brown, 2 Vt. 374, 19 Am. Dec. 720; Hurff v. Hires, 40 N. J. L. 581, 29 Am. Rep. 282; Farmers' Phosphate Co. v. Gill, 69 Md. 537, 16 Atl. 214, 1 L. R. A. 767, 9 Am. St. Rep. 443; or otherwise constructive, as by the delivery of a part for the whole; Chamberlain v. Farr, 23 Vt. 265; Leggett v. Rogers, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 416; Packard v. Dunsmore, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 282; Vining v. Gilbreth, 39 Me. 496; 3 B. & P. 69. And see, as to what constitutes a delivery; President, etc., of Portland Bank v. Stacey, 4 Mass. 661, 3 Am. Dec. 253; *Burrows v. St. Rep. 39. Prima facie proof of delivery is made out by proof of delivery to a carrier; Brod v. Derling, 139 Ill. App. 107; but such is not a delivery to the vendee where he dies before they reach their destination; Smith v. Brennan, 62 Mich. 349, 28 N. W. 892, 4 Am. St. Rep. 867. Where the vendor takes the bill of lading deliverable to the order of himself, or of his agent, it prevents the property from passing to the intended vendee until delivery; Berger v. State, 50 Ark. 20, 6 S. W. 15; Blackb. Sales 130.

Delivery is not necessary at common law to complete a sale of personal property as between the vendor and vendee; Benj. Sales § 315; as a sale passes title as soon as the bargain is struck without any delivery or payment; Briggs v. U. S., 143 U. S. 346, 12 Sup. Ct. 391, 36 L. Ed. 180; but as against third parties possession retained by the vendor raises a presumption of fraud conclusive according to some authorities; Hamilton v. Russell, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 309, 2 L. Ed. 118; Alexander v. Deneale, 2 Munf. (Va.) 341; Hudnal v. Wilder, 4 McCord (S. C.) 294, 17 Am. Dec. 744; Ragan v. Kennedy, 1 Ov. (Tenn.) 91; Jarvis v. Davis, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 533, 61 Am. McCusker, 3 Misc. 277, 22 N. Y. Supp. 780. To give validity to a gift, there must be such a delivery of the subject thereof as works an immediate change in the dominion of the property; Gartside v. Pahlman, 45 Mo. App. 160. The rules requiring actual full delivery are subject to modification in the case of bulky articles; Girard v. Taggart, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327; Bean v. Simpson, 16 Me. 49. See, also, Bailey v. Ogdens, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 390, 3 Am. Dec. 509; De Ridder v. McKnight, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 294; Dutilh v. Ritchie, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 171, 1 L. Ed. 86; Currier v. The word delivery is used in different senses, which should be borne in mind in considering the cases. Sometimes it denotes transfer of the property in the chattel and sometimes transfer of the possession of the chattel. When used in the latter sense it may refer either to the formation of the contract, or to the performance of it. When it refers to the delivery of possession in the performance of the contract, the buyer is sometimes spoken of as being in possession although he has only the right of possession, while the actual custody remains with the vendor.

A condition requiring delivery may be annexed as a part of any contract of transfer; Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 19 Me. 147.

In the absence of contract, the amount of transportation to be performed by the seller to constitute delivery is determined by general usage.

The delivery of a contract in writing is necessary to its validity; Ligon v. Wharton (Tex.) 120 S. W. 930.

In Medical Jurisprudence. The act of a woman giving birth to her offspring.

Pretended delivery may present itself in three points of view. First, when the female who feigns has never been pregnant. When thoroughly investigated, this may always be detected. There are signs which must be present and cannot be feigned. An enlargement of the orifice of the uterus, and a tumefaction of the organs of generation, should always be present, and if absent are conclusive against the fact. 2 Annales d'Hygiène, 227. Second, when the pretended pregnancy and delivery have been preceded by one or more deliveries. In this case attention should be given to the following circumstances: the mystery, if any, which has been affected with regard to the situation of the female; her age; that of her husband; and, particularly, whether aged or decrepit. Third, when the woman has been actually delivered, and substitutes a living for a dead child. But little evidence can be obtained on this subject from a physical examination.

Concealed delivery generally takes place when the woman either has destroyed her offspring or it was born dead. In suspected cases the following circumstances should be attended to: First, the proofs of pregnancy which arise in consequence of the examination of the mother. When she has been pregnant, and has been delivered, the usual signs of delivery, mentioned below, will be present. A careful investigation as to the woman's appearance before and since the delivery will have some weight; though such evidence is not always to be relied upon, as such appearances are not unfrequently deceptive. Second, the proofs of recent delivery. Third, the connection between the supposed state of parturition and the state of the child that is found; for if the age of the child do not correspond to that time, it will be a strong circumstance in favor of the mother's innocence. A redness of the skin and an attachment of the umbilical cord to the navel indicate a recent birth. Whether the child was living at its birth, belongs to the subject of infanticide.

The usual signs of delivery are very well collected in Beck's excellent treatise on Medical Jurisprudence, and are here extracted:

If the female be examined within three or four days after the occurrence of delivery, the following circumstances will generally be observed: greater or less weakness, a slight paleness of the face, the eye a little sunken and surrounded by a purplish or dark-brown colored ring, and a whiteness of the skin like that of a person convalescing from disease. The belly is soft, the skin of the abdomen is lax, lies in folds, and is traversed in various directions by shining reddish and whitish lines, which especially extend from the groin and pubes to the navel. These lines have sometimes been termed lineæ albicantes, and are particularly observed near the umbilical region, where the abdomen has experienced the greatest distension. The breasts become tumid and hard, and, on pressure, emit a fluid which at first is serous and afterwards gradually becomes whiter. The areolæ round the nipples are dark colored. The external genital organs and vagina are dilated and tumefied throughout the whole of their extent, from the pressure of the fœtus. The uterus may be felt through the abdominal parietes, voluminous, firm, and globular, and rising nearly as high as the umbilicus. Its orifice is soft and tumid, and dilated so as to admit two or more fingers. The fourchette, or anterior margin of the perinæum, is sometimes torn, or it is lax, and appears to have suffered considerable distension. A discharge (termed the lochial) commences from the uterus, which is distinguished from the menses by its pale color, its peculiar and well-known smell, and its duration. The lochia are at first of a red color, and gradually become lighter until they cease.

These signs may generally be relied upon as indicating recent delivery: yet it requires much experience in order not to be deceived by appearances.

The lochial discharge might be mistaken for menstruation, or leucorrhœa, were it not for its peculiar smell; though this is not absolutely characteristic.

Relaxation of the soft parts arises as frequently from menstruation as from delivery; but in these cases the os uteri and vagina are not so much tumefied, nor is there that tenderness and swelling. The parts are found pale and flabby when all signs of contusion disappear, after delivery, and this circumstance does not follow menstruation.

The presence of milk, though a usual sign of delivery, is not always to be relied upon; for this secretion may take place independent of pregnancy.

The wrinkles and relaxations of the abdomen which follow delivery may be the consequence of dropsy, or of lankness following great obesity. This state of the parts is also seldom striking after the birth of the first child, as they shortly resume their natural state. Positive proof of the occurrence of birth is furnished only by the discovery of parts of the ovum. In most cases the demonstration by the microscope of shreds of the decidua with large, nucleated and fatty cells is of itself a sure proof; Winckle, quoted by Witthaus & Becker.

DELIVERY BOND. An obligation for the return of goods or the payment of their value, taken into the possession of the law, as in seizures under revenue laws. Douglass v. Douglass, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 98, 22 L. Ed. 479; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 280, 4 Sup. Ct. 27, 28 L. Ed. 145. See FORthCOMING BOND.

DELIVERY ORDER. An order by the owner of goods to a person holding them on his behalf, requesting him to deliver them to a person named in the order. Such an order is not a document of title and therefore does not transfer the property or divest the vendor's lien for the purchase money until the holder obtains actual delivery, the issue of a dock warrant in his name, or an entry of his title in the wharfinger's books. 2 H. L. Cas. 309; 5 Ch. D. 195.

DELUSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. A perversion of the judgment, obviously erroneous and persistent. A symptom of mental disease, in which persons believe things to exist which exist only, or in the degree they are conceived of only, in their own imaginations, with a persuasion so fixed and firm that neither evidence nor argument can convince them to the contrary. A faulty belief concerning a subject capable of physical demonstration, out of which the person cannot be reasoned by adequate means for the time being. 1 Wood, American Text Book of Med. See HALLUCINATION.

The individual is, of course, insane. For example, should a parent unjustly persist, without the least ground, in attributing to his daughter a course vice, and use her with uniform unkindness, there not being the slightest pretence or color of reason for the supposition, a just inference of insanity or delusion would arise in the minds of a jury; because a supposition long entertained and persisted in, after argument to the contrary, and against the natural affections of a parent, suggest that he must labor under some morbid mental delusion; Whart. Cr. L. § 37; Whart. & S. Med. Jur.; 1 Redf. Wills; Ray, Med. Jur. § 20; Shelf. Lun. 296; 3 Add. Eccl. 70, 90, 180; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 27. See Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 170; Mann, Med. Jur. of Insan. 58.

Where one "labors under a partial delusion only, and is not in other respects insane, we think he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts with respect to which the delusion exists were real. For example, if under the influence of his delusion he supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away his life, and he kills that man, as he supposes, in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment." This is the rule as stated by the English judges, cited in 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 37. Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Rogers, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458, says: "Monomania may operate as an excuse for a criminal act," when "the delusion is such that the person under its influence has a real and firm belief of some fact, not true in itself, but which, if it were true, would excuse his act; as where the belief is that the party killed had an immediate design upon his life, and under that belief the insane man kills in supposed self-defence. A common instance is where he fully believes that the act he is doing is done by the immediate command of God, and he acts under the delusive but sincere belief that what he is doing is by the command of a superior power, which supersedes all human laws and the laws of nature."

Where a testator was laboring under a delusion that his brother was exercising his muscle preparatory to killing him, that of itself would not justify a rejection of his will on the ground of unsound mind; In re Fricke, 64 Hun 639, 19 N. Y. Supp. 315. A person persistently believing supposed facts which have no real existence, against all evidence and probability, and conducting himself on the assumption of their existence, is, so far as such facts are concerned, under an insane delusion; Haines v. Hayden, 95 Mich. 332, 54 N. W. 911, 35 Am. St. Rep. 566.

See PARANOIA.

DEMAIN. See DEMESNE.

DEMAND. A claim; a legal obligation.

Demand is a term of art of an extent greater in its signification than any other word except claim. Co. Litt. 291; In re Denny, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 220; Scott v. Morris, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 124; Murphy's Appeal, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 226.

A release of all demands is, in general, a release of all covenants, real or personal, conditions, whether broken or not, annuities, recognizances, obligations, contracts, and the like; In re Denny, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 220; but does not discharge rent before it is due, if it be a rent incident to the reversion; for the rent was not only not due, but the consideration—the future enjoyment of the lands—for which the rent was to be given was not executed; 1 Lev. 99; Bac. Abr. Release, I. See 10 Co. 128; Bordman v. Osborn, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 295; Martin v. Martin, 7 Md. 375, 61 Am. Dec. 364; Favors v. Johnson, 79 Ga. 555, 4 S. E. 925.

In Practice. A requisition or request to do a particular thing specified under a claim of right on the part of the person requesting.

In causes of action arising ex contractu it is frequently necessary, to enable plaintiff to bring an action, that he should make a demand upon the party bound to perform the contract or discharge the obligation. Thus, where property is sold to be paid for on delivery, a demand must be made before bringing an action for non-delivery, and proved on trial; 5 Term 409; 3 M. & W. 254; Little v. Banks, 67 Hun 505, 22 N. Y. Supp.

512; but not if the seller has incapacitated himself from delivering; 5 B. & Ald. 712; Wilmouth v. Patton, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 280; Robbins v. Luce, 4 Mass. 474; and this rule and exception apply to contracts for marriage; 2 Dowl. & R. 55; 1 Chit. Pr. 57, note (n), 438, note (e). Nor is a demand necessary where it is to be presumed that it would have been unavailing; Davenport v. Ladd, 38 Minn. 545, 38 N. W. 622; Bogle v. Gordon, 39 Kan. 31, 17 Pac. 857. Where a selling price has been agreed on, the bringing of a suit therefor is a sufficient demand for the money claimed; Maguire v. Durant, 1 Misc. 509, 20 N. Y. Supp. 617. A demand of rent is necessary before re-entry for non-payment; Parks v. Hays, 92 Tenn. 161, 22 S. W. 3. But where rent is payable on the first day of the month, no demand of the rent on the day it falls due is necessary to entitle the landlord to maintain an action therefor; Clarke v. Charter, 128 Mass. 483. See RE-ENTRY. No demand is in general necessary on a promissory note before bringing an action; but after a tender demand must be made of the sum tendered; 1 Campb. 181, 474; 1 Stark. 323. A note payable "on call" may be sued on without demand; Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, 83 Ala. 595, 4 South. 346; but a demand and notice of non-payment are essential to fix the liability of endorsers unless waived; Presbrey v. Thomas, 1 App. D. C. 171. Where a mortgagor has resolved to default on an interest coupon and provides no funds to pay it, the holder is not required to present it for payment before bringing suit; Conshohocken Tube Co. v. Equipment Co., 161 Pa. 391, 28 Atl. 1119.

Cases in which a demand was held necessary before action were suits upon a partnership; Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. 112; moneys received but not accounted for by an attorney to his client; Sheaf v. Dodge, 161 Ind. 270, 68 N. E. 292; Banner v. D'Auby, 34 Misc. 525, 60 N. Y. Supp. 891; Madden v. Watts, 59 S. C. 81, 37 S. E. 209; Taylor v. Bates, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 376; Sneed v. Hanley, Hemp. 659, Fed. Cas. No. 13,136; moneys received by a corporation officer not accounted for; Landis v. Saxton, 105 Mo. 486, 16 S. W. 912, 24 Am. St. Rep. 403; claim of reinstatement in a body from which one was illegally expelled; Meherin v. Produce Exchange, 117 Cal. 215, 48 Pac. 1074; money realized by a sheriff on execution but not paid over; Keithler v. Foster, 22 Ohio St. 27; a certificate of deposit issued by a bank which by its terms was payable on its return properly endorsed; Elliott v. Bank, 128 Ia. 275, 103 N. W. 777, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 111 Am. St. Rep. 198; Hillsinger v. Bank, 108 Ga. 357, 33 S. E. 985, 75 Am. St. Rep. 42; but in another case it was held that action would lie without demand on a certificate of deposit; McGough v. Jamison, 107 Pa. 336. See Elliott v. Bank, 1 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 1130, n. A demand is also required before action to recover a deposit in a bank; Johnson v. Bank, 1 Harring. (Del.) 117; Sickles v. Herold, 149 N. Y. 332, 43 N. E. 852; Tobias v. Morris, 126 Ala. 535, 28 South. 517.

A demand is not necessary before suit for rent, whether payable in money in advance; Clarke v. Charter, 128 Mass. 483; or in labor or property payable at a fixed time and place; Packer v. Cockayne, 3 G. Greene (Ia.) 111; and in a suit for rent the demand need not be proved even where pleaded; Gruhn v. Gudebrod Bros. Co., 21 Misc. 528, 47 N. Y. Supp. 714; for articles charged on land devised to and accepted by residuary devisee; Wiggin v. Wiggin, 43 N. H. 561, 80 Am. Dec. 192; for boarding a man under a contract; Chappell v. Woods, 9 Wash. 134, 37 Pac. 286; for fees of an attorney; Foster v. Newbrough, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 645; Gibbs v. Davis, 11 Or. 288, 3 Pac. 677; but in New Jersey the rendering of an account is a condition precedent to a suit; Truitt v. Darnell, 65 N. J. Eq. 221, 55 Atl. 692.

In cases arising ex delicto, a demand is frequently necessary. Thus, when the wife, apprentice, or servant of one person has been harbored by another, the proper course is to make a demand of restoration before an action brought, in order to constitute the party a wilful wrong-doer unless the plaintiff can prove an original illegal enticing away; 2 Lev. 63; 5 East 39; 4 J. B. Moo. 12.

So, too, in cases where the taking of goods is lawful but their subsequent detention becomes illegal, it is absolutely necessary, in order to secure sufficient evidence of a conversion on the trial, to give a formal notice of the owner's right to the property and possession, and to make a formal demand in writing of the delivery of such possession to the owner. See TROVER; CONVERSION. And when a nuisance has been erected or continued by a man on his own land, it is advisable, particularly in the case of a private nuisance, to give the party notice, and request him to remove it, either before an entry is made for the purpose of abating it or an action is commenced against the wrong-doer; and a demand is always indispensable in cases of a continuance of a nuisance originally created by another person; 2 B. & C. 302; Cro. Jac. 555; Poll. Torts 314; 5 Co. 100; 5 Viner, Abr. 506; 1 Ayliffe, Pand. 497; Bac. Abr. Rent, I.

In cases of contempts, as where an order to pay money or to do any other thing, has been made a rule of court, a demand for the payment of the money or performance of the thing must be made before an attachment will be issued for a contempt; 1 Cr. M. & R. 88, 459; 4 Tyrwh. 369; 2 Scott 193.

Demand should be made by the party having the right, or his authorized agent; 2 B. & P. 464 a; West v. Tupper, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 193; Watt v. Potter, 2 Mas. 77, Fed. Cas. No.

DEMAND IN RECONVENTION. A demand which the defendant institutes in consequence of that which the plaintiff has brought against him. Used in Louisiana. La. Pr. Code, art. 374.

DEMANDANT. The plaintiff or party who brings a real action. Co. Litt. 127; Com. Dig. See REAL ACTION.

DEMENS (Lat.). Dement. One who has lost his mind through illness or some other cause. One whose faculties are enfeebled. Dean, Med. Jur. 481. See DEMENTIA.

DEMENTIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. That form of insanity which is characterized by mental weakness and decrepitude, and by total inability to reason correctly or incorrectly.

Memory is lost; language is incoherent; actions are inconsistent. The thoughts succeed one another without any obvious bond of association. Delusions, if they exist, are transitory, and leave no permanent impression: and for everything recent the memory is exceedingly weak. In mania, the action of the mind is marked by force, hurry, and intensity; in dementia, by slowness and weakness. It is the natural termination of many forms of insanity. Occasionally it occurs in an acute form in young subjects; and here only it is curable. In old men, in whom it often occurs, it is called senile dementia, and it indicates the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of the bodily decay. Here we may find memory of conditions long since past and some mental power. It is this form of dementia only which gives rise to litigation; for in the others the incompetency is too patent to admit of question. It cannot be described by any positive characters, because it differs in the different stages of its progress, varying from simple lapse of memory to complete inability to recognize persons or things. And it must be borne in mind that often the mental infirmity is not so serious as might be supposed at first sight. Many an old man who seems to be scarcely conscious of what is passing around him, and is guilty of frequent breaches of decorum, needs only to have his attention aroused to a matter in which he is deeply interested, to show no lack of vigor or acuteness. In other words, the mind may be damaged superficially (to use a figure), while it may be sound at the core. And therefore it is that one may be quite oblivious of names and dates, while comprehending perfectly well his relations to others and the interests in which he was concerned. It follows that the impressions made upon casual or ignorant observers in regard to the mental condition are of far less value than those made upon persons who have been well acquainted with his habits and have had occasion to test the vigor of his faculties.

Senile dementia or the imbecility caused by the decay of old age is often the ground on which the wills of old men are contested, and the conflicting testimony of observers, the proofs of foreign influence, and the indications of mental capacity all combine to render it no easy task to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. The only general rule of much practical value is that competency must be always measured, not by any fancied standard of intellect, but solely by the requirements of the act in question. A small and familiar matter would require less mental power than one complicated in its details and somewhat new to the testator's experience. Less capacity would be necessary to distribute an estate between a wife and child than between a multitude of relatives with unequal claims upon his bounty. Such is the principle; and the ends of justice cannot be better served than by its correct and faithful application. Of course, there will always be more or less difficulty; but generally by discarding all legal and metaphysical subtleties and following the leading of common sense, it will be satisfactorily surmounted.

The legal principles by which the courts are governed are not essentially different whether the mental incapacity proceed from dementia or mania. If the will coincides with the previously expressed wishes of the testator, if it recognizes the claims of those who stood in near relation to him, if it shows no indication of undue influence,—if, in short, it is a rational act rationally done,—it will be established though there may have been considerable impairment of mind. 2 Phill. Eccl. 449; Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 580, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 84 Am. Dec. 97; Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106, 37 N. E. 837; Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 40 N. E. 70, 43 N. E. 560; Fluck v. Rea, 51 N. J. Eq. 233, 27 Atl. 636; Matter of Jones, 5 Misc. 199, 25 N. Y. Supp. 109; Matter of Pike's Will, 83 Hun 327, 31 N. Y. Supp. 689; Taylor v. Trich, 165 Pa. 586, 30 Atl. 1053, 44 Am. St. Rep. 679.

This species of dementia is also frequently alleged and proved as a ground of impeaching deeds. This particular form of mental disease may result either in total incompetency, such as is produced by any form of insanity, or a greatly defective capacity, though short of total insanity, in which the court scrutinizes the act, and sustains it only when there is found to have been capacity sufficient for the act in question and entire freedom of will. Consequently such cases usually include the two elements of mental incompetency of some degree and undue influence; and probably a majority of the cases in which the aid of equity is sought to set aside deeds on the ground of undue influence involve also the question of the existence of senile dementia to a greater or less extent. The principle upon which courts of equity deal with this class of persons is neither as a matter of course to affirm or avoid their acts, but to protect them in the exercise of such capacity as they have. It will scrutinize their transactions; considering the nature of the act done, the inducements leading to it, and the attending circumstances and influences. If the conscience of the court is satisfied that such a grantor comprehended the nature and consequences of the transaction, and exercised a deliberate and free judgment, it will be sustained; but if the nature of the act or the attending circumstances justify the conclusion that the grantor's weakness has been taken advantage of, the deed will be set aside in equity however valid it might be at law; 1 Bro. Ch. 560; 1 Knapp 73; Cruise v. Christopher's Adm'r, 5 Dana (Ky.) 181; Wilson v. Oldham, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 55; Tracy v. Sacket, 1 Ohio St. 54, 59 Am. Dec. 610; Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 497. "It may be stated as settled law, that whenever there is great weakness of mind in a person executing a conveyance of law, arising from age, sickness, or any other cause, though not amounting to absolute disqualification, and the consideration given for the property is grossly inadequate—a court of equity will . . . interfere and set the conveyance aside;" Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 511, 24 L. Ed. 260; 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 238; Bisph. Eq. 288. For a thorough examination and discussion of the subject in a case of senile dementia in which a deed was set aside, see Jones v. Thompson, 5 Del. Ch. 374. In that case Saulsbury, Ch., thus stated the principle upon which courts of equity deal with such cases: "In cases of alleged mental incapacity, the test is whether the party had the ability to comprehend in a reasonable manner the nature of the affair in which he participated. This is the rule in the absence of fraud. . . . This ability so to comprehend necessarily implies the power to understand the character, legal conditions, and effect of the act performed. . . . The cause of mental weakness is immaterial. It may arise from injury to the mind, temporary illness, or excessive old age. In such cases any unfairness will be promptly redressed." In a very similar case a deed was set aside on the ground of mental incapacity of the grantor by reason of senile dementia or dotage, by Bland, Ch., whose opinion contains an elaborate discussion of the different species of dementia, which he classifies as, Idiocy, Delirium, Lunacy, and Dotage, under which latter term he describes senile dementia.

See INSANITY.

DEMESNE (Lat. dominicum). Lands of which the lord had the absolute property or ownership; as distinguished from feudal lands, which he held of a superior. 2 Bla. Com. 104; Cowell. Lands which the lord retained under his immediate control, for the purpose of supplying his table and the immediate needs of his household; distinguished from that farmed out to tenants, called among the Saxons bordlands. Blount; Co. Litt. 17 a.

Own; original. Son assault demesne, his (the plaintiff's) original assault, or assault in the first place. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 633; 3 Bla. Com. 120, 306.

DEMESNE AS OF FEE. A man is said to be seised in his demesne as of fee of a corporeal inheritance, because he has a property dominium or demesne in the thing itself. 2 Bla. Com. 106. But when he has no dominion in the thing itself, as in the case of an incorporeal hereditament, he is said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne as of fee; Littleton § 10; Barnet v. Ihrie, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 196; Jones, Land Tit. 166.

Formerly it was the practice in an action on the case—c. g. for a nuisance to real estate—to aver in the declaration the seisin of the plaintiff in demesne as of fee; and this is still necessary, in order to estop the record with the land, so that it may run with or attend the title; Archb. Civ. Pl. 104; Co. Entr. 9, pl. 8; 1 Saund. 346. But such an action may be maintained on the possession as well as on the seisin; although the effect of the record in this case upon the title would not be the same; Steph. Pl. 322; 4 Term 718; 2 Wms. Saund. 113 b; Cro. Car. 500, 575.

DEMESNE LANDS. A phrase meaning the same as demesne.

DEMESNE LANDS OF THE CROWN. That share of lands reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or which came to it afterwards by forfeiture or otherwise. 1 Bla. Com. 286; 2 Steph. Com. 550.

DEMIDIETAS. A word used in ancient records for a moiety, or one-half.

DEMI-MARK. A sum of money (6s. 8d., 3 Bla. Com. App. v.) tendered and paid into court in certain cases in the trial of a writ of right by the grand assize. Co. Litt. 291 b; Booth, Real Act. 98.

It was paid by the tenant to obtain an inquiry by the grand assize into the time of the demandant's seisin; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 429; Stearns, Real Act. 378. It compelled the demandant to begin; 3 Chit. Pl. 1373. It is unknown in American practice; Bradstreet v. Supervisors of Oneida County, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 546.

DEMI-VILL. Half a tithing.

DEMISE. A conveyance, either in fee, for life, or for years.

A lease or a conveyance for a term of years. According to Chief Justice Gibson, the English word demise, though improperly used as a synonym for concessi or demisi, strictly denotes a posthumous grant, and no more. Hemphill v. Eckfeldt, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 278. See 4 Bingh. N. C. 678; Voorhees v. Presbyterian Church, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 71. Other words may be used; 18 L. Q. R. 338.

In a conveyance, the word "demise" imports in law a covenant for quiet enjoyment; Crouch v. Fowle, 9 N. H. 219, 32 Am. Dec. 350; 1 M. G. & S. 429; it implies a power to lease; Grannis v. Clark, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 36. See O'Connor v. Daily, 109 Mass. 235; COVENANT. As to the covenants implied, see [1895] 1 Q. B. 820.

See DEMISE OF THE CROWN.

DEMISE OF THE CROWN. The natural dissolution of the king.

The term is said to denote in law merely a transfer of the property of the crown. 1 Bla. Com. 249. By demise of the crown we mean only that, in consequence of the dissolution of the king's natural body from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor, and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. Plowd. 117, 234.

A similar result, viz.: the perpetual and continuous existence of the office of president of the United States, has been secured by the constitution and subsequent statutes. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 249.

DEMISE AND RE-DEMISE. An old form of conveyance by mutual leases made from one to another on each side of the same land, or of something issuing from it. A lease for a given sum—usually a mere nominal amount—and a release for a larger rent. Toullier; Whishaw; Jacob.

DEMOCRACY. That form of government in which the people rule.

But the multitude cannot actually rule: an unorganic democracy, therefore, one that is not founded upon a number of institutions each endowed with a degree of self-government, naturally becomes a one-man government. The basis of the democracy is equality, as that of the aristocracy is privilege; but equality of itself is no guarantee for liberty, nor does equality constitute liberty. Absolute democracies existed in antiquity and the middle ages: they have never endured for any length of time. On their character, Aristotle's Politics may be read to the greatest advantage. Lieber, in his Civil Liberty, dwells at length on the fact that mere equality, without institutions of various kinds, is adverse to self-government; and history shows that absolute democracy is anything rather than a convertible term for liberty. See ABSOLUTISM; GOVERNMENT.

DEMOLISH. To destroy totally or to commence the work of total destruction with the purpose of completing the same. 50 L. J. M. C. 141.

DEMONETIZE. To divest of the character of standard money; to withdraw from use as currency. Stand. Dict.

DEMONSTRATIO (Lat.). Description; addition; denomination. Occurring often in the phrase falsa demonstratio non nocet (a false description does not harm). 2 Bla. Com. 382, n.; 2 P. Wms. 140; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291; Wigr. Wills 208, 233.

DEMONSTRATION (Lat. demonstrare, to point out). Whatever is said or written to designate a thing or person.

Several descriptions may be employed to denote the same person or object; and the rule of law in such cases is that if one of the descriptions be erroneous it may be rejected, if, after it is expunged, enough will remain to identify the person or thing intended, for falsa demonstratio non nocet. The meaning of this rule is, that if there be an adequate description with convenient certainty of what was contemplated, a subsequent erroneous addition will not vitiate it. The complement of this maxim is, non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam quæ competent in limitationem veram; which means that if it stand doubtful upon the words whether they import a false reference or demonstration, or whether they be words of restraint that limit the generality of the former words, the law will never intend error or falsehood. If, therefore, there is some object wherein all the demonstrations are true, and some wherein part are true and part false, they shall be intended words of true limitation to ascertain that person or thing whereof all the circumstances are true; 4 Exch. 604; 8 Bingh. 244; Broom, L. Max. 490; Pettis v. Kellogg, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 460.

Parol and extrinsic evidence for the construction of wills misdescribing the subject of the devise is admitted. Its office is to enable a court to reject whatever part of the description is false; Fairfield v. Lawson, 50 Conn. 501, 47 Am. Rep. 669; Doe v. Roe, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 541; Benham v. Hendrickson, 32 N. J. Eq. 441; Rose v. Hale, 185 Ill. 379, 56 N. E. 1073, 76 Am. St. Rep. 40; Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick, 36 Ia. 674, 14 Am. Rep. 538; Wales v. Templeton, 83 Mich. 177, 47 N. W. 238; Seebrook v. Fedawa, 33 Neb. 413, 50 N. W. 270, 29 Am. St. Rep. 488; but not where there is a property which every part of the description fits; 16 C. B. N. S. 698; nor where the will contains no language to connect the description in such devise with any land of the testator; id.; Lomax v. Lomax, 218 Ill. 629, 75 N. E. 1076, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 942.

The rule that falsa demonstratio does not vitiate an otherwise good description applies to every kind of statement of fact. Some of the particulars of an averment in a declaration may be rejected if the declaration is sensible without them and by their presence is made insensible or defective; Yelv. 182.

In Evidence. That proof which excludes all possibility of error.

Demonstrative evidence of negligence has been applied to that kind of negligence which is usually expressed by res ipsa loquitur (which see). See EVIDENCE.

DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY. A pecuniary legacy coupled with a direction that it be paid out of a specific fund.

A bequest of a sum of money payable out of a particular fund or thing. A pecuniary legacy given generally, but with a demonstration of a particular fund as the source of its payment. Roquet v. Eldridge, 118 Ind. 147, 20 N. E. 733; Glass v. Dunn, 17 Ohio St. 413. See Harper v. Bibb, 47 Ala. 547; Kunkel v. Macgill, 56 Md. 120.

Such a bequest differs from a specific legacy in this, that if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it is nevertheless entitled "to come on the estate as a general legacy; and it differs from a general legacy in this, that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies." Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. 312, per Sharswood, J. A bequest of "$2,000 of the South Ward Loan of Chester," where the testator owned $10,000 of the loan at the date of the will, which was paid off before death, was held demonstrative; Ives v. Canby, 48 Fed. 718. So, also, "25 shares of capital stock of the State Bank," etc., the testator owning 25 shares; Davis v. Cain's Ex'r, 36 N. C. 309; had the testator said "my" 25 shares, it would have been a specific legacy; id. So of a gift of 25½ canal shares of which the testator owned 15½, all of which he sold before his death; 2 Beav. 515. The criterion in all the cases is whether it was the testator's intention to give the specific security then owned by him, or, on the other hand, to give nothing distinctly severed from his estate, but rather such a sum as would suffice to buy the securities named; id. See 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. 646; 2 Y. & C. 90; Newton v. Stanley, 28 N. Y. 61; Dryden v. Owings, 49 Md. 356.

DEMPSTER. In Scotch Law. A doomsman. One who pronounced the sentence of court. 1 Howell, St. Tr. 937.

DEMURRAGE. The delay of a vessel by the freighter beyond the time allowed for loading, unloading, or sailing.

Payment for such delay.

The amount due by the freighter or charterer to the owner of the vessel for such delay. 5 E. & B. 755; Abb. Adm. Dec. 548; Gronn v. Woodruff, 19 Fed. 144.

Demurrage may become due either by the ship's detention for the purpose of loading or unloading the cargo, either before or during or after the voyage, or in waiting for convoy; 3 Kent 159; Van Etten v. Newton, 134 N. Y. 143, 31 N. E. 334, 30 Am. St. Rep. 630; Donaldson v. McDowell, 1 Holmes 290, Fed. Cas. No. 3,985; Creighton v. Dilks, 49 Fed. 107; Porter, Bills of L. 356.

Where neither the charter nor the bill of lading contained any provisions as to demurrage, and the master made no formal protest against the delay, but signed the bill of lading without objection and did not bring suit until long after, demurrage could not be recovered; McKeen v. Morse, 49 Fed. 253, 1 C. C. A. 237; Gage v. Morse, 12 Allen (Mass.) 410, 90 Am. Dec. 155; and it is said the English authorities are uniformly against such a liability; id. 5 El. & B. 755, 589; 10 C. B. N. S. 802. Here the courts have not generally followed the English rule. It is held that maritime demurrage may be collected, even though not provided for in the contract, and that a lien on the cargo for demurrage may be enforced; Donaldson v. McDowell, Fed. Cas. No. 3,985; The Hyperion's Cargo, id. 6,987; 275 Tons of Mineral Phosphates, 9 Fed. 209; Hawgood v. 1,310, Tons of Coal, 21 Fed. 681; and in England it is held that a lien for demurrage may be given by contract; L. R. 8 Exch. 101; L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 247.

Under the terms of a charter where demurrage was to be paid for each working day beyond the days allowed for loading, the time lost by reason of storms before the beginning of the lay days, or after their expiration, could not be deducted in computing the demurrage; Wold v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 169, 2 C. C. A. 656.

The term "working days" in maritime affairs means calendar days, on which the law permits work to be done, and excludes Sundays and legal holidays, but not stormy days; Sorensen v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 163, 2 C. C. A. 650. But see Baldwin v. Timber Co., 142 N. Y. 279, 36 N. E. 1060, where it was held that Sundays are properly included in computing demurrage, when demurrage has begun to run. Where there are no agreed demurrage days for loading the case is one of implied contract to load with reasonable diligence; Randall v. Sprague, 74 Fed. 247, 21 C. C. A. 334.

Where a charter party excepted delays by strikes, it was held to apply to the charterer's own workmen; Wood v. Keyser, 84 Fed. 688; but not to a strike of coal operators which overtaxed the capacity of the harbor and caused delay; W. K. Niver Coal Co. v. S. S. Co., 142 Fed. 402, 73 C. C. A. 502, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126.

Demurrage, though a maritime term, has been adopted in railroad practice. A railroad company may charge $2 a day for the detention of cars after 24 hours, as a general rule of the company known to consignees; Miller v. Mansfield, 112 Mass. 260; so in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Adams, 90 Va. 393, 18 S. E. 673, 22 L. R. A. 530, 44 Am. St. Rep. 916, where it was said to be not a transportation, nor storage, nor terminal charge, but a charge by the carrier as bailee of the goods after its duties as a carrier had ceased. Where a statute gives a lien for freight and storage, the lien extends to demurrage charges; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. George, 82 Miss. 710, 35 South. 193. A lien was upheld in Southern R. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 142 Ala. 322, 37 South. 667, 68 L. R. A. 227.

110 Am. St. Rep. 32, 4 Ann. Cas. 12; Darlington v. R. Co., 99 Mo. App. 1, 72 S. W. 122; Schumacher v. R. Co., 207 Ill. 199, 69 N. E. 825. It is held, however, that a carrier has no lien; Nicolette Lumber Co. v. Coal Co., 213 Pa. 379, 62 Atl. 1060, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327, 110 Am. St. Rep. 550, 5 Ann. Cas. 387; Wallace v. R. Co., 216 Pa. 311, 65 Atl. 665.

A state cannot enact that a consignee shall have 3 days to unload and as many more as he chooses at $1 a day; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. M. O. Coggins Co., 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 129.

See 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327, n. See LAY DAYS; LIEN.

DEMURRER (Lat. demorari, Old Fr. demorror, to stay; to abide). In Pleading. An allegation, that, admitting the facts of the preceding pleading to be true, as stated by the party making it, he has yet shown no cause why the party demurring should be compelled by the court to proceed further. A declaration that the party demurring will go no further, because the other has shown nothing against him. 5 Mod. 232; Co. Litt. 71 b. It imports that the objecting party will not proceed, but will wait the judgment of the court whether he is bound so to do. Co. Litt. 71 b; Steph. Pl. 61; Pepper, Pl. 11.

In Equity. An allegation of a defendant, which, admitting the matters of fact alleged by the bill to be true, shows that as therein set forth they are insufficient for the plaintiff to proceed upon, or to oblige the defendant to answer; or that, for some reason apparent on the face of the bill, or on account of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstances which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer to the whole bill, or to some certain part thereof. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 107.

A demurrer was said to be an answer in law to a bill, though not technically an answer in the common language of practice; New Jersey v. New York, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 323, 8 L. Ed. 414. The purpose of a demurrer being to raise the question whether the case presented by the bill would, if proved, entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought, it necessarily proceeds upon the theory that the truth of the bill is admitted. It is therefore settled that all facts well pleaded in the bill, but no others, are taken to be true, for the purposes of the argument and decision upon the demurrer; Commercial Bank v. Buckner, 20 How. (U. S.) 108, 15 L. Ed. 862; Griffing v. Gibb, 2 Black (U. S.) 519, 17 L. Ed. 353; Goble v. Andruss, 2 N. J. Eq. 66; 1 Ves. Jr. 72; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 545. It does not admit conclusions of law stated in the bill; Bryan v. Spruill, 57 N. C. 27; Fogg v. Blair, 139 U. S. 118, 11 Sup. Ct. 476, 35 L. Ed. 104; nor can it supply defects in substance, nor cure a defective title, nor yet establish one defectively set forth; Mills v. Brown, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 549; nor does it admit any allegations repugnant to facts of which the court takes judicial notice; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 546; nor a fact manifestly or legally impossible; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 244, 3 Sup. Ct. 193, 27 L. Ed. 922; nor an averment contrary to the facts set forth in the bill; 3 Ves. 4; Redmond v. Dickerson, 9 N. J. Eq. 507, 59 Am. Dec. 418; nor inferences of other facts from those stated; Dike v. Greene, 4 R. I. 285; nor the construction of a statute; Pennie v. Reis, 132 U. S. 464, 10 Sup. Ct. 149, 33 L. Ed. 426; nor of any instrument set forth in or annexed to the bill; Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 430, 22 L. Ed. 673; Interstate Land Co. v. Land Grant Co., 139 U. S. 569, 11 Sup. Ct. 656, 35 L. Ed. 278; Lea v. Robeson, 12 Gray (Mass.) 280; Dillon v. Barnard, 1 Holmes 389, Fed. Cas. No. 3,915; U. S. v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 25 L. Ed. 295. It admits only facts well pleaded, but not the conclusions of law, nor the correctness of the pleader's opinion as to future results; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 213 U. S. 26, 29 Sup. Ct. 404, 53 L. Ed. 682; as a rule of evidence it was never supposed that a demurrer admitted anything; Havens v. R. Co., 28 Conn. 69.

As a rule these limitations upon the effect of a demurrer in equity, as admissions, apply equally at law.

Allegations on information and belief are not admitted by a demurrer to be facts; Trimble v. Sugar Refining Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 340, 48 Atl. 912; 1 Ves. 56; 5 Beav. 620; Sto. Eq. Pl. §§ 241, 256; Cameron v. Abbott, 30 Ala. 416; but in a subsequent case it was held that, although the averment that complainant is informed and believes that the fact exists is insufficient, he may state the existence of the fact with the additional words "as he is informed and believes"; Lucas v. Oliver, 34 Ala. 626; and see also Christian v. Mortgage Co., 92 Ala. 130, 9 South. 219 and Drennen v. Deposit Co., 115 Ala. 592, 23 South. 164, 39 L. R. A. 623, 67 Am. St. Rep. 72. An allegation that the complainant "is informed and believes, and therefore avers," is sufficient; Wells v. Hydraulic Co., 30 Conn. 316, 79 Am. Dec. 250; and so is an allegation that he is informed and believes the fact to be true, followed by a statement that he therefore charges the fact to be true, where it related to matter necessarily within the knowledge of the defendant; Campbell v. R. Co., 71 Ill. 611.

In Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 22 Sup. Ct. 552, 46 L. Ed. 838, the court said that "sitting, as it were, as an international, as well as a domestic tribunal" they were "unwilling in this case to proceed on the mere technical admissions made by the demurrer," and they accordingly overruled it without prejudice and forebore to proceed until all the facts were before the court on the evidence.

By Federal Equity Rule 29, 33 Sup. Ct. xxvi (in effect February 1, 1913), demurrers (and pleas) are abolished; every defence in law shall be made by motion to dismiss or in the answer; every such point of law going to the whole or a material part of the cause of action may be disposed of before final hearing at the discretion of the court.

A demurrer may be either to the relief asked by the bill, or to both the relief and the discovery; Higinbotham v. Burnet, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 184; Brownell v. Curtis, 10 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 210; but not to the discovery alone where it is merely incidental to the relief; 2 Bro. C. C. 123; 1 Y. & C. 197; 1 S. & S. 83. It is said by Langdell (Eq. Pl. 60) that every proper demurrer is to relief alone; and that while it always, if well taken, protects the defendant from giving any discovery, that is a legal consequence merely. As to exceptions to avoid self-crimination, see Sharp v. Sharp, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 407; Patterson v. Patterson, 2 N. C. 167; Wolf v. Wolf's Ex'r, 2 H. & G. (Md.) 382, 18 Am. Dec. 313. If it goes to the whole of the relief, it generally defeats the discovery if successful; 2 Bro. C. C. 319; Souza v. Belcher, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 117; Miller v. Ford, 1 N. J. Eq. 358; Welles v. R. Co., Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 35; Pool v. Lloyd, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 525; otherwise, if to part only; Ad. Eq. 334; Story, Eq. Pl. § 545; Brownell v. Curtis, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 210.

It may be brought either to original or supplemental bills; and there are peculiar causes of demurrer in the different classes of supplemental bills; 2 Madd. 387; 4 Sim. 76; 3 Hare, 476; 3 P. Wms. 284; Dias v. Merle, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 259; Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 250; Whiting v. Bank, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 6, 14, 10 L. Ed. 33; Story, Eq. Pl. § 611.

Demurrers are general, where no particular cause is assigned except the usual formulary that there is no equity in the bill, or special, where the particular defects are pointed out; Story, Eq. Pl. § 455; Dan. Ch. Pr. 586. General demurrers are used to point out defects of substance; special, to point out defects in form. "The terms have a different meaning [in equity] from what they have at common law;" Langd. Eq. Pl. 58.

The defendant may demur to part of the bill; Whitbeck v. Edgar, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 106; and plead or answer to the residue, or both plead and answer to separate parts thereof; 3 P. Wms. 80; Clark v. Phelps, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 214; Bull v. Bell, 4 Wis. 54; taking care so to apply them to different and distinct parts of the bill that each may be consistent with the others; 3 M. & C. 653; Gray v. Regan, 23 Miss. 304; Story, Eq. Pl. § 442; but if it be to the whole bill, and a part be good, the demurrer must be overruled; Graves v. Hull, 27 Miss. 419; Barnawell v. Threadgill, 40 N. C. 86; Burns v. Hobbs, 29 Me. 273; Robinson v. Guild, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 323; Gay v. Skeen, 36 W. Va. 582, 15 S. E. 64. If it is to the whole bill it cannot be sustained if, for any equity apparent in the bill, complainants are entitled to relief; George v. Banking Co., 101 Ala. 607, 14 South. 752; Merriam v. Pub. Co., 43 Fed. 450. A general demurrer to a bill must be overruled unless it appears that on no possible state of the evidence could a decree be made; Failey v. Talbee, 55 Fed. 892; Darrah v. Boyce, 62 Mich. 480, 29 N. W. 102.

Demurrers lie only for matter apparent on the face of the bill, and not upon any new matter alleged by the defendant; Beames, Ord. in Ch. 26; 6 Sim. 51; 2 Sch. & L. 637; Southern Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lanier, 5 Fla. 110, 58 Am. Dec. 448; Black v. Shreeve, 7 N. J. Eq. 440; Hinchman v. Kelley, 54 Fed. 63, 4 C. C. A. 189. A demurrer which alleges, as cause of demurrer, new matter, in addition to what is contained in the bill, is termed a speaking demurrer and must be overruled; 4 Bro. C. C. 254; 4 Drew. 306; Brooks v. Gibbons, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 374; Ramage v. Towles, 85 Ala. 589, 5 South. 342; Stewart v. Masterson, 131 U. S. 151, 9 Sup. Ct. 682, 33 L. Ed. 114; and so also where an attempt to sustain a demurrer is made by the averment of some fact in an answer it is of the same nature and is not aided thereby; Kuypers v. Reformed Dutch Church, 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 570. To constitute a speaking demurrer, the averment must be necessary to support the demurrer; 2 Mol. 295; Saxon v. Barksdale, 4 Desaus. (S. C.) 522; and cases supra; and not mere immaterial matter which, though improper as surplusage, is not fatal to the demurrer, 1 Sim. 5; 2 Sim. & Stu. 127.

The term "speaking demurrer" originated with Lord Hardwicke in Brownwood v. Edwards, 2 Ves. 243, 245, and it was used by the reporters in the syllabi of that case and of Edsill v. Buchanan, 4 Bro. C. C. 254, nearly fifty years later. The editor of Tyler's edition of Mitford, in a note to the word in his index, assumes that Mitford ignored the term because Lord Hardwicke had used it in ridicule and not as a new technical distinction. However that may be, it seems to have been too generally adopted by courts and text-writers to be now disregarded as an apt characterization of what it was meant to express.

A defendant may at the hearing of a demurrer orally assign another cause, different from or in addition to those on the record, which is termed a demurrer ore tenus, and may be sustained, although that on the record is overruled; Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 149; Wright v. Dame, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 237; Chase v. Searles, 45 N. H. 512; 8 Ves. 405; as, on demurrer to general relief, the objection of non-joinder may be made ore tenus; Garlick v. Strong, 3 Paige Ch. 440; 6 Ves. 779. Causes of demurrer ore tenus must be coextensive with those on the record, and if the latter apply to the whole bill, the former will not be allowed to part of it; 1 De G., J. & S. 38; and a cause overruled cannot be repeated ore tenus; 1 Anst. 1; but see 12 W. R. 394; nor, after demurrer to the whole bill has been overruled, can part of it be demurred to ore tenus; 2 Yo. & J. 490; Clark v. Davis, Harring. Ch. (Mich.) 227.

Demurrers are not applicable to pleas or answers. If a plea or answer is bad in substance, it may be shown on hearing; and if the answer is insufficient in form, exceptions should be filed; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 456, 864; Langd. Eq. Pl. 58; Winters v. Claitor, 54 Miss. 341; Travers v. Ross, 14 N. J. Eq. 254.

If the bill contains an allegation of fraud, it must be denied by answer, whatever defence may be adopted to other parts of the bill; because fraud gives jurisdiction to the court and lays a foundation for relief; hence a general demurrer to a bill containing such an allegation cannot be allowed; Niles v. Anderson, 5 How. (Miss.) 366.

Demurrers to relief are usually brought for causes relating to the jurisdiction, as that the subject is not cognizable by any court, as in some cases under political treaties; 1 Ves. 371; Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 253, 7 L. Ed. 415; but see Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 25; U. S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 436, 8 L. Ed. 1001; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 4 L. Ed. 97; Carneal v. Banks, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 181, 6 L. Ed. 297; Gordon v. Kerr, 1 Wash. C. C. 322, Fed. Cas. No. 5,611.

It is frequently said that by demurring to a bill in chancery, for want of equity, the defendants submit to the jurisdiction of the court, as if that question were to be raised it should have been presented by plea; Bank of Bellows Falls v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 470; 1 Atk. 543, where Lord Hardwicke is represented as having said: "The defendant should not have demurred for want of jurisdiction, for a demurrer is always in bar, and goes to the merits of the case; and therefore it is informal and improper in that respect, for he should have pleaded to the jurisdiction." In a note to section 456 of Sto. Eq. Pl. after quoting these words it is said: "This language is loose and inaccurate. If the court has no jurisdiction, the objection may be taken by demurrer, if it is apparent on the face of the bill; Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy, 110, 216; 2 Sim. & Stu. 431. And a demurrer may be for causes not going to the merits." This note in Sumner's edition, the first after Judge Story's death, appears from the editor's prefatory note to be the author's own comment. Such objection on demurrer is allowed in the federal courts; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 199, 23 L. Ed. 829; Peale v. Coal Co., 172 Fed. 639; but if one cause assigned goes to the merits it operates as a waiver of the objection to the jurisdiction; id.

In some states, where the jurisdiction in equity is more or less restricted, it is held that the question of jurisdiction may be raised by general demurrer; Jones v. New-ball, 115 Mass. 241, 15 Am. Rep. 97; Earle v. Humphrey, 121 Mich. 518, 80 N. W. 370; and that it is the proper method of raising it; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bogert, 209 Pa. 589, 59 Atl. 100; Love v. Robinson, 213 Pa. 480, 62 Atl. 1065.

So demurrers to relief will lie in certain cases of confiscation; 3 Ves. 424; 10 id. 354; see Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 199, 1 L. Ed. 568; and questions of boundaries; Story, Eq. Pl. 347; 1 Ves. 446; as to law in the United States, see Massie v. Watts, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 158, 3 L. Ed. 181; N. Y. v. Connecticut, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 3, 1 L. Ed. 715; State v. People, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 284, 8 L. Ed. 127; State v. State, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 210, 10 L. Ed. 423; or that it is not cognizable by a court of equity; Taylor v. Buchan, 16 Ga. 541; Groves' Heirs v. Fulsome, 16 Mo. 543, 57 Am. Dec. 247; Box v. Stanford, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 93, 51 Am. Dec. 142; L. R. 8 Ch. App. 369; or that some other court of equity has jurisdiction properly; Trustees of Philadelphia Baptist Ass'n v. Hart's Ex'rs, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 4 L. Ed. 499; Mays v. Taylor, 7 Ga. 243; 1 Ves. 203; or that some other court has jurisdiction properly; Bingham v. Cabot, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 382, 1 L. Ed. 646; Wallace v. Fletcher, 30 N. H. 444; Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Letson, 2 How. (U. S.) 497, 11 L. Ed. 353; to the person, as that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue, by reason of personal disability, as infancy, idiocy, etc.; Jac. 377; bankruptcy and assignment; 1 Y. & C. 172; or has no title to sue in the character in which he sues; 2 P. Wms. 369; Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. 575; or that the relief prayed is barred by limitation; Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 567, 25 L. Ed. 815; Parmelee v. Price, 208 Ill. 544, 70 N. E. 725; Nash v. Ingalls, 101 Fed. 645; or a portion of it; City of Memphis v. Cable Co., 145 Fed. 602, 76 C. C. A. 292; to the substance of the bill, as that the matter is too trivial; Moore v. Lyttle, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 183; Carr v. Iglehart, 3 Ohio St. 457; 1 Vern. 359; that the plaintiff has no interest in the matter; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 154; 2 S. & S. 592; Long v. Majestre, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 305; Haskell v. Hilton, 30 Me. 419; Barr v. Clayton, 29 W. Va. 256, 11 S. E. 899; Keyser v. Renner, 87 Va. 249, 12 S. E. 406; or that the defendant has no such interest; 2 Bro. C. C. 332; 5 Madd. 19; Wakeman v. Bailey, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 485; De Wolf v. Johnson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 384, 6 L. Ed. 343; or that the bill is to enforce a penalty; 4 Bro. Ch. 434; to the frame and form of the bill, as that there is a defect or want of form; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 206; 5 Russ. 42; Ulrich v. Papin, 11 Mo. 42; or that the bill is multifarious; Story, Eq. Pl. § 530, n.; 2 S. & S. 79; Layton v. State, 4 Harring. (Del.) 9; White v. Curtis, 2 Gray (Mass.) 471; Oliver v. Platt, 3 How. (U. S.) 412, 11 L. Ed. 622; McDermott v. McGown, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 592; that there is a want or misjoinder of plaintiffs; 1 P. Wms. 428; Mitchell v. Lenox, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 281; Wormley v. Wormley, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 451, 5 L. Ed. 651; Southern Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lanier, 5 Fla. 110, 58 Am. Dec. 448; White v. Curtis, 2 Gray (Mass.) 467; Betton v. Williams, 4 Fla. 11; but only when it appears from the facts disclosed by the bill; Farson v. Sioux City, 106 Fed. 278; Walling v. Thomas, 133 Ala. 426, 31 South. 982; for a misjoinder of parties defendant where those only can demur who are improperly joined; Bigelow v. Sanford, 98 Mich. 657, 57 N. W. 1037; or where laches affirmatively appear on the face of a bill; Hinchman v. Kelley, 54 Fed. 63, 4 C. C. A. 189; Thurmond v. Ry. Co., 140 Fed. 697, 72 C. C. A. 191; Tetrault v. Fournier, 187 Mass. 58, 72 N. E. 351; Thompson v. Iron Co., 41 W. Va. 574, 23 S. E. 795; Hawley v. Pound, 76 Neb. 130, 106 N. W. 458; or staleness of claim; Hubbard v. Manhattan Trust Co., 87 Fed. 51, 30 C. C. A. 520; but only when it appears on the face of the bill; Marsh v. Marsh, 78 Vt. 399, 63 Atl. 159; but laches as an equitable defence cannot be raised on demurrer; Drake v. Wild, 65 Vt. 611, 27 Atl. 427; Gleason v. Carpenter, 74 Vt. 399, 52 Atl. 966.

A demurrer to an answer or plea in equity is improper; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bay, 138 Fed. 203; and is not permitted; Stokes v. Farnsworth, 99 Fed. 836. The sufficiency of an answer is properly questioned by setting the cause down for hearing on bill and answer; Barrett v. Twin City Power Co., 111 Fed. 45; or of a plea by setting it down for argument; Roundtree v. Gordon, 8 Mo. 19; but a demurrer to an answer filed and not objected to has been treated as an application to set the cause down on bill and answer; Grether v. Wright, 75 Fed. 742, 23 C. C. A. 498.

Demurrers to discovery may be brought for most of the above causes; 12 Beav. 423; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Sto. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 10,406; and, generally, that the plaintiff has no right to demand the discovery asked for, either in whole or in part; 8 Ves. 398; 2 Russ. 564; or to ask it of the defendant; Story, Eq. Pl. § 570. "A demurrer to discovery is not, in its nature, a pleading at all, but a mere statement in writing that the defendant refuses to answer certain allegations or charges in the bill, for reasons which appear upon the face of the bill, and which the demurrer points out." Langd. Eq. Pl. 61. See DISCOVERY.

The effect of a demurrer when allowed is to put an end to the suit, unless it is confined to a part of the bill, or the court gives the plaintiff leave to amend; Fleece v. Russell, 13 Ill. 31; it is within the discretion of the court whether the defendant will be ruled to answer after overruling a demurrer; and it may enter a decree against him at once, or hear evidence, or refer to a master to take evidence before entering a decree; Iglehart

v. Miller, 41 Ill. App. 439; Bruschke v. Der Nord Chicago Schuetzen Verein, 145 Ill. 433, 34 N. E. 417. If overruled, the defendant must make a fresh defence by answer; Cole County v. Angney, 12 Mo. 132; unless he obtain permission to put in a plea; Ad. Eq. 336. Since, as shown supra, the demurrer does not admit the truth of the bill, but only assumes it for the sake of argument, if the demurrer is overruled the plaintiff must proceed to prove his bill; Langd. Eq. Pl. 104. The court will sometimes disallow the demurrer without deciding that the bill is good, reserving that question till the hearing; id. 106.

Equity rules usually provide for a certificate of the opinion of counsel that the demurrer is well founded in law, and an affidavit by defendant that it is not interposed for delay.

At Law. A general demurrer is one which excepts to the sufficiency of a previous pleading in general terms, without showing specifically the nature of the objection; and such demurrer is sufficient when the objection is on matter of substance; Steph. Pl. 159; Co. Litt. 72 a; Flanagan v. Ins. Co., 25 N. J. L. 506; Gordon v. State, 11 Ark. 12; Coffin v. Knott, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 582, 52 Am. Dec. 537; Tyler v. Canaday, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 160; Cheek v. Herndon, 82 Tex. 146, 17 S. W. 763. A court, after overruling a general demurrer to a complaint on the ground that it does not state a cause of action, may in its discretion enter final judgment on the demurrer; Alley v. Nott, 111 U. S. 472, 4 Sup. Ct. 495, 28 L. Ed. 491.

A special demurrer is one which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection and the particular ground of exception; Co. Litt. 72 a. An objection to a complaint, on the ground of ambiguity or uncertainty, can be taken only by special demurrer; Kirsch v. Derby, 96 Cal. 602, 31 Pac. 567; as must be a demurrer to a plea on the ground of duplicity; Willey v. Carpenter, 64 Vt. 212, 23 Atl. 630, 15 L. R. A. 853; but see Corpening v. Worthington & Co., 99 Ala. 541, 12 South. 426.

It is necessary where the objection is to the form, by the statutes 27 Eliz. c. 5 and 4 Anne, c. 16; Blakeney v. Ferguson, 18 Ark. 347; Mitchell v. Williamson, 6 Md. 210; Lyon v. Fish, 20 Ohio, 100. Under a special demurrer the party may, on the argument, not only take advantage of the particular faults which his demurrer specifies, but also of all objections in substance.

It is not enough that a special demurrer object in general terms, that the pleading is "uncertain, defective, and informal," or the like, but it is necessary to show in what respect it is uncertain, defective, and informal; 1 Wms. Saund. 161, n. 1, 337 b, n. 3; Steph. Pl. 159, 161; 1 Chit. Pl. 642.

A demurrer may be for insufficiency either in substance or in form; that is, it may be either on the ground that the case shown by the opposite party is essentially insufficient, or on the ground that it is stated in an inartificial manner; Hob. 164; Richmond v. Brookings, 48 Fed. 2d. But such a demurrer does not raise the question of the jurisdiction of the court; Saxton v. Seiberling, 48 Ohio St. 554, 29 N. E. 179. It lies to any of the pleadings, except that there may not be a demurrer to a demurrer; Salk. 219; Bacon. Abr. Pleas (N 2). But it will not lie to a supplemental complaint; Lewis v. Rowland, 131 Ind. 37, 30 N. E. 796; while it will to a supplemental answer; Eckert v. Binkley, 134 Ind. 614, 33 N. E. 619, 34 N. E. 441. Demurrer may be to the whole or a part of the pleading; but if to the whole, and a part be good, the demurrer will be overruled; 13 East 76; Backus v. Richardson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 476; Brown v. Castles, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 348; Tucker v. Hart, 23 Miss. 548; Brown v. Duchesne, 2 Curt. C. C. 97, Fed. Cas. No. 2,003; Walton v. Stephenson, 14 Ill. 77; Scott v. State, 2 Md. 284; Pinkum v. City of Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 301, 51 N. W. 550; Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Tapia, 94 Ala. 226, 10 South. 236. But see Barbee v. Road Co., 6 Fla. 262; Whiting v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 327; State v. Clark, 9 Ind. 241; Henderson v. Stringer, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 130; Com. v. Hughes, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 400. The objection must appear on the face of the pleadings; 2 Saund. 364; Town of Hartland v. Town of Windsor, 29 Vt. 354; or upon oyer of some instrument defectively set forth therein; 2 Saund. 60, n.; Williams v. Boyle, 1 Misc. 364, 20 N. Y. Supp. 720. A joint demurrer by two defendants to a declaration for want of a cause of action should be overruled if the declaration sets forth a cause of action as to either of them; May v. Jones, 88 Ga. 308, 14 S. E. 552, 15 L. R. A. 637, 30 Am. St. Rep. 154; Lancaster v. Roberts, 144 Ill. 213, 33 N. E. 27.

A demurrer does not reach vagueness and uncertainty in a complaint, but they must be remedied by a motion to make more specific and certain; Sheeks v. Erwin, 130 Ind. 31, 29 N. E. 11; Sluyter v. Ins. Co., 3 Ind. App. 312, 29 N. E. 608; Chamberlain v. Mensing, 51 Fed. 669.

Where the want of jurisdiction in a federal court is apparent on the face of the petition, declaration or complaint, it may be taken advantage of by demurrer; Southern P. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 13 Sup. Ct. 44, 36 L. Ed. 942; Hagstoz v. Ins. Co., 179 Fed. 569; and the same is true of the statute of limitations; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 25 L. Ed. 807; Kendall v. U. S., 107 U. S. 123, 2 Sup. Ct. 277, 27 L. Ed. 437.

For the various and numerous causes of demurrer, reference must be had to the law of each state.

As to the effect of a demurrer. It admits all such matters of fact as are sufficiently pleaded; Com. Dig. Pleader (A 5); Jones v. Ireland, 4 Ia. 63; Roberts v. State, 14 Ga. 8, 58 Am. Dec. 528; Pierson v. Wallace, 7 Ark. 282; Soule v. Seattle, 6 Wash. 315, 33 Pac. 384, 1080; Jorgensen v. Ministers of Church, 7 Misc. 1, 27 N. Y. Supp. 318. Its office was to test the sufficiency of the preceding pleading both as to form and substance, and it was resorted to by either party who believed that the pleading of the other party was insufficient either because the declaration did not show a good cause of action or the plea did not set up a legal defence; but it does not admit mere epithets charging fraud and allegations of legal conclusions; Kent v. R. & I. Co., 144 U. S. 75, 12 Sup. Ct. 650, 36 L. Ed. 352; nor an erroneous averment of law; Dickerson v. Winslow, 97 Ala. 491, 11 South. 918.

The demurrer reaches back to the first error in the pleading; Terry v. Tubman, 92 U. S. 156, 23 L. Ed. 537; but not where the defect is of form and not of substance; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354. On demurrer the court consider the whole record, and give judgment according to the legal right for the party who on the whole seems best entitled to it; 4 East 502; Pickett v. Bank, 8 Ark. 224; Wales v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 276; Townsend v. Jemison, 7 How. (U. S.) 706, 12 L. Ed. 880; Shaw v. White, 28 Ala. 637; Claggett v. Simes, 31 N. H. 22; Freeman v. Freeman, 39 Me. 426; Peoria & O. R. Co. v. Neill, 16 Ill. 269. For example, on a demurrer to the replication, if the court think the replication bad, but perceive substantial fault in the plea, they will give judgment, not for the defendant, but for the plaintiff; 2 Wils. 150; Townsend v. Jemison, 7 How. (U. S.) 706, 12 L. Ed. 880; provided the declaration be good; but if the declaration also be bad in substance, then, upon the same principle, judgment would be given for the defendant; 5 Co. 29 a. The court will not look back into the record to adjudge in favor of an apparent right in the plaintiff, unless the plaintiff have himself put his action upon that ground; 5 B. & Ald. 507. If, however, the plaintiff demur to a plea in abatement, and the court decide against the plea, they will give judgment of respondeat ouster, without regard to any defect in the declaration; Carth. 172; Ellis v. Ellis, 4 R. I. 110; Knott v. Clements, 13 Ark. 335; Ryan v. May, 14 Ill. 49. A party waives his demurrer by not calling for action thereon; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Boren, 83 Tex. 97, 18 S. W. 484.

In Practice. Demurrer upon evidence is a declaration that the party making it, generally the defendant, will not proceed, because the evidence offered on the other side is not sufficient to maintain the issue; Shaw v. White, 28 Ala. 637.

It is said that, although generally superseded by motion for nonsuit, binding instructions, or to exclude the evidence from the jury, the practice is recognized "in nearly half the states" in civil cases; 15 H. L. Rev. 738. Nevertheless, the proceeding is so hedged about with technicalities that it is infrequently resorted to and when invoked has been the subject of the continuing disapproval of the courts ever since it was said by Chief Justice Tilghman that "he who demurs to parol evidence engages in an uphill business"; Dickey v. Schreider, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 416; and Emery, J., characterized it as "unusual and antiquated practice"; State v. Soper, 16 Me. 293, 33 Am. Dec. 665. In 1859 it had long been out of use in New York and refusal to allow it was not cause of exception; Colegrove v. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 492, 75 Am. Dec. 418.

Upon joinder by the opposite party, the jury is generally discharged from giving any verdict; 1 Archb. Pr. 186; and the demurrer being entered on record is afterwards argued and decided by the court in banc; and the judgment there given upon it may ultimately be brought before a court of error; Andr. Steph. Pl. 180. It admits the truth of the evidence given and the legal deductions therefrom; Davis v. Steiner, 14 Pa. 275, 53 Am. Dec. 547; Hopkins v. Bowers, 111 N. C. 175, 16 S. E. 1; Doe v. Rue, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 263, 29 Am. Dec. 368; but only such inferences as the jury might have drawn; Union S. S. Co. v. Nottinghams, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 115, 91 Am. Dec. 378; MacKinley v. McGregor, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 369, 31 Am. Dec. 522. An offer, in a civil case, so to demur, is not stricti juris, but is allowable only in the discretion of the court and should be refused if there is not colorable cause for it; Jones v. Ireland, 4 Ia. 63; it may be tendered by either party and the court may compel a joinder, but the power should be exercised with discretion, and when exercised, the action of the court is open to review; Eubank's Ex'r v. Smith, 77 Va. 206. See Plant v. Edwards, 85 Ind. 588. All facts proved and legitimate inferences therefrom must be admitted; Hopkins v. R. R., 96 Tenn. 409, 34 S. W. 1029, 32 L. R. A. 354; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Brown, 96 Tenn. 559, 35 S. W. 560; and until the party demurring does this, the party offering the evidence is not required to join in demurrer; 2 H. Bl. 189 (where the subject and the practice thereon was elaborately considered in the House of Lords); and if the evidence is prima facie insufficient the demurrer is sustained; State v. Goetz, 131 Mo. 675, 33 S. W. 161; otherwise if there is some evidence on each material point; Hagan v. B'l'g & Loan Ass'n, 2 Kan. App. 711, 43 Pac. 1138; Cherokee & P. Coal & Mining Co. v. Britton, 3 Kan. App. 292, 45 Pac. 100. "Since it was determined that a demurrer to evidence could not be resorted to as a matter of right, it has fallen into disuse; and as long ago as 1813 (Young v. Black, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 565, 3 L. Ed. 440) it was regarded as an unusual proceeding, and one to be allowed or denied by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion under all the circumstances of the case;" Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. (U. S.) 427, 436, 15 L. Ed. 978. A bill of exceptions is more comprehensive, in that it permits the review of rulings upon the admission of evidence, objection to which is waived by the demurrer; id. An offer of an instruction to find for the defendant, submitted at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence; Mitchell v. Ry. Co., 82 Mo. 106; Baker v. State, 31 Ohio St. 314.

The result of a demurrer to evidence must be final judgment for one party or the other—for the defendant if his demurrer were sustained or for the plaintiff if it were overruled, and in the latter case judgment would be given on the verdict if a conditional one had been taken, or if not, a writ of inquiry would issue to assess the damages. This practice appears from the cases already cited and is well stated in Obaugh v. Finn, 4 Ark. 110, 37 Am. Dec. 773, where it was held to be error to retain the jury after joinder in demurrer to evidence and to submit the case to the jury after overruling the demurrer. It would seem therefore that after that has been done the defendant demurrant is precluded from introducing evidence; State v. Groves, 119 N. C. 822, 25 S. E. 819; although it appears to have been done in an Oklahoma case in which, on writ of error, the United States Supreme Court held that where the defendant, after his demurrer to the evidence was overruled, had introduced evidence in his own behalf, he waived any supposed error in the decision on the demurrer; McCabe & Steen Const. Co. v. Wilson, 209 U. S. 275, 28 Sup. Ct. 558, 52 L. Ed. 788. And it was also done in Oglesby v. R. Co., 177 Mo. 272, 76 S. W. 623, where, after a demurrer to evidence was overruled, the defendant put in its testimony, which, with the plaintiff's, was considered as a whole and reviewed on appeal, and the court declined to review the judgment that the case was one to go to the jury.

In criminal trials it is entirely discretionary with the court whether it will entertain a demurrer to the evidence, even though counsel for the prisoner and state should both consent to it; Duncan v. State, 29 Fla. 439, 10 South. 815. In some courts, the propriety of the proceeding, in criminal cases, is denied; Nelson v. State, 47 Miss. 621; Miller v. State, 79 Ind. 198; Baker v. State, 31 Ohio St. 314; Doss v. Com., 1 Gratt. (Va.) 557; State v. Alderton, 50 W. Va. 101, 40 S. E. 350; while in others it is allowed but not encouraged; Martin v. State, 62 Ala. 240; State v. Soper, 16 Me. 293, 33 Am. Dec. 665. If allowed, it must state facts, and not evidence tending to prove those facts; Crowe v. People, 92 Ill. 231 (and this applies also in civil causes; Story, J., in Fowle v. Alexandria, 11 Wheat. [U. S.] 320, 6 L. Ed. 484); and if it is resorted to by an accused, and overruled, he cannot introduce further evidence to controvert that which he has admitted; State v. Groves, 119 N. C. 822, 25 S. E. 819.

A demurrer to the evidence in equity has the same effect as at law, and concedes every fact which such evidence tends to prove, and every inference fairly deducible from the facts proved; Healey v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340, 20 S. W. 881.

For a full discussion of the subject see 32 L. R. A. 354.

Demurrer to interrogatories is the reason which a witness tenders for not answering a particular question in interrogatories; 2 Swanst. 194. It is not, strictly speaking, a demurrer, except in the popular sense of the word; Gresl. Eq. Ev. 61. The court are judicially to determine its validity. The witness must state his objection very carefully; for these demurrers are held to strict rules, and are readily overruled if they cover too much; 2 Atk. 524; 1 Y. & J. 132.

DEMURRER BOOK. In English Practice. A transcript of all the pleadings that have been filed or delivered between the parties made upon the formation of an issue at law. 3 Steph. Com. 511; Lush, Pr. 787.

DEMURRER UPON EVIDENCE. See DEMURRER.

DEMY SANKE, DEMY SANGUE. Half-blood. A corruption of demi-sang.

DEN AND STROND. Liberty for ships and vessels to run aground or come ashore (strand themselves). Cowell.

DENARII. An ancient general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. The French use the word denier in the same sense; payer de ses propres deniers.

DENARIUS DEI. God's penny; earnest money. A certain sum of money which is given by one of the contracting parties to the other as a sign of the completion of the contract. See EARNEST; GOD'S PENNY.

It differs from arrhæ in this, that the latter is a part of the consideration, while the denarius Dei is no part of it. 1 Duvergnoy, n. 132; 3 id. n. 49; Répert. de Jur., Denier à Dieu.

DENATIONALIZATION. See EXPATRIATION.

DENIAL. In Pleading. A traverse of the statement of the opposite party; a defence.

DENIER À DIEU. In French Law. A sum of money which the hirer of a thing gives to the other party as evidence, or for the consideration of the contract, which either party may annul within twenty-four hours, the one who gave the denier à Dieu by demanding, and the other by returning it. See DENARIUS DEI.

Earnest Money. Bellow's Dict.

DENIZATION. The act by which a foreigner becomes a subject of a country, but without the rights either of a natural-born subject or of one who has become naturalized. It has existed from an early period, and is effected only by letters patent from the sovereign. Denization has no retrospective operation; a denizen is in an intermediate position between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of both these characters. He may ordinarily take lands by purchase, but not by inheritance; and his issue born before denization cannot inherit from him, but his issue born after it may; Cockburn, Nationality 27; Morse, Citizenship 106. See Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 352.

The difference between denization and naturalization is that the denizen becomes a British subject from the date of the letters while a naturalized person is placed in a position equivalent to that of a natural-born subject; Dicey, Confl. Laws 164.

DENIZEN. An alien born who has obtained, ex donatione legis, letters patent to make him an English subject.

He is intermediate between a natural-born subject and an alien. He may take lands by purchase or devise,—which an alien cannot; but he is incapable of taking by inheritance. 1 Bla. Com. 374.

In South Carolina, and perhaps in other states, this civil condition is well known to the law, having been created by statute.

The right of making denizens is not exclusively vested in the king, for it is possessed by parliament, but is scarcely ever exercised but by royal power. It may be effected by conquest; 7 Co. 6 a; 2 Vent. 6; Com. Dig. Alien (D 1); Chitty, Com. Law 120. See DENIZATION.

In the common law, the word denizen is sometimes applied to a natural-born subject. Co. Litt. 129 a; Levy v. McCartee, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 102, 116, 8 L. Ed. 334.

DENOUNCE. A term frequently used in regard to treaties, indicating the act of one nation in giving notice to another nation of its intention to terminate an existing treaty between the two nations. The French dénoncer means to declare, to lodge an information against. Bellows, Fr. Dict.

DENOUNCEMENT. In Mexican Law. A judicial proceeding for the forfeiture of land held by an alien. See De Merle v. Mathews, 26 Cal. 477; Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 63; Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 563, 4 L. Ed. 460.

DENUNCIATION. In Civil Law. The act by which an individual informs a public officer, whose duty it is to prosecute offenders, that a crime has been committed. See 1 Bro. Civ. Law 447; Ayliffe, Parerg. 210; Pothier, Proc. Cr. sect. 2, § 2.

The giving of an information in the ecclesiastical courts by one who was not the accuser.

DENUNTIATIO. In Old English Law. A public notice or summons. Bracton 202 b.

DEODAND. Any personal chattel whatever, animate or inanimate, which is the immediate cause of the death of a human creature. It was forfeited to the king to be distributed in alms by his high almoner "for the appeasing," says Coke, "of God's wrath." The word comes from Deo dandum, a thing that must be offered to God.

A Latin phrase which is attributed to Bracton has, by mistranslation, given rise to some erroneous statements in some of the authors as to what are deodands, Omnia quæ ad mortem movent, although it evidently means all things which tend to produce death, has been rendered move to death,—thus giving rise to the theory that things in motion only are to be forfeited. A difference, however, according to Blackstone, existed as to how much was to be sacrificed. Thus, if a man should fall from a cartwheel, the cart being stationary, and be killed, the wheel only would be deodand: while, if he was run over by the same wheel in motion, not only the wheel but the cart and the load became deodand. And this, even though it belonged to the dead man. Horses, oxen, carts, boats, mill-wheels, and cauldrons were the commonest deodands. The common name for it was the "bana," the slayer. In the thirteenth century the common practice was that the thing itself was delivered to the men of the township where the death occurred, and they had to account to the king's officers. In very early records the justices in eyre named the charitable purpose, to which the money was to be applied; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 471. In 1840, a railway company in England was amerced £2,000, as a deodand. Deodands were not abolished till 1846. See 1 Bla. Com. 301; 2 Steph. Com. 551; Holmes, C. L. 24.

No deodand accrues in the case of a felonious killing; 1 Q. B. 818; 1 G. & D. 211, 481; Dow. 1048. Deodands, as droits formerly attaching to the office of the Lord High Admiral, are defined as "things instrumental to the death of a man on shipboard, or goods found on a dead body cast on shore." See 2 Browne, Civ. L. 56.

DEPART. To divide or separate actively. The departers of gold and silver were no more than the dividers and refiners of those metals. Cowell.

DEPARTMENT. A portion of a country. In France, the country is divided into departments, which are somewhat similar to the counties in this country. The United States have been divided into military departments, including certain portions of the country. Parker v. U. S., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 293, 7 L. Ed. 150.

A portion of the agents employed by the executive branch of the United States government, to whom a specified class of duties is assigned. They are appointed by the president, by and with the advice of the senate.

The Department of State is intrusted with such matters relating to correspondence, commissions, and instructions to or with public ministers and consuls of the United States, or to negotiations with public ministers from foreign states or princes, or to memorials or other applications from foreign public ministers or other foreigners, or to such matters respecting foreign affairs as the president shall assign to said department. U. S. R. S. § 202. It has custody and charge of the seal of the United States, and of the seal of the department of state, and of all of the books, papers, records, etc., in and appertaining to the department, or any that may hereafter be acquired by it; id. § 203.

The principal officer is a secretary; he shall conduct the business of the department in such manner as the president shall direct. There are three assistant secretaries of state.

The Department of the Treasury has charge of the services relating to the finances. It is the duty of the secretary to digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of public credit; to prepare and report estimates of the public revenue and the public expenditures; to superintend the collection of the revenue; to decide on the forms of keeping and stating accounts and making returns, and to grant, under limitations established by law, all warrants for moneys to be issued from the treasury in pursuance of appropriations by law; to make report and give information to either branch of the legislature, in person or in writing, respecting all matters referred to by the senate or house of representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and, generally, to perform all such services relative to the finances as he shall be directed to perform. The department includes internal revenue; the mint; life saving service; engraving and printing; national banking system; revenue marine; customs; supervising architect. There are three assistant secretaries.

The Department of War is intrusted with duties relating to the land forces. There is an assistant secretary. U. S. R. S. § 214. It has charge of the Military Academy.

The Department of Justice is presided over by the attorney-general, who is assisted by the solicitor-general and four assistant attorneys-general, and by solicitors for certain departments. There is provision for the employment of special counsel in certain cases.

The attorney-general is required to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law whenever required by the president or the head of any executive department, and on behalf of the United States to procure proper evidence for, and conduct, prosecute or defend all suits in the supreme court or in the court of claims, in which the United States or any officer thereof, as such officer, is a party or may be interested. He exercises general superintendence and direction over the attorneys and marshals of all the districts in the United States and territories, and has power to employ and retain such attorneys and counsellors-at-law as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties. U. S. R. S. § 346.

The Post Office Department has the general charge of matters relating to the postal service, the establishment of post-offices, appointment of postmasters, and the like. The head of the department is the postmaster-general and there are four assistant postmasters-general. U. S. R. S. §§ 394-396; 1 Supp. 927.

The Department of the Navy is intrusted with the charge of the navy. There is an assistant secretary and a judge advocate-general. There are in the navy department certain bureaus: Yards and docks; equipment and recruiting; navigation; ordnance; construction and repair; steam engineering; provisions and clothing; medicine and surgery. It includes the Marine Corps and the Naval Academy.

The Department of the Interior has general supervisory and appellate powers over the office of the commissioner of patents, and charge of the land office, Indian affairs, pensions, education, mines, geological survey, government hospitals and asylums and capitol buildings. There is an assistant secretary.

The Department of Agriculture is presided over by a secretary of agriculture. The design and duties of this department are to acquire and diffuse useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants; Act Feb. 9, 1889; by act of 1890 the Weather Bureau was added. There is an assistant secretary.

The Department of Commerce was provided by Act of Feb. 14, 1903, as the Department of Commerce and Labor; upon the creation (infra) of the Department of Labor, it became the Department of Commerce. The department includes supervision of corporations, lighthouses, the census, steamship inspection, standards, navigation and foreign and domestic commerce.

The Department of Labor was created by Act of March 4, 1913, to promote the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, etc. It includes immigration, naturalization, labor statistics and children's bureau.

As to the succession to the presidency, see CABINET.

DEPARTURE. In Maritime Law. A deviation from the course prescribed in the policy of insurance. See DEVIATION.

In Pleading. The statement of matter in a replication, rejoinder, or subsequent pleading, as a cause of action or defence, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it. 2 Wms. Saund. 84 a, n. 1; Co. Litt. 304 a. It is not allowable, as it prevents reaching an issue; Kimberlin v. Carter, 49 Ind. 111; White v. Joy, 13 N. Y. 83, 89; 2 Wms. Saund. a, n. 1; Steph. Pl. 410.

A replication in tort following a declaration in contract is a departure; 1 B. & S. 836; and so it is when evidence of an entirely different character is required to support the declaration and the reply; Johnson v. Bank, 59 Kan. 250, 52 Pac. 860. The change of an immaterial point is no departure; 1 Stra. 21; nor is it if one of the later pleadings merely fortifies the former; 1 Lev. 81; nor where the replication merely answers a prima facie defence set up by the plea, as a statute against a claim of common-law right; 2 B. & S. 402; nor the allegation in reply of new matter necessary to meet the allegations of the answer, if not contradictory to the facts stated in the original pleading; Hunter Milling Co. v. Allen, 74 Kan. 679, 88 Pac. 252, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 291; McLachlin v. Barker, 64 Mo. App. 511; Mayes v. Stephens, 38 Or. 512, 63 Pac. 760, 64 Pac. 319; McFadden v. Schroeder, 4 Ind. App. 305, 29 N. E. 491, 30 N. E. 711; nor the setting out of previous averments in greater detail; Zorn v. Livesley, 44 Or. 501, 75 Pac. 1057.

It is to be taken advantage of by demurrer, general; 5 D. & R. 295; Sterns v. Patterson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 132; Keay v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 1; or special; 2 Saund. 84; Com. Dig. Pleader (F 10); Hanover Fire Ins. Co. of City of New York v. Brown, 77 Md. 64, 25 Atl. 989, 27 Atl. 314, 39 Am. St. Rep. 386.

A departure is cured by a verdict in favor of him who makes it, if the matter pleaded by way of departure is a sufficient answer in substance to what has been before pleaded by the opposite party; that is, if it would have been sufficient if pleaded in the first instance; 2 Saund. 84; 1 Lilly, Abr. 444.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF COURT. This took place where the tenant, having once made his appearance in court upon demand, failed to reappear when demanded; Co. Litt. 139 a. As the whole term is, in contemplation of law, but a single day, an appearance on any day, and a subsequent failure to reappear at any subsequent part of the term, is such a departure; 8 Co. 62 a; 1 Rolle, Abr. 583; Metc. Yelv. 211.

DEPENDENCY. A territory distinct from the country in which the supreme sovereign power resides, but belonging rightfully to it, and subject to the laws and regulations which the sovereign may think proper to prescribe.

It differs from a colony, because it is not settled by the citizens of the sovereign or mother state; and from possession, because it is held by other title than that of mere conquest. For example, Malta was considered a dependency of Great Britain in the year 1813. U. S. v. The Nancy, 3 Wash. C. C. 286, Fed. Cas. No 15,854. See Act of Cong. Mch. 1, 1809, commonly called the non-importation law; TERRITORY; INDIANS.

DEPENDENT. One who derives support from another. Ballou v. Gile, 50 Wis. 618, 7 N. W. 561; Supreme Council American Legion of Honor v. Perry, 140 Mass. 590, 5 N. E. 634; not merely persons who derive a benefit from the earnings of the deceased; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1005. A father is in part dependent on his child, however young, if the wages of the child form part of the common fund to maintain the home; [1900] A. C. 358; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 33 N. E. 183, 19 L. R. A. 187 (where the term is used with reference to benevolent associations). See DEATH.

DEPENDENT PROMISE. One which it is not the duty of the promisor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party. Hamm. Partn. 17, 29, 30, 109; Harr. Cont. 152. See CONTRACT; COVENANT; INDEPENDENT PROMISE.

DEPONENT. One who gives information, on oath or affirmation, respecting some facts known to him, before a magistrate or other person entitled to administer an oath; he who makes a deposition. Bliss v. Shuman, 47 Me. 248. See AFFIANT.

DEPORTATION. In Roman Law. A perpetual banishment, depriving the banished of his rights as a citizen: it differed from relegation (q. v.) and exile (q. v.). 1 Bro. Civ. Law, 125, n.; Inst. 1. 12. 1; Dig. 48. 22. 14. 1.

In Modern Law. "The removal of an alien out of the country, simply because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and without any punishment being imposed or contemplated, either under the laws of the country out of which he is sent, or under those of the country to which he is taken." Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 709, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905. It differs from transportation (q. v.), which is by way of punishment of one convicted of an offence against the laws of the country; and from extradition (q. v.), which is the surrender to another country of one accused of an offence against its laws, there to be tried, and, if found guilty, punished; id. It is not a criminal proceeding; U. S. v. Hing Quong Chow, 53 Fed. 233.

The right of a nation to expel or deport foreigners who have not been naturalized or taken any steps towards becoming citizens of the country, rests upon the same grounds, and is as absolute and unqualified as the right to prohibit and prevent their entrance into the country; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905, which holds, by a divided court, that this right exists even though such persons be subjects of a friendly power and have acquired a domicile in this country. This case follows Vattel, Law of Nations § 230; Ortolan, Dipl. de la Mer 297; 1 Phill. Int. L. § 220; Bar, Int. Law (Gillespie's ed.) 708.

None of the guaranties of the United States constitution, first amendment, respecting freedom to worship, speak, publish or petition, are infringed by the immigration act of March 3, 1903, for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists; U. S. v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 48 L. Ed. 979.

So the child of an alien, born abroad, whose father afterwards comes here and is naturalized, can be excluded and deported if found to be suffering from a contagious disease; Zartarian v. Billings, 204 U. S. 170, 27 Sup. Ct. 182, 51 L. Ed. 428.

Deportation is an inherent sovereign power; Tiaco v. Forbes, 228 U. S. 549, 33 Sup. Ct. 585, 57 L. Ed. —. Congress has the power to deport aliens whose presence is deemed hurtful, and this applies to prostitutes, regardless of how long they have been here; Bugajewitz v. Adams, 228 U. S. 585, 33 Sup. Ct. 607, 57 L. Ed. —.

In England, the only question has been whether deportation could be exercised by the king without the consent of parliament. It was formerly exercised by the king, but in later times by parliament. See 2 Inst. 57; 1 Bla. Com. 260; 6 Law Quart. Rev. 27. A British colonial governor has exercised it; 1 Moore, P. C. 460. See App. Cas. (1891) 272.

Congress may exercise the power through the executive, or may call in the judiciary to ascertain contested facts; Fong You Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905.

See ALIEN-LABOR; ANARCHIST; CHINESE; CITIZEN; NATURALIZATION; REVOI.

Under the act of August 18, 1894, the decision of the secretary of commerce of the right of a person of Chinese descent to enter the United States is conclusive on the federal courts, though citizenship, and not domicile, is the ground on which the right of entry is claimed; U. S. v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 49 L. Ed. 1040. If he enters unlawfully, he may be deported by the secretary of commerce; Prentiss v. Seu Leung, 203 Fed. 25, 121 C. C. A. 389.

"Moral turpitude," as ground of exclusion of an alien, means an act of baseness, villainess or depravity in the private and social duties which one owes to society, and as applied to offences includes only such crimes as manifest personal depravity or baseness; U. S. v. Uhl, 203 Fed. 152; publishing a criminal libel against King George V, of which the person seeking entrance had been convicted and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in England is not ground of exclusion; id., affirmed, U. S. v. Uhl, 210 Fed. 860.

DEPOSE. To deprive an individual of a public employment or office against his will. Wolffius, Inst. § 1063. The term is usually applied to the deprivation of all authority of a sovereign.

To give testimony under oath. See DEPOSITION.

DEPOSIT. A naked bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without reward, and to be returned when he shall require it. Jones, Bailm. 36, 117; Bellows Falls Bank v. Bank, 40 Vt. 380.

A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust. Story, Bailm. § 41; Richardson v. Futrell, 42 Miss. 544.

A contract by which one of the contracting parties gives a thing to another to keep, who is to do so gratuitously and obliges himself to return it when he shall be requested. See 3 L. R. P. C. C. 101.

An irregular deposit arises where one deposits money with another for safekeeping, in cases where the latter is to return, not the specific money deposited, but an equal sum.

A quasi deposit arises where one comes lawfully into possession of the goods of another by finding.

A depositary is bound to take only ordinary care of the deposit, which will of course vary with the character of the goods to be kept, and other circumstances; Edw. Bailm. 43. See Vickroy v. Skelley, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 375; Foster v. Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Tracy v. Wood, 3 Mas. 132, Fed. Cas. No. 14,130; 1 B. & Ald. 59. While gross negligence on the part of a gratuitous bailee is not fraud, it is in effect the same thing; First Nat. Bank v. Graham, 106 U. S. 699, 25 L. Ed. 750. He has, in general, no right to use the thing deposited; Bac. Abr. Bailment, D; unless in cases where permission has been given or may from the nature of the case be implied; Story, Bailm. § 90; Jones, Bailm. 80, 81. He is bound to return the deposit in individuo, and in the same state in which he received it: if it is lost, or injured, or spoiled, by his fraud or gross negligence, he is responsible to the extent of the loss or injury; Jones, Bailm. 36, 46, 120; Foster v. Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Stanton v. Bell, 9 N. C. 145, 11 Am. Dec. 744; 1 Dane, Abr. c. 17, arts. 1 and 2; Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209, 49 N. W. 502, 24 Am. St. Rep. 154. He is also bound to restore, not only the thing deposited, but any increase or profits which may have accrued from it; if an animal deposited bear young, the latter are to be delivered to the owner; Story, Bailm. § 99.

In the case of irregular deposits, as those with a bank, the relation of the bank to its customer is that of debtor and creditor, and does not partake at all of a fiduciary character. It ceases altogether to be the money of the depositor, and becomes the money of the bank. It is his to do what he pleases with it, and there is no trust created; Edw. Bailm. 41, 45; Commercial Bank of Albany v. Hughes, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 94; 1 Mer. 568; Bank of Marysville v. Brewing Co., 50 Ohio St. 151, 33 N. E. 1054, 40 Am. St. Rep. 660;

American Exchange Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 138 Ill. 596, 28 N. E. 839, 32 Am. St. Rep. 171; Collins v. State, 33 Fla. 429, 15 South. 214; Central Nat. Bank v. Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 64, 26 L. Ed. 693. See Jacobus v. Jacobus, 37 N. J. Eq. 18. In Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 507, 22 Atl. 831, 14 L. R. A. 103, it was held to be "a temporary disposition of money for safekeeping," not creating the relation of debtor and creditor; nor is it a loan; id.; Elliott v. State Bank, 128 Ia. 275, 103 N. W. 777, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 111 Am. St. Rep. 198. If the jury believe from the evidence that the parties intended that a bank should not receive a check as cash, but only as an agent for collection, then title to the check does not vest in the bank at the time of the deposit; Fayette Nat. Bank v. Summers, 105 Va. 689, 54 S. E. 862, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694.

Where a commission merchant deposits his principal's money in his own account in bank, it cannot be applied to the payment of the former's debt to the bank; Boyle v. Bank, 125 Wis. 498, 103 N. W. 1123, 104 N. W. 917, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1110, 110 Am. St. Rep. 844, citing Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Gillespie, 137 U. S. 411, 11 Sup. Ct. 118, 34 L. Ed. 724.

As to deposits in savings banks, etc., for another, see DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

See CHECK; INDORSEMENT; NATIONAL BANK.

The legal remedy is a suit at law for debt: the balance cannot be reached by a bill in equity; 2 H. L. Cas. 39; except in some cases of insolvency, when a fund can be followed; Voight v. Lewis, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 511, Fed. Cas. No. 16,989. See infra. A bank is not liable for interest unless expressly contracted for; and the deposit is subject to the statute of limitations; 2 H. L. Cas. 39; McLaughlin v. Bank, 139 N. Y. 514, 34 N. E. 1095. Otherwise, in the case of a certificate of deposit payable on demand; Hartman's Appeal, 107 Pa. 333.

The general rule that the title passes upon the deposit does not apply when the subject of the deposit is a sight draft and the bank at the time of the acceptance was insolvent and its officers knew it to be so; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 10 Sup. Ct. 390, 33 L. Ed. 683. The acceptance of a deposit by a bank irretrievably insolvent will constitute such fraud as will entitle the depositor to his drafts or their proceeds; id.; Cragle v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 1 N. E. 537, 52 Am. Rep. 9; Bruner v. Bank, 97 Tenn. 540, 37 S. W. 286, 34 L. R. A. 532. When checks are received by a bank hopelessly insolvent and not collected until after it closes its doors, the owner may recover the checks or their proceeds; City of Somerville v. Beal, 49 Fed. 790; he may rescind the transfer and stop payment of the check; First Nat. Bank of Meridian v. Strauss, 66 Miss. 479, 6 South. 232, 14 Am. St. Rep. 579; or reclaim it from the hands of the assignee; Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 1 N. E. 537, 52 Am. Rep. 9; or of a third person who did not give value for it; National Citizens' Bank v. Howard, 3 How. Pr. N. Y. (N. S.) 511; but not if the check has been turned over to a bona fide purchaser for value; Grant v. Walsh, 81 Hun 449, 31 N. Y. Supp. 60. If the subject of the deposit is money and is in a separate package, the depositor may recover it from the receiver; In re Commercial Bank, 1 Ohio N. P. 358; Chaffee v. Fort, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 81; Furber v. Stephens, 35 Fed. 17; but if it has passed into the hands of the assignee and been mingled with the other funds of the bank, and cannot be traced, the depositor is not entitled to a preference; Lotze v. Hoerner, 25 Ohio L. J. 31; Wilson v. Coburn, 35 Neb. 530, 53 N. W. 466; Blake v. Bank, 12 Wash. 619, 41 Pac. 909; In re North River Bank, 60 Hun 91, 14 N. Y. Supp. 261. It has been held that if money and checks are deposited a few minutes before the doors of the bank are closed and the checks are subsequently collected, so that the specific money deposited and the proceeds of the checks come to the hands of the receiver, the owner may recover them from him. The fact that the money cannot be identified will not prevent its recovery if it is still in the mass in the receiver's hands; Wasson v. Hawkins, 59 Fed. 237, followed in Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Bank, 65 Fed. 690.

Deposits in the civil law are divisible into two kinds—necessary and voluntary. A necessary deposit is such as arises from pressing necessity; as, for instance, in case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other overwhelming calamity; and thence it is called miserabile depositum. La. Civ. Code 2935. A voluntary deposit is such as arises without any such calamity, from the mere consent or agreement of the parties. Dig. 16. 3. 2.

This distinction was material in the civil law in respect to the remedy, for involuntary deposits the action was only in simplum, in the other in duplum, or twofold, whenever the depositary was guilty of any default. The common law has made no such distinction. Jones, Bailm. 48.

Deposits are again divided by the civil law into simple deposits and sequestrations: the former is when there is but one party depositor (of whatever number composed), having a common interest; the latter is where there are two or more depositors, having each a different and adverse interest. These distinctions do not seem to have become incorporated into the common law. See Story, Bailm. § 41. See BAILMENT.

Deposit is sometimes used as equivalent to or in the sense of earnest (q. v.), when made by way of a forfeiture to bind a bargain. In such case it is forfeited on a breach "even if as a deposit and in part payment of the purchase money," and it cannot be recovered back unless circumstances make it inequitable to retain it; 53 L. J. Ch. 1061; 27 Ch. D. 89.

See GIFT; CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT.

DEPOSITARY. A person entrusted with anything by another for safekeeping; a trustee; fiduciary; one to whom goods are bailed to be held without recompense. Stand. Dict.

DEPOSITION. The testimony of a witness reduced to writing, in due form of law, by virtue of a commission or other authority of a competent tribunal, or according to the provisions of some statute law, to be used on the trial of some question of fact in a court of justice. Stimpson v. Brooks, 3 Blatchf. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 13,454; State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 49, 53 Am. Dec. 270.

Depositions were not formerly admitted in common-law courts, and were afterwards admitted from necessity, where the oral testimony of a witness could not be obtained. But in courts of chancery this was formerly the only method of taking testimony; Ad. Eq. 363. In some of the states, however, both oral testimony and depositions are used, the same as in courts of common law.

In criminal cases, depositions cannot be used without the consent of the defendant; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 11; Dominges v. State, 7 Smedes & M. 475, 45 Am. Dec. 315; McLane v. State, 4 Ga. 335. This is a necessary consequence of the provision of the constitution of the United States that in all criminal prosecutions "the accused shall enjoy the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him." Amend. art. 6. This principle is recognized in the constitutions or statutes of most of the states of the Union. 3 Greenl. Ev. § 11; Cooley, Const. Lim. 387.

In some of the states, provision is made for the taking of depositions by the accused. Conn. Comp. Stat. art. 6, § 162; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 11.

Provision has been made for taking depositions to be used in civil cases, by an act of congress and by statutes in most of the states.

U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 863-876, direct that when, in any civil cause depending in any district in any court of the United States, the testimony of any person shall be necessary who shall live at a greater distance from the place of trial than one hundred miles, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of such district, and to a greater distance from the place of trial than as aforesaid, before the time of trial, or is ancient, or very infirm, the deposition of such person may be taken, de bene esse, before any justice or judge of any of the courts of the United States, or any commissioner of a circuit court, or any clerk of a district or circuit court, or before any chancellor, justice, or judge of a supreme or superior court, mayor or chief magistrate of a city, or judge of a county court or court of common pleas of any of the United States, or any notary public, not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, or interested in the event of the cause; provided that a notification in writing from the party or his attorney, to the adverse party, to be present at the taking of the same, and to put interrogatories, if he think fit, be first made out and served on the adverse party, or his attorney, as either may be nearest. And in all cases in rem, the person having the agency or possession of the property at the time of the seizure shall be deemed the adverse party until a claim shall have been put in; and whenever, by reason of the absence from the district, and want of an attorney of record, or other reason, the giving of the notice herein required shall be impracticable, it shall be lawful to take such depositions as there shall be urgent necessity for taking, upon such notice, as any judge authorized to hold courts in such circuit or district shall think reasonable and direct. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, as provided by this section, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify in court. And every person deposing as aforesaid shall be carefully examined and cautioned, and sworn or affirmed to testify to the whole truth, and shall subscribe the testimony by him or her given, after the same shall be reduced to writing, which shall be done only by the magistrate taking the deposition, or by the deponent in his presence. And the depositions so taken shall be retained by such magistrate until he deliver the same with his own hand into the court for which they are taken, or shall, together with a certificate of the reasons as aforesaid of their being taken, and of the notice, if any given, to the adverse party, be by him the said magistrate sealed up and directed to such court, and remain under his seal until opened in court. But unless it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the witness is then dead or gone out of the United States, or to a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place where the court is sitting, or that, by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, he is unable to travel and appear at court, such deposition shall not be used in the cause. Provided that nothing herein shall be construed to prevent any court of the United States from granting a dedimus potestatem, to take depositions according to common usage, when it may be necessary to prevent a failure or delay of justice,—which power they shall severally possess; nor to extend to depositions taken in perpetuam rei memoriam, which, if they relate to matters that may be cognizable in any court of the United States, a circuit court, on application thereto, made as a court of equity, may, according to the usages in chancery, direct to be taken.

In any cause before a court of the United States, it shall be lawful for such court, in its discretion to admit in evidence any deposition taken in perpetuam rei memoriam, which would be so admissible in a court of the state wherein such cause is pending, according to the laws thereof.

The act of January 24, 1827, authorizes the clerk of any court of the United States within which a witness resides, or where he is found, to issue a subpoena to compel the attendance of such witness; and a neglect of the witness to attend may be punished by the court whose clerk has issued the subpoena, as for a contempt. And when papers are wanted by the parties litigant, the judge of the court within which they are may issue a subpoena duces tecum, and enforce obedience by punishment as for a contempt. R. S. §§ 863-875; see Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 23 L. Ed. 521; Bates Fed. Eq. Proc.

No witness shall be required, under the provisions of either of the two preceding sections, to attend at any place out of the county where he resides, nor more than forty miles from the place of his residence, to give his deposition, nor shall any witness be deemed guilty of contempt for disobeying any subpoena directed to him by virtue of either of the said sections, unless his fee for going to, returning from, and one day's attendance at the place of examination are paid or tendered to him at the time of the service of the subpoena. See R. S. § 870, etc.

R. S. § 863, above quoted, relating to depositions de bene esse, applies to equity as well as to common-law causes; Stegner v. Blake, 36 Fed. 183. When a party is represented by counsel at the taking of a deposition and takes part in the examination, that must be regarded as a waiver of irregularities in taking it; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Urlin, 153 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 840, 39 L. Ed. 977; and after having been read in evidence, without objection, its regularity cannot afterwards be challenged; Evans v. Hettich, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 453, 5 L. Ed. 496; Brown v. Tarkington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 377, 18 L. Ed. 255.

Objections must be taken, and noted at the time, to the competency of a witness; Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 151, 21 L. Ed. 123; or to irregularities or defects which might have been remedied by retaking the deposition, and mere formal objections must be raised when the deposition is taken or on motion to suppress and not at the trial; Doane v. Glenn, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 33, 22 L. Ed. 476; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 13 Sup. Ct. 950, 37 L. Ed. 819; York Mfg. Co. v. R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 18 L. Ed. 170; unless the time after the return and before trial is too brief; id.; otherwise they are waived; Howard v. Mfg. Co., 139 U. S. 199, 11 Sup. Ct. 500, 35 L. Ed. 147; Clogg v. McDaniel, 89 Md. 420, 43 Atl. 795; American Pub. Co. v. C. E. Mayne Co., 9 Utah, 321, 34 Pac. 247; Sugar Pine Lumber Co. v. Garrett, 28 Or. 171, 42 Pac. 129.

A deposition de bene esse cannot be read, if objected to, if the witness is present in court; Whitford v. Clark County, 119 U. S. 522, 7 Sup. Ct. 306, 30 L. Ed. 500; or can be produced; The Samuel, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 9, 4 L. Ed. 23; or, if an away-going witness, a subpoena has not been taken out and effort made to serve it; Miffin v. Bingham, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 272, 1 L. Ed. 133; and it must be shown that the disability to attend continues; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 604, 8 L. Ed. 243; cross-examination is a waiver of objection to the regularity of the deposition; Mechanics' Bank v. Seton, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 299, 7 L. Ed. 152; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Urlin, 153 U. S. 274, 15 Sup. Ct. 840, 39 L. Ed. 977; but not to the competency of the witness; Miffin v. Bingham, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 272, 1 L. Ed. 133.

A clerical mistake in making out a commission, which in no way misled the opposite party or affected his rights, is no valid ground for the suppression of the deposition; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 13 Sup. Ct. 950, 37 L. Ed. 819. If the deponent is not satisfied with his first deposition, it is his right, without any order of the court, to make a second one; Nash v. Williams, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 226, 22 L. Ed. 254. The subject was fully considered by Shipman, C. J., in White v. R. Co., 79 Fed. 133, 24 C. C. A. 467. The judiciary act of 1789 provided for the examination of witnesses in open court in equity as well as at law. The act of April 29, 1802, provided that testimony in equity might be taken by depositions in states where that was the practice. The act of August 23, 1842, empowered the Supreme Court to make rules for taking testimony. The former 67th Rule in Equity was formulated in 1861. As amended it enlarged the statutory practice and provided for taking equity evidence orally or by special examiners and for securing the attendance of witnesses, which may be compelled by the court of a district to which the examiner is sent. See, also, Stevens v. R. Co., 104 Fed. 934. The judge of such district may pass on the materiality of evidence and compel answers; In re Allis, 44 Fed. 216.

The United States act of March 9, 1892, authorizing depositions to be taken in the mode prescribed by the state laws, merely provided an additional method and did not confer any additional rights to take testimony; National Cash Register Co. v. Le-land, 77 Fed. 242.

Reasonable notice under R. S. §§ 863, 865, depends upon the circumstances of the particular case; distance, number of witnesses, and facility of communication are chiefly important; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Nat. Bank, 82 Fed. 961, 27 C. C. A. 274. Notice of taking proofs in three different states on the same day is not reasonable; Eillert v. Craps, 44 Fed. 792.

A subpoena duces tecum may issue to a witness whose testimony is to be taken under R. S. § 863; Davis v. Davis, 90 Fed. 791.

In connection with question of adjournment on the ground that counsel cannot attend, it was said in Uhle v. Burnham, 44 Fed. 729, that the law does not contemplate that a litigant shall be required to go to the expense of hiring numerous counsel to represent him. An examiner may adjourn a meeting for illness and absence; Shapleigh v. Light & Power Co., 47 Fed. 848.

A witness may test the validity of proceedings by refusing to be sworn. He is then in contempt and his rights will be contested under contempt procedure; In re Spofford, 62 Fed. 443.

In taking depositions de bene esse in another district under R. S. § 863, the witness may assert his privilege of refusing to testify or produce documents, and in such a case he has the right to be heard before the court of that district. Taking depositions before an examiner in equity is not a judicial trial; the public have no right to be present; U. S. v. Shoe Machinery Co., 198 Fed. 870.

A deposition is not admissible in evidence if the witness was not sworn till after his testimony was reduced to writing; Armstrong v. Burrows, 6 Watts (Pa.) 266, per Gibson, C. J.

See Street, Fed. Practice.

The new Equity Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States have considerably changed the practice. In all equity trials the testimony is to be taken orally, in open court, except as otherwise provided by statute or other rules. The court may permit the deposition of named witnesses to be used before the court or upon a reference to a master to be taken before an examiner, etc. The district court may order that the testimony in chief of expert witnesses may be set forth in affidavits, with the right of cross-examination and re-examination before the court at the trial. See EXPERT.

Objections to the evidence before an examiner, etc., must be in short form. The testimony of each witness, after being reduced to writing, must be read over to or by him and be signed by him in the presence of the officer. If the witness refuses to sign, the officer shall sign the deposition, stating thereon the reason for refusal. Objections to questions must be noted by the officer, but he is without power to pass on competency, etc.

Where witnesses live within the district, whose testimony may be taken out of court by the rules, they may be summoned before a commissioner or master or examiner. Their refusal to appear is contempt of court and an attachment may thereupon issue as in the case of contempt for not attending or for refusing to give testimony in court.

In a state criminal trial in Louisiana, reading a deposition taken before a committing magistrate in the presence of the accused, and subject to his counsel's cross-examination, the witness being permanently absent from the state, does not deprive the accused of his liberty without due process; West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258, 24 Sup. Ct. 650, 48 L. Ed. 965.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of depriving a clergyman, by a competent tribunal, of his clerical orders, to punish him for some offence and to prevent his acting in future in his clerical character. Ayliffe, Parerg. 206.

DEPOSITO. In Spanish Law. A real contract by which one person confides to the custody of another an object on the condition that it shall be returned to him whenever he shall require it.

DEPOSITOR. He who makes a deposit.

DEPOSITUM. A species of bailment. See DEPOSIT.

DEPOT. Within the meaning of statutes obliging railroad companies to fence their tracks excepting depot grounds, mere distance from depots has been held not to be the controlling consideration in determining how far they extend; Rabidon v. R. Co., 115 Mich. 390, 73 N. W. 386, 39 L. R. A. 405. Public convenience is held to be the limit of such an exception; Greeley v. Ry. Co., 33 Minn. 136, 22 N. W. 179, 53 Am. Rep. 16. They may include the terminals and switch stands of all switches or side tracks at all stations; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Blankenbeckler, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 35 S. W. 331; ground necessary to take in wood and water; Fowler v. Loan Co., 21 Wis. 77; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Beatty, 36 Ind. 19; Harvey v. Southern Pac. Co., 46 Or. 505, 80 Pac. 1061; or for switches; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Finney, 42 Ill. App. 390; a tract of five or six acres has been held to be included in depot grounds; Davis v. R. Co., 26 Ia. 549.

A place where military supplies and stores are kept. Caldwell's Case, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 264, 22 L. Ed. 114.

DEPRIVATION. A censure by which a clergyman is deprived of his parsonage, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical promotion or dignity. See Ayliffe, Parerg. 206; 1 Bla. Com. 393. See DEGRADATION.

DEPRIVE. Referring to property taken under the power of eminent domain, it means the same as "take." Sharpless v.

Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 167, 59 Am. Dec. 759.

The constitution contains no definition of this word "deprive" as used in the Fourteenth Amendment. To determine its signification, therefore, it is necessary to ascertain the effect which usage has given it, when employed in the same or a like connection; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 123, 24 L. Ed. 77. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES; FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

DEPUTY. One authorized by an officer to exercise the office or right which the officer possesses, for and in place of the latter.

In general, ministerial officers can appoint deputies, Comyns, Dig. Officer (D 1), unless the office is to be exercised by the ministerial officer in person; and when the office partakes of a judicial and ministerial character, although a deputy may be made for the performance of ministerial acts, one cannot be made for the performance of a judicial act; a sheriff cannot, therefore, make a deputy to hold an inquisition, under a writ of inquiry, though he may appoint a deputy to serve a writ. Sometimes, however, a general deputy or under-sheriff is appointed, who possesses, by virtue of his appointment, authority to execute all the ordinary duties of sheriff, and may even appoint, in the name of the sheriff, a special deputy; Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 159; Tillotson v. Cheetnam, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 63.

In general, a deputy has power to do every act which his principal might do; but a deputy cannot appoint a deputy. See Abrams v. Ervin, 9 Ia. 87; Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Mo. 183, 43 Am. Dec. 540; Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 111, 22 L. Ed. 320.

A deputy should always act in the name of his principal. The principal is liable for the deputy's acts performed by him as such, and for the neglect of the deputy; 3 Dane, Abr. c. 76, a. 2; and the deputy is liable himself to the person injured for his own tortious acts; Dane, Abr. Index; Com. Dig. Officer (D), Viscount (B). See 7 Viner, Abr. 556; L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 741; Willis v. Melvin, 53 N. C. 62.

DERAIGN. The literal meaning of the word seems to be, to disorder or displace, as deraignment out of religion; stat. 31, Hen. VIII, c. 6. But it is generally used in the common law for to prove, as, to deraign the warranty; Glanv., lib. 2, c. 6. See Jacob L. Dict., where the word is discussed. It is used as referring to a decree "which deraigns his title from a false source." Paxson v. Brown, 61 Fed. 874, 884, 10 C. C. A. 135.

DERELICT. Abandoned; deserted; cast away.

Land left uncovered by the receding of water from its former bed. 2 Rolle, Abr. 170; 2 Bla. Com. 262; 1 Crabb, R. P. 109.

Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner in such manner as to indicate that he intends to make no further claim thereto. 2 Bla. Com. 9; 1 C. B. 112; Broom, Max. 261; Goodenow v. Tappan, 1 Ohio 81; Jones's Adm'r's v. Nunn, 12 Ga. 473.

Dereliction or renunciation properly requires both the intention to abandon and external action. Thus the casting overboard of articles in a tempest to lighten the ship is not dereliction, as there is no intention of abandoning the property in the case of salvage. Nor does the mere intention of abandonment constitute dereliction of property without a throwing away or removal, or some other external acts; Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 455, 43 Am. Rep. 600.

It applies as well to property abandoned at sea as on land; Rowe v. The Brig, 1 Mas. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 12,093; The Emulous, 1 Sumn. 207, Fed. Cas. No. 4,480; The Boston, 1 Sumn. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673; 2 Kent 357. A vessel which is abandoned and deserted by her crew without any purpose on their part of returning to the ship, or any hope of saving or recovering it by their own exertions, is derelict; 20 E. L. & Eq. 607; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 2 L. Ed. 266; The John Gilpin, Olc. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 7,345; Evans v. The Charles, 1 Newb. 329, Fed. Cas. No. 4,556; Montgomery v. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. 421, Fed. Cas. No. 9,736; The Attacapas, 3 Ware, 65, Fed. Cas. No. 637; The Laura, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 336, 20 L. Ed. 813.

The title of the owner to property lying at the bottom of the sea is not divested, however long it may remain there; Murphy v. Dunham, 38 Fed. 503; "because as goods lying at the bottom, they always await their owner;" id.; after another has taken them, the owner must follow them within a year and a day; id.; 5 Co. 105; 1 B. & Ad. 141, where the law is fully discussed; 3 Black Book, Adm. 439.

A vessel at least six miles from shore submerged from midship to bow, her running rigging overboard and snarled fast, her boat gone, her cabin, etc., full of water, a distress flag set, and deserted by her crew, who had left no sign of an intention to return and were not visible, is prima facie derelict, though she was anchored and her master was intending to return to save her and had telegraphed for a wrecking vessel; The Ann L. Lockwood, 37 Fed. 233.

However long goods thrown overboard may have been on the ocean, they do not become derelict by time, but will be restored on the payment of salvage, unless there was a voluntary intention to abandon them; Bee 82. The finder can only hold possession to enforce a lien for salvage; Whitwell v. Wells, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 30. See SALVAGE; ABANDONMENT.

DERIVATIVE. Coming from another; taken from something preceding; secondary; as, derivative title, which is that acquired from another person.

There is considerable difference between an original and a derivative title. When the acquisition is original, the right thus acquired to the thing becomes property, which must be unqualified and unlimited, and, since no one but the occupant has any right to the thing, he must have the whole right of disposing of it. But with regard to derivative acquisition it may be otherwise; for the person from whom the thing is acquired may not have an unlimited right to it, or he may convey or transfer it with certain reservation of right. Derivative title must always be by contract.

Derivative conveyances are those which presuppose some precedent conveyance, and serve only to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 3 Bla. Com. 324.

DEROGATION. The partial abrogation of a law. To derogate from a law is to enact something which impairs its utility and force; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely.

DEROGATORY CLAUSE. A sentence or secret character inserted in a will by the testator, of which he reserves the knowledge to himself, with a condition that no will he may make thereafter shall be valid, unless this clause be inserted word for word. This is done as a precaution against later wills being extorted by violence or otherwise improperly obtained. Whart.

DESAFUERO. In Spanish Law. An irregular action committed with violence against law, custom, or reason.

DESCEND. To pass by succession; as when the estate vests by operation of law in the heirs immediately upon the death of the ancestor. Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 40. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

DESCENDANTS. Those who have issued from an individual, including his children, grandchildren, and their children to the remotest degree. Ambl. 327; 2 Bro. C. C. 30, 230; 1 Roper, Leg. 115.

The descendants from what is called the direct descending line. The term is opposed to that of ascendants.

There is a difference between the number of ascendants and descendants which a man may have; every one has the same order of ascendants, though they may not be exactly alike as to numbers, because some may be descended from a common ancestor. In the line of descendants they fork differently according to the number of children, and continue longer or shorter as generations continue or cease to exist. Many families become extinct, while others continue: the line of descendants is, therefore, diversified in each family.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION. The division among those legally entitled thereto of the real and personal property of intestates, the term descent being applied to the former and distribution to the latter. Descent is the devolution of real property to the heir or heirs of one who dies intestate; the transmission by succession or inheritance.

Title by descent is the title by which one person, upon the death of another, acquires the real estate of the latter as his heir at law. 2 Bla. Com. 201; Com. Dig. Descent.

It was one of the principles of the feudal system that on the death of the tenant in fee the land should descend, and not ascend. Hence the title by inheritance is in all cases called descent, although by statute law the title is sometimes made to ascend.

The English doctrine of primogeniture, by which by the common law the eldest son takes the whole real estate, has been universally abolished in this country. So, with few exceptions, has been the distinction between male and female heirs.

The rules of descent are applicable only to real estates of inheritance. Estates for the life of the deceased, of course, terminate on his death; estates for the life of another are governed by peculiar rules.

Distribution is the division by order of the court or legal representative having authority, among those entitled thereto, of the residue of the personal estate of an intestate, after payment of the debts and charges.

The term is sometimes used to denote the division of a residue of both real and personal estate, and also the division of an estate according to the terms of a will, but neither use is accurate, the term being technically applied only to personal estate.

The title to real estate vests in the heirs by the death of the owner; the legal title to personal estate, by such death, vests in the executor or administrator, and is transferred to the persons beneficially interested, by the distribution; Roorbach v. Lord, 4 Conn. 347.

Terms of years, and other estates less than freehold, are regarded as personal estate, and, on the death of the owner, vest in his executor or administrator.

The rules of descent and distribution are prescribed by the statute laws of the several states; and, although they correspond in some respects, it is doubtful whether in any two they are precisely alike.

As to the right of a murderer to take by descent from his victim, see MURDER. And see, generally, NEXT OF KIN; KINDEED; HEIR; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DESCENT CAST. Another name for what the older writers called a "descent which tolls entry." When a person had acquired land by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, and died seised of the land, the descent of it to his heir took away or tolled the real owner's right of entry, so that he could only recover the land by an action. Co. Litt. 237 b; Rap. & L. Dict.

DESCENT OF CROWN LANDS. All lands whereof the king is seised in jure coronæ attend upon and follow the crown; so that to whomsoever the crown descends those lands and possessions descend also. And if the heir of the crown be attainted of treason, yet shall the crown descend to him, and without any reversal the attainder is avoided. Plowd. 247; Co. Litt. 15.

DESCENT OF DIGNITIES. A dignity differs from common inheritances, and goes, not according to the rules of the common law, for it descends to the half-blood, and there is no co-partnership in it, but the eldest takes the whole. Co. Litt. 27.

DESIGNATIO PERSONÆ. Description of the person. In wills, it frequently happens that the word heir is used as a descriptio personæ: it is then a sufficient designation of the person. In criminal cases, a mere descriptio personæ or addition, if false, can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151. A legacy "to the eldest son" of A would be a designation of the person. See 1 Roper, Leg. c. 2.

The description contained in a contract of the persons who are parties thereto.

In all contracts under seal there must be some designatio personæ. In general, the names of the parties appear in the body of the deed, "between A B, of, etc., of the one part, and C D, of, etc., of the other part," being the common formula. But there is a sufficient designation and description of the party to be charged if his name is written at the foot of the instrument; 1 Ld. Raym. 2; 1 Salk. 214; 2 B. & P. 339.

When a person is described in the body of the instrument by the name of James, and he signs the name of John, on being sued by the latter name he cannot deny it; 3 Taunt. 505; Cro. Eliz. 897, n. (a). See 11 Ad. & E. 594; 3 P. & D. 271.

DESCRIPTION. An account of the accidents and qualities of a thing. Ayliffe, Pand. 60.

A written account of the state and condition of personal property, titles, papers, and the like. It is a kind of inventory, but is more particular in ascertaining the exact condition of the property, and is without any appraisement of it.

In Pleading. One of the rules which regulate the law of variance is that allegations of matter of essential description should be proved as laid. It is impossible to explain with precision the meaning of these words; and the only practical mode of understanding the extent of the rule is to examine some of the leading decisions on the subject, and then to apply the reasoning or ruling contained therein to other analogous cases. With respect to criminal law, it is clearly established that the name or nature of the property stolen or damaged is matter of essential description. Thus, for example, if the charge is one of firing a stack of hay, and it turns out to have been a stack of wheat, or if a man is accused of stealing a drake, and it is proved to have been a goose, or even a duck, the variance is fatal. 1 Tayl. Ev. § 233; Steph. Cr. Proc. 177.

The strict rule of pleading which formerly required exact accuracy in the description of premises sought to be recovered, has been relaxed, and a general description held to be good. The provisions of state statutes as to the description of the premises by metes and bounds have been held to be only directory, and a description by name where the property is well known is often sufficient; Glacier Mountain Silver Min. Co. v. Willis, 127 U. S. 480, 8 Sup. Ct. 1217, 32 L. Ed. 172.

See BOUNDARY.

DESERTION. An offence which consists in the abandonment of the public service, in the army or navy, without leave.

An absence without leave, with the intention of returning, will not amount to desertion; Inhabitants of Hanson v. Inhabitants of South Scituate, 115 Mass. 336; Cloutman v. Tunison, 2 Sumn. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 2,907; Coffin v. Jenkins, 3 Sto. 108, Fed. Cas. No. 2,948. An unauthorized absenting of himself from the military service by an officer or soldier with the intention of not returning. It may consist in an original absenting without authority, or in an overstaying of a defined leave of absence. Davis Mil. L. 420. To establish the offense, the fact of the unauthorized voluntary withdrawal, and the intent permanently to abandon the service, must both be proved; Dig. J. Adv. Gen. 337.

In the navy absence without leave, with a probability that the person does not intend to desert, shall at first be regarded as straggling, but at the end of ten days as desertion. Reg. Navy 815.

A deserter from the navy is, upon conviction, forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof. R. S. §§ 1996, 1998. In time of war, the punishment may be death, or as the court-martial may adjudge, and in time of peace, the above.

The act by which a man abandons his wife and children, or either of them.

Wilful desertion, as the term is applied in actions for divorce, is the voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, or the voluntary refusal to renew a suspended cohabitation, without justification either in the consent or wrongful conduct of the other. Sisemore v. Sisemore, 17 Or. 542, 21 Pac. 820. If the wife leaves the husband in consequence of a mere expression on his part that she can go where she likes, and refuses to return at his request, the husband is not guilty of desertion; 84 L. T. 272; 65 J. P. 246.

On proof of desertion, the courts possess the power under statute, in many states, to compel support of the wife. And a continued desertion by either husband or wife, after a certain lapse of time, entitles the party deserted to a divorce, in most states.

There must, however, be an actual and intentional withdrawal from matrimonial cohabitation for a statutory period, against the consent of the abandoned party and without justification; Tiffany, Dom. Rel. 181; and an intention to desert in the mind of the offender; Bennett v. Bennett, 43 Conn. 313; Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 307; Appeal of Sowers, 89 Pa. 173; Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 1687; 5 Q. B. D. 31; Bradley v. Bradley, 160 Mass. 258, 35 N. E. 482; where parties continue to live together as husband and wife and other marital duties are observed, a refusal to occupy the same bed does not by itself constitute desertion; Segelbaum v. Segelbaum, 39 Minn. 258, 39 N. W. 492.

Desertion is established by proof of a refusal to commence cohabitation; Pilgrim v. Pilgrim, 57 Ia. 370, 10 N. W. 750; a refusal to renew cohabitation, on request of the other party; Hanberry v. Hanberry, 29 Ala. 719; Fellows v. Fellows, 31 Me. 342; Newing v. Newing, 45 N. J. Eq. 498, 18 Atl. 166; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 29 N. E. 98, 14 L. R. A. 220, 27 Am. St. Rep. 517; Sowers's Appeal, 89 Pa. 173; causing a separation, by driving the other away, or by cruel conduct which has that effect; 14 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th Series) 443; Kinsey v. Kinsey, 37 Ala. 393; Johnson v. Johnson, 125 Ill. 510, 16 N. E. 891; Shrock v. Shrock, 4 Bush (Ky.) 682; Lynch v. Lynch, 33 Md. 328; Lea v. Lea, 99 Mass. 493, 96 Am. Dec. 772; Warner v. Warner, 54 Mich. 492, 20 N. W. 557; McVickar v. McVickar, 46 N. J. Eq. 490, 19 Atl. 249, 19 Am. St. Rep. 422; a refusal by the wife to follow the husband when he changes his residence; Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, 14 Cal. 654; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250; Hunt v. Hunt, 29 N. J. Eq. 96; Beck v. Beck, 163 Pa. 649, 30 Atl. 236; Franklin v. Franklin, 190 Mass. 349, 77 N. E. 48, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 145, 5 Ann. Cas. 851; Schuman v. Schuman, 93 Mo. App. 99; unless there be good reason; Buell v. Buell, 42 Wash. 277, 84 Pac. 821; the mere refusal is not enough; Horn v. Horn, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 486. But a separation by mutual consent is not desertion; Beller v. Beller, 50 Mich. 49, 14 N. W. 696; Chipchase v. Chipchase, 48 N. J. Eq. 549, 22 Atl. 588; Ingersoll v. Ingersoll, 49 Pa. 249, 88 Am. Dec. 500; Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, 86 Va. 768, 11 S. E. 289; Thompson v. Thompson, 53 Wis. 153, 10 N. W. 166; neither is non-cohabitation; Jones v. Jones, 13 Ala. 145; Pidge v. Pidge, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 257; Scott v. Scott, Wright (Ohio) 469; Burk v. Burk, 21 W. Va. 445; to render it desertion withdrawal of consent must be shown; Currier v. Currier, 68 N. J. Eq. 797, 64 Atl. 1133; nor a refusal by the husband to follow the wife to a new residence; for it is her duty to follow him; Frost v. Frost, 17 N. H. 251.

Mere non-support is not always desertion; Bourquin v. Bourquin, 33 N. J. Eq. 7; Davis v. Davis, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 444; but if the husband have the means to support his wife, and does not do so, this is a wilful desertion; James v. James, 58 N. H. 266; but see Van Dyke v. Van Dyke, 135 Pa. 459, 19 Atl. 1061.

Refusal of sexual intercourse is not desertion; Pfannebecker v. Pfannebecker, 133 Ia. 425, 110 N. W. 618, 119 Am. St. Rep. 608, 12 Ann. Cas. 543; Williams v. Williams, 121 Mo. App. 349, 99 S. W. 42; Prall v. Prall, 58 Fla. 496, 50 South. 867, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577; Pratt v. Pratt, 75 Vt. 432, 56 Atl. 86 (even for three years and without physical excuse); Reynolds v. Reynolds, 68 W. Va. 15, 69 S. E. 381, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 889; physical condition may justify refusal; Pfannebecker v. Pfannebecker, 133 Ia. 425, 110 N. W. 618, 119 Am. St. Rep. 608, 12 Ann. Cas. 543; other cases hold it desertion; Raymond v. Raymond (N. J.) 79 Atl. 430; Graves v. Graves, 88 Miss. 677, 41 South. 384 (desertion for three years, followed by return and refusal); Sisemore v. Sisemore, 17 Or. 542, 21 Pac. 667; 83 L. T. R. 224. A wife who, without cause, refuses, cannot set up "desertion without reasonable cause;" [1901] P. 317.

Involuntary absence, on account of sickness or business, if not prolonged beyond such a time as is reasonable or necessary, will not constitute desertion; 1 Swab. & T. 88; Neely v. Neely, 131 Pa. 552, 20 Atl. 311; or the confinement of a wife in a lunatic asylum; Pile v. Pile, 94 Ky. 308, 22 S. W. 215. There can be no such thing as desertion by both parties; Wass v. Wass, 41 W. Va. 126, 23 S. E. 537. When a wife is deserted, she need not hunt for her husband or go to the place whence he has fled; Milowitsch v. Milowitsch, 44 Ill. App. 357.

Where parties marry clandestinely and on an agreement to live separately for the present, the separate living is not a desertion by the husband until the wife demands that they should live together; McAllister v. McAllister, 71 N. J. Eq. 13, 62 Atl. 1131.

In England it is held that if a wife refuses to live under the same roof with her husband, except upon his undertaking not to exercise his full marital rights, he is justified in separating himself from her, and is not guilty of desertion without reasonable excuse, even though he may have committed adultery while separated from her; [1901] P. 317.

Desertion is not to be tested merely by ascertaining which of the parties left the matrimonial home first. That fact may be immaterial. The party who by his or her act intends bringing the cohabitation to an end commits the desertion; [1899] P. 278. There is no substantial difference between a husband who puts an end to cohabitation by leaving his wife, and a husband who puts an end to it by persisting in a course of conduct which obliges his wife to leave him; [1889] P. 221, 278, where it was held that a husband's conduct amounted to desertion although he did not abandon her or actually force her to leave his house, but refused her request to discharge a servant with whom he had immoral relations or to discontinue such relations. In such a case it is held the husband must be taken to intend the consequences of his own act. The situation is the same as if he had left her, and if the attitude of the parties remain the same for two years the desertion is complete; 33 L. J. P. 66; 62 L. T. 330; 68 L. J. P. 91.

If husband and wife have ceased to cohabit whether by the adverse act of the husband or wife or by the mutual consent of both, desertion becomes from that moment impossible to either, at least until their common life and home have been resumed. There cannot be a desertion by the husband unless the cohabitation is broken by some act of desertion; [1904] P. 389.

The Family Desertion Act has been passed in Kansas, Wisconsin, Massachusetts and North Dakota.

See 9 L. R. A. 696, note; Tiffany; Schouler, Dom. Rel.; DIVORCE; LEGAL CRUELTY.

DESERTION OF A SEAMAN. The abandonment, by a sailor, of a vessel in which he had engaged to perform a voyage, before the expiration of his time, and without leave.

Where a seaman signs articles for a voyage, agreeing to go to the port where the vessel is lying to join her, and fails to do so, he is a deserter; In re Sutherland, 53 Fed. 551; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264, where a Russian sailor, sent to the United States as one of the force ordered to man a cruiser then building, was held a deserter within the meaning of the treaty of 1832 with Russia, though he never set foot on the vessel and it had not been commissioned.

Desertion without just cause renders the sailor liable on his shipping articles for damages, and, will, besides, work a forfeiture of his wages previously earned; 3 Kent 155. It has been decided in England that leaving the ship before the completion of the voyage is not desertion, in case,—first, of the seaman's entering the public service, either voluntarily or by impressment; and, second, when he is compelled to leave it by the inhuman treatment of the captain; 2 Esp. 269; 1 Bell, Com. 514; 2 C. Rob. 232. And see Cloutman v. Tunison, 1 Sumn. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 2,907; Sims v. Mariners, 2 Pet. Adm. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 12,893; Coffin v. Jenkins, 3 Sto. 109, Fed. Cas. No. 2,948.

To justify the forfeiture of a seaman's wages for absence for more than forty-eight hours, under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 20, 1790, an entry in the log-book of the fact of his absence, made by the officer in charge of it on the day on which he absented himself, and giving the name of the absent seaman as absent without permission, is indispensable; 2 Pars. Sh. & Adm. 101; The Phœbe v. Degnum, 1 Wash. C. C. 48, Fed. Cas. No. 11,110; Gilp. 212, 296.

Receiving a marine again on board, and his return to duty with the assent of the master, is a waiver of the forfeiture of wages previously incurred; Whitton v. The Commerce, 1 Pet. Adm. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 17,604.

DESERVING. Worthy or meritorious, without regard to condition or circumstances. In no sense of the word is it limited to persons in need of assistance, or objects which come within the class of charitable uses. Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 211, 39 Am. Rep. 445.

DESIGN. As a term of art, "the giving of a visible form to the conceptions of the mind, or in other words to the invention." Binns v. Woodruff, 4 Wash. C. C. 48, Fed. Cas. No. 1,424. See COPYRIGHT; PATENTS.

Plan, scheme, or intention carried into effect. Catlin v. Fire Ins. Co., 1 Sumn. 434, Fed. Cas. No. 2,522. A project, an idea. 3 H. & N. 301.

As used in an indictment for having in one's possession materials for counterfeiting it may refer to the purpose for which the materials were originally designed, and not to criminal intent in the defendant to use them; Commonwealth v. Morse, 2 Mass. 128.

DESIGNATIO PERSONÆ. See DESCRIPTIO PERSONÆ.

DESIGNATION. The expression used by a testator to denote a person or thing, instead of the name itself.

A bequest of the farm which the testator bought of a person named, or of a picture which he owns, painted by a certain artist, would be a designation of the thing.

DESIRE. The word desire, in a will, raises a trust, where the objects of that desire are specified; Vandyck v. Van Beur-en, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 84. See PRECATORY WORDS.

DESPATCHES. Official communications of official persons on the affairs of government.

In general, the bearer of despatches is entitled to all the facilities that can be given him, in his own country, or in a neutral state; but a neutral cannot, in general, be the bearer of despatches of one of the belligerent parties; 6 C. Rob. 465. See 2 Dods. 54; 1 Edw. 274.

DESPERATE. Of which there is no hope. This term is used frequently in making an inventory of a decedent's effects, when a debt is considered so bad that there is no hope of recovering it. It is then called a desperate debt, and, if it be so returned, it will be prima facie considered as desperate. See Toll. Ex. 248; 2 Wms. Ex. 644; 1 Chitt. Pr. 580; Schultz v. Pulver, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 365.

DESPOIL. This word involves in its signification, violence or clandestine means, by which one is deprived of that which he possesses. Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 268.

DESPOT. This word, in its original and most simple acceptation, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch; but taken in bad part, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant.

DESPOTISM. That abuse of government where the sovereign power is not divided, but united in the hands of a single man, whatever may be his official title. It is not, properly, a form of government. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. tit. prélim. n. 32; Rutherf. Inst. b. 1, c. 20, § 1. See GOVERNMENT.

DESTINATION. The intended application of a thing.

For example, when a testator gives to a hospital a sum of money to be applied in erecting buildings, he is said to give a destination to the legacy. Mill-stones taken out of a mill to be picked, and to be returned, have a destination, and are considered real estate, although detached from the freehold. Heirlooms, although personal chattels, are, by their destination, considered real estate; and money agreed or directed to be laid out in land is treated as real property; Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 577, 4 L. Ed. 460; 2 Bell, Com. 2; Erskine, Inst. 2. 2. 14; Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 6, § 9. See EASEMENT; FIXTURES.

In Common Law. The port at which a ship is to end her voyage is called her port of destination. Pardessus, n. 600.

The phrases "port of destination" and "port of discharge" are not equivalent; U. S. v. Barker, 5 Mason 404, Fed. Cas. No. 14,516. See Sheridan v. Ireland, 66 Me. 65.

Sending goods to their destination means sending them to a particular place, to a particular person who is to receive them there; not sending them to a particular place without saying to whom; 15 A. B. D. 43.

DESTROY. In the act of congress punishing with death any one destroying vessels, it means to unfit the vessel for service, beyond the hopes of recovery, by ordinary means. U. S. v. Johns, 1 Wash. C. C. 363, Fed. Cas. No. 15,481; U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 412, 1 L. Ed. 888.

A will burned, cancelled, or torn, animo revocandi is destroyed; Johnson v. Brailsford, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 272, 10 Am. Dec. 601. The scratching out of the signature with a knife, in England, has been held to be tearing or otherwise destroying a will in the sense of the statute; 56 L. J. R. Pr. & D. 96.

DETACHARE. By writ of attachment or course of law, to seize or take into custody another's goods or person. Cunningham.

DETAIL. One who belongs to the army, but is only detached, or set apart, for the time to some particular duty or service, and who is liable at any time, to be recalled to his place in the ranks. In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 379.

DETAINDER. Detention. The act of keeping a person against his will, or of withholding the possession of goods or other personal or real property from the owner.

Detainer and detention are very nearly synonymous. If there be any distinction, it is perhaps that detention applies rather to the act considered as a fact, detainer to the act considered as something done by some person. Detainer is more frequently used with reference to real estate than in application to personal property.

All illegal detainers of the person amount to false imprisonment, and may be remedied by habeas corpus. Hurd, Hab. Corp. 209.

A detainer or detention of goods is either lawful or unlawful; when lawful, the party having possession of them cannot be deprived of it. It is legal when the party has a right to the property, and has come lawfully into possession. It is illegal when the taking was unlawful, as in the case of forcible entry and detainer, although the party may have a right of possession; but in some cases the detention may be lawful, although the taking may have been unlawful; Moore v. Shenk, 3 Pa. 20, 45 Am. Dec. 618. So also the detention may be unlawful although the original taking was lawful: as when goods were distrained for rent, and the rent was afterwards paid; or when they were pledged, and the money borrowed and interest was afterwards paid; or if one borrow a horse, to ride from A to B, and afterwards detain him from the owner, after demand, such detention is unlawful, and the owner may either retake his property, or have an action of replevin or detinue; 1 Chit. Pr. 135. In these and many other like cases the owner should make a demand, and, if the possessor refuses to restore them, trover, detinue, or replevin will lie, at the option of the plaintiff. In some cases the detention becomes criminal although the taking was lawful, as in embezzlement.

There may also be a detainer of land; and this is either lawful and peaceable, or unlawful and forcible. The detainer is lawful where the entry has been lawful and the estate is held by virtue of some right. It is unlawful and forcible where the entry has been unlawful and with force, and it is retained by force against right; or even where the entry has been peaceable and lawful, if the detainer be by force and against right; as, if a tenant at will should detain with force after the will has determined, he will be guilty of a forcible detainer; 2 Chitt. Pr. 238; Com. Dig. Detainer, B 2; People v. Rickert, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 226; People v. Anthony, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 198; Carpenter v. Shepherd, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 501. See Ladd v. Dubroca, 45 Ala. 421; May v. Luckett, 54 Mo. 437; Doty v. Burdick, 83 Ill. 473. A forcible detainer is a distinct offence from a forcible entry; People v. Rickert, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 226. See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINDER.

In Practice. A writ or instrument, issued or made by a competent officer, authorizing the keeper of a prison to keep in his custody a person therein named. A detainer may be lodged against one within the walls of a prison, on what account soever he is there; Com. Dig. Process, E (3 B). This writ was superseded by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, §§ 1, 2. See HABEAS CORPUS.

DETECTIVE. One whose business it is to watch, and furnish information concerning, alleged wrongdoers by adroitly investigating their haunts and habits. In England they are usually police officers in plain clothes, and are the successors of the Bow Street runners. In this country there are usually detectives in the police department of the large cities, but the term is applied more particularly to the persons engaged in the detection of crime and the prosecution of such investigations as in England are made through the private inquiry offices. The latter correspond to the private detective agencies in the United States.

Where a detective is employed to arrest and prosecute persons engaged in unlawful acts, the employer will be liable for the detective's arrest of an innocent person; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKee, 99 Ind. 519, 50 Am. Rep. 102. It has been said the question is not whether the particular act was authorized, but whether the servant was engaged in the master's business, and acting within the general scope of his authority; Clark v. Starin, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 345. In Chicago City R. Co. v. McMahon, 103 Ill. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 29, a detective, employed to gather evidence in a pending case, offered a bribe to a witness, and it was held to be the act of the employer. Where a detective was employed with general instructions not to make an arrest without first consulting the attorneys of a railroad, but with authority to make an arrest if the proof was clear, the company was held liable for the arrest of an innocent person; Eichengreen v. R. R., 96 Tenn. 229, 34 S. W. 219, 31 L. R. A. 702, 54 Am. St. Rep. 833.

One who joins a conspiracy for the purpose of robbery, in order to expose it, and honestly carries out the plan, is not an accessory before the fact, though he encourages the others to the commission of the crime, with the intent that they shall be punished; Com. v. Hollister, 157 Pa. 13, 27 Atl. 386, 25 L. R. A. 349. See Campbell v. Com., 84 Pa. 187; Tayl. Ev. § 971; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 440.

A detective may aid in the commission of an offence in conjunction with a criminal, and the mere fact will not exonerate the guilty party. The detective must not prompt or urge, or lead in the commission of the offence. The defendant must act freely of his own motion; State v. Currie, 13 N. D. 655, 102 N. W. 875, 69 L. R. A. 405, 112 Am. St. Rep. 687. The assistance of a detective in a burglary is no defence to a person who himself does every act essential to constitute a burglary; id. A man may direct his servant to appear to encourage the design of a thief and lead him on until the offence is complete, so long as he does not induce the original intent, but only provides for discovery; McAdams v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 456; Thompson v. State, 18 Ind. 386, 81 Am. Dec. 364; Varner v. State, 72 Ga. 745; State v. Adams, 115 N. C. 775, 20 S. E. 722. But if the scheme was concocted, and the particular building selected (with the consent of the proprietor), and the defendant was persuaded by the detective to assist in breaking and entering no burglary was committed; State v. Douglass, 44 Kan. 618, 26 Pac. 476.

Open "shadowing," so as to proclaim the person a suspect, is actionable; Schultz v. Ins. Co., 151 Wis. 537, 139 N. W. 386, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520.

DETENTION. The act of retaining and preventing the removal of a person or property.

The detention may be occasioned by accidents, as the detention of a ship by calms, or by ice; or it may be hostile, as the detention of persons or ships in a foreign country by order of the government. In general, the detention of a ship does not change the nature of the contract; and therefore sailors will be entitled to their wages during the time of the detention; 1 Bell, Com., 5th ed. 517; Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 210; 2 Pars. Sh. & Adm. 63. See DETAINDER.

DETERMINABLE. Liable to come to an end by the happening of a contingency: as, a determinable fee.

DETERMINABLE FEE (also called a qualified or base fee). One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. A limitation to a man and his heirs on the part of his father affords an example of this species of estate; Littleton § 254; Co. Litt. 27 a, 220; 1 Prest. Est. 449; 2 Bla. Com. 109; Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, § 82. See 1 Washb. R. P. 62; McLane v. Bovee, 35 Wis. 36.

DETERMINATE. That which is ascertained; what is particularly designated: as, if I sell you my horse Napoleon, the article sold is here determined. This is very different from a contract by which I sell you a horse, without a particular designation of any horse.

DETERMINATION. The decision of a court of justice. See DECREE; JUDGMENT.

The end, the conclusion, of a right or authority: as, the determination of a lease, Com. Dig. Estates by Grant (G 10, 11, 12). The phrase "determination of will" is used of the putting an end to an estate at will. 2 Bla. Com. 146.

The determination of an authority is the end of the authority given; the end of the return-day of a writ determines the authority of the sheriff; the death of the principal determines the authority of a mere attorney.

DETERMINE. To come to an end. To bring to an end. 2 Bla. Com. 121; 1 Washb. R. P. 380.

DETINET (Lat. detinere, to detain; detinet, he detains). In Pleading. An action of debt is said to be in the detinet when it is alleged merely that the defendant withholds or unjustly detains from the plaintiff the thing or amount demanded.

The action is so brought by an executor, 1 Wms. Saund. 1; and so between the contracting parties when for the recovery of such things as a ship, horse, etc.; 3 Bla. Com. 156.

An action of replevin is said to be in the detinet when the defendant retains possession of the property until after judgment in the action; Bull. N. P. 52; Chit. Pl. 145.

It is said that anciently there was a form of writ adapted to bringing the action in this form; but it is not to be found in any of the books; 1 Chit. Pl. 145.

In some of the states the defendant is allowed to retain possession upon giving a bond similar to that required of the plaintiff in the common-law form; the action is then in the detinet; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 146, n.; Bower v. Tallman, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 556; Beebe v. De Baun, 8 Ark. 510; Zachrisson v. Ahman, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 68; Ingalls v. Bulkley, 13 Ill. 315; Boswell v. Green, 25 N. J. L. 390. The jury are to find the value of the chattels in such case, as well as the damage sustained. See DEBET ET DETINET; DETINUE.

DETINUE (Lat. detinere, to withhold). In Practice. A form of action which lies for the recovery, in specie, of personal chattels from one who acquired possession of them lawfully but retains it without right, together with damages for the detention. 3 Bla. Com. 151.

It is generally laid down as necessary to the maintenance of this action that the original taking should have been lawful, thus distinguishing it from replevin, which lies in case the original taking is unlawful. Brooke, Abr. Detinue, 21, 36, 63. It is said, however, by Chitty, that it lies in cases of tortious taking, except as a distress, and that it is thus distinguished from replevin, which lay originally only where a distress was made, as was claimed, wrongfully; 1 Chit. Pl. 112. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 152. In England this action has yielded to the more practical and less technical action trover, but was formerly much used for the recovery of slaves; Kent v. Armistead, 4 Munf. (Va.) 72; Mansell's Adm'r v. Israel, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 510; Hooper's Adm'r v. Hooper, 1 Ov. (Tenn.) 187; Foscoe v. Eubank, 32 N. C. 424.

In detinue these points are necessary: 1. The plaintiff must have property in the thing sought to be recovered. 2. He must have the right to its immediate possession. 3. It must be capable of identification. 4. That the property be of some value. 5. The defendant must have had possession at some time prior to the institution of the action. Hefner v. Fidler, 58 W. Va. 159, 52 S. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 112 Am. St. Rep. 961.

The action lies only to recover such goods as are capable of being identified and distinguished from all others; Andr. Steph. Pl. 79, n.; Com. Dig. Detinue, B, C; Co. Litt. 236 b; Lewis v. Hoover, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 500, 19 Am. Dec. 120; Hail v. Reed, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 479; Wright v. Ross, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 266; Goff v. Gott, 5 Sneed. (Tenn.) 562; in cases where the defendant had originally lawful possession, which he retains without right; Melton v. McDonald, 2 Mo. 45, 22 Am. Dec. 437; Spaulding v. Scanland, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 365; Stoker v. Yerby, 11 Ala. 322; as where goods were delivered for application to a specific purpose; 4 B. & P. 140; but a tort in taking may be waived, it is said, and detinue brought; Owings v. Frier, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 268, 12 Am. Dec. 393; Schulenberg v. Campbell, 14 Mo. 491; O'Neill v. Henderson, 15 Ark. 235, 60 Am. Dec. 568. That it lies whether the taking was tortious or not, see Beazley v. Mitchell, 9 Ala. 780; Overfield v. Bullitt, 1 Mo. 749. It may be maintained for the recovery of a policy of insurance where it has been paid for, but is withheld by the agent; Robinson v. Peterson, 40 Ill. App. 132; or to recover a promissory note; Hefner v. Fidler, 58 W. Va. 159, 52 S. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 112 Am. St. Rep. 961; Brown v. Pollard, 89 Va. 696, 17 S. E. 6. The property must be in existence at the time; Caldwell v. Fenwick, 2 Dana (Ky.) 332; Lindsey v. Perry, 1 Ala. 203; Bethea v. McLennon, 23 N. C. 523; see Haile v. Hill, 13 Mo. 612; but need not be in the possession of the defendant; Pool v. Adkisson, 1 Dana (Ky.) 110; Haley v. Rowan, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 301, 26 Am. Dec. 268; Gaines v. Harvin, 19 Ala. 491; Barksdale v. Appleberry, 23 Mo. 389; Easley's Ex'rs v. Easley, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 86.

The plaintiff must have had actual possession, or a right to immediate possession; Melton v. McDonald, 2 Mo. 45, 22 Am. Dec. 437; Burnley v. Lambert, 1 Wash. (Va.) 308; Smart v. Clift, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 518; Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189; Miles v. Allen, 28 N. C. 88; O'Neal v. Baker, 47 N. C.

168; Hughes v. Jones, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 178; but a special property, as that of a bailee, with actual possession at the time of delivery to the defendant, is sufficient; 2 Wms. Saund. 47 b; Boyle v. Townes, 9 Leigh (Va.) 158; Spaulding v. Scanland, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 365; Melton v. McDonald, 2 Mo. 45, 22 Am. Dec. 437; Bryan v. Smith, 22 Ala. 534. A mere equitable claim reserved by a vendor on the sale of personal property for the unpaid purchase money, is not sufficient title to authorize a recovery in detinue; Lucas v. Pittman, 94 Ala. 616, 10 South. 603. Either want of title in the plaintiff or the absence of actual possession in defendant, when the action was brought, will prevent plaintiff's recovery, as constructive possession in defendant from the fact that he had the title is not sufficient; Burns v. Morrison, 36 W. Va. 423, 15 S. E. 62. A demand is not requisite except to entitle the plaintiff to damages for detention between demand and the commencement of the action; Cole v. Cole's Adm'r, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 340; Schulenberg v. Campbell, 14 Mo. 491; Jones v. Henry, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 46; Mortimer v. Brumfield, 3 Munf. (Va.) 122; Dunn v. Davis, 12 Ala. 135; Eastman v. Burke County Com'rs, 114 N. C. 524, 19 S. E. 599.

The declaration may state a bailment or trover; though a simple allegation that the goods came to the defendant's hands is sufficient; Brooke, Abr. Detinue, 10. The bailment or trover alleged is not traversable; Brooke, Abr. Detinue, 1, 2, 50. It must describe the property with accuracy; Felt v. Williams, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 206; March v. Leckie, 35 N. C. 172, 55 Am. Dec. 431; Wright v. Ross, 2 Greene (Ia.) 266.

The plea of non detinet is the general issue, and special matter may be given in evidence under it; Co. Litt. 283; 16 E. L. & Eq. 514; Stratton v. Minnis, 2 Munf. (Va.) 329; Morrow v. Hatfield, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 108; Lucas v. Pittman, 94 Ala. 616, 10 South. 603; including title in a third person; Tanner v. Allison, 3 Dana (Ky.) 422; McCurry v. Hooper, 12 Ala. 823, 46 Am. Dec. 280; eviction, or accidental loss by a bailee; Rucker v. Hamilton, 3 Dana (Ky.) 36. The plea of not guilty is not appropriate; Robinson v. Peterson, 40 Ill. App. 132.

The defendant in this action frequently prayed garnishment of a third person, who he alleged owned or had an interest in the thing demanded; but this he could not do without confessing the possession of the thing demanded, and making privy of bailment; Brooke, Abr. Garnishment, 1, Interpleader, 3. If the prayer of garnishment was allowed, a sci. fa. issued against the person named as garnishee. If he made default, the plaintiff recovered against the defendant the chattel demanded, but no damages. If the garnishee appeared, and the plaintiff made default, the garnishee recovered. If both appeared, and the plaintiff recovered, he had judgment against the defendant for the chat-tel demanded, and a distringas in execution; and against the garnishee a judgment for damages, and a fi. fa. in execution.

The judgment is in the alternative that the plaintiff recover the goods, or the value thereof if he cannot have the property itself; Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189; Garland v. Bugg, 5 Munf. (Va.) 166; Daniel v. Prather, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 484; Thompson v. Thompson's Ex'rs, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 421; Waite v. Dolby, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 406; Mulliken v. Greer, 5 Mo. 489; Murphy v. Moore, 39 N. C. 118; Wilson v. Buchanan, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 343; Blakely's Adm'r v. Duncan, 4 Tex. 184; Arthur v. Ingles, 34 W. Va. 639, 12 S. E. 872, 11 L. R. A. 557; with damages for the detention; Bethea v. McLennon, 23 N. C. 523; Haile v. Hill, 13 Mo. 612; Hunt's Adm'r v. Martin's Adm'r, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 578; Cole v. Conolly, 16 Ala. 271; and full costs. One cannot recover as damages both hire and the ordinary wear and tear of the property sued for, as hire includes ordinary wear and tear; White v. R. Co., 90 Ala. 253, 7 South. 910.

The verdict and judgment must be such that a special remedy may be had for a recovery of the goods detained, or a satisfaction in value for each parcel in case they or either of them cannot be returned; Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189; Bell v. Pharr, 7 Ala. 807; Goodman v. Floyd, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 59; Glascok v. Hays, 4 Dana (Ky.) 58; Penny v. Davis, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 313.

See CONVERSION; TROVER; REPLEVIN.

DETINUE OF CHARTERS. A man may have detinue for deeds and charters concerning land, but if they concern the freehold, it must be in C. B. and no other court. Cunningham.

DETINUE OF GOODS IN FRANK MARRIAGE. A writ formerly available to a wife after a divorce, for the recovery of the goods given with her in marriage. Moz. & W. Dict.

DETINUEIT (Lat. he detained). In Pleading. An action of replevin is said to be in the detinueit when the plaintiff acquires possession of the property claimed by means of the writ. The right to retain is, of course, subject in such case to the judgment of the court upon his title to the property claimed; Bull. N. P. 521. The declaration in such case need not state the value of the goods; Britton v. Morss, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 469; Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189.

The judgment in such case is for the damage sustained by the unjust taking or detention, or both, if both were illegal, and for costs; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3562.

DEUTEROGAMY. A second marriage after the death of a former husband or wife.

DEVASTATION. Wasteful use of the property of a deceased person: as, for extravagant funeral or other unnecessary expenses. 2 Bla. Com. 508.

DEVASTAVIT. The mismanagement and waste by an executor, administrator, or other trustee, of the estate and effects trusted to him as such, by which a loss occurs.

Devastavit by direct abuse takes place when the executor, administrator, or trustee sells, embezzles, or converts to his own use goods intrusted to him; Com. Dig. Administration (I 1); Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 327, 25 L. Ed. 955; releases a claim due to the estate; 3 Bacon, Abr. 700; Cro. Eliz. 43; De Diemar v. Van Wagenen, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 404; Dawes v. Boylston, 9 Mass. 352, 6 Am. Dec. 72; or surrenders a lease; People v. Pleas, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 376; 3 P. Wms. 330; Camp v. Smith, 68 N. C. 537; below its value. These instances sufficiently show that any wilful waste of the property will be considered a direct devastavit. See Lacoste v. Splivalo, 64 Cal. 35, 30 Pac. 571.

Devastavit by mal-administration most frequently occurs by the payment of claims which were not due nor owing, or by paying others out of the order in which they ought to be paid, or by the payment of legacies before all the debts are satisfied; Thomas v. Riegel, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 266; Chapin v. Waters, 110 Mass. 195; Lewis v. Mason's Adm'r, 84 Va. 731, 10 S. E. 529.

Devastavit by neglect. Negligence on the part of an executor, administrator, or trustee may equally tend to the waste of the estate as the direct destruction or mal-administration of the assets, and render him guilty of a devastavit. The neglect to sell the goods at a fair price, within a reasonable time, or, if they are perishable goods, before they are wasted, will be a devastavit; and a neglect to collect a doubtful debt which by proper exertion might have been collected will be so considered. Bacon, Abr. Executors, L. See Matter of Childs, 5 Misc. 560, 26 N. Y. Supp. 721; Baer's Appeal, 127 Pa. 360, 18 Atl. 1, 4 L. R. A. 609; Mills' Adm'r v. Talley's Adm'r, 83 Va. 361, 5 S. E. 368; Sterling v. Wilkinson, 83 Va. 791, 3 S. E. 533; Adkins v. Hutchings, 79 Ga. 260, 4 S. E. 887.

The law requires from trustees good faith and due diligence, the want of which is punished by making them responsible for the losses which may be sustained by the property intrusted to them: when, therefore, a party has been guilty of a devastavit, he is required to make up the loss out of his own estate. See Com. Dig. Administration, I; Belt, Suppl. to Ves. 209; In re Strong's Estate, 160 Pa. 13, 28 Atl. 480; Franklin v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 396; Bacon, Abr. Executors, L; 11 Toullier 58.

The return of nulla bona testatoris nec propria and a devastavit to the writ of execution de bonis testatoris, in an action against an executor or administrator, is called a devastavit. Upon this return the plaintiff may forthwith sue out an execution against the person or property of the executor or administrator in as full a manner as in an action against him sued in his own right. This is not, however, a common use of the word; Brown, Dict.

DEVENERUNT (Lat. devenire, to come to). A writ, now obsolete, directed to the king's escheators when any one of the king's tenants in capite dies, and when his son and heir dies within age and in the king's custody, commanding the escheat, or that by the oaths of twelve good and lawful men they shall inquire what lands or tenements by the death of the tenant have come to the king. Dy. 360; Keilw. 199 a; Blount; Cowell.

DEVEST or DIVEST. To deprive, to take away; opposite to invest, which is to deliver possession of anything to another. Wharton.

DEVIATION. Varying from the risks insured against, as described in the policy, without necessity or just cause, after the risk has begun. 1 Phill. Ins. § 977.

Any unnecessary or unexcused departure from the usual or general mode of carrying on the voyage insured. 15 Am. L. Rev. 108. See also Coffin v. Ins. Co., 9 Mass. 436.

A voluntary departure without necessity or reasonable cause from the regular and usual course of the voyage in reference to the terms of a policy of marine insurance. Hostetter v. Park, 137 U. S. 30, 11 Sup. Ct. 1, 34 L. Ed. 568.

The mere intention to deviate is not a deviation, and if not carried into effect will not vitiate a policy or exempt insurers from a loss happening before the vessel arrives at the dividing port; Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 357, 2 L. Ed. 466; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 29, 3 L. Ed. 143. Usage, in like cases, has a great weight in determining the manner in which the risk is to be run,—the contract being understood to have implied reference thereto in the absence of specific stipulations to the contrary; Folsom v. Ins. Co., 38 Me. 414; Winter v. Ins. Co., 30 Pa. 334; Fletcher v. Ins. Co., 18 Mo. 193; De Peyster v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 272, 75 Am. Dec. 331; Hostetter v. Gray, 11 Fed. 181; Hostetter v. Park, 137 U. S. 30, 11 Sup. Ct. 1, 34 L. Ed. 568. To touch and stay at a port out of its course is not a deviation if such departure is within the usage of the trade; id.; Marande v. Ry. Co., 184 U. S. 173, 22 Sup. Ct. 340, 46 L. Ed. 487. A variation from risks described in the policy from a necessity which is not inexcusably incurred does not forfeit the insurance; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1018; as to seek an intermediate port for repairs necessary for the prosecution of the voyage; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1019; changing the course to avoid disaster; Haven v. Holland, 2 Mas. 234, Fed. Cas. No. 6,229; delay in order to succor the distressed at sea; 6 East 54; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 258, 2 L. Ed. 266; if the object is to save life, otherwise, to save property merely; Crocker v. Jackson, 1 Spr. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 3,308; Bond v. The Cora, 2 Wash. C. C. 80, Fed. Cas. No. 1,621; The Boston, 1 Summ. 328, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673; damage merely in defence against hostile attacks; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1030; or in taking measures to repel such attacks; Haven v. Holland, 2 Mas. 230, Fed. Cas. No. 6,229. "Liberty to touch" at a particular port, reserved in the policy, does not imply liberty to remain for trading, which, if it involves delay, may amount to deviation; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Le Roy, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 26, 3 L. Ed. 257; nor to touch and stay at a port out of the course when within the usage of the trade; Bulkley v. Ins. Co., 2 Pat. 82, Fed. Cas. No. 2,118; Bentaloe v. Pratt, Wall. C. C. 58, Fed. Cas. No. 1,330.

Necessity alone will sanction a deviation, and the latter must be strictly commensurate with the power compelling; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Le Roy, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 26, 3 L. Ed. 257; the smallest deviation without necessity discharges the underwriters, though the loss be not the immediate consequence of the deviation; Martin v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 254, Fed. Cas. No. 9,161. The same doctrine is applicable in the case of a bill of lading. Shipowners are held to be deprived of the exemptions contained therein, even where the deviation was not the cause of the damage; 23 T. L. R. 89.

See article in 15 Am. L. Rev. 108.

The effect of a deviation in all kinds of insurance is to discharge the underwriters, whether the risk is thereby enhanced or not; the doctrine applies to lake and river navigation as well as ocean; 1 Phill. Ins. § 987. See INSURANCE; DEPARTURE; HARTER ACT.

In the law of railways, a lateral alteration of the line of a railway. The railways clauses act in England authorizes a company which is subject to its provisions to deviate on the line marked on the deposited plans within the limits delineated thereon. Hodg. Railw. 341.

In Contracts. A change made in the progress of a work from the original plan agreed upon.

When the contract is to build a house according to the original plan, and a deviation takes place, the contract must be traced as far as possible, and the additions, if any have been made, must be paid for according to the usual rate of charging; 3 B. & Ald. 47. And see 14 Ves. 413; McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 270, 2 L. Ed. 436; Munroe v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 298, 20 Am. Dec. 475; Chit. Contr. 168.

DEVICE. That which is devised or formed by design, a contrivance, an invention. Henderson v. State, 59 Ala. 91; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 56, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681, where the word as used in the Elkins Act was construed and the above definition adopted. The court held that the act sought to reach all means by which unlawful preferences might be given or received; that it was not the intention of congress to limit the obtaining of such preferences to fraudulent schemes, and that the term "device" includes anything which is a plan or contrivance. See PATENT.

DEVILLING. A term used in London of a barrister recently admitted to the bar, who assists a junior barrister in his professional work, without compensation and without appearing in any way in the matter.

DEVISAVIT VEL NON. The name of an issue sent out of a court of chancery, or one which exercises chancery or probate jurisdiction, to a court of law, to try the validity of a paper asserted and denied to be a will, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise, or whether or not that paper was his will; 7 Bro. P. C. 437; 2 Atk. 424; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. 21, 45 Am. Dec. 713.

An application for an issue devisavit vel non is properly denied where the decided weight of evidence is in favor of the testamentary capacity of testatrix, and it appears that the two sons in whose favor the will was made cared for their mother and her estate, while the two who had been disinherited, attempted to have her declared insane; In re Pensyl's Estate, 157 Pa. 465, 27 Atl. 669.

DEVISE. A gift of real property by a last will and testament.

The term devise, properly and technically, applies only to real estate; 1 Hill, Abr. c. 36, 62; Dickerman v. Abrahams, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 561. But it is also sometimes improperly applied to a bequest or legacy. See 4 Kent 489; 8 Viner, Abr. 41; Com. Dig. Estates by Devise; Rountree v. Pursell, 11 Ind. App. 522, 39 N. E. 747. The terms "bequest" and "devise" are used indifferently, and legatees may take under a devise of lands, if the context of the will shows that such was the testator's intention; Ladd v. Harvey, 21 N. H. 515; In re Fetrow's Estate, 58 Pa. 427.

A general devise of lands will pass a reversion in fee, even though the testator has other lands which will satisfy the words of the devise, and although it be highly improbable that he had in mind such reversion; 3 P. Wms. 56; 3 Bro. P. C. 408; 4 Bro. C. C. 338; Steel v. Cook, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 281; 8 Ves. 256.

A general devise will pass leases for years, if the testator have no other real estate upon which the will may operate; but if he have both lands in fee and lands for years, a devise of all his lands and tenements will commonly pass only the lands in fee-simple; Cro. Car. 293; Bowen v. Idley, 1 Ed. Ch. (N. Y.) 151; 6 Sim. 99. But if a contrary intention appear from the will, it will prevail; 5 Ves. 540; 9 East 448.

Testator "gave, devised and bequeathed all his furniture, goods, chattels and effects, whatsoever the same may be and wheresoever situate." It was held that giving expression to the word "devise," in connection with the other terms of the will, that the gift passed all the property of the testator, whether real or personal; [1891] 3 Ch. 389.

A devise in a will can never be regarded as the execution of a power, unless that intention is manifest: as, where the will would otherwise have nothing upon which it could operate. But the devise to have that operation need not necessarily refer to the power in express terms. But where there is an interest upon which it can operate, it shall be referred to that, unless some other intention is obvious; 6 Co. 176; 6 Madd. 190; 4 Kent 334; 1 Jarm. Wills 628.

The devise of all one's lands will not generally carry the interest of a mortgagee, in premises, unless that intent is apparent: 2 Vern. 621; 3 P. Wms. 61; 1 Jarm. Wills, 633. The fact that the mortgagee is in possession is sometimes of importance in determining the purpose of the devise. But many cases hold that the interest of a mortgagee or trustee will pass by a general devise of all one's land, unless a contrary intent be shown; Jackson v. De Lancy, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 537, 7 Am. Dec. 403; 8 Ves. 407; 1 J. & W. 494. But see 9 B. & C. 267. This is indeed the result of the modern decisions, 4 Kent 539; 1 Jarm. Wills 638. It seems clear that a devise of one's mortgages will pass the beneficial title of the mortgagee; 4 Kent 539.

Devises may be contingent or vested, after the death of the testator. They are contingent when the vesting of any estate in the devisee is made to depend upon some future event, in which case, if the event never occur, or until it does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But when the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator; 1 Jarm. Wills, c. xxvi., and numerous cases cited. The law favors that construction of the will which will vest the estate; Olney v. Hull, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 311; King v. King, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 205, 37 Am. Dec. 459. But this construction must not be carried to such an extent as to defeat the manifest intent of the testator; Olney v. Hull, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 311; Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 171. Where the estate is given absolutely, but only the time of possession is deferred, the devisee or legatee acquires a transmissible interest although he never arrive at the age to take possession; 1 Ves. Sen. 44, 59, 118; Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 173. See Lapsed Devise; Will; Legacy; Charge.

DEVISEE. A person to whom a devise has been made.

All persons who are in rerum natura, and even embryos, may be devisees, unless excepted by some positive law. But the devisee must be in existence, except in case of devises to charitable uses; 2 Washb. R. P. 688; Philadelphia Baptist Ass'n v. Hart, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 33, 49, 4 L. Ed. 499. See CHARITABLE USES. In general, he who can acquire property by his labor and industry may receive a devise; Cam. & N. 353. Femes covert, infants, aliens, and persons of non-sane memory may be devisees; 4 Kent 506; 2 Wms. Ex. 269, n.; Doe v. Roe, 1 Harr. (Del.) 524. Corporations in England and in some of the states can be devisees only to a limited extent; 2 Washb. R. P. 687.

A devisee may mean a legatee; People v. Petrie, 191 Ill. 497, 61 N. E. 499, 85 Am. St. Rep. 268.

DEVISOR. A testator. One who devises real estate.

Any person who can sell an estate may, in general, devise it; and there are some disabilities as to a sale which are not such as to a devise.

DEVOIR. Duty. It is used in the statute of 2 Ric. II. c. 3, in the sense of duties or customs.

DEVOLUTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The transfer, by forfeiture, of a right and power which a person has to another, on account of some act or negligence of the person who is vested with such right or power; for example, when a person has the right of presentation and he does not present within the time prescribed, the right devolves on his next immediate superior. Aylliffe, Parerg. 331. See 3 App. Cas. 520.

DEVOLVE. To pass from a person dying to a person living. 1 Mylne & K. 648. See DELEGATION.

DI COLONA. The contract which takes place between the owner of a ship, the captain, and the mariners, who agree that the voyage shall be for the benefit of all. The term is used in the Italian law. Targa, cc. 36, 37; Emerigon, Mar. Loans, s. 5. The New England whalers owned and navigated were under this species of contract. The captain and his mariners were all interested in the profits of the voyage in certain proportion, in the same manner as the captain and crew of a privateer, according to the agreement between them. Such agreements were very common in former times. It is necessary to know this in order to understand many of the provisions of the laws of Oleron and of Wisbuy, the Consolato del Mare, and other ancient codes of maritime and commercial law. Hall, Mar. Loans 42.

DICTATE. To pronounce, word by word, what is meant to be written by another. It is thus defined in the Louisiana code, which provides that the testator may dictate his will; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 143. The presentation, by testator, of an instrument which he has caused to be written, declaring it to be his will, may sometimes supply the want of dictation; Prendergast v. Prendergast, 16 La. Ann. 219, 79 Am. Dec. 575.

DICTATOR. In Roman Law. A magistrate at Rome invested with absolute power. His office continued but for six months. Hist. de la Jur. Dig. 1. 2. 18, 1. 1. 1.

DICTORES. Arbitrators.

DICTUM (also, Obiter Dictum). An opinion expressed by a court upon some question of law which is not necessary to the decision of the case before it.

It frequently happens that, in assigning its opinion upon a question before it, the court discusses collateral questions and expresses a decided opinion upon them. Such opinions, however, are frequently given without much reflection or without previous argument at the bar; and as, moreover, they do not enter into the adjudication of the point at issue they have only that authority which may be accorded to the opinion, more or less deliberate, of the individual judge who announces it. Chase, Bla. Com. 36, n. It may be observed that in recent times, particularly in those jurisdictions where appeals are largely favored, the ancient practice of courts in this respect is much modified. Formerly, judges aimed to confine their opinion to the precise point involved, and were glad to make that point as narrow as it might justly be. Where appeals are frequent, however, a strong tendency may be seen to fortify the judgment given with every principle that can be invoked in its behalf,—those that are merely collateral, as well as those that are necessarily involved. In some courts of last resort, also, when there are many judges, it is not unfrequently the case that, while the court come to one and the same conclusion, the different judges may be led to that conclusion by different views of the law, so that it becomes difficult to determine what is to be regarded as the principle upon which the case was decided and what shall be deemed mere dicta.

It is not easy to define the term with such precision as to afford an exact criterion by which to decide when the language of a court or judge is entitled to be considered as a precedent and followed as an authority. Judicial references to the subject indicate that expressions which would be included under the term dicta are nevertheless afterwards treated by other courts with respect if not with the binding force of adjudicated cases. Possibly no better definition can be found than that of Folger, J., in Rohrbach v. Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 58, 20 Am. Rep. 451: "Dicta are the opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and, made without argument or full consideration of the point, are not the professed, deliberate determinations of the judge himself; obiter dicta are such opinions uttered by the way, not upon the point or question pending, as if turning aside for the time from the main topic of the case to collateral subjects."

The general rule, broadly stated by the United States supreme court, is that to make an opinion a decision "there must have been an application of the judicial mind to the precise question necessary to be determined to fix the rights of the parties, . . . and, therefore, this court has never held itself bound by any part of an opinion which was not needful to the ascertainment of the question between the parties." Per Curtis, J., in Carroll v. Carroll, 16 How. 287, 14 L. Ed. 936. And in Cohens v. Virginia, when the case of Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. 137, 2 L. Ed. 60, was very earnestly pressed upon the attention of the court, Marshall, C. J., said: "It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent case when the very point is presented;" 6 Wheat. 399, 5 L. Ed. 257. In In re City Bank, 3 How. 292, 11 L. Ed. 603, Catron, J., dissenting, strongly criticised the majority of the court for a long discussion of the power of a court as to which they decided that they had no authority to review its decisions. In a later case the same court said, in reference to an allusion to the opinion in a case previously decided, "This was the only question before the court and the decision is authority only to the extent of the case before it; . . . if more was intended by the judge who delivered the opinion it was purely obiter;" U. S. v. County of Clark, 96 U. S. 211, 24 L. Ed. 628. The great powers and peculiar functions included in the constitutional powers of that court, as well as the conclusiveness of its judgments as declarations of constitutional construction, make it not only proper but essential that its decisions should be confined to the points necessarily involved in the case and embraced in the argument. And the same reasons not only warrant but require a rigid exclusion of mere dicta from the category of authorities. The reason for the enforcement of the rule, as against expressions of opinion upon points not fairly raised by the case, is stated by the supreme court of Pennsylvania: "What I have said or written outside of the case trying, or shall say or write in such circumstances, may be taken as my opinion at the time, without argument or full consideration; but I will not consider myself bound by it when the point is fairly trying and fully argued and considered." Per Huston, J., Frants v. Brown, 17 S. & R. 287.

According to the more rigid rule, any expression of opinion however deliberate upon a question however fully argued, if not essential to the disposition that was made of the case, may be regarded as a dictum; but it is, on the other hand, said that it is difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not so persuasive on all the points which were so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to argue them, and which were deliberately passed over by the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point; 1 Abbott, N. Y. Dig. pref. iv. And a text writer has said that "the line must not be too sharply drawn"; Wells, Res. Adj. & Sta. Dec.

§ 581. The fact that a decision might have been rested upon a different ground, and even a more satisfactory one, does not place the actual decision, on a ground arising in the category of a dictum; Clark v. Thomas, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 419.

But even when the point ruled was not directly and necessarily in issue, there are distinctions drawn as to the relative authority of judicial expressions of opinion comprehended under the general term dicta, as used in its broadest sense. An expression of opinion upon a point involved in a case, argued by counsel and deliberately passed upon by the court, though not essential to the disposition of the case, if a dictum, should be considered as a judicial dictum as distinguished from a mere obiter dictum, i. e. an expression originating alone with the judge writing the opinion, as an argument or illustration; Buchner v. Ry. Co., 60 Wis. 264, 19 N. W. 56. What was, in strictness, a dictum of Mr. Justice McLean has been extensively commented on, treated, and in several cases followed, as an authority. The suit was on a bond of a United States officer, and the question was as to when a resignation took effect, it being claimed that for default after resignation the surety was not liable. The court held the resignation to be a conditional one, and went on to discuss the right of resignation and the necessity of acceptance or power of rejection, reaching the conclusion that an unqualified resignation required no acceptance and would have discharged the surety; U. S. v. Wright, 1 McLean, 509, Fed. Cas. No. 16,775. This case having been cited to that point it was contended that it was a mere dictum. After defining dictum the supreme court of Nevada held "that while technically such, it was not liable to the objections usually urged,—it was the expression of opinion on a point argued, and entitled to far more weight than an ordinary dictum on a point not discussed and remotely connected with the case." State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 566. The same case was followed in People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 28; State v. Fitts, 49 Ala. 402; and is commented on and treated as an authority without being characterized as a dictum in Edwards v. U. S., 103 U. S. 471, 26 L. Ed. 314 and Reeves v. Ferguson, 31 N. J. L. 107.

So also it has been held, with respect to a court of last resort, that all that is needed to render its decision authoritative is that there was an application of the judicial mind to the precise question adjudged; and that the point was investigated with care and considered in its fullest extent; Alexander v. Worthington, 5 Md. 488; and that when a question of general interest is involved, and is fully discussed and submitted by counsel, and the court decides the question with a view to settle the law, the decision cannot be considered a dictum; id.

When a question is involved in the case, though not in the particular phase of it, at the time before the court, the language of the court is not a mere dictum. When a will was offered for probate the question of its validity, so far as regarded charitable uses, was involved, and what was said as to that was not obiter; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 336, 27 L. Ed. 401; although a point may not have been exhaustively argued a decision upon it cannot be said to be obiter dictum when it was upon a question raised by a demurrer upon which the court distinctly expressed an opinion; Michael v. Morey, 26 Md. 239, 90 Am. Dec. 106.

"Whenever a question fairly arises in the course of a trial, and there is a distinct decision of that question, the ruling of the court in respect thereto can, in no just sense, be called mere dictum." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Railroad Co., 199 U. S. 160, 166, 26 Sup. Ct. 19, 50 L. Ed. 134; Florida C. R. Co. v. Schutte, 103 U. S. 118, 26 L. Ed. 327; New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Price, 159 Fed. 330, 332, 86 C. C. A. 502, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103.

The expressions of courts and judges which fall within the general designation of dicta are accorded more or less weight as they agree with, or run counter to, the current of authority, and, like the adjudications of courts in other jurisdictions, not direct authorities, they are always considered with reference to the judicial reputation and experience of their authors. Referring to a case cited in a dictum Lord Mansfield said, "This dictum of Lord Holt's is no formed decisive resolution; no adjudication; no professed or deliberate determination . . ."; then after citing cases contra he continued, "therefore this mere obiter dictum ought not to weigh against the settled direct authority of the cases which have been deliberately and upon argument determined the other way." 2 Burr. 2064. "Dicta of judges upon matters not argued or directly before them, have had more importance attached to them than, in my opinion, they ought to have had; but such expressions, falling from such a man as Lord Hardwicke, may be safely relied upon to show that, at that time, the idea of a larger legacy being adeemed by a smaller portion was not familiar to his mind. It is the more important to keep this dictum of Lord Hardwicke in mind because another dictum of that very eminent judge . . . is relied upon in support of the supposed rule." Ld. Ch. Cottenham, in 1 Russ. 27. The doctrine of the courts of France on this subject is stated in 11 Toullier 177, n. 133.

See PRECEDENT.

In French Law. The report of a judgment made by one of the judges who has given it. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pl. 1, c. 5, art. 2.

DIEM CLAUSIT EXTREMUM (Lat. he has closed his last day,—died). A writ which formerly lay on the death of a tenant in capite, to ascertain the lands of which he died seised, and reclaim them into the king's hands. It was directed to the king's escheators. Fitzh. N. B. 251, K; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 327.

A writ of the same name, issuing out of the exchequer after the death of a debtor of the king, to levy the debt of the lands or goods of the heir, executor, or administrator. Termes de la Ley. This writ is still in force in England. 3 Steph. Com. 667.

DIES (Lat.). A day; days. Days for appearance in court. Provisions or maintenance for a day. The king's rents were anciently reserved by so many days' provisions. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; Blount.

DIES AMORIS (Lat.). A day of favor. If obtained after a default by the defendant, it amounted to a waiver of the default. Co. Litt. 135 a; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 60. The appearance day of the term, or quarto die post, was also so called.

DIES COMMUNES IN BANCO (Lat.). Regular days for appearance in court; called, also, common return-days. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 57.

DIES DATUS (Lat. a day given). A day or time given to a defendant in a suit, which is in fact a continuance of the cause. It is so called when given before a declaration. When it is allowed afterwards, it assumes the name of imparlance, which see.

Dies datus in banco, a day in bank. Co. Litt. 135. Dies datus partibus, a continuance; dies datus prece partium, a day given on prayer of the parties.

DIES-DOMINICUS. The Lord's day; Sunday.

DIES FASTI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Days on which courts might be held and judicial and other business legally transacted. Calvinus, Lex.; Anthon, Rom. Ant. 3 Bla. Com. 275, 424.

DIES GRATIÆ (Lat.). In Old English Law. Days of grace. Co. Litt. 134 b.

DIES NEFASTI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Days on which it was unlawful to transact judicial affairs, and on which the courts were closed. Anthon, Rom. Ant.; 1 Kaufm. Mackeld. 24; 3 Bla. Com. 275.

DIES NON (Lat.). An abbreviation of the phrase dies non juridicus, universally used to denote non judicial days. Days during which courts do not transact any business; as, Sunday, or the legal holidays. 3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 104; W. Jones 156. Sunday was the original dies non, but in many states days declared by statute to be legal holidays are also such, but the decisions on this subject depend largely upon the terms and scope of the statutes, many of which apply solely to the presentment and payment of commercial paper, and others include a prohibition of judicial business and provide for the closing of public offices.

A distinction was made in 9 Co. 66 between judicial and ministerial acts performed on a dies non; this was overruled in 1 Stra. 387; but the distinction now obtains; 5 Cent. L. J. 26. And under a statute forbidding the transaction of any judicial business on Sunday or a legal holiday, the issuing on such a day of an attachment by a county judge for a claim not due was held to be "judicial" business and void; Merchants' Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Jaffray, 36 Neb. 218, 54 N. W. 258, 19 L. R. A. 316; but an attachment for a claim past due was held to be valid, as a ministerial, and not a judicial act; Whipple v. Hill, 36 Neb. 720, 55 N. W. 227, 20 L. R. A. 313, 38 Am. St. Rep. 742.

It has usually been held that a verdict may be received on a dies non; Huidekoper v. Cotton, 3 Watts (Pa.) 56; McCorkle v. State, 14 Ind. 39; Powers v. State, 23 Tex. App. 42, 5 S. W. 153; Brown v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 119, 22 S. W. 596; but a judgment entered on such verdict on the same day is void; Baxter v. People, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 368; Hoghtaling v. Osborn, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 119. See Webber v. Merrill, 34 N. H. 202; Johnson v. Day, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 106; State v. Ricketts, 74 N. C. 187; Elrod v. Lumber Co., 92 Tenn. 476, 22 S. W. 2; Merchants' Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Jaffray, 36 Neb. 218, 54 N. W. 258, 19 L. R. A. 316. A judgment by confession entered upon December 25, a legal holiday, is not void; Bradley v. Claudon, 45 Ill. App. 326. In Kentucky although Thanksgiving day is a legal holiday, it is not treated as Sunday, except as to commercial paper, and where money becomes due on such a day, the debtor is in default if he fails to pay on that day; National Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Miller, 85 Ky. 88, 2 S. W. 900. A bill of exceptions signed on Sunday is void; Roberts v. Bank, 137 Ind. 697, 36 N. E. 1091. Warrants for treason, felony, and breach of the peace may be executed on Sunday; State v. Ricketts, 74 N. C. 187. Where public policy or the prevention of irremediable wrong requires it, the courts may sit on Sunday and issue process; Langabier v. Fairbury, P. & N. W. R. R. Co., 64 Ill. 243, 16 Am. Rep. 550. It is no longer uncommon for courts to sit on legal holidays in some jurisdictions. See a full article on this title in 7 So. L. Rev. N. S. 697; SUNDAY; HOLIDAYS.

DIES NON JURIDICUS (Lat.). Non-judicial days. See DIES NON.

DIES PACIS (Lat. day of peace). The year was formerly divided into the days of the peace of the church and the days of the peace of the king,—including in the two divisions all the days of the year. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law 35.

DIES A QUO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The day from which a transaction begins. Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law 168.

DIES UTILES (Lat.). Useful or available days. Days in which an heir might apply to the judge for an inheritance. Cooper, Inst.; Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange.

DIET. A general assembly is sometimes so called on the continent of Europe. 1 Bla. Com. 147.

DIETA (Lat.). A day's journey; a day's work; a day's expenses. A reasonable day's journey is said to be twenty miles, by an old computation. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.; Bracton 235 b; 3 Bla. Com. 218.

DIFFERENCE. A contention over a question of truth, or fact, or law, as distinguished from a non-agreement over a question of valuation. 28 L. J. Ch. 184.

DIGEST. A compilation arranged in an orderly manner.

The name is given to a great variety of topical compilations, abridgments, and analytical indices of reports, statutes, etc. When reference is made to the Digest, the Pandects of Justinian are intended, they being the authoritative compilation of the civil law. As to this Digest and the mode of citing it, see PANDECTS. Other digests are referred to by their distinctive names. For some account of digests of the civil and canon law, and those of Indian law, see CIVIL LAW, CODE, and CANON LAW.

The digests of English and American law are for the most part deemed not authorities, but simply manuals of reference, by which the reader may find his way to the original cases which are authorities. 1 Burr. 364; 2 Wils. 1, 2. Some of them, however, which have been the careful work of scholarly lawyers, possess an independent value as original repositories of the law. Bacon's Abridgment, which has long been deservedly popular in this country, and Comyns's Digest, also often cited, are examples of these. The earlier English digests are those of Statham (Hen. VI.), Fitzherbert, 1516, Brooke, 1573, Rolle, Danvers, Nelson, Viner, and Petersdorf. Of these Rolle and Viner are still not infrequently cited, and some others rarely. The several digests by Coventry & Hughes, Harrison, Fisher, Jacobs, and Chitty, together with the subsequent annual digests of Emden and of Mews, afford a convenient index for the American reader to the English reports. In most of the United States one or more digests of the state reports have been published, and in some of them digests or topical arrangements of the statutes. There are also digests of the federal statutes. The American Digest, Century Edition, covers the reports of the federal and state courts from 1658 to 1896, inclusive, brought down to cover 1906 by the Decennial Edition, and brought down to date by the American Digest, Key-Number Series. The Federal Reporter Digest digests the series of Federal Reporters to vol. 200 and the United States Supreme Court decisions from vols. 106 to 225 U. S., comprised in vols. 21-32 Supreme Court Reporter. The latter, to 225 U. S., are also digested in the Digest of United States Supreme Court Reports. Dane's Abridgment of American Law has been commended by high authority (Story's article in N. Am. Rev. July, 1826), but it has not maintained a position as a work of general use. There are also numerous digests of cases on particular titles of the law.

DIGNITARY. An ecclesiastic who holds a dignity or benefice which gives him some pre-eminence over mere priests and canons, such as a bishop, archbishop, prebendary, etc. Burn, Law Dict.

DIGNITIES. In English Law. Titles of honor.

They are considered as incorporeal hereditaments. The character of our government forbids their admission into the republic.

DILACION. In Spanish Law. The time granted by law or by the judge to parties litigant for the purpose of answering a demand or proving some disputed fact.

DILAPIDATION. A species of ecclesiastical waste which occurs whenever the incumbent suffers any edifices of his ecclesiastical living to go to ruin or decay. It is either voluntary, by pulling down or permissive, by suffering the church, parsonage-houses, and other buildings thereunto belonging, to decay. And the remedy for either lies either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of common law. It is also held to be good cause of deprivation if the bishop, parson, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates buildings or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church, unless for necessary repairs; and that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the common-law courts. 3 Bla. Com. 91.

DILATORY DEFENCE. In Chancery Practice. One the object of which is to dismiss, suspend, or obstruct the suit, without touching the merits, until the impediment or obstacle insisted on shall be removed.

DILATORY PLEA. One which goes to defeat the particular action brought, merely, and which does not answer as to the general right of the plaintiff. See PLEA.

DILIGENCE. The degree of care and attention which the law exacts from a person in a particular situation or a given relation to another person. The word finds its most frequent application in the law of Bailments and of Negligence. Indeed it may be termed the correlative of negligence.

DIME (Lat. decem, ten). A silver coin of the United States, of the value of ten cents, or one-tenth of the dollar.

DIMINUTION OF THE RECORD. Incompleteness of the record of a case sent up from an inferior to a superior court.

When this exists, the parties may suggest a diminution of the record, and pray a writ of certiorari to the court below to certify the whole record; Bassler v. Niesly, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 472; Co. Entr. 232; 8 Viner, Abr. 552; Cro. Jac. 597; Cro. Car. 91; Den v. Carr. 15 N. C. 575; State v. Reid, 18 N. C. 382, 28 Am. Dec. 572; Hooper v. Royster, 1 Munf. (Va.) 119. See ALLEGING DIMINUTION; CERTIORARI.

DINING CARS. While in the act of making its interstate journey, such car is under the control of congress, and equally it is so when waiting for the train to be made up for the next trip; Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363.

See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; COMMON CARRIER; MASTER AND SERVANT; EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

DIOCESE. The territorial extent of a bishop's jurisdiction. The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction. Co. Litt. 94; 1 Bla. Com. 111; 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 158.

Dioceses were divided into archdioceses and those into rural deaneries, which were divided into parishes.

DIOCESAN COURTS. See CONSISTORY COURTS; CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

DIONYSIUS. The Collectio Dionysiana was a collection and translation of the canons of Eastern councils by a monk named Dionysius Exiguus, living in Rome, but Scythian by birth, about 500 A. D. It helped to spread the notion that the popes can declare, even if they cannot make the law for the universal church, and thus to contract the sphere of secular jurisprudence. 14 L. Q. R. 20.

DIPLOMA. An instrument of writing, executed by a corporation or society, certifying that a certain person therein named is entitled to a certain distinction therein mentioned. It is usually granted by learned institutions to their members or to persons who have studied in them.

Proof of the seal of a medical institution and of the signatures of its officers thereto affixed, by comparison with the seal and signatures attached to a diploma received by the witness from the same institution, has been held to be competent evidence of the genuineness of the instrument, although the witness never saw the officers write their names; Finch v. Gridley's Ex'rs, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 469.

A diploma is evidence that a physician received a degree from a medical institution; Holmes v. Halde, 74 Me. 28, 43 Am. Rep. 567.

This word, which is also written duploma, in the civil law signifies letters issued by a prince. They are so called it is supposed, a duplicatis tabellis, to which Ovid is thought to allude, 1 Amor, 12, 2, 27, when he says, Tunc ego vos duplices rebus pro nomine sensi. Sueton. in Augustum, c. 26. Brissonius p. 367. Seals also were called Diplomata. Vicat, Diploma. See COLLEGE.

DIPLOMACY. The science which deals with the means and methods by which the intercourse between states is carried on. See DIPLOMATIC AGENTS.

DIPLOMATIC AGENTS. Public officers who have been commissioned according to law to superintend and transact the affairs of the government which has employed them, in a foreign country. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 5.

The agents were formerly regarded as divided into two general classes or orders. Those of the first order were almost the perfect representatives of the government by which they were commissioned: such were legates, nuncios, internuncios, ambassadors, ministers, plenipotentiaries. Those of the second order did not so fully represent their government: they were envoys, residents, ministers, chargés d'affaires, and consuls. The classification of these agents, now so far sanctioned as to be considered a rule of international law, was agreed upon at the Congress of Vienna in 1815 and modified by that of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1818. Under this classification diplomatic agents rank as follows: (1) Ambassadors, ordinary and extraordinary, legates, and nuncios; (2) envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns; (3) ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns; (4) chargés d'affaires, and other diplomatic agents accredited to ministers of foreign affairs (whether bearing the title of minister or not), and consuls charged with diplomatic duties. See the several titles and Davis, Int. Law ch. vii.

DIPLOMATICS. The art of judging of ancient charters, public documents, or diplomas, and discriminating the true from the false. Encyc. Lond.

DIPSOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A mental disease characterized by an uncontrollable desire for intoxicating drinks. An irresistible impulse to indulge in intoxication, either by alcohol or other drugs. Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 614, 28 N. W. 271. As to how far the law will hold a party responsible for acts committed while the mind is overwhelmed by the effects of liquor, see DRUNKENNESS.

DIRECT. Straightforward; not collateral. The Onrust, 6 Blatchf. 533, Fed. Cas. No. 10,540. The direct line of descent is formed by a series of relationships between persons who descend successively one from the other.

Evidence is termed direct which applies immediately to the fact to be proved, without any intervening process as distinguished from circumstantial, which applies immediately to collateral facts supposed to have a connection, near or remote, with the fact in controversy.

The examination in chief of a witness is called the direct examination.

DIRECT TAX. In Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759, it was said that in order to determine whether a tax be direct within the meaning of the constitution it must be ascertained whether the one upon whom, by law, the burden of paying it is first cast, can thereafter shift it to another person. If he cannot, the tax would then be direct, and hence, however obvious in other respects it might be a duty, impost or excise, it cannot be levied by the rule of uniformity and must be apportioned. This was said in Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969, to be a disputable theory. It is said direct taxes within the constitution are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate; Springer v. U. S., 102 U. S. 586, 26 L. Ed. 253; but the inclusion of rentals from real estate was held to make it direct to that extent; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759, where it is said, although there have been from time to time intimations that there might be some tax which was not a direct tax nor included under the words duties, imposts and excises, such a tax for more than a hundred years has as yet remained undiscovered.

Direct taxes include those assessed upon property, person, business, income, etc., of those who pay them; while indirect taxes are levied upon commodities before they reach the consumer, and are paid by those upon whom they ultimately fall, not as taxes, but as part of the market price of the commodity. Under the second head may be classed the duties upon imports, and the excise and stamp duties levied upon manufactures; Cooley, Taxation 10.

See TAX; EXCISE.

DIRECTING A VERDICT. See VERDICT; JURY.

DIRECTION. The order and government of an institution; the persons who compose the board of directors are jointly called the direction.

Direction, in another sense, is nearly synonymous with instruction (q. v.).

In Practice. The instruction of a jury by a judge on a point of law, so that they may apply it to the facts before them. See CHARGE.

That part of a bill in chancery which contains the address of the bill to the court: this must, of course, contain the appropriate and technical description of the court. See BILL.

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT. An officer appointed by the president of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the senate. He is the chief officer of the bureau of the mint and is under the general direction of the secretary of the treasury. R. S. § 343.

DIRECTORS. Persons appointed or elected according to law to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The directors collectively form the board of directors.

They are generally invested with certain powers by the charter of the corporation, and it is believed that there is no instance of a corporation created by statute without provision for such a board of control, whether under the name of directors, or, as they are sometimes termed, managers or trustees,—the latter designation being more frequent in religious or charitable corporations. A comprehensive work on corporations states that the author has likewise found no instance in which these officers were wanting;

3 Thomp. Corp. § 3850. The power to elect directors has been held to be inherent and not dependent upon statute; Hurlbut v. Marshall, 62 Wis. 590, 22 N. W. 852.

As to the nature of the office and its powers very different views have been held, and each is sustained by high authority. They have been held to be the corporation itself “to all purposes of dealing with others” and not to “exercise a delegated authority in the sense which applies to agents or attorneys;” Shaw, C. J., in Burrill v. Bank, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 163, 35 Am. Dec. 395. Another view, and probably the one which is the best settled conclusion of judicial opinion in this country, is that they are general agents; Simons v. Min. Co., 61 Pa. 202, 100 Am. Dec. 628; State v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266; Chetlain v. Ins. Co., 86 Ill. 220; President, etc., of Mechanics' Bank v. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 599; Goodwin v. Ins. Co., 24 Conn. 591. The question is of importance with respect to the power of directors to act outside of the home state of the corporation, in order to do which, they must act as agents; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Wright v. Bundy, 11 Ind. 398; McCall v. Mfg. Co., 6 Conn. 428. They are undoubtedly, in a certain sense, agents, but they are agents of the corporation, not of the stockholders; they derive their powers from the charter. They alone have the management of the affairs of the corporation, free from direct interference on the part of the stockholders; Dana v. Bank, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 246; Bank of U. S. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 113, 6 L. Ed. 552; Dayton & C. R. Co. v. Hatch, 1 Disn. (Ohio) 84. The stockholders cannot perform any acts connected with the ordinary affairs of the corporation; Conro v. Iron Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 27, 63; the delegation of powers to the directors excludes control by the stockholders; Union Gold Min. Co. v. Nat. Bank, 2 Colo. 565. See Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 357, 5 L. Ed. 631; Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 11, 91 Am. Dec. 607.

In England it is held that the directors of a company are in the position of managing partners, and their mandate is the mandate of the whole body of shareholders, not of the majority only. A simple majority of the shareholders cannot alter the mandate and override the discretion of the directors; [1906] 2 Ch. 34. The ultimate determination of the management rests with the stockholders, when by the charter the powers of the corporation are vested in them, or when it is silent on that question and does not commit the exclusive control to the directors; Union Pac. R. Co. v. R. Co., 163 U. S. 564, 16 Sup. Ct. 1173, 41 L. Ed. 265. In this case the stockholders had adopted a by-law providing that the board should have the whole management of the property of the company, and that they might delegate power to the executive committee. The latter authorized the president to execute a contract and the stockholders approved it and the action of the committee, but the board never formally acted; it was held that, as they had full knowledge of it, they would be presumed to have ratified it.

It has been said that directors are special agents of the corporation, and not general agents; Adrian v. Roome, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 399; and this is the view which it is said that in England "the ingenuity of the bench has been taxed to demonstrate;" 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3969; Lindl. Partn. (4th ed.) 249. Among the cases relied on as supporting this view are, 6 Exch. 796; 8 C. B. 849; 6 H. L. Cas. 401; L. R. 5 Eq. 316; but the distinction has been said not to be very satisfactory; per Comstock, J., in President, Directors & Co. of Mechanics' Bank v. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 599. See Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 470, n. Although the weight of authority is as stated, it is nevertheless important to keep in view the different theories held, in order to weigh accurately the authorities upon the powers of directors, and to distinguish between them when they are to be applied to a particular case. Directors have no common-law powers; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3978; but only granted ones, although in dealing with corporations courts sometimes ascribe to the directors certain powers, termed implied powers, which, however, in fact amount to no more than a recognition by the courts of the usages of business and acts done in the course of business; id. But they have no power to make changes in the fundamental law of the corporation, their relation to it being analogous to that of a legislature to the constitution of the state; id. § 3979. Accordingly, their power to make such changes must be derived from the charter. They may not change the membership or capital of the corporation by increasing either; Chicago City R. Co. v. Allerton, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 233, 21 L. Ed. 902; Com. v. Gill, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 228; Gill v. Balis, 72 Mo. 424; or reducing the capital; Percy v. Millaudon, 3 La. 568; Hartridge v. Rockwell, R. M. Charl. 260; nor make by-laws unless specially authorized; Watson v. Printing Co., 56 Mo. App. 145; nor request or accept amendments to the charter; Stark v. Burke, 9 La. Ann. 341; State v. Adams, 44 Mo. 570; Zabriskie v. R. Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 178, 90 Am. Dec. 617; Marlborough Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 2 Conn. 579 (but see contra, Dayton & C. R. Co. v. Hatch, 1 Disney (Ohio) 84, which is doubted, 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3980, n. 7). They may alien property in the course of business; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3984 (and see note on this subject; Garrett v. Plow Co., 59 Am. Rep. 466); or mortgage corporate property; Sargent v. Webster, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 497, 46 Am. Dec. 743; Miller v. R. Co., 36 Vt. 452; Augusta Bank v. Hamblet, 35 Me. 491; Hendee v. Pinkerton, 14 Allen (Mass.) 381; Hoyt v.

Thompson's Ex'r, 19 N. Y. 207; or make an assignment for the benefit of creditors; Merrick v. Trustees of Bank, 8 Gill (Md.) 59; and see Thomp. Corp. chs. 145, 146, which discuss this subject and the validity of preferential assignments by directors in favor of others and of themselves. They cannot give away corporate property; Bedford R. Co. v. Bowser, 48 Pa. 29; Frankfort Bank v. Johnson, 24 Me. 490; nor sell the stock at less than par; Sturges v. Stetson, 1 Biss. 246, Fed. Cas. No. 13,568; in money or money's worth; Chouteau, Harrison & Valle v. Dean, 7 Mo. App. 210 (but see Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 1665; Stock); nor, as a general rule, become surety, accommodation indorser, or guarantor; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3990; but under urgent necessity their assumption of a debt of another to secure from the common creditors an extension for themselves has been held justified; Leach v. Blakely, 34 Vt. 134. See Zabriskie v. R. Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 381, 16 L. Ed. 488. In the usual course of business they have a general power to borrow money; Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 5 L. Ed. 631; Ridgway v. Bank, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 256, 14 Am. Dec. 681; and secure it by assigning securities owned by the corporation; North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Bank, 79 Wis. 31, 47 N. W. 300, 11 L. R. A. 845; and one so dealing with them is not affected with knowledge of a breach of trust by them; Borland v. Haven, 37 Fed. 394. They may make, accept, or indorse negotiable paper; Stevens v. Hill, 29 Me. 133; but a single director is not authorized to make corporate notes; Lawrence v. Gebhard, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 575. They may determine the salaries of officers of the corporation; Waite v. Min. Co., 37 Vt. 608. Under the English decisions the powers of corporations with respect to borrowing money and making notes are now restricted; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3989, n. 3.

While directors are not strictly trustees, yet they occupy a fiduciary position; Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 616, 22 L. Ed. 492; European & N. A. Ry. Co. v. Poor, 59 Me. 277; Hoyle v. R. Co., 54 N. Y. 314, 13 Am. Rep. 595; Koehler v. Iron Co., 2 Black (U. S.) 715, 17 L. Ed. 339; Corbett v. Woodward, 5 Sawy. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 3,223; Deaderick v. Wilson, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 108; Scott v. Depeyster, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 513; Covington & L. R. Co. v. Bowler's Heirs, 9 Bush (Ky.) 468; Hale v. Bridge Co., 8 Kan. 466; Black v. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 463; Sweeny v. Refining Co., 30 W. Va. 443, 4 S. E. 431, 8 Am. St. Rep. 88; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 516; and by some leading authorities they are termed trustees; Walworth, Ch., in Robinson v. Smith, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 222, 24 Am. Dec. 212; Hardwicke, Ld. Ch., in 2 Atk. 400; Bent v. Priest, 86 Mo. 475.

Directors, in buying shares from other stockholders, when there is a possibility of reselling at a profit, are not bound to discover all the facts; their fiduciary character does not extend that far; [1902] 2 Ch. 421. But a director upon whose action the value of shares depends cannot avail of the knowledge of what his own action will be to acquire shares from those whom he intentionally keeps in ignorance of his expected action and the resulting value of the shares. This rule was applied in view of the special circumstances: That the director owned three-fourths of the stock, was at the time of his purchase administrator general of the company, with large powers, and engaged in negotiations which finally led to a sale of the company's land to the government at a price which greatly enhanced the value of the stock; Strong v. Repide, 213 U. S. 419, 29 Sup. Ct. 521, 53 L. Ed. 853, citing Stewart v. Harris, 69 Kan. 498, 77 Pac. 277, 66 L. R. A. 261, 105 Am. St. Rep. 178, 2 Ann. Cas. 873, and Oliver v. Oliver, 118 Ga. 362, 45 S. E. 232, and not deciding as to whether the rule applied to the bare relationship between director and shareholder.

They are charged with trustees' duties and bound to care for corporation property and manage its affairs in good faith; and for violation of that duty, resulting in waste of its assets, injury to its property, or unlawful gain to themselves, they are liable to account in equity the same as ordinary trustees; Bosworth v. Allen, 168 N. Y. 157, 61 N. E. 163, 55 L. R. A. 751, 85 Am. St. Rep. 667, where the directors conspired to wreck the corporation. They are held not trustees in the strict and technical sense; Booth v. Robinson, 55 Md. 419; Wallace v. Savings Bank, 89 Tenn. 649, 15 S. W. 448, 24 Am. St. Rep. 625; at most directors of a bank can only be considered implied trustees; Emerson v. Gaither, 103 Md. 564, 64 Atl. 26, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 7 Ann. Cas. 1114; Landis v. Saxton, 105 Mo. 486, 16 S. W. 912, 24 Am. St. Rep. 403; Appeal of Spering, 71 Pa. 11, 10 Am. Rep. 684; the liability of a bank director is held to be that of a mandatary or gratuitous bailee, who undertakes without compensation to do something for another, and he is therefore held only to that degree of care which prudent men in like circumstances ordinarily give to the same duties. In Swentzel v. Bank, 147 Pa. 140, 23 Atl. 405, 415, 15 L. R. A. 305, 30 Am. St. Rep. 718, the position of Judge Sharswood in the earlier case is approved and the court said: "The ordinary care of a business man in his own affairs means one thing; the ordinary care of a gratuitous mandatary is quite another matter. The one implies an oversight and knowledge of every detail of his business; the other suggests such care only as a man can give in a short space of time to the business of other persons, for which he receives no compensation." The customs and methods of a community in which a banking business is done are, for such community, a standard of prudence and diligence by which the responsibility of bank officers and directors are to be tested; Wheeler v. Bank, 75 Fed. 781. The degree of care, skill and judgment depends upon the subject to which it is to be applied, the particular circumstances of the case, and the usages of the business; North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Childs, 82 Wis. 460, 52 N. W. 600, 33 Am. St. Rep. 57; Killen v. Barnes, 106 Wis. 546, 82 N. W. 536; Savings Bank of Louisville's Assignee v. Caperton, 87 Ky. 306, 8 S. W. 885, 12 Am. St. Rep. 488; Warren v. Robison, 19 Utah, 289, 57 Pac. 287, 75 Am. St. Rep. 734. The question of negligence is ultimately a question of fact under all the circumstances; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 602.

Knowledge of all the affairs of a bank cannot be imputed to the directors to charge them with liability; Mason v. Moore, 73 Ohio St. 275, 76 N. E. 932, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240. They cannot be held civilly liable to one deceived to his injury by false representations as to the bank's financial condition, contained in the official report to the comptroller of the currency, made and published under U. S. R. S. § 5211, where they merely negligently participated in or assented to such representations, since the exclusive test of their liability is furnished by U. S. R. S. § 5239, which makes a knowing violation of the provisions of the title relating to national banks a prerequisite to such liability; Yates v. Bank, 206 U. S. 158, 27 Sup. Ct. 638, 51 L. Ed. 1002.

In many other cases the degree of care required is held to be that which a prudent man exercises about his own affairs; Wallace v. Bank, 89 Tenn. 630, 15 S. W. 448, 24 Am. St. Rep. 625; Marshall v. Bank, 85 Va. 676, 8 S. E. 586, 2 L. R. A. 534, 17 Am. St. Rep. 84; Union Nat. Bank v. Hill, 148 Mo. 380, 49 S. W. 1012, 71 Am. St. Rep. 615; Ackerman v. Halsey, 37 N. J. Eq. 356; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. Ryan, 42 Minn. 196, 44 N. W. 56. It is said they are not merely required to be honest, but they must also bring to the discharge of the duties they undertake ordinary competency. They cannot excuse imprudence or indifference by showing honesty of intention coupled with gross ignorance and inexperience, or coupled with an absorption of their time and attention in their private affairs; Warner v. Penoyer, 91 Fed. 587, 33 C. C. A. 222, 44 L. R. A. 761; Williams v. McKay, 46 N. J. Eq. 25, 18 Atl. 824. The ordinary care and prudence required of bank directors is held to include something more than officiating as figureheads. They may commit the business as defined to duly authorized officers, but this does not absolve them from the duty of reasonable supervision; Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 3 Sup. Ct. 428, 28 L. Ed. 49; nor ought they to be permitted to be shielded from liability because of want of knowledge of wrongdoing, if that ignorance is the result of gross inattention; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662.

It is the duty of the directors of a national bank to maintain a supervision of its affairs; to have a general knowledge of the manner in which its business is conducted and of the character of that business, and to have at least such a degree of intimacy with its affairs as to know to whom and upon what security its large lines of credit are given; and generally to know of and give directions as to the important and general affairs of the bank, of which the cashier executes the details; Gibbons v. Anderson, 80 Fed. 345; they cannot shift such duties upon the executive officers; Warren v. Robison, 19 Utah 289, 57 Pac. 287, 75 Am. St. Rep. 734. They will be presumed to have known what they ought to have known; Marshall v. Bank, 85 Va. 676, 8 S. E. 586, 2 L. R. A. 534, 17 Am. St. Rep. 84; Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 3 Sup. Ct. 428, 28 L. Ed. 49.

Directors also occupy a fiduciary relation to creditors, for whom they have been said to be quasi trustees, and when the corporation becomes insolvent, they become trustees for the creditors and stockholders; Bradley v. Farwell, 1 Holmes 433, Fed. Cas. No. 1,779; Clark v. San Francisco, 53 Cal. 306; Good v. Sherman, 37 Tex. 660. Where directors of an insolvent corporation confessed a judgment against it in favor of one of themselves to give him an advantage by priority of lien over another creditor, about to obtain judgment, the two judgments were placed upon the same footing; Coons v. Tome, 9 Fed. 532. See Thomp. Liab. of Dir. 397; Goodin v. Canal Co., 18 Ohio St. 169, 98 Am. Dec. 95. Directors are held personally responsible for acts of misfeasance or gross negligence, or for fraud and breach of trust; L. R. 5 H. L. 480; Lewis v. Steel Works, 50 Vt. 477; Appeal of Spering, 71 Pa. 11, 10 Am. Rep. 684; 68 Law T. 380; Mutual Bldg. Fund & Dollar Sav. Bank v. Bosseilux, 3 Fed. 817. An action to enforce this responsibility must be brought on behalf of all the stockholders, and not by a single one; Craig v. Gregg, 83 Pa. 19; and cannot be brought by a creditor; Zinn v. Mendel, 9 W. Va. 580; contra, Tate v. Bates, 118 N. C. 287, 24 S. E. 482, 54 Am. St. Rep. 719, where it is held that an action will lie against them for any injury to the corporation or a creditor by their fraud, deceit, neglect, or other misconduct. It is held to be the duty of bank directors to see that the directions of the banking laws are complied with and that depositors may, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, maintain an action to recover losses resulting from a breach of such duty; Boyd v. Schneider, 131 Fed. 223, 65 C. C. A. 209, reversing 124 Fed. 239. In Brinckerhoff v.

Bostwick, 88 N. Y. 52, it was said the liability of directors for violations of their duty, and the jurisdiction of equity to afford redress to the corporation and its shareholders, exist independently of statute. This was a proceeding by a shareholder; and in Dykman v. Keeney, 154 N. Y. 483, 48 N. E. 894, it was referred to to show that an action in equity will lie by a shareholder, and it was said: There is a wide and vital difference between such a case and one where the action is by the corporation against its delinquent directors.

A director is an agent of the corporation, and accounts primarily with the corporation, which holds the legal title to the assets; but there is no privity at law between a stockholder and the directors, and hence equity is generally the proper tribunal in which to enforce his rights, which are equitable and not legal; Emerson v. Gaither, 103 Md. 564, 64 Atl. 26, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 7 Ann. Cas. 1114, where it was held that a receiver may proceed in equity to hold bank directors liable for losses caused by their permitting illegal loans and declaring improper dividends. See also North Hudson Mut. Building & Loan Ass'n v. Childs, 82 Wis. 460, 52 N. W. 600, 33 Am. St. Rep. 57; Robinson v. Hall, 63 Fed. 222, 12 C. C. A. 674; Hodges v. Screw Co., 1 R. I. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 624; Williams v. McKay, 40 N. J. Eq. 189, 53 Am. Rep. 775; Cockrill v. Cooper, 86 Fed. 7, 29 C. C. A. 529. In the last case it was said the office of a director is so much akin to those of a trustee that in many cases no substantial reason can be given for exempting directors from that degree of control by a court of chancery which such courts ordinarily exercise over trustees; and to the same effect Bosworth v. Allen, 168 N. Y. 157, 61 N. E. 163, 55 L. R. A. 751, 85 Am. St. Rep. 667, where the charge against the directors was waste of corporate assets and unlawful gain to themselves. Other New York cases restricted the right of a receiver to bring an action against directors in equity where the charge against them was negligent and wasteful conduct and a violation of the banking laws in many respects, and held that an action at law was the proper remedy; Dykman v. Keeney, 154 N. Y. 483, 48 N. E. 894, following O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 143 N. Y. 377, 38 N. E. 371; Stephens v. Overstolz, 43 Fed. 771. In a case in which it did not appear that an accounting was necessary, it was held that the remedy of a receiver was at law; Thompson v. Greeley, 107 Mo. 577, 17 S. W. 962.

Directors are not liable for the fraud of agents employed by them; 26 W. R. 147; Thomp. Liab. of Dir. 355. Directors of a national bank are not insurers of the fidelity of its agents, and are not responsible for losses resulting from the wrongful act or omission of other directors or agents, unless the loss is a consequence of their own neglect of duty; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662.

It is their duty to use their best efforts to promote the interests of the stockholders, and they cannot acquire any adverse interests; Wardell v. R. Co., 4 Dill. 330, Fed. Cas. No. 17,164; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles v. Downey, 53 Cal. 466, 31 Am. Rep. 62; European & N. A. Ry. Co. v. Poor, 59 Me. 277; Ryan v. R. Co., 21 Kan. 365. A director may become a creditor of a corporation, where his action is not tainted with fraud or other improper act; Borland v. Haven, 37 Fed. 394. It is said to be the rule that contracts made by a director with his company are voidable; L. R. 6 H. L. 189; Wardell v. R. Co., 4 Dill. 330, Fed. Cas. No. 17,164; Appeal of Rice, 79 Pa. 168; Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. Ed. 328; President & Trustees of City of San Diego v. R. Co., 44 Cal. 106. In many instances the courts have held them absolutely void. In a leading English case it was held that the directors were agents of the corporation and could not be permitted to enter into engagements or have any personal interest which might possibly conflict with the interests of the corporation, and that no question could be raised as to the fairness of such a contract; 1 McQ. H. L. (Sc.) 461; and in several American cases taking this view it is considered that directors were subject to the rule applying to all persons standing in relations of trust and involving duties inconsistent with their dealing with the trust property as their own; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Port v. Russell, 36 Ind. 60, 10 Am. Rep. 5; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co., 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184. A high authority says, "there is no sound principle of law or equity which prohibits" such contracts, if entered into in good faith, and where there is a quorum of directors on the other side of the contract present, so that the adoption of the measure does not depend on the vote of the interested director, and even in the latter case the contract is good at law. Because, however, he is on both sides of it, equity will closely scrutinize it and set it aside if it violates the good faith which the circumstances require; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 4059; but in many cases contracts of a corporation with directors, fairly made, have been upheld; Jesup v. R. Co., 43 Fed. 483; Barr v. Glass Co., 51 Fed. 33; Illinois Pneumatic Gas Co. v. Berry, 113 U. S. 322, 5 Sup. Ct. 525, 28 L. Ed. 1003; Barnes v. Brown, 80 N. Y. 527; Smith v. Skeary, 47 Conn. 47. The true rule to be ascertained from the cases is probably, that as to such contract there is a presumption of invalidity which casts upon the party claiming under such contracts the burden of showing that no undue advantage was taken or resulted from the relation, and the evidence must clearly show such fairness and good faith; Skinner v. Smith, 134 N. Y. 240, 31 N. E. 911; Wardell v. R. Co., 103 U. S. 651, 26 L. Ed. 509. Accordingly, the more reasonable view is that first stated, and it is supported by the weight of American authority; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 4061; but courts holding the extreme view that such contracts are void will not enforce the fairest contract if the corporation exercises the option to set it aside; id.

Some courts take the view that in all cases of such contracts their nature and terms and the circumstances under which they were made must be taken into consideration, and that after having been subjected to careful scrutiny they will be enforced if for the benefit of the corporation; Stewart v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 736; Appeal of Hammond, 123 Pa. 503, 16 Atl. 419. A corporation acting in good faith and with the sole object of continuing a business which promises to be successful, may give a mortgage to directors who have lent their credit to it, in order to induce a continuance of that credit, and to obtain renewals of maturing paper at a time when it is in fact a going business and expects to continue in business, although its assets may not in fact equal its indebtedness; Sandford Fork & Tool Co. v. Howe, Browne & Co., 157 U. S. 312, 15 Sup. Ct. 621, 39 L. Ed. 713. See, generally, 3 Thomp. Corp. §§ 4059 to 4075; note by J. C. Harper; Cook v. Sherman, 20 Fed. 175, and one by Dr. Francis Wharton; Meeker v. Iron Co., 17 Fed. 53. This rule extends even to cases where a majority of directors in one corporation contract with another corporation in which they are directors; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 479, n.; Attaway v. Bank, 93 Mo. 485, 5 S. W. 16. A railroad company desired to purchase the entire property of a canal company, both companies having the same president, who by a purchase of a majority of the stock of the canal company at nominal rates obtained the election of directors favorable to the railroad company. Through collusive legal proceedings the railroad company purchased the canal property at a price which was grossly inadequate. The sale was set aside as a sale by a trustee to himself, neither in good faith nor for an adequate consideration; Goodin v. Canal Co., 18 Ohio St. 169, 98 Am. Dec. 95. The same principles are supported by many authorities; Koehler v. Iron Co., 2 Black (U. S.) 715, 17 L. Ed. 339; Cook v. Mill Co., 43 Wis. 433; Stewart v. R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 505; Rice's Appeal, 79 Pa. 168.

In some cases the question has arisen as to the effect of a minority only of the directors being interested in both companies. A contract made between two corporations through their respective boards of directors is not voidable at the suit of one of the parties thereto from the mere circumstance that a minority of its board of directors are also directors of the other company; U. S. Rolling Stock Co. v. R. R., 34 Ohio St. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 380, where the court said it had found no case holding such a contract invalid from the mere fact that a minority of the directors of one company are also directors of the other company, and, "in our judgment, where a majority of the board are not adversely interested and have no adverse employment, the right to avoid the contract or transaction does not exist without proof of fraud or unfairness;" id.; Flagg v. Ry. Co., 10 Fed. 413; Harts v. Brown, 77 Ill. 226. This rule is criticised by Mr. Harper in a note to Cook v. Sherman, 20 Fed. 180, upon the ground that the corporation is entitled to a full board of disinterested directors. In another case it was said: "A director whose personal interests are adverse to those of the corporation has no right to be or act as a director. As soon as he finds that he has personal interests in conflict with those of the company he ought to resign;" Goodin v. Canal Co., 18 Ohio St. 183, 98 Am. Dec. 95. In considering the same subject McCrary, J., said: "Besides, where shall we draw the line? If the presence of two interested directors in the board at the time of the ratification does not vitiate the act, would the presence of a larger number of such directors have that effect, and, if so, what number." Thomas v. R. Co., 2 Fed. 879. On appeal his judgment was affirmed and the supreme court per Miller, J., said, "We concur with the circuit judge that no such contract as this can be enforced in a court of equity where it is resisted and its immorality is brought to light. . . . Such contracts are not absolutely void, but are voidable at the election of the parties affected by the fraud. It may often occur that, notwithstanding the vice of the transaction, namely, the directors or trustees, or a majority of them, being interested in opposition to the interest of those whom they represent, and in reality parties to both sides of the contract, that it may be one which those whose confidence is abused may prefer to ratify or submit to. It is, therefore, at the option of these latter to avoid it, and, until some act of theirs indicates such a purpose, it is not a nullity." Thomas v. R. Co., 109 U. S. 524, 3 Sup. Ct. 315, 27 L. Ed. 1018.

Arrangements made by directors of a railroad company to secure from it unusual advantages through the medium of a new company in which they are to be stockholders, and which is to receive valuable contracts from the railroad company, are not to be enforced by the courts; Wardell v. R. Co., 103 U. S. 651, 26 L. Ed. 509, affirming Wardell v. R. Co., 4 Dill. 330, Fed. Cas. No. 17,164; such contracts cannot be made or ratified by a board of directors including members of the construction company and are void; Thomas v. R. Co., 109 U. S. 522, 3 Sup. Ct. 315, 27 L. Ed. 1018; but a recovery may be had on such a contract for work actually benefiting the railroad company, on a quantum meruit; id.

Third parties, without notice, are not bound to know of limitations placed upon directors by by-laws or otherwise; Brice, Ultra Vires 474; L. R. 5 Ch. 288; Fay v. Noble, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 1; but see Risley v. R. Co., 62 N. Y. 240; Salem Bank v. Bank, 17 Mass. 1, 9 Am. Dec. 111. When convened as a board, the directors are held to possess all the corporate powers; Hoyt v. Thompson's Ex'r, 19 N. Y. 207; Burrill v. Bank, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 163, 35 Am. Dec. 395. As principals they can delegate the performance of acts which they themselves can perform; Jones v. Williams, 139 Mo. 1, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353, 37 L. R. A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436, where it is held that without statutory authority directors have the power to delegate to agents, officers or executive committees the power to transact, not only ordinary business, but business requiring the highest degree of judgment. These agents or managing officers have incidental power to employ all assistants and to do all acts necessary properly to conduct the business over which they have charge. Formal action of the board of directors is not necessary in order to confer the authority. The power expressly given by statute to appoint such subordinate officers and agents as the business of the company may require does not limit nor diminish the common-law power to delegate authority.

Where the charter does not otherwise provide, it is held that a banking corporation may be represented by its cashier in transactions outside of his ordinary duties, without his authority to do so being in writing or appearing upon the record of the proceedings of the directors. His authority may be by parol and inferred from circumstances. It may be inferred from the general manner in which, for a period sufficiently long to establish a settled course of business, he has been allowed to conduct its affairs. It may be implied from the conduct or acquiescence of the directors; Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 3 Sup. Ct. 428, 28 L. Ed. 49; Putnam v. U. S., 162 U. S. 713, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 40 L. Ed. 1118. Statutes requiring a corporation to be managed by directors, but authorizing them to appoint such subordinate officers and agents as the business may require, do not prevent the directors from entrusting the entire management of the business to a president, as this is not a delegation of corporate powers, but a mere authorization to perform the business for and in the name of the corporation; Jones v. Williams, 139 Mo. 1, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353, 37 L. R. A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436.

This may be done either by express resolution or by acquiescence in a course of dealing. A person dealing with the president of a corporation in the usual manner, and within the powers which the president has been accustomed to exercise without the dissent of the directors, would be entitled to assume that the president had actually been invested with those powers; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 538; Jones v. Williams, 139 Mo. 1, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353, 37 L. R. A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436.

It has, however, been contended that, as the directors are agents, they cannot delegate their authority; Gillis v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 149; Charlestown Boot & Shoe Co. v. Dunsmore, 60 N. H. 85; and see Canada-Atlantic & Plant S. S. Co. v. Flanders, 145 Fed. 875, 76 C. C. A. 1 (dictum); 20 Harv. L. Rev. 225, where it is said there is curiously little authority on this point.

The powers of directors of eleemosynary corporations are much greater than those of moneyed corporations; State v. Adams, 44 Mo. 570. Unless the charter provides otherwise, directors need not be chosen from among the stockholders; L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 306; State v. McDaniel, 22 Ohio St. 354.

Directors de facto are, presumably, directors de jure, and their acts bind the company; L. R. 7 Ch. 587. A director who is permitted to act as such after he has sold all his stock, is a director de facto; Wile & Brickner Co. v. Land Co., 4 Misc. 570, 25 N. Y. Supp. 794. See DE FACTO.

Their liability for acts expressly prohibited by the company's charter is not created by force of statutory prohibition. The performance of acts which are illegal or prohibited by law may subject the corporation to a forfeiture of its franchises and the directors to criminal liability; but this would not render them civilly liable for damages. Their liability to the corporation for damages caused by unauthorized acts rests upon the common-law rule, which renders every agent liable who violates his authority, to the damage of his principal. A statutory prohibition is material under these circumstances merely as indicating an express restriction placed upon the powers delegated to the directors when the corporation was formed; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662; Hicks v. Steel, 142 Mich. 292, 105 N. W. 767, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279, where the liability of a bank director for inducing the bank to extend credit to an individual beyond the statutory limit was denied, though he made false representations as to notes offered for discount, on proof that he acted at the time as agent for the borrower, and not as a director.

Directors of a national bank, who merely negligently participated in or assented to false representations as to the bank's condition contained in its official report to the comptroller of the currency, under R. S. §

5211, cannot be held civilly liable to one deceived by such report, since the exclusive test of such liability is under R. S. § 5239, which makes a knowing violation of the national bank act a prerequisite to such liability; Yates v. Bank, 206 U. S. 158, 27 Sup. Ct. 638, 51 L. Ed. 1002, where it was held that this excludes common-law liability, and that a scienter must be proved in order to sustain an action; id.; to the same effect, State v. Allison, 155 Mo. 332, 56 S. W. 467; Cowley v. Smyth, 46 N. J. L. 380, 50 Am. Rep. 432. It has been held that a director is an insurer of the truth of his report; Gerner v. Mosher, 58 Neb. 135, 78 N. W. 384, 46 L. R. A. 244. In Houston v. Thornton, 122 N. C. 365, 29 S. E. 827, 65 Am. St. Rep. 699, bank directors were held liable to one who purchased bank stock relying upon a published statement of the condition of the bank which was false.

The publication of an advertisement in a newspaper by savings bank directors that directors and stockholders are personally responsible for its debts does not constitute a contract with the depositors, but, if intentionally false, affords the basis of an action for deceit; Westervelt v. Demarest, 46 N. J. L. 37, 50 Am. Rep. 400.

Directors of a corporation, who falsely represent its condition to a stockholder, knowing that he seeks information to guide his decision as to selling his stock, are liable for the damages sustained by him on account of their misrepresentations, although they were not made for the purpose of inducing a sale; Rothmiller v. Stein, 143 N. Y. 581, 38 N. E. 718, 26 L. R. A. 148. An action for deceit will lie against a director of a corporation, banking or otherwise (there is no difference), who has made false and fraudulent representations as to its condition, whereby others have been misled and damaged. Such representations need not be personally made, but may consist of voluntary reports or prospectuses which are false and are fraudulently published; Jones v. Williams, 139 Mo. 1, 39 S. W. 486, 40 S. W. 353, 37 L. R. A. 682, 61 Am. St. Rep. 436. Morawetz, Priv. Corp. (2d ed.) § 573.

Where a bank certified under oath to the insurance commissioner that an insurance company seeking a license had a certain deposit, which was false, it was held that one who bought shares in such company in reliance upon such certificate, could not recover against the bank; Hindman v. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 L. R. A. 108; nor will an action for deceit lie upon a statement made for the mere purpose of obtaining a charter; Webb v. Rockefeller, 195 Mo. 57, 93 S. W. 778, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872.

Mere matters of opinion as to the prospect of future profits cannot be misrepresentations; Robertson v. Parks, 76 Md. 118, 24 Atl. 411; and where an officer of a corporation purchases stock from another officer by inducing the latter to believe the value of the shares would decrease, he cannot be held liable for deceit when the stock in fact was resold at a profit; Boulden v. Stilwell, 100 Md. 543, 60 Atl. 609, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258. Where an officer of a corporation procured a transfer of stock to himself by stating that it was worthless, when it was in fact valuable, it was held not a breach of any fiduciary relation and not a ground for avoiding a sale; Krumphaar v. Griffiths, 151 Pa. 223, 25 Atl. 64, denying the existence of any confidential or fiduciary relation between an officer of a corporation and a person from whom such officer purchases stock. Caveat emptor is as sound a rule of law, as caveat emptor, though less frequently invoked; Boulden v. Stilwell, 100 Md. 543, 60 Atl. 609, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258; and where a director bought stock from a stockholder without disclosing facts known to him as director which, if known, would enhance its market value, it was held that the sale would not be set aside; O'Neill v. Ternes, 32 Wash. 528, 73 Pac. 692; see supra.

A director may purchase unmatured obligations of the corporation at a discount, and enforce them at par, if the corporation has not a sinking fund for the same purpose; Glenwood Mfg. Co. v. Syme, 109 Wis. 355, 85 N. W. 432; St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Chenault, 36 Kan. 51, 12 Pac. 303; Marshall v. Carson, 38 N. J. Eq. 250, 48 Am. Rep. 319. When he forecloses a mortgage on corporate property, he has a right to purchase; Lucas v. Friant, 111 Mich. 426, 69 N. W. 735; and it is held he may buy corporate property at an execution sale on a judgment held by him; Marr v. Marr, 72 N. J. Eq. 797, 66 Atl. 182; but see Sebring v. Association, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 629, where it is held the director of a corporation cannot buy corporate property at a judicial sale. He may bid on the foreclosure sale of corporate property; McKittrick v. Ry. Co., 152 U. S. 473, 14 Sup. Ct. 661, 38 L. Ed. 518.

The president and general manager of a corporation were held personally liable for damages caused to a riparian proprietor from the long continued discharge of muddy water into a stream from ore washers operated by the company with their sanction, they having had knowledge of the damage caused thereby; Nunnally v. Iron Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 29 S. W. 361, 28 L. R. A. 421. The president of a corporation, who was also a director, was held personally liable for the wrongful use by his company of a toll bridge, which diverted business from another bridge; Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y. 178, 38 Am. Rep. 407. The president of an irrigation company was held liable for damage to land caused by ditches, which he, as president, had ordered to be dug across another's land; Bates v. Van Pelt, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 20 S. W. 949. In some cases an action has been sustained against officers of a company, together with the corporation itself, for infringement of a patent; see National Car-Brake Shoe Co. v. Mfg. Co., 19 Fed. 514; and an injunction against infringement of a patent; Goodyear v. Phelps, 3 Blatchf. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 5,581; Iowa Barb Steel Wire Co. v. Barbed-Wire Co., 30 Fed. 123; Ca-hoone Barnet Manufg Co. v. Harness Co., 45 Fed. 582, but the later cases usually hold otherwise.

In the absence of a provision of the charter or of a special contract, a director is not entitled to compensation; Ogden v. Murray, 39 N. Y. 202; Gridley v. Ry. Co., 71 Ill. 200; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 55 Ia. 104, 7 N. W. 470, 39 Am. Rep. 167; and he cannot recover therefor even where a resolution to compensate him has been passed after the services were rendered; Accommodation Loan & Saving Fund Ass'n v. Stonemetz, 29 Pa. 534; Kilpatrick v. Bridge Co., 49 Pa. 118, 88 Am. Dec. 497; Manx Ferry Gravel Road Co. v. Branegan, 40 Ind. 361; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 27 Conn. 170; unless the services were outside of the line of his duty as an officer, as obtaining a right of way, soliciting subscriptions, etc.; Lafayette, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Cheeney, 87 Ill. 447; Sargent v. Granite Co., 3 Misc. 325, 23 N. Y. Supp. 886; Ten Eyck v. R. Co., 74 Mich. 226, 41 N. W. 905, 3 L. R. A. 378, 16 Am. St. Rep. 633. But it has been held that, when no salary is prescribed, one appointed to an executive office, like that of cashier, is entitled to reasonable compensation for his services, and that the directors have power to fix the salary after the expiration of the term of office, and this, though such appointee is also a director, and continues to be such while holding the independent office; 20 Fed. 183, note.

There is no implied promise to pay such an officer either for regular or extra services; to subject the corporation to liability, it must be shown that the services were rendered under such circumstances as to raise a fair presumption that the parties intended and understood they were to be paid for; Pew v. Bank, 130 Mass. 391, followed in Fitzgerald & M. Const. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 98, 11 Sup. Ct. 36, 34 L. Ed. 608.

See Pierce, Railr. 31, with cases.

To constitute a legal board of directors, they must meet at a time when and a place where every other director has the opportunity of attending; and there must be a quorum; Percy v. Millaudon, 3 La. 574. See President, etc., of Northampton Bank v. Pepoon, 11 Mass. 288; Hughes v. Bank, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 45; Ridgway v. Bank, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 256, 14 Am. Dec. 681; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46, 7 L. Ed. 47. The fact that notice of a special meeting of the board was not given as provided by the by-laws of a corporation is immaterial, if all the members of the board were in fact present and participated in the proceedings; Minneapolis

Action of directors in the corporate name, in bad faith, and detrimental to its interest, is, with respect to them, the act of the corporation in name only; Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. v. Refining Co., 166 Fed. 254, 92 C. C. A. 318.

The directors of a company which declares dividends, thereby impairing its capital, are liable therefor to the company, though ignorant of its condition as to which they are bound to inform themselves; Cornell v. Sedgwick, 237 Pa. 389, 85 Atl. 446.

A director is entitled to access to all the corporate books; Lawton v. Bedell (N. J.) 71 Atl. 490.

Where directors are required to be stockholders, "qualification" shares may be transferred for that purpose; this suffices if the director holds them during his term, but not if he returns them to the owner with a power of attorney for transfer; In re Ringler & Co., 204 N. Y. 30, 97 N. E. 593, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1036.

DIRECTORY STATUTE. See STATUTE.

DIRIMANT IMPEDIMENTS. Those bars which annul a consummated marriage.

DISABILITY. The want of legal capacity. "Incapacity to do a legal act." It would include the resignation of a judge before signing a bill of exceptions; McIntyre v. Modern Woodmen of America, 200 Fed. 1, 121 C. C. A. 1. See ABATEMENT; DEVISE; DEED; INFANCY; INSANITY; LIMITATION; MARRIAGE; PARTIES.

DISABLING STATUTES (also called the Restraining Statutes). The acts of 1 Eliz. c. 19, 13 Eliz. c. 10, 14 Eliz. cc. 11, 14, 18 Eliz. c. 11, and 43 Eliz. c. 29, by which the power of ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporations to lease their lands was restricted. 2 Bla. Com. 319, 321; Co. Litt. 44 a; 2 Steph. Com. 735.

DISAFFIRMANCE. The act by which a person who has entered into a voidable contract, as, for example, an infant, disagrees to such contract and declares he will not abide by it.

Disaffirmance is expressed or implied:—the former, when the declaration that the party will not abide by the contract is made in terms; the latter, when he does an act which plainly manifests his determination not to abide by it: as, where an infant made a deed for his land, and on coming of age he made a deed for the same land to another; 2 D. & B. 320; Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 58, 9 L. Ed. 345; Inhabitants of Worcester v. Eaton, 13 Mass. 371, 375, 7 Am. Dec. 155.

DISAFFOREST. To restore to their former condition lands which have been turned into forests. To remove from the operation of the forest laws. 2 Bla. Com. 416.

DISAVOW. To deny the authority by which an agent pretends to have acted, as when he has exceeded the bounds of his authority.

It is the duty of the principal to fulfil the contracts which have been entered into by his authorized agent; and when an agent has exceeded his authority he ought promptly to disavow such act, so that the other party may have his remedy against the agent. See AGENT; PRINCIPAL.

DISBAR. In England, to expel a barrister from the bar. Wharton. This is in England a colloquial term. The particular Inn of Court, in a case requiring its action, "vacates the call" to their own Inn. The judges give and take away the "right of audience." See COUNCIL OF THE BAR, GENERAL; and BARRISTER, as to disbaring barristers; LAW SOCIETY, as to the practice of striking solicitors from the rolls in England.

In the United States, to deprive a person of the right to practise as an attorney at law.

Courts have jurisdiction and power upon their own motion without formal complaint or petition, in a proper case, to strike the name of an attorney from the roll, provided he has had reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard; Ex parte Steinman, 95 Pa. 220, 40 Am. Rep. 637; In re Orton, 54 Wis. 379, 11 N. W. 584; In re Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552.

A lawyer may be disbarred only for misdemeanor in his professional capacity, or affecting his professional character, but not for a criminal offence without formal indictment, trial and conviction. His office as attorney is property of which he cannot be deprived except by judgment of his peers and by the law of the land; Ex parte Steinman, 95 Pa. 220, 40 Am. Rep. 637. But while this is true as a general rule, it is not an inflexible one, and there may be cases where it is proper for the court to proceed without such previous conviction; In re Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552. In this case the proof was clear, there was a failure to offer any counter proof, and an evasive denial of the charge which was that the attorney was engaged in a tumultuous and riotous gathering for the purpose of lynching.

Courts have no inherent power to disbar an attorney for conviction of crime in a foreign jurisdiction, where the legislature has expressly provided what convictions shall result in disbarment and has not included those in foreign jurisdictions; In re Ebbs, 150 N. C. 44, 63 S. E. 190, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 892, 17 Ann. Cas. 592. In the absence of restrictive legislation, courts have an inherent power to strike from their rolls names of attorneys who are found, by reason of their conduct, unfit and unworthy; State v. Kirke, 12 Fla. 278, 95 Am. Dec. 314.

A judgment of disbarment by a divided court in another state, no order of disbarment being made, pending on appeal to a higher court, is insufficient as a ground for a revocation of an attorney's license; In re Baum, 10 Mont. 223, 25 Pac. 99.

An attorney may be disbarred for charging a judge with corrupt practices; Matter of Murray, 58 Hun 604, 11 N. Y. Supp. 336; In re Robinson, 48 Wash. 153, 92 Pac. 929, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525, 15 Ann. Cas. 415 (notwithstanding the withdrawal of the charge and an apology, but in view of that the attorney was merely suspended for six months); discussing a court's decision in a disrespectful way; In re Breen, 30 Nev. 164, 93 Pac. 1004; State Board of Law Examiners v. Hart, 104 Minn. 88, 116 N. W. 212, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 585, 15 Ann. Cas. 197; embodying in his brief in the appellate court "contemptuous, unbearable and unwarranted language" designed to influence a decision of the court by base appeals to the supposed timidity of the justices; In re Philbrook, 105 Cal. 471, 38 Pac. 511, 884, 45 Am. St. Rep. 59 (where the attorney was suspended for three years); libelous charges against a judge; U. S. v. Green, 85 Fed. 857; unwarrantably charging a judge and another attorney with bribery and unprofessional conduct; People v. Green, 9 Colo. 506, 13 Pac. 514; In re Maines, 121 Mich. 603, 80 N. W. 714; or on conviction and fine in the United States court for unlawful use of the mails; People v. Weeber, 26 Colo. 229, 57 Pac. 1079; or on conviction of felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; In re Kirby, 10 S. D. 414, 73 N. W. 908; or for fighting a duel and killing his antagonist, and being indicted for murder in another state; Smith v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 228; or for procuring admission or license to practice law fraudulently; People v. Gilmore, 214 Ill. 569, 73 N. E. 737, 69 L. R. A. 701; People v. Campbell, 26 Cal. 481, 58 Pac. 591; State Board of Law Examiners v. Williams, 116 Tenn. 51, 92 S. W. 521; for gross disrespect to the court; Sharon v. Hill, 24 Fed. 726; or for any breach of fidelity to the court; In re Eldridge, 82 N. Y. 161, 37 Am. Rep. 558; Strout v. Proctor, 71 Me. 288; perjury or subornation of perjury; 10 M. & W. 28; violation of the confidence of a client; Strout v. Proctor, 71 Me. 288. So also for an advertisement as a divorce lawyer, signed or unsigned; People v. Goodrich, 79 Ill. 148; Smith v. People, 32 Colo. 251, 75 Pac. 914; People v. Smith, 200 Ill. 442, 66 N. E. 27, 93 Am. St. Rep. 206; employing runners to hunt up cases and charging fictitious expenses; Appeal of Maires, 189 Pa. 99, 41 Atl. 988; being bookmaker at races in England; 40 Am. L. Rev. 104, cited from 40 L. Jour. 856; appearing for both parties in actions involving the same issue, using legal process in an abusive and oppressive manner, and aiding and counseling bribery of a city officer; In re O'Connell, 174 Mass. 253, 53 N. E. 1001, 54 N. E. 558; receiving money from a woman to secure pardon for her husband under promise to return half of it if he did not succeed, and after failure appropriating it to his own use; In re O'Sullivan, 122 App. Div. 527, 107 N. Y. Supp. 462; bringing a divorce suit without authority and acting in fraudulent collusion with the husband to procure the divorce without knowledge of the wife; Dillon v. State, 6 Tex. 55. For any unprofessional conduct disbarment or suspension may be inflicted; In re Smith, 73 Kan. 743, 85 Pac. 584; State Board of Examiners in Law v. Reynolds, 98 Minn. 44, 107 N. W. 144; State v. Harber, 129 Mo. 271, 31 S. W. 889.

The complaint must affect the official character of the attorney; Wooldridge v. Gage, 68 Ill. 157; Ex parte Steinman, 95 Pa. 220, 40 Am. Rep. 637. The offence need not be an indictable one; but its character must be such as to show the attorney unfit to be trusted with the powers of the profession; 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 32; Baker v. Com., 10 Bush (Ky.) 592; U. S. v. Porter, 2 Cra. C. C. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 16,072; In re Austin, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 191, 28 Am. Dec. 657. But ignorance of the law is not a cause for disbarment; Bryant's Case, 24 N. H. 149.

On being convicted of felony an attorney loses his right to practise in court without an order removing him; In re Niles, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 465. Neither pardon for felony nor a satisfactory settlement with the injured party affects the court's power to disbar; Sanborn v. Kimball, 64 Me. 140; In re Davies, 93 Pa. 116, 39 Am. Rep. 729; Weeks, Attys. § 83.

Disbarment is not by way of punishment, but in the exercise by the court of its discretion to determine whether one admitted as an attorney is a proper person to be continued on the roll; In re Adriaans, 17 App. D. C. 39; In re Palmer, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. 94; or for the protection of the court, the proper administration of justice, the public good and the protection of clients; Ex parte Finn, 32 Or. 519, 52 Pac. 756, 67 Am. St. Rep. 550; it leaves to the attorney his full rights of citizenship; In re Thatcher, 83 Ohio St. 246, 93 N. E. 895, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 810.

The enumeration in a statute of causes of disbarment or suspension does not limit the common-law power of the court in that respect and the penalty may be inflicted for other than statutory grounds; In re Smith, 73 Kan. 743, 85 Pac. 584; Bar Ass'n of Boston v. Greenwood, 168 Mass. 169, 46 N. E.

568; State v. Gebhardt, 87 Mo. App. 542; contra, In re Collins, 147 Cal. 8, 81 Pac. 220. The power to disbar is not arbitrary and despotic, to be exercised at the pleasure of the court or from passion, prejudice, or personal hostility, but in a sound judicial discretion; State v. Stiles, 48 W. Va. 425, 37 S. E. 620. The manner of proceeding is said to be largely in the discretion of the court, so long as it is exercised without oppression and injustice, and to be used reasonably with moderation and caution; it is judicial in its character, but the inquiry is not the trial of an action or suit, but an investigation by the court into the conduct of one of its own officers in the exercise of the disciplinary jurisdiction which it has over them; In re Durant, 80 Conn. 140, 67 Atl. 497, 10 Ann. Cas. 539.

A proceeding for disbarment of an attorney is civil in its character and not criminal; Keithley v. Stevens, 238 Ill. 199, 87 N. E. 375, 128 Am. St. Rep. 120; State v. Fourchy, 106 La. 743, 31 South. 325; In re Burnette, 73 Kan. 609, 85 Pac. 575; In re Crum, 7 N. D. 316, 75 N. W. 257; In re Ebbs, 150 N. C. 44, 63 S. E. 190, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 892, 17 Ann. Cas. 592; Garfield v. U. S., 32 App. D. C. 109; In re Biggers, 24 Okl. 842, 104 Pac. 1083, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 622; In re Spencer, 137 App. Div. 330, 122 N. Y. Supp. 190; Wernimont v. State, 101 Ark. 210, 142 S. W. 194, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1156; but in one case it was said that such a proceeding, while not strictly criminal, is quasi criminal; State v. Quarles, 158 Ala. 54, 48 South. 499.

Proceedings at common law for disbarment or suspension should be in the name of the state, but under a statute directing suspension for not paying over money collected, no method of proceeding being prescribed, the client for whom the money was collected is the proper party; Wilson v. Popham, 91 Ky. 327, 15 S. W. 859.

A disbarred attorney's election as attorney-general is void; Danforth v. Egan, 23 S. D. 43, 119 N. W. 1021, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418.

See ATTORNEY.

DISBURSEMENT. Money paid out by an executor, guardian, or trustee, on account of the fund in his hands. The necessary expenditures incurred in an action, and which, under the codes of procedure of some of the states, are included in the costs, are also so called. But see Wright's Adm'r's v. Wilkerson, 41 Ala. 267; Case v. Price, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 111.

DISCEPTATIO CAUSÆ (Lat.). In Roman Law. The argument of a cause by the counsel on both sides. Calvinus, Lex.

DISCHARGE. The act by which a person in confinement under some legal process, or held on an accusation of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty; the writing containing the order for his being so set at liberty is also called a discharge.

The discharge of a defendant, in prison under a ca. sa., when made by the plaintiff, has the operation of satisfying the debt, the plaintiff having no other remedy; 4 Term 526.

But when the discharge is in consequence of the insolvent laws, or the defendant dies in prison, the debt is not satisfied. In the first case the plaintiff has a remedy against the property of the defendant acquired after his discharge, and in the last case against the executors or administrators of the debtor. Bacon, Abr. Execution, D; Bingham, Execution 266.

The word has still other uses. Thus, we speak of the discharge of a surety, whereby he is released from his liability; of a debt; of a contract; of lands, or money in the funds, from an incumbrance; of an order of a court of justice, when such order is vacated; 2 Steph. Com. 107, 161. We also speak of a discharge in bankruptcy; Boyn-ton v. Ball, 121 U. S. 457, 7 Sup. Ct. 981, 30 L. Ed. 985; Scott v. Ellery, 142 U. S. 381, 12 Sup. Ct. 233, 35 L. Ed. 1050; Fowle v. Park, 48 Fed. 789.

DISCHARGE OF CONTRACT. A contract may be discharged in the following ways: Performance according to its terms; a breach of such a nature as to justify the innocent party in treating the contract as rescinded or as giving rise to a right of action for breach of the entire contract; rescission of a voidable contract, at the will of one party, as for fraud, mistake, duress; release; rescission by parol agreement; accord and satisfaction; cancellation and surrender; alteration (of a written contract); merger (in judgment); arbitration and award; impossibility; bankruptcy; statutes of limitation, though the latter generally only bars the remedy. A right of action on a contract may be discharged in any of these ways except where a breach justifies the innocent party in treating the contract as rescinded, or as giving rise to a right of action, or in the case of impossibility. Williston's Wald's Pollock on Contracts. An executed contract cannot be discharged except by release under seal or by performance, except that a promissory note or a bill of exchange stands on a different footing; 6 Exch. 851, per Parke, B.; but only, in the United States, when the note or bill has been surrendered; Bragg v. Danielson, 141 Mass. 195, 4 N. E. 622; it is said here to have become extinguished; Slade v. Mutrie, 156 Mass. 19, 30 N. E. 168.

Discharge may be by payment under the contract, or, after breach, by an agreement which is effectual as an accord and satisfaction (q. v.). Tender of performance, such as by delivery of goods, discharges the party; but tender of a sum of money due under the contract does not work a discharge; the party must stand ready and willing to pay the debt, and, if sued, must pay the money into court. A substantial performance will suffice; Crouch v. Gutmann, 134 N. Y. 45, 31 N. E. 271, 30 Am. St. Rep. 608, but if the deviation is not slight, or is willful, it is otherwise; Elliott v. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357, 45 N. W. 845, 9 L. R. A. 52; and one to whom a sum of money is tendered must not be called upon to make change; Anson, Contr. 349.

Discharge may be by breach, though a breach, while it always gives a right of action, does not always discharge the contract, for it may be broken in whole or in part, and if the latter, the breach may not be important enough to work a discharge, or the other party may not regard it as a breach but may continue to carry out the contract. See BREACH.

Where a contract between A and X is discharged by default of X, A may (1) consider himself exonerated from any further performance and successfully defend an action brought for non-performance; (2) sue at once upon the contract for such damages as he has sustained by the breach without being obliged to show that such performance has been done or tendered by him; (3) if he has done all or a portion of that which he promised, so as to have a claim to a money payment for such performance, he may treat such a claim as due upon a new contract arising upon the promise which is understood from the acceptance of an executed consideration; Anson, Contr. 352. Prof. Huffcut in his edition of Anson's Contr. points out that the first two propositions are illustrated in Davison v. Von Lingen, 113 U. S. 40, 5 Sup. Ct. 346, 28 L. Ed. 885; and that the second is discussed in Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 38 N. E. 773, 30 L. R. A. 33; also that A may elect and keep the contract for both parties, thus giving X a period for repentance; Kadish v. Young, 108 Ill. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 548; but he cannot thereby increase the damages; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231.

A party may break a contract by renouncing his liabilities under it, or by making it impossible that he should fulfill them, or by failing totally or partially to perform what he has promised. As to anticipatory breaches, see BREACH.

Where one party has, before performance is due, created an impossibility of performance, this is equivalent to a renunciation of the contract; Anson, Contr. 356; U. S. v. Peck, 102 U. S. 64, 26 L. Ed. 46. So where, during performance, one party has made it impossible for the other to perform; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Semmes, 73 Md. 9, 20 Atl. 127; Woodberry v. Warner, 53 Ark. 488, 14 S. W. 67; Bing, 14; [1895] 2 Q. B. 70.

As to breaches of contracts containing conditional and independent promises, see BREACH.

A contract may contain the elements of its own discharge, which may be by non-fulfilment of a condition precedent, by the occurrence of a condition subsequent, or by the exercise of an option to determine the contract reserved to one of the parties by its terms; Anson, Contr. 338. Of the first, a case in L. R. 7 Exch. 7, is in point, where a horse was warranted to have been hunted with the Bicester hounds and if it did not answer to its description, the buyer might return it. It did not answer to its description and had never been so hunted. Held, that the buyer might return it, though injured without his fault; the sale vested the property in the buyer subject to a right of rescission in a particular event; the depreciation in value must fall upon the person in whom the property reverted. In such case the buyer may refuse to receive the article if he discovers that the term is not fulfilled; Ganson v. Madigan, 13 Wis. 67; or on discovery he may return it; but not, it was held, if injured while in his possession; Ray v. Thompson, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 231, 59 Am. Dec. 187. Instances of conditions subsequent are bonds defeasible upon a condition expressed therein and the "excepted risks" of charter parties.

If a statute requires the contract to be in writing, there is authority for saying that a discharge may be by word of mouth; 5 B. & A. 66; Anson, Contr. 343; Wulschner v. Ward, 115 Ind. 219, 17 N. E. 273. "But if the discharge be not a simple rescission, but such an implied discharge as arises from the making of a new agreement inconsistent with the old one, then there must be writing in accordance with the requirements of the statute;" Anson, Contr. 343; Hill v. Blake, 97 N. Y. 216; Burns v. Real Estate Co., 52 Minn. 31, 53 N. W. 1017; contra, Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 31.

See ESTOPPEL.

DISCHARGE OF A JURY. See JURY.

DISCLAIMER. A disavowal; a renunciation; as, for example, the act by which a patentee renounces part of his title of invention.

Of Estates. The act by which a party refuses to accept an estate which has been conveyed to him. Thus, a trustee is said to disclaim who releases to his fellow-trustees his estate, and relieves himself of the trust; 1 Hill, R. P. 354; Watson v. Watson, 13 Conn. 83; Jackson v. Richards, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 617.

Of Tenancy. The act of a person in possession, who denies holding the estate of the person who claims to be the owner. 2 Nev.

& M. 672. An affirmation, by pleading or otherwise, in a court of record, that the reversion is in a stranger. It works a forfeiture of the lease at common law; Co. Litt. 251; 1 Cruise, Dig. 109; but not, it is said, in the United States; 1 Washb. R. P. 93. Equity will not aid a tenant in denying his landlord's title; Peyton v. Stith, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 486, 8 L. Ed. 200.

In Patent Law. A declaration in writing, filed under the patent laws, by an inventor whose claim as filed covers more than that of which he was the original inventor, renouncing such parts as he does not claim to hold. See PATENT.

In Pleading. A renunciation by the defendant of all claim to the subject of the demand made by the plaintiff.

IN EQUITY. It must, in general be accompanied by an answer; Ellsworth v. Curtis, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 105; 2 Russ. 458; 2 Y. & C. 546; Worthington v. Lee, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 678; and always when the defendant has so connected himself with the matter that justice cannot be done otherwise; 9 Sim. 102. It must renounce all claim in any capacity and to any extent; Bentley v. Cowman, 6 G. & J. (Md.) 152. It may be to part of a bill only, but it must be clearly a separate and distinct part of the bill; Story, Eq. Pl. § 839. A disclaimer may, in general, be abandoned, and a claim put in upon subsequent discovery of a right; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 310.

AT LAW. In real actions, a disclaimer of tenancy or estate is frequently added to the plea of non-tenure; Littleton § 391; Porter v. Rummary, 10 Mass. 64. The plea may be either in abatement or in bar; Prescott v. Hutchinson, 13 Mass. 439; Olney v. Adams, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 31; as to the whole or any part of the demanded premises; Stearns, Real Act. 193.

At common law it is not pleaded as a bar to the action, nor is it strictly a plea in abatement, as it does not give the plaintiff a better writ. It contains no prayer for judgment, and is not concluded with a verification. It is in effect an offer by the plaintiff to yield to the claim of the demandant and admit his title to the land; Stearns, Real Act. 193. It cannot, in general, be made by a person incapable of conveying the land. It is equivalent to a judgment in favor of the demandant, except when costs are demanded; Prescott v. Hutchinson, 13 Mass. 439; in which case there must be a replication by the demandant; Favour v. Sargent, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 5; no formal replication is requisite; Bratton v. Mitchell, 5 Watts (Pa.) 70. See 1 Washb. R. P. 93.

DISCONTINUANCE. In Pleading. The chasm or interruption which occurs when no answer is given to some material matter in the preceding pleading, and the opposite party neglects to take advantage of such omission. See Com. Dig. Pleader, W.; Bac. Abr. Pleas, P. It is distinguished from insufficient pleading by the fact that the pleading does not profess to answer all the preceding pleading in a case of discontinuance; 1 Wms. Saund. 28, n. It constitutes error, but may be cured after verdict, by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 80, and after judgment by nil dicit, confession, or non sum informatus under 4 Anne, c. 16. See, generally, 1 Saund. 28; 4 Rep. 62 a; Taft v. Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 414.

In Practice. The chasm or interruption in proceedings occasioned by the failure of the plaintiff to continue the suit regularly from time to time, as he ought; 3 Bla. Com. 296; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Francis, 52 Miss. 467, 24 Am. Rep. 674; Taft v. Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 416. The entry upon record of a discontinuance has the same effect. The plaintiff cannot discontinue after demurrer joined and entered, or after verdict or writ of inquiry, without leave of court; Cro. Jac. 35; 1 Lilly, Abr. 473; 8 C. C. App. 437; but see Lowman v. West, 7 Wash. 407, 35 Pac. 130; although he can notwithstanding the interposition of a counterclaim; Felix v. Vanslooten, 17 N. Y. Sup. 844; and is generally liable for costs when he discontinues, though not in all cases. Leave to discontinue will be refused when proofs had been taken and closed at large expense to defendant, when no other ground is shown except a desire to relitigate in a new suit the questions involved; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Mayer & Englund Co., 121 Fed. 127. See Hart v. Storey, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 143; Ludlow v. Hackett, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 252; Lackey v. McDonald, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 116; Thurman v. James, 48 Mo. 235; Etheridge v. Osborn, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 402; Com. Dig. Pleader (W 5); Bac. Abr. Plea (5 P).

DISCONTINUANCE OF ESTATES. An alienation made or suffered by the tenant in tail, or other tenant seised in autre droit, by which the issue in tail, or heir, or successor, or those in reversion or remainder, are driven to their action, and cannot enter.

The term discontinuance is used to distinguish those cases where the party whose freehold is ousted can restore it only by action, from those in which he may restore it by entry; Co. Litt. 325 a; 3 Bla. Com. 171; Ad. Ej. 35; Bac. Abr.; Viner, Abr.

It was a survival of the old law which rigidly protected seizure even against the true owner. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 496.

Discontinuances of estates, prior to their express abolition, had long become obsolete, and they are now abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106; Moz. & W. Dic.; 1 Steph. Com. 510, n.

DISCONTINUOUS SERVITUDE. An easement made up of repeated acts instead of one continuous act, such as right of way, drawing water, etc. See EASEMENT.

DISCOUNT. Interest reserved from the amount loaned at the time of making a loan. An allowance sometimes made for prompt payment. As a verb, it is used to denote the act of giving money for a bill of exchange or promissory note, deducting the interest. Dunkle v. Renick, 6 Ohio St. 527; Niagara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 87; Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Towner, 13 Conn. 249; State v. Savings Institution, 48 Mo. 189; Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 5 L. Ed. 631; Saltmarsh v. Bank, 14 Ala. 677; Weckler v. Bank, 42 Md. 592, 20 Am. Rep. 95.

Discounting means to take interest in advance; McLean v. Bank, 3 McLean 597, Fed. Cas. No. 8,888. It is a mode of loaning money; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 678; Weckler v. Bank, 42 Md. 592, 20 Am. Rep. 95. As to whether discounting includes buying and selling, the cases are not uniform. It is held to be another name for buying at a discount; Tracy v. Talmage, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 456; Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 5 L. Ed. 631; Pape v. Bank, 20 Kan. 450, 27 Am. Rep. 183; contra, First Nat. Bank of Rochester v. Pierson, 24 Minn. 141, 31 Am. Rep. 341; Niagara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 87. See 16 L. R. A. 223, note.

In an ordinary commercial document, discount means rebate of interest and not "true" or mathematical discount; [1896] 2 Ch. 320.

A discount by a bank means ex vi termini a deduction or drawback made upon its advances or loans of money upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt, payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank. It is the difference between the price and the amount of the debt, the evidence of which is transferred; National Bank v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 276, 26 L. Ed. 742; Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 350, 5 L. Ed. 631.

The taking of legal interest in advance is, not usurious; but it is only allowed for the benefit of trade and where the bill or note discounted is meant for circulation and is for a short term; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 678; President, etc., of Bank of Utica v. Wager, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 712; Bank of Utica v. Phillips, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 408.

There is a difference between buying a bill and discounting it. The former word is used when the seller does not indorse the bill and is not accountable for its payment; McElwee v. Collins, 20 N. C. 350; but the discount of negotiable paper at more than a lawful rate of interest includes purchase of such paper as well as loans; Danforth v. Bank, 48 Fed. 271, 1 C. C. A. 62, 17 L. R. A. 622.

The bona fide sale of a note, made in good faith for full value in its inception, is valid and not usurious, but if in its origin it was only a nominal negotiation, it is invalidated by a subsequent usurious transaction; Nichols v. Fearson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 103, 8 L. Ed. 623; Junction R. Co. v. Bank, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 226, 20 L. Ed. 385.

The discount of a note at more than legal interest, for an indorser who was neither maker nor payee, is not usurious; Gaul v. Willis, 26 Pa. 259; Moore v. Baird, 30 Pa. 138; Cram v. Hendricks, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 569 (but it must be a bona fide sale and not a device to cover usury and it may be indorsed by the transferor; French v. Grindie, 15 Me. 163; Roark v. Turner, 29 Ga. 455; National Bank of Michigan v. Green, 33 Ia. 140); but this rule only applies to business paper, since the sale of accommodation paper at a discount of more than legal interest is usurious; Belden v. Lamb, 17 Conn. 441; in some cases it is held that if the vendor indorses or guarantees or otherwise becomes liable for the payment of the bill or note, the transaction is usurious; National Bank v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 271, 26 L. Ed. 742; Cowles v. McVickar, 3 Wis. 725, where, however, it was also held that the indorsement was valid to pass a good title to the holder as against the maker though usurious as against the indorser; the note, being valid in its inception, was not vitiated by the subsequent transaction except as against the indorser. The last ruling, however, was said to be obiter dictum, but, the question arising for adjudication, the view was approved and the subsequent case so decided; Armstrong v. Gibson, 31 Wis. 61, 11 Am. Rep. 599.

The discounting of negotiable paper under the national bank act is synonymous with loans; National Bank v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 271, 26 L. Ed. 742, citing Niagara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 68, to the effect that to discount paper is "only a mode of loaning money with the right to take the interest allowed by law in advance." See NATIONAL BANKS.

Where in an act of incorporation the exercise of banking powers was prohibited, it was held that thereby the discounting of notes was forbidden; United German Bank v. Katz, 57 Md. 128, 139; Sewell, Banking.

The true discount for a given sum, for a given time, is such a sum as will in that time amount to the interest of the sum to be discounted. Wharton.

In Practice. A set-off or defalcation in an action. Viner, Abr. Discount. But see Trabue's Ex'r v. Harris, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 597.

In common-law actions there was a plea of discount, but it is little used. In Delaware, where the common-law pleading is closely adhered to and short pleas are frequently used, it was said that there was never any definite idea connected with the plea of discount in the Delaware practice; that they could not "give it the force or meaning of a plea of set-off." Glazier v. McCallister, 5 Harring. (Del.) 41. Hence that plea is rather intended for use when matter which constitutes a deduction or defalcation of or from the plaintiff's claim is introduced to reduce it.

DISCOVERT. Not covert; unmarried. The term is applied to a woman unmarried, or widow,—one not within the bonds of matrimony.

DISCOVERY. The act of finding an unknown country.

The nations of Europe adopted the principle that the discovery of any part of America gave title to the government by whose subjects or by whose authority it was made, as against all European governments. This title was to be consummated by possession; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 543, 5 L. Ed. 681; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 367, 16 L. Ed. 997; 2 Washb. R. P. 518.

By the law of nations, dominion of new territory may be acquired by discovery and occupation as well as by cession or conquest; Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 202, 11 Sup. Ct. 80, 34 L. Ed. 691.

An invention or improvement. See PATENT. Also used of the disclosure by a bankrupt of his property for the benefit of creditors.

In Practice. The disclosure of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or the production of deeds, writings, or things in his possession or power, in order to maintain the right or title of the party asking it, in some other suit or proceeding.

It was originally an equitable form of procedure, and a bill of discovery, strictly so called, was brought to assist parties to suits in other courts. Every bill in equity is in some sense a bill of discovery, since it seeks a disclosure from the defendant, on his oath of the truth of the circumstances constituting the plaintiff's case as propounded in his bill; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1483; but the term is technically applied as defined above. See De Wolf v. De Wolf, 4 R. I. 450. Many important questions have arisen out of the exercise of this power by equity; but these are of comparatively little practical importance in England and many of the states, where parties may be made witnesses and compelled to produce books and papers in courts of law.

Such bills are greatly favored in equity, and are sustained in all cases where some well-founded objection does not exist against the exercise of the jurisdiction; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1488; Skinner v. Judson, 8 Conn. 528, 21 Am. Dec. 691; Wolf v. Wolf's Ex'r, 2 H. & G. (Md.) 382, 18 Am. Dec. 313. Some of the more important of the objections are,—first, that the subject is not cognizable in any municipal court of justice; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1489; second, that the court will not lend its aid to obtain a discovery for the particular court for which it is wanted, where the court can itself compel a discovery; 2 Ves. 451; Fitzhugh v. Everingham, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 605; Wheeler v. Wadleigh, 37 N. H. 55; third, that the plaintiff is not entitled by reason of personal disability; fourth, that the plaintiff has no title to the character in which he sues; Lansing v. Pine, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 639; fifth, that the value of the suit is beneath the dignity of the court; sixth, that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject-matter or title to the discovery required; 2 Bro. C. C. 321; Coombs v. Warren, 17 Me. 404; Marion Nat. Bank v. Abell's Adm'x, 88 Ky. 428, 11 S. W. 300, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 980; or that an action for which it is wanted will not lie; 3 Bro. C. C. 155; 1 Bligh, N. S. 120; 3 Y. & C. 255; seventh, that the defendant is not answerable to the plaintiff, but that some other person has a right to call for the discovery; eighth, that the policy of the law exempts the defendant from the discovery, as on account of the peculiar relations of the parties; 2 Y. & C. 107; City Bank v. Bangs, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 36; in case of arbitrators; 2 Vern. 380; 3 Atk. 529; ninth, that the defendant is not bound to discover his own title; Bisph. Eq. 561; 1 Vern. 105; Mange v. Guenat, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 141; see Downie v. Nettleton, 61 Conn. 593, 24 Atl. 977; or that he is a bona fide purchaser without notice of the plaintiff's claim; 8 Sim. 153; McNeil v. Hill, 5 Mas. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 8,915; Wood v. Mann, 1 Sumn. 506, Fed. Cas. No. 17,951; Vattier v. Hinde, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 252, 8 L. Ed. 675; Varick v. Briggs, 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 323; and see Hart v. Bank, 33 Vt. 252; Howell v. Ashmore, 9 N. J. Eq. 82, 57 Am. Dec. 371; tenth, that the discovery is not material in the suit; 2 Ves. 491; Gelston v. Hoyt, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 548; eleventh, that the defendant is a mere witness; 2 Bro. C. C. 332; Geer v. Kissom, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 129; but see 2 Ves. 451; 1 Sch. & L. 227; 11 Sim. 305; Vermilyea v. Bank, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 37; twelfth, that the discovery called for would criminate the defendant; Noyes v. Thorpe, 73 N. H. 481, 62 Atl. 787, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636, where a demurrer to a bill in aid of an action for libel was sustained upon that ground, the discovery sought being the name of the author of the article complained of. In L. R. 24 Q. B. D. 445, note, the English court of appeal refused to compel the same discovery on the ground that it was a "fishing" interrogatory.

The suit must be of a purely civil nature, and may not be a criminal prosecution; Lofft 1; 19 How. St. Tr. 1154; Broadbent v. State, 7 Md. 416; a penal action; 1 Keen 329; Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatchf. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 640; a suit partaking of this character; U. S. v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 100, 7 L. Ed. 69; Northrop v. Hatch, 6 Conn. 361; Higdon v. Heard, 14 Ga. 255; or a case involving moral turpitude. See 1 Bligh, N. S. 96; 2 E. L. & Eq. 117; 5 Madd. 229; 11 Beav. 380; 1 Sim. 404; Pleasants v. Glasscock, 1 S. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 17. In a civil action for conspiracy a discovery of material documents cannot be refused merely because they tend to crim-inate one or to involve him in a criminal charge; [1906] A. C. 434; and in a suit against a newspaper proprietor for both libel and conspiracy the discovery cannot be avoided on the ground either of privilege or self-extermination; [1899] 2 Ir. Rep. Q. B. 199.

Workmen pledged to secrecy and employed in a factory in which the business is conducted in private, to secure secrecy as to the method of manufacture, will not be compelled, in a suit against their employer, to disclose such secrets; Dobson v. Graham, 49 Fed. 17.

A corporation not a party to a suit will not be compelled to open its records which it is claimed will disclose something of importance to the litigation; Henry v. Ins. Co., 35 Fed. 15; nor is an adverse examination of a defendant before trial allowable for the purpose of discovering a cause of action; Britton v. MacDonald, 3 Misc. 514, 23 N. Y. Supp. 350; Nathan v. Whitehill, 67 Hun 398, 22 N. Y. Supp. 63.

An infant party to an action cannot be compelled to make discovery of documents; [1892] 2 Q. B. 178.

The court has power to allow a party to an action to take photographs of documents in the possession of the other party; [1893] 2 Q. B. 191.

It seems to be settled that a bill will lie against a corporation and its officers to compel a discovery from the officers, to aid a plaintiff or a defendant in maintaining or defending a suit brought against or by the corporation alone; McComb v. R. Co., 7 Fed. 426, 19 Blatchf. 69; 1 Ch. D. 71; Post v. R. Co., 144 Mass. 347, 11 N. E. 540, 59 Am. Rep. 86. Since it answers under its seal and not upon oath, there can be no discovery by a corporation unless its officers or agents who know the facts are made parties; Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Agricultural Works, 38 Fed. 378; Vaughn v. R. Co., 1 Flip. 621, Fed. Cas. No. 16,898; but an officer of a corporation cannot be joined as defendant in a bill of discovery where he did not derive the desired information in his official capacity; McComb v. R. Co., 7 Fed. 426.

In the sense in which the word is used with respect to equity suits generally, there was, until a comparatively recent period, a failure to recognize the distinction between the two functions of an answer in chancery, viz.: discovery and defence. These two were in the civil law entirely separated, while in chancery they were indiscriminately commingled. The distinction is very clearly put in Langdell's Equity Pleadings, 2d ed. § 68, where the author attributes to Wigram (Disc., 2d ed. § 17) and Hare (Disc. 223) the simultaneous notice of what he terms "the unnatural union." The distinction is important because, when it is borne in mind, the "rule for determining what discovery the defendant must give in his answer becomes simple and uniform. He must answer categorically every material allegation and charge in the bill, unless he has some objection which would be good in the mouth of a witness." In a note to his second edition, Professor Langdell characterizes this rule as too narrow, and sets forth cases in which a defendant may object to answer as to matters which as a witness he could not. Among these are the cases of a defendant against whom no case is made and no relief prayed; one joined because he has a conflicting claim against another defendant, which must be set up by cross-bill; or where a defendant may refuse to answer parts of the bill relating wholly to other defendants. With respect to particular cases the rule must be deduced from the decisions most nearly applicable, and the cases will be found to be collected and examined with discrimination in the work cited. See also Ad. Eq. b. 1, ch. 1.

A bill in equity which waives an oath to the answer is demurrable; Starkweather v. Williams, 21 R. I. 55, 41 Atl. 1003; and the complainant cannot have discovery upon such a bill; Tillinghast v. Chace, 121 Fed. 435 (where the cases are collected and those contra criticised); Huntington v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 78, 7 Sup. Ct. 356, 30 L. Ed. 580; Ward v. Peck, 114 Mass. 121; Torrent v. Rodgers, 39 Mich. 85; Stettauer v. Dwight, 54 Ill. App. 194; otherwise if the bill prays both discovery and relief; Manley v. Mickle, 55 N. J. Eq. 563, 37 Atl. 738. Where the oath is waived in a bill of discovery, the defendant may decline to answer, but if he undertakes to answer, he must state whether he had knowledge or information, but not his belief; Victor G. Bloede Co. v. Carter, 148 Fed. 127. A bill of discovery will not lie against a mere witness; Post v. Boardman, 10 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 580; as a general rule; Howell v. Ashmore, 9 N. J. Eq. 82, 57 Am. Dec. 371. Nor is there equitable jurisdiction in a suit where discovery and relief are sought, but the only ground for equitable relief is discovery of evidence to be used in enforcing a purely legal demand; Safford v. Mfg. Co., 120 Fed. 480, 56 C. C. A. 630. A simple bill of discovery will now hardly be resorted to in the United States courts because unnecessary when state statutes available in those courts furnish the remedies formerly sought only in equity; In re Boyd, 105 U. S. 647, 26 L. Ed. 1200; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 109, 11 Sup. Ct. 712, 35 L. Ed. 358; or the relief sought is available under U. S. R. S. § 724, providing for production of books, etc., in suits at law.

Statutory provisions enlarging the jurisdiction of courts of law, such as to provide for discovery at law, have been held to be merely cumulative and not to abridge the jurisdiction of equity to compel a discovery (unless otherwise specifically provided by statute), even though, by enlargement of their jurisdiction, the courts of law could afford similar relief; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 29 C. C. A. 14; Kurtz v. Brown, 152 Fed. 372, 81 C. C. A. 498, 11 Ann. Cas. 576; 3 K. & J. 433; Union Passenger Ry. Co. v. Mayor, etc., 71 Md. 238, 17 Atl. 933; Reynolds v. Fibre Co., 71 N. H. 332, 51 Atl. 1075, 57 L. R. A. 949, 93 Am. St. Rep. 535; Miller v. Casualty Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 110, 47 Atl. 509; Clark v. Locomotive Works, 24 R. I. 307, 53 Atl. 47; Nixon v. Lumber Co., 150 Ala. 602, 43 South. 805, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1255. But in other jurisdictions (where possibly the distinctive systems of law and equity are less closely adhered to) it is held otherwise; Turnbull v. Crick, 63 Minn. 91, 65 N. W. 135; Baylis v. Mfg. Co., 59 App. Div. 576, 69 N. Y. Supp. 693; Bond v. Worley, 26 Mo. 253; Warren v. Baker, 43 Me. 570; Chapman v. Lee, 45 Ohio St. 356, 13 N. E. 736; Riopelle v. Doellner, 26 Mich. 102; Cleveland v. Burnham, 60 Wis. 16, 17 N. W. 126, 18 N. W. 190; Hall v. Joiner, 1 S. C. 186 (where the decision is put upon the ground that, in that state, the jurisdiction of equity for want of an adequate remedy at law, rests on a statute); though probably, where separate courts of law and equity are maintained, it is generally held that the equitable remedy is not abridged; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 193.

Courts of equity which have once obtained jurisdiction for purposes of discovery will dispose of a cause finally, if proper for the consideration of equity, though the remedy at law is fully adequate; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 64*k*; Chichester's Ex'r v. Vass' Adm'r, 1 Munf. (Va.) 98, 4 Am. Dec. 531; Traip v. Gould, 15 Me. 82; Wood v. Hudson, 96 Ala. 469, 11 South. 530.

DISCREDIT. To deprive one of credit or confidence.

In general, a party may discredit a witness called by the opposite party, who testifies against him, by proving that his character is such as not to entitle him to credit or confidence, or any other fact which shows he is not entitled to belief. It is clearly settled, also, that the party voluntarily calling a witness cannot afterwards impeach his character for truth and veracity; 3 B. & C. 746; Chism v. State, 70 Miss. 742, 12 South. 852; Erwin v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 519, 24 S. W. 904. If a party call a witness who turns out unfavorable, he may call another to prove the same point; 2 Campb. 556; 4 B. & A. 193; Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. McMahan, 50 Mo. App. 18. The rule that a party cannot discredit his own witness is not violated by proving facts contrary to the testimony of such witness; Chester v. Wilhelm, 111 N. C. 314, 16 S. E. 229.

Where the evidence of a witness is a surprise to the party calling him, the trial judge, in the exercise of discretion, may permit him to be cross-examined by such party to show that his previous statements and conduct were at variance with his testimony; Selover v. Bryant, 54 Minn. 434, 56 N. W. 58, 21 L. R. A. 418, 40 Am. St. Rep. 3. Proof of contradictory statements by one's own witness, voluntarily called and not a party, is in general not admissible, although the party calling him may have been surprised by them; but he may show that the facts were not as stated, although these may tend incidentally to discredit the witness; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

DISCREPANCY. A difference between one thing and another, between one writing and another; a variance.

A material discrepancy exists when there is such a difference between a thing alleged and a thing offered in evidence as to show they are not substantially the same: as, when the plaintiff in his declaration for a malicious arrest averred that "the plaintiff, in that action, did not prosecute his said suit, but therein made default," and the record was that he obtained a rule to discontinue.

An immaterial discrepancy is one which does not materially affect the cause: as, where a declaration stated that a deed bore date in a certain year of our Lord, and the deed was simply dated "March 30, 1701." 2 Salk. 658; Henry v. Brown, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 49; Wade v. Grimes, 7 How. (Miss.) 428; Drake v. Fisher, 2 McLean, 69, Fed. Cas. No. 4,061; 2 B. & Ald. 301.

DISCRETION. That part of the judicial function which decides questions arising in the trial of a cause, according to the particular circumstances of each case, and as to which the judgment of the court is uncontrolled by fixed rules of law.

The power exercised by courts to determine questions to which no strict rule of law is applicable but which, from their nature, and the circumstances of the case, are controlled by the personal judgment of the court.

"Discretion when applied to a court of justice means sound discretion guided by law." 4 Burr. 529. Judicial discretion is a mere legal discretion—a discretion in discerning the course presented by law; and what that has discerned it is the duty of the court to follow. Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. Ed. 204. "The discretion is not wilful or arbitrary, but legal [to set aside a judicial sale], and though its exercise be not purely a matter of law, yet it involves a matter of law or legal inference." Lovinier v. Pearce, 70 N. C. 167. "A legal discretion is one that is regulated by well known and established principles of law." Detroit Tug & Wrecking Co. v. Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 360, 42 N. W. 968.

Bishop on Mar. & Div. § 830, defines it as "denoting a sort of individual liberty, a sort of liberty in the collective judges and, an adherence to legal principles blended in such a way as shall constitute an established course of justice bending to the circumstances of the case instead of requiring the cases to bend to it."

"But if the word discretion in this connection [injunction] is used in its secondary sense, and by it is meant that the chancellor has the liberty and power of acting, in finally settling property rights, at his discretion, without the restraint of the legal and equitable rules governing those rights, then I deny such power;" Hennessy v. Carmoney, 50 N. J. Eq. 616, 25 Atl. 374.

It would tend to clearness and exactness if discretion were used only with reference to those matters where the action of the trial judge is final; Jenkins v. Brown, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 454.

Whether or not a particular question is one of discretion is in almost every case a matter of settled law, and the individual court or judge has no power to place it within or without that category. It is only when a question arises which, according to precedent, is treated as such that the judicial discretion is invoked and its exercise cannot be reviewed.

The discretion of a judge is said by Lord Camden to be the law of tyrants: it is always unknown, it is different in different men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper, and passion. In the best, it is oftentimes caprice; in the worst, it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature is liable. Optima lex quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis: optimus iudex qui minimum sibi. Bacon, Aph.; 2 Bell, Suppl. to Ves. 391; Toullier, liv. 3, n. 338; 1 Lilly, Abr. 447. But the prevailing opinion is that discretion must not be arbitrary, fanciful, and capricious; it must be legal and regular, governed by rule, not by humor; 4 Burr. 25; Judges of Oneida Common Pleas v. People, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 99.

Many matters relating to the trial such as the order of giving evidence, etc., are properly left mainly or entirely to the discretion of the judge; Utsey v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 399, 17 S. E. 141; Winklemier v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 621, 52 N. W. 1036; Coffin v. Hydraulic Co., 136 N. Y. 655, 32 N. E. 1076; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 51 Fed. 562, 2 C. C. A. 380; Estis v. Jackson, 111 N. C. 145, 16 S. E. 7, 32 Am. St. Rep. 784.

Decisions upon matters within the absolute discretion of a court are not reviewable in courts of appeal; Harrington v. Ry. Co., 157 Mass. 579, 32 N. E. 955; Perry v. Shedd, 159 Mass. 200, 34 N. E. 174; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heck, 102 U. S. 120, 26 L. Ed. 58; but the discretion in granting or refusing a writ of mandamus must be exercised under legal rules, and is reviewable in an appellate court; People v. Common Council of Syracuse, 78 N. Y. 56. Such a writ will not be granted to regulate the exercise of discretion on the part of an official; State v. Van Ness, 15 Fla. 317; Ex parte Harris, 52 Ala. 87, 23 Am. Rep. 559.

A testator may leave it to his executor to construe the provisions of his will, and to decide doubtful questions concerning his intentions; American Board of Com'rs of Foreign Missions v. Ferry, 15 Fed. 696; and the donor of a power may leave its execution to the discretion of the donee; 4 D. J. & S. 614.

In Criminal Law. The ability to know and distinguish between good and evil,—between what is lawful and what is unlawful.

In most modern criminal statutes the amount of punishment is usually left to the discretion of the court. See INDETERMINATE SENTENCES.

As to the age at which children are said to arrive at discretion, see AGE; DOLI CAPAX.

DISCRETIONARY TRUSTS. Those which cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment: as, when a fund is given to trustees to be distributed in certain charities to be selected by the trustees.

DISCRIMINATION. This word is now generally applied in law to a breach of the statutory or common-law duty of a carrier to treat all customers alike. It is applied to inequality in both rates of fare and rates of freight, and may also be practised by inequality in the facilities afforded to different consignors. See FACILITIES; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; RATES; REBATE; RAILROADS.

As to discrimination in the distribution of cars to shippers, see RAILROADS.

DISCUSSION. In Civil Law. A proceeding on the part of a surety by which the property of the principal debtor is made liable before resort can be had to the sureties: this is called the benefit of discussion. This is the law in Louisiana. See Domat, 3, 4, 1-4; Burge, Suretyship 329, 343, 348; 5 Toullier 544; 7 id. 93.

DISENTAILING ASSURANCE. A deed executed under stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, whereby the tenant in tail is enabled to alienate the land for an estate in fee-simple or any less estate, and thus destroy the entail. The deed must be duly enrolled in the court of chancery within six months of its execution; 1 Steph. Com. 250, 575.

DISFRANCHISEMENT. The act of depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion.

It differs from amotion (q. v.), which is applicable to the removal of an officer from office, leaving him his rights as a member; Willc. Corp. n. 708; Ang. & A. Corp. 237; 10 H. L. Cas. 404; State v. Adams, 44 Mo. 570; White v. Brownell, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 329.

The power of disfranchisement extends only to societies not owning property or organized for gain; unless the power be given by the charter; Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 45; 41 L. T. N. S. 490; People v. Board of Trade of Chicago, 80 Ill. 134; People v. New York Cotton Exchange, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 216; Ang. & A. Corp. § 410. It extends to the expulsion of members who have proved guilty of the more heinous crimes, as to which there must first be a conviction by a jury; Com. v. Benevolent Society, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 448, 4 Am. Dec. 4; Society for Visitation of Sick v. Com., 52 Pa. 125, 91 Am. Dec. 139. It is said that the power exists where members do not observe certain duties to the corporation, especially where the breach tends directly or indirectly to the forfeiture of the corporate rights, and franchises, and the destruction of the corporation; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 45; People v. Board of Trade of Chicago, 45 Ill. 112; Hussey v. Gallagher, 61 Ga. 86; Sale v. Baptist Church, 62 Ia. 26, 17 N. W. 143, 49 Am. Rep. 136. A member is entitled to notice of the charges against him, and to an opportunity to be heard; Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107; People v. Sailors' Snug Harbor, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 532; State v. Board of Management, 40 N. J. L. 295; People v. Benevolent Society, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 216; State v. Adams, 44 Mo. 570; Gregg v. Medical Society, 111 Mass. 185, 15 Am. Rep. 24. See ASSOCIATION; EXPULSION.

Except in cases authorized by constitutional provisions, a citizen entitled to vote cannot be disfranchised, or deprived of his right by any action of the public authorities, and a law having such effect is void; Cooley, Const. Lim. 776; as an act creating a new county and leaving part of its territory unorganized so that the voters of that portion could not participate in the election; People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 471. A citizen who has been convicted of bribery at an election and has undergone the punishment is qualified to vote, without a pardon; Osborne v. County Court, 68 W. Va. 189, 69 S. E. 470, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

The present use of the word in England is the depriving an individual of his right of voting, or a constituency of their right of returning a member to parliament. May's Parl. Pr.

DISGRACE. Ignominy; shame; dishonor. No witness is required to disgrace himself. 13 How. St. Tr. 17, 334; 16 id. 161. See CRIMINATE.

DISGUISE.

A person lying in ambush is not in disguise within the meaning of a statute declaring a county liable in damages to the next of kin of any one murdered by persons in disguise; Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 142.

DISHERISON. Disinheritance; depriving one of an inheritance. Obsolete. See DISINHERISON.

DISHERITOR. One who disinherits, or puts another out of his freehold. Obsolete.

DISHONOR. A term applied to the non-fulfillment of commercial engagements. To dishonor a bill of exchange, or a promissory note, is to refuse or neglect to pay it at maturity.

The holder is bound to give notice to the parties to such instruments of its dishonor; and his laches will discharge the indorsers; Chit. Bills 256, 394; 1 Pars. N. & B. 506, 520.

DISINHERISON. In Civil Law. The act of depriving a forced heir of the inheritance which the law gives him.

In Louisiana, forced heirs may be deprived of their legitime, or legal portion, and of the seisin granted them by law, for just cause. The disinherison must be made in proper form, by name and expressly, and for a just cause; otherwise it is null. See FORCED HEIRS; LEGITIME.

DISINHERITANCE. The act by which a person deprives his heir of an inheritance, who, without such act, would inherit.

By the common law (since the statute of wills) any one may give his estate to a stranger, and thereby disinherit his heir apparent. Cooper, Justin. 495; 7 East 106.

An heir cannot be disinherited by mere words of exclusion, but the entire property of the testator must be given to some one else by express words or by necessary implication; Phillips v. Phillips, 93 Ky. 498, 20 S. W. 541; Chamberlain v. Taylor, 105 N. Y. 185, 11 N. E. 625; Gallagher v. Crooks, 132 N. Y. 338, 30 N. E. 746; Hancock's Appeal, 112 Pa. 532, 5 Atl. 56; and where a will provides that a gift therein is to be the entire share of an heir, he is not excluded from a share of property not disposed of by the will; Sutherland v. Sydnor, 84 Va. 880, 6 S. E. 480, even though the will shows that the testator believed he was disposing of all his property; id. A testamentary writing which revokes all other wills, and excludes a son from any share of the estate, for reasons given, but does not dispose of the property, does not affect the rights of such son; Coffman v. Coffman, 85 Va. 459, 8 S. E. 672, 2 L. R. A. 848, 17 Am. St. Rep. 69.

In a case of doubt the law leans to a distribution of the estate of a deceased person as nearly conforming to the rules of inheritance as possible.

DISINTERESTED WITNESS. One who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue, and who is lawfully competent to testify.

DISINTERMENT. See DEAD BODY.

DISJUNCTIVE ALLEGATIONS. Allegations which charge a party disjunctively, so as to leave it uncertain what is relied on as the accusation against him.

An indictment, information, or complaint which charges the defendant with one or other of two offences, in the disjunctive, as that he murdered or caused to be murdered, forged or caused to be forged, wrote and published or caused to be written and published, is bad for uncertainty; 1 Salk. 342, 371; 2 Stra. 900; 5 B. & C. 251; 1 C. & K. 243; 1 Y. & J. 22. An indictment which averred that S. made a forcible entry into two closes of meadow or pasture was held to be bad; 2 Rolle, Abr. 81. A complaint which alleges an unlawful sale of "spirituous or intoxicating liquor" is bad for uncertainty; Com. v. Grey, 2 Gray (Mass.) 501, 61 Am. Dec. 476. So is an information which alleges that N. sold beer or ale without an excise license; 6 Dowl. & R. 143. And the same rule applies if the defendant is charged in two different characters in the disjunctive: as, quod A existens servus sive deputatus, took, etc.; 2 Rolle, Abr. 263.

DISJUNCTIVE TERM. One which is placed between two contraries, by the affirming of one of which the other is taken away: it is usually expressed by the word or. See 3 Ves. 450; 1 P. Wms. 433; 2 Cox, Ch. 213; 2 Atk. 643; 2 Ves. Sen. 67; Cro. Eliz. 525; 1 Bingham. 500; Ayliffe, Pand. 56.

In the civil law, when a legacy is given to Caius or Titius, the word or is considered and, and both Caius and Titius are entitled to the legacy in equal parts. 6 Toullier, n. 704. See COPULATIVE TERM; CONSTRUCTION.

DISME. Dime, which see.

DISMISS. To remove. To send out of court. Formerly used in chancery of the removal of a cause out of court without any farther hearing. The term is now used in courts of law also.

It signifies a final ending of a suit, not a final judgment on the controversy, but an end of that proceeding; Taft v. Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 417; Conner v. Drake, 1 Ohio St. 170. It is well settled that the judgment of a court dismissing a suit for want of jurisdiction does not conclude the plaintiff's right of action; Smith v. McNeal, 109 U. S. 429, 3 Sup. Ct. 319, 27 L. Ed. 986.

After a decree, whether final or interlocutory, has been made by which the rights of a party defendant have been adjudicated, or such proceedings have been taken as entitle the defendant to a decree, the complainant will not be allowed to dismiss his bill without the consent of the defendant; Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Mill Co., 109 U. S. 713, 3 Sup. Ct. 594, 27 L. Ed. 1081.

The effect of dismissals under the codes of some of the United States, has been much discussed. Thus in New York, "a final judgment dismissing the complaint, either before or after a trial, rendered in an action hereafter commenced," does not prevent a new action for the same cause of action, unless it expressly declares that it is rendered upon the merits.

DISMISSED. A judgment of "Dismissed," without qualifying words indicating a right to take further proceedings, is presumed to be dismissed on the merits; Durant v. Essex Co., 7 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 19 L. Ed. 154. But a bill "dismissed" on motion of complainant does not bar a second suit; Ex parte Loung June, 160 Fed. 259.

A judgment of dismissal because plaintiff fails to observe a rule of court does not become res judicata; Ryan v. R. Co., 89 Fed. 397; so of a dismissal by consent of the parties; Rincon Water & Power Co. v. Water Co., 115 Fed. 543. But circumstances obviously might lead to a different rule.

DISORDERLY HOUSE. A house the inmates of which behave so badly as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood. State v. Groszofski, 89 Minn. 343, 94 N. W. 1077; Hawkins v. Lutton, 95 Wis. 493, 70 N. W. 483, 60 Am. St. Rep. 131. It has a wide meaning, and includes bawdy houses, common gaming houses, and places of a like character; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 1106; U. S. v. Gray, 2 Cra. C. C. 675, Fed. Cas. No. 15,251; Com. v. Cobb, 120 Mass. 356. Any place of public resort in which illegal practices are carried on, involving moral turpitude or not; State v. Martin, 77 N. J. L. 652, 73 Atl. 548, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 507, 134 Am. St. Rep. 814, 18 Ann. Cas. 986, where a person making usurious loans was convicted of keeping a disorderly house. In order to constitute it such it is not necessary that there be acts violative of the peace of the neighborhood, or boisterous disturbance and open acts of lewdness; Beard v. State, 71 Md. 275, 17 Atl. 1044, 4 L. R. A. 675, 17 Am. St. Rep. 536; but a single act of lewdness of a man and woman in a house, does not constitute the offence of keeping a house of prostitution; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937. And receiving unmarried people who present themselves as husband and wife at a hotel is not sufficient to convict the proprietor of keeping a disorderly house without proof of scienter; People v. Drum, 127 App. Div. 241, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1096.

The keeper of such house may be indicted for keeping a public nuisance; Hardr. 344; People v. Clark, 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 290; Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 342; Bacon, Abr. Nuisances, A; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 167, 168, note; King v. People, 83 N. Y. 587; Ex parte Birchfield, 52 Ala. 377. The husband must be joined with the wife in an indictment to suppress a disorderly house; 1 Show. 146.

See Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2108-2110.

DISORDERLY PERSONS. A class of offenders described in the statutes which punish them. See 4 Bla. Com. 169.

DISPARAGEMENT. In Old English Law. An injury by union or comparison with some person or thing of inferior rank or excellence.

Marriage without disparagement was marriage to one of suitable rank and character.

2 Bla. Com. 70; Co. Litt. 82 b. The guardian in chivalry had the right of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony; and provided he tendered a marriage without disparagement or inequality, if the infant refused, he was obliged to pay a valor maritaggi to the guardian.

Disparagare, to connect in an unequal marriage. Spelman, Gloss. Disparagatio, disparagement. Used in Magna Carta (9 Hen. III.), c. 6. Disparagation, disparagement. Kelham. Disparage, to marry unequally. Used of a marriage proposed by a guardian between those of unequal rank and injurious to the ward.

DISPAUPER. In English Law. To deprive a person of the privilege of suing in forma pauperis.

When a person has been admitted to sue in forma pauperis, and before the suit is ended it appears that the party has become the owner of a sufficient estate real, or personal, or has been guilty of some wrong, he may be dispaupered.

DISPENSARY LAW. See LIQUOR.

DISPENSATION. A relaxation of law for the benefit or advantage of an individual. In the United States, no power exists, except in the legislature, to dispense with law; and then it is not so much a dispensation as a change of the law.

DISPLACE. Used in shipping articles, and, when applied to an officer, meaning properly to disrate, not to discharge. Potter v. Smith, 103 Mass. 68.

DISPOSE. To alienate or direct the ownership of property, as, disposition by will. Elston v. Schilling, 42 N. Y. 79; see Fling v. Goodall, 40 N. H. 219; Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380, 25 L. Ed. 855. Used also of the determination of suits; In re Russell, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 664, 20 L. Ed. 632. Called a word of large extent; Freem. 177.

DISPOSSESSION. Ouster; a wrong that carries with it the amotion of possession. An act whereby the wrong-doer gets the actual occupation of the land or hereditament. It includes abatement, intrusion, disseisin, discontinuance, deforcement. 3 Bla. Com. 167.

DISPUTATIO FORI (Lat.). Argument in court. Du Cange.

DISPUTE. A fact is properly said to be in dispute when it is alleged by one party and denied by the other, and by both with some show of reason. Appeal of Knight, 19 Pa. 494.

DISQUALIFY. To incapacitate, to disable, to divest or deprive of qualifications. Matter of Maguire, 57 Cal. 606, 40 Am. Rep. 125.

DISRATIONARE. To clear oneself from accusation; to make good a legal claim; to prove. Martin, Record Interpreter.

DISSAISINA. A disseisin or dispossession; an ejectment. Skene.

DISSECTION. The act of cutting into pieces an animal or vegetable for the purpose of ascertaining the structure and use of its parts; anatomy; the act of separating into constituent parts for the purpose of critical examination. Webster. See DEAD BODY; AUTOPSY; DEATH.

DISSEISEE. One who is wrongfully put out of possession of his lands; one who is disseised.

DISSEISIN. A privation of seisin. A usurpation of the right of seisin and possession, and an exercise of such powers and privileges of ownership as to keep out or displace him to whom these rightfully belong. 2 Washb. R. P. 283; Mitch. R. P. 259.

It takes the seisin or estate from one man and places it in another. It is an ouster of the rightful owner from the seisin or estate in the land, and the commencement of a new estate in the wrong-doer. It may be by abatement, intrusion, discontinuance, or deforcement, as well as by disseisin properly so called. Every dispossession is not a disseisin. A disseisin, properly so called, requires an ouster of the freehold. A disseisin at election is not a disseisin in fact; 2 Pres. Abstr. Titles 279; but by admission only of the injured party, for the purpose of trying his right in a real action; Co. Litt. 277; Little v. Libby, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 242, 11 Am. Dec. 68; Doe v. Thompson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 371; Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402, 8 L. Ed. 170; Poignard v. Smith, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 172.

Disseisin may be effected either in corporeal inheritances, or incorporeal. Disseisin of things corporeal, as of houses, lands, etc., must be by entry and actual dispossession of the freehold: as if a man enters, by force or fraud, into the house of another, and turns, or, at least, keeps, him or his servants out of possession. Disseisin of incorporeal hereditaments cannot be an actual dispossession; for the subject itself is neither capable of actual bodily possession or dispossession; 3 Bla. Com. 169, 170. See Poignard v. Smith, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 172; Smith v. Burtis, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 197, 5 Am. Dec. 218; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 414, 9 L. Ed. 475; Stetson v. Veazie, 11 Me. 408.

In the early law every disseisin was a breach of the peace; if perpetrated with violence it was a serious breach. The disseisor was amerced never less than the amount of the damage; if it were by force of arms he was sent to prison and fined. Besides he gave the sheriff an ox,—"the disseisin ox,"—or five shillings. If he disseised one who has already recovered possession from him by the assize, this was a still graver offence, for which he was imprisoned by statute. The offender was a redissessor; 2 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. of Eng. Law 45.

See BUYING TITLES.

DISSEISITUS. One who has been disseised.

DISSEISOR. One who puts another out of the possession of his lands wrongfully.

DISSENT. A disagreement to something which has been done. It is express or implied.

The law presumes that every person to whom a conveyance has been made has given his assent to it, because it is supposed to be for his benefit. To rebut the presumption, his dissent must be expressed. See Brooks v. Marbury, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 78, 6 L. Ed. 423; Wilt v. Franklin, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 502, 2 Am. Dec. 474; Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 361, 53 N. W. 140; Crain v. Wright, 114 N. Y. 307, 21 N. E. 401. ASSENT.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A refusal to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the established church. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 165.

DISSENTER. One who refuses to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the established church; a non-conformist. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 165.

DISSENTIENTE (Lat. dissenting). Used with the name or names of one or more judges, it indicates a dissenting opinion in a case. Nemine dissentiente. No one dissenting; unanimous.

DISSENTING OPINIONS. See PRECEDENT.

DISSOLUTION. The dissolution of a contract is the annulling its effects between the contracting parties.

The dissolution of a partnership is the putting an end to the partnership. Its dissolution does not affect contracts made between the partnership and others; so that it is entitled to all its rights, and liable on its obligations, as if it had not been dissolved. See PARTNERSHIP.

Of Corporations. Dissolution of corporations takes place by act of legislature (but in America only by consent of the corporation, or where the power to dissolve has been reserved by the legislature); by the loss of all the members, or an integral part of them; by a surrender of the charter; by the expiration of the period for which it was chartered; by proceedings for the winding up of the company under the law; or by a forfeiture of the franchises, for abuse of its powers. Where a method of procedure for dissolution has been prescribed by statute, as is now usual, such method is exclusive; Kohl v. Lillenthal, 81 Cal. 378, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520.

The loss of members will not work a dissolution, so long as enough members remain to fill vacancies; State v. Trustees, 5 Ind. 77; McGinty v. Reservoir Co., 155 Mass. 183, 29 N. E. 510; nor does a failure to elect officers; Com. v. Cullen, 13 Pa. 133, 53 Am. Dec. 450; Evarts v. Mfg. Co., 20 Conn. 447; United States Electric Lighting Co. v. Leiter, 19 D. C. 575; Rose v. Turnpike Co., 3 Watts (Pa.) 46; or trustees; Speer v. Colbert, 200 U. S. 131, 26 Sup. Ct. 201, 50 L. Ed. 403; so of an eleemosynary corporation; Vincennes University v. Indiana, 14 How. (U. S.) 268, 14 L. Ed. 416; nor does the resignation of all the officers of a corporation work a dissolution; Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18 Ia. 469; but it is said that a municipal or charitable corporation may be dissolved by the loss of all its members, although this mode of dissolution cannot take place in the case of business corporations which have a transferable joint stock, because the corporate shares, being personal property, must always belong to some person, and such person must of necessity be a member of the corporation; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6652; Boston Glass Manufactory v. Langdon, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 49, 35 Am. Dec. 292. And even where all the shares of stock pass into the hands of less than the prescribed number of stockholders, there is no dissolution, even though they may have passed into the hands of two members; Russell v. McLellan, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 63; or of a single person; Newton Mfg. Co. v. White, 42 Ga. 148; and such person could carry on the corporate business; id. See STOCKHOLDERS.

Ordinarily, a corporation may by a majority vote surrender its franchises; McCurdy v. Myers, 44 Pa. 535; Black v. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 404; Treadwell v. Mfg. Co., 7 Gray (Mass.) 393, 66 Am. Dec. 490; State v. Woolen Mills Co., 115 Tenn. 266, 89 S. W. 741, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 112 Am. St. Rep. 825; Hitch v. Hawley, 132 N. Y. 221, 30 N. E. 401; but such a surrender must be accepted by the state; Wilson v. Proprietors of Central Bridge, 9 R. I. 590; excepting where the stockholders are liable for the debts; La Grange & M. R. Co. v. Rainey, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 420. A corporation is not dissolved or its franchises forfeited by its insolvency and assignment of its assets for the benefit of its creditors, where the state brings no proceedings to have the charter forfeited, and there is no surrender thereof by act of the shareholders; State v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614, 8 S. W. 586; Breene v. Bank, 11 Colo. 97, 17 Pac. 280; Adams v. Milling Co., 35 Fed. 433.

A non-user of corporate powers does not of itself work a dissolution, even though it be for twenty years; Raritan Water Power Co. v. Veghte, 21 N. J. Eq. 463; but see Strickland v. Prichard, 37 Vt. 324, where there had been no corporate acts performed for 23 years and it was held there was a dissolution. The question is one of fact and intent; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6659. The fact that a corporation has ceased to do business and has made an assignment of all its property for the payment of its debts and for several years held no annual meetings or elected directors, does not work a dissolution to the extent of preventing its maintaining an action for a debt due it; id. § 6660. The sale of the property and franchises of a corporation in foreclosure proceedings does not, ipso facto, work a dissolution. It will pass the franchise of the company to operate or enjoy the particular property foreclosed, but not its primary franchise to be a corporation; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6662 (but that the corporation is extinguished by such a sale, see 37 Mo. 131). The insolvency of a corporation or the appointment of a receiver therefor does not work a dissolution; Boston Glass Manufactory v. Langdon, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 49, 35 Am. Dec. 292.

As to dissolution by consolidation, see MERGER.

The forfeiture of a charter by misuser or nonuser is complete only upon a final adjudication thereof in a competent court, upon proper proceedings at the suit of the government which created the corporation, and in the courts of such government; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 959, 1015; the existence of the charter cannot be attacked collaterally, or by an individual; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. R. Co., 4 G. & J. (Md.) 1. But when the legislature has reserved the right to revoke a charter for abuse of its privileges or failure to perform a condition, it may enact the repeal at the proper time; Crease v. Babcock, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 334, 34 Am. Dec. 61; Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287; and such repealing act will be held constitutional unless the company can show by plain and satisfactory evidence that the privileges granted under the charter were not misused or abused; id. The courts will not presume that the power of repeal has been improperly exercised; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6579. Where the legislature reserves the unqualified right of repeal upon the happening of a certain condition, it is exclusively within its power to determine whether the condition has happened, and a previous judicial determination of that fact is not necessary; id.; Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287; Crease v. Babcock, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 334, 34 Am. Dec. 61; Myrick v. Brawley, 33 Minn. 377, 23 N. W. 549. And so where there is a right of repeal in the legislature in case the corporation misuses its franchises; Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287. Such misuse or abuse of corporate privileges consists in any positive act in violation of the charter and in derogation of public right, wilfully done or caused to be done by those appointed to manage the general concerns of the corporation; id. Where a franchise is granted with a provision that if not exercised in a specified time it shall be void, upon the expiration of the time without the performance of the condition, the charter falls without any action on the part of the state to declare its forfeiture; Com. v. Water Co., 110 Pa. 391, 2 Atl. 63; Elizabethtown Gas Light Co. v. Green, 46 N. J. Eq. 118, 18 Atl. 844; In re Brooklyn, W. & N. Ry. Co., 81 N. Y. 69. But other cases hold that the charter is not forfeited until action by the state either legislative or judicial; Hovelman v. R. Co., 79 Mo. 632; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 203, 21 L. Ed. 447; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541. The former view is strongly maintained in 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6586. If the charter or the statute under which it is granted names a definite period for the life of the corporation, the corporation is dissolved ipso facto, upon the expiration of that period without any action either on the part of the state or of the members of the corporation; People v. R. Co., 76 Cal. 190, 18 Pac. 308; Scanlan v. Crawshaw, 5 Mo. App. 337. "The incapacity to revive or resuscitate the powers of a corporation may arise from three causes: 1. The absence of the necessary officers who are required to be present when the deficiency is supplied, or their incapacity or neglect to do some act which is requisite to the validity of the appointment; 2. The want of the necessary corporators who are required to unite in the appointment; 3. The want of the proper persons from whom the appointment is to be made." 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6658.

Upon a dissolution, the assets of all kinds are a trust fund for the payment of debts, and afterwards for distribution among the stockholders; Lathrop v. Stedman, 13 Blatch. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 8,519; Blake v. R. Co., 39 N. H. 435; Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 105 N. W. 1031, 1135, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 7 Ann. Cas. 400; Late Corporation of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478; Temperance Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Society, 187 Pa. 38, 40 Atl. 1100; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 743; 15 L. Q. Rev. 115.

The ancient rule of the common law was supposed to be that upon the termination of a corporation its real estate reverted to the grantor and its personality to the sovereign; Titcomb v. Ins. Co., 79 Me. 315, 9 Atl. 732; Kent (13th ed.) 307. See Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 105 N. W. 1031, 1135, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 7 Ann. Cas. 400. This rule has long been obsolete, if it ever was the law, except as regards public or religious corporations; Late Corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478. It has been repudiated in the United States as to business corporations; Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 105 N. W. 1031, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 7 Ann. Cas. 400; Baldwin v.

Johnson, 95 Tex. 85, 65 S. W. 171; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1032; Late Corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478; Bacon v. Robertson, 18 How. (U. S.) 480, 15 L. Ed. 499.

In England it is said there is no instance on record that the doctrine was ever applied by any English court; [1899] 1 Q. B. 325. But it is said that the doctrine that at dissolution the lands of a corporation revert to the donor was almost universally accepted in the English cases before 1800. Prof. Williston, in Business Corp. before 1800, 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 233.

As to a public or charitable corporation the ancient rule still prevails that upon dissolution its personal property, like that of a man dying without heirs, ceases to be the subject of private ownership and becomes subject to the disposal of the sovereign authority, while the real estate reverts to the grantor or donor unless it is otherwise provided by statute; Late Corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 47, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478, where it was held that the property of the Mormon church became vested in the United States.

On the dissolution of a Louisiana corporation owning land in Texas, it was held that the stockholders became tenants in common of such land; Baldwin v. Johnson, 95 Tex. 85, 65 S. W. 171. The title to the land of an eleemosynary corporation reverts on its dissolution to the original owner without any act on his part; Mott v. Danville Seminary, 129 Ill. 403, 21 N. E. 927. But it is held that, upon the dissolution of a charitable corporation, the property must be appropriated by the court to the purposes most nearly akin to the intent of the donors; it does not revert to the donors; Centennial & Memorial Ass'n of Valley Forge, 235 Pa. 206, 83 Atl. 683.

Actions at law brought against a private corporation abate upon its dissolution; Life Ass'n v. Goode, 71 Tex. 90, 8 S. W. 639; contra, Greenbrier Lumber Co. v. Ward, 30 W. Va. 43, 3 S. E. 227; Breene v. Bank, 11 Colo. 97, 17 Pac. 280. Dissolution puts an end to all existing contracts. It works a breach of the contract; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 803. See State Bank v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 267, 12 Am. Dec. 239; Schleider v. Dielman, 44 La. Ann. 462, 10 South. 934.

Since the dissolution of a corporation, either by its own limitation or by the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, puts an end to its legal existence, it can thereafter neither prosecute nor defend an action. Accordingly, in the absence of statutory reservations (which, however, generally exist), upon the dissolution of a corporation all actions pending against it abate; Mumma v. Potomac Co., 8 Pet. (U. S.) 281, 8 L. Ed. 945; First Nat. Bank v. Colby, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 609, 22 L. Ed. 687; City Ins. Co. v. Bank, 68 Ill. 348; Merrill v. Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 649; Thornton v. R. Co., 123 Mass. 32; McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562; Life Ass'n v. Goode, 71 Tex. 90, 8 S. W. 639; and if the suit has been commenced by attachment, the dissolution will destroy the attachment lien; Wilcox v. Ins. Co., 56 Conn. 468, 16 Atl. 244; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Little, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 207, 42 Am. Dec. 293; unless ripened into a judgment at the time of the dissolution, and this, whether the attachment is original or is sued out in aid of a pending action.

Under the statutes providing for the keeping alive of actions which would otherwise abate on the dissolution of a corporation, it is not quite settled whether the same principles apply as those which apply to the survival of actions on the death of a natural person; but the weight of authority is in favor of the affirmative; Hepworth v. Ferry Co., 62 Hun 257, 16 N. Y. Supp. 692; Milwaukee Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sentinel Co., 81 Wis. 207, 51 N. W. 440, 15 L. R. A. 627.

See FORFEITURE OF CHARTER; FRANCHISE.

In Practice. The act of rendering a legal proceeding null, or changing its character; as where an attachment is dissolved so far as it is a lien on property by entering bail or security to the action; or as injunctions are dissolved by the court.

DISSUADE. To dissuade a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offence at common law; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 21, s. 15. The mere attempt to stifle evidence is also criminal although the persuasion should not succeed, on the general principle that an incitement to commit a crime is in itself criminal; 2 East 5, 21; 6 id. 454; 2 Stra. 904; 2 Leach 925.

DISTANCE. The rule is that the distance between given points should be measured in a straight line; 5 E. & B. 92; 6 id. 350; 8 L. R. Exch. 32. But in a rule of court as to service the distance has been taken by the usual road; Smith v. Ingraham, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 419.

DISTILLERY. A place or building where alcoholic liquors are distilled or manufactured. See U. S. v. Tenbroek, Pet. C. C. 180, Fed. Cas. No. 16,446; Act July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. L. 117; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Libby, 45 N. Y. 499; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y. 35, 13 Am. Rep. 556.

DISTRACTED PERSON. A term used in the statutes of Illinois, Rev. Laws 1833, p. 332, and New Hampshire, Dig. Laws 1830, p. 339, to express a state of insanity.

DISTRACTIO. In Civil Law. The sale of a pledge by a debtor. The appropriation of the property of a ward by a guardian. Calvinus, Lex.

DISTRADERE. To withdraw; to sell. Distradere controversias, to diminish and settle quarrels; distradere matrimoniam, to dissolve marriage; to divorce. Calvinus, Lex.

DISTRAIN. To take as a pledge property of another, and keep the same until he performs his obligation or until the property is replevied by the sheriff. It was used to secure an appearance in court, payment of rent, performance of services, etc. 3 Bla. Com. 231; Fitzh. N. B. 32 (B) (C), 223; Boyd v. Howden, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 455. See DISTRESS.

DISTRESS (Fr. distraindre, to draw away from; Lat. districtio). The taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of a wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured, to procure satisfaction for the wrong done. 3 Bla. Com. 6; Hard v. Nearing, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 488. It is generally resorted to for the purpose of enforcing the payment of rent, taxes, or other duties, as well as to exact compensation for such damages as result from the trespasses of cattle. Correctly speaking, one distrains a man by (per) a thing. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 576.

This remedy is of great antiquity, and is said by Spelman to have prevailed among the Gothic nations of Europe from the breaking up of the Roman Empire. But in a recent work the opinion is expressed that distress before judicial proceedings had been taken is not very old. 1 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. Engl. Law 334. Distress was not a means whereby the distrainer could satisfy the debt due him; ibid. After distress the lord might not sell the goods; they were not in his possession, but were in custodia legis, and he must be ready to give them up if the tenant tendered arrears or offered gage and pledge that he would contest the claim in a court of law. The lord could not take what he liked best among the chattels that he found; 2 id. 574. The English statutes since the days of Magna Charta have, from time to time, extended and modified its features to meet the exigencies of the times. Our state legislatures have generally, and with some alterations, adopted the English provisions, recognizing the old remedy as a salutary and necessary one, equally conducive to the security of the landlord and to the welfare of society. As a means of collecting rent, however, it has become unpopular in some states as giving an undue advantage to landlords over other creditors in the collection of debts. See Woglam v. Cowperthwaite, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 68, 1 L. Ed. 292; Hartshorne v. Kierman, 7 N. J. L. 29; Garrett v. Hughlett, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 3; Charleston v. Price, 1 McCord (S. C.) 299; Owens v. Conner, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 607; Mayo v. Winfree, 2 Leigh (Va.) 370; Burket v. Boude, 3 Dana (Ky.) 209.

In the New England states the law of attachment on mesne process has superseded the law of distress; Potter v. Hall, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 363, 15 Am. Dec. 226; 4 Dane, Abr. 126. New York has expressly abolished it by statute. Acts of 1846, ch. 274. This statute was held constitutional and valid as against a lease of prior date which provided for the remedy; Van Rensselaer v. Snyder, 13 N. Y. 299; Conkey v. Hart, 14 N. Y. 22, it being held a mere change of remedy; but such a statute would not apply when the goods had been seized; Dutcher v. Culver, 24 Minn. 584. The courts of North Carolina hold it to be inconsistent with the spirit of her laws and government, and declare that the common process of distress does not exist in that state; Youngblood v. Lowry, 2 McCord (S. C.) 39, 13 Am. Dec. 698; Dalgleish v. Grandy, 1 N. C. 249; to the same effect are the laws of Missouri; Crocker v. Mann, 3 Mo. 472, 26 Am. Dec. 684. In Ohio, Tennessee, and Alabama there are no statutory provisions on the subject, except in the former state to secure to the landlord a share of the crops in preference to an execution creditor, and one in the latter, confining the remedy to the city of Mobile; McLeod v. McDonnell, 6 Ala. 239. Mississippi has abolished it by statute; but property cannot be taken in execution on the premises unless a year's rent, if it be due, is first tendered to the landlord, who has also a lien on the growing crop; Arbuckle v. Nelms, 50 Miss. 556; to the same effect are the statutes of Wisconsin; Wis. Laws 1866, p. 77. In Colorado a landlord cannot distrain unless in pursuance of an express agreement; Herr v. Johnson, 11 Colo. 393, 18 Pac. 342.

To authorize a distress there must be a fixed rent in money, produce or services; it may be by parol and, if not certain, it must be capable of being reduced to a certainty; Co. Litt. 96a; Miles v. Stevens, 3 Pa. 31, 45 Am. Dec. 621; Jacks v. Smith, 1 Bay (S. C.) 315; and hence it will not lie on an agreement to pay no rent, but make repairs of uncertain value; Grier v. Cowan, Add. (Pa.) 347; a distress for a rent of a certain quantity of grain, may name the value in case of tender of arrears or sale of the property; Warren v. Forney, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 52. See Jones v. Gundrim, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 531.

A distress can only be taken for rent in arrear, and not until the day after it is due (which may be in advance); Russell v. Doty, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 576; Williams v. Howard, 3 Munf. (Va.) 277; First Nat. Bank of Joliet v. Adam, 138 Ill. 483, 28 N. E. 955. But no previous demand is necessary, except where the lease requires it; Almand v. Scott, 83 Ga. 402, 11 S. E. 653. Nor will the right be extinguished either by an unsatisfied judgment for the rent or by taking a promissory note therefor, unless such note has been accepted in absolute payment of the rent; Bates v. Nellis, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 651.

It may be taken for any kind of rent, the detention of which beyond the day of payment is injurious to him who is entitled to receive it.

At common law, the distrainer must have possessed a reversionary interest in the premises out of which the distress issued, unless he had expressly reserved a power to distrain when he parted with the reversion; Cornell v. Lamb, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 652; 1 Term 441; Co. Litt. 143b. But the English statute of 4 Geo. II. c. 28, substantially abolished all distinctions between rents, and gave the remedy in all cases where rent is reserved upon a lease. The effect of the statute was to separate the right of distress from the reversion to which it had before been incident, and to place every species of rent upon the same footing as if the power of distress had been expressly reserved in each case.

A distress may be made by each one of several joint tenants for the whole rent or they may all join together; 4 Bingh. 562; 2 Ball & B. 465; by tenants in common, each for his separate share; 1 McCl. & Y. 107; Cro. Jac. 611; unless the rent be entire, as of a house, in which case they must all join; Co. Litt. 197a; 5 Term 246; a husband as tenant by the curtesy for rent due to his wife, although due to her as executrix or administratrix; 2 Saund. 195; a widow after dower has been admeasured for her third of the rent; Co. Litt. 32a; an heir at law, or devisee, for that which becomes due to them respectively, after the death of the ancestor, in respect to their reversionary estate; Wright v. Williams, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 501; 1 Saund. 287; and guardians, trustees, or agents who make leases in their own names, as well as the assignee of the reversion which is subject to a lease; Slocum v. Clark, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 475; 5 C. & P. 379. Payment of rent is sufficient attornment to enable the party to whom the payment is made to make a distress; Walker v. McDonald, 28 Ill. App. 643.

Generally all goods found upon the premises, whether of tenant, under-tenant, or stranger, may be distrained for rent in arrear; Spencer v. McGowen, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 256; Kessler v. McConachy, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 435; Howard v. Ransay, 7 H. & J. (Md.) 120; Davis v. Payne's Adm'r, 4 Rand. (Va.) 334; Reeves v. McKenzie, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 497; Com. Dig. Distress (B 1). Thus, a gentleman's chariot in a coach-house of a livery-stable keeper was distrainable by the landlord of the livery-stable keeper; 3 Burr. 1498; cattle put on the tenant's land by consent of the owners of the beasts, are distrainable by the landlord immediately after for rent in arrear; 3 Bla. Com. 8; and furniture leased to a tenant, and used by him on the demised premises, is subject to the landlord's right of distress for rent; Myers v. Esery, 134 Pa. 177, 19 Atl. 488. The necessity of this rule is justified by the consideration that the rights of the landlord would be liable to be defeated by a great variety of frauds and collusions, if his remedy should be restricted to such goods only as he could prove to be the property of the tenant.

Goods of a person who has some interest in the land jointly with the distrainer, as those of a joint tenant, although found upon the land, cannot be distrained; nor goods of executors and administrators, or of the assignee of an insolvent regularly discharged according to law, in Pennsylvania, for more than one year's rent. Nor can the goods of a former tenant, rightfully on the land, be distrained for another's rent, as emblements, or growing crops of a tenant at will quitting on notice, even after they are reaped, if they remain on the land for the purpose of husbandry; Willes 131; or in the hands of a vendee they cannot be distrained although the purchaser allow them to remain uncut after they have come to maturity; 2 Ball & B. 362; 5 J. B. Moo. 97. If a tenant seek to remove from the premises any portion of the crops before the rent is due, he is subject to distraint immediately; Daniel v. Harris, 84 Ga. 479, 10 S. E. 1013.

As a distress is only of the property of the tenant, things wherein he can have no absolute property, as cats, dogs, rabbits, and animals feræ naturæ, cannot be distrained; yet deer, which are of a wild nature, kept in a private enclosure for sale or profit, may be distrained for rent; 3 Bla. Com. 7. There can be no distress of such things as cannot be restored to the owner in the same plight as when taken, as milk, fruit, and the like; 3 Bla. Com. 9; or things affixed or annexed to the freehold, as furnaces, windows, doors, and the like; Co. Litt. 47b; or essentially part of the freehold although for a time removed therefrom, as a millstone removed to be picked; or an anvil fixed in a smith's shop; 6 Price 3; 1 Q. B. 895; 3 id. 961.

Goods are also privileged in cases where the proprietor is either compelled from necessity to place his goods upon the land, or where he does so for commercial purposes; Brown v. Sims, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 139; Hoskins v. Paul, 9 N. J. L. 110, 17 Am. Dec. 455; Himely v. Wyatt, 1 Bay (S. C.) 102; Phaelon v. McBride, 1 Bay (S. C.) 170; Youngblood v. Lowry, 2 McCord (S. C.) 39, 13 Am. Dec. 698; 3 Ball & B. 75; 6 J. B. Moo. 243; 2 C. & P. 353. In the first case, the goods are exempt because the owner has no option: as goods of a traveller in an inn; 7 Hen. VII. M. 1, p. 1; 1 W. Bla. 483; 3 Burr. 1408. In the other, the interests of the community require that commerce should be encouraged; and adventurers will not engage in speculations if the property embarked is to be made liable for the payment of debts they never contracted. Hence goods landed at a wharf, or deposited in a warehouse on storage; Brown v. Sims, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 138; Richardson v. Merrill, 21 Me. 47; Connah v. Hale, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 462; goods of a third person consigned to an agent to be sold on commission (and if the landlord knows that the goods are so owned and has them sold under distress, he is liable to the owner in trespass; Brown v. Stackhouse, 155 Pa. 582, 26 Atl. 669, 35 Am. St. Rep. 908); a horse standing in a smith's shop to be shod, or in a common inn, or cloth at a tailor's house to be made into a coat, or corn sent to a mill to be ground; 3 Bla. Com. 8; cannot be distrained; neither can goods of a boarder, for rent due by the keeper of a boarding-house; Riddle v. Welden, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 9; unless used by the tenant with the boarder's consent and without that of the landlord; Matthews v. Stone, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 565.

In this country whether the tenant conducts a regular trade or business seems to have been considered immaterial with respect to exemption of things on the premises in the way of trade; Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Sloan, 87 Pa. 438, 30 Am. Rep. 376; McCreery v. Clafflin, 37 Md. 435, 11 Am. Rep. 542. See list of exemptions allowed under this rule; 2 Tiffany, Landl. & Ten. 2007.

At common law, goods delivered to a common carrier, or other person, to be conveyed for hire, or goods on the premises of an auctioneer, for the purpose of sale are privileged; 1 Cr. & M. 380.

Goods taken in execution cannot be distrained. The law in some states gives the landlord the right to claim payment out of the proceeds of an execution for rent not exceeding one year, and he is entitled to payment up to the day of seizure, though it be in the middle of a quarter; Binns v. Hudson, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 505; but he is not entitled to the day of sale. See Trappan v. Morie, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 1. The usual practice is to give notice to the sheriff that there is a certain sum due to the landlord as arrears of rent,—which notice ought to be given to the sheriff, or person who takes the goods in execution upon the premises; for the sheriff is not bound to find out whether rent is due, nor is he liable to an action unless there has been a demand of rent before the removal; Com. Dig. Rent (D 8); Alexander v. Mahon, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 185. This notice can be given by the immediate landlord only. A ground-landlord is not entitled to his rent out of the goods of the under-tenant taken in execution; 2 Stra. 787. And where there are two executions, the landlord is not entitled to a year's rent on each. See 2 Stra. 1024. Goods distrained and replevied may be distrained by another landlord for subsequent rent; Woglam v. Cowperthwaite, 2 Dail. (U. S.) 68, 1 L. Ed. 292. Where a tenant makes an assignment in the usual form, for the benefit of creditors, the assigned property is no longer his in his own right, and it cannot be seized under a distress warrant for rent; Ex parte Knobloch, 26 S. C. 333, 2 S. E. 612; Bischoff v. Trenholm, 36 S. C. 75, 15 S. E. 346.

By statute in some states tools of a man's trade, some designated household furniture, school-books, and the like, are exempted from distress, execution, or sale. In Pennsylvania, property to the value of $300, exclusive of all wearing apparel of the defendant and his family, and all Bibles and school-books in use in the family, are exempted from distress for rent. Also sewing-machines in private families.

There are also goods conditionally privileged, as beasts of the plough, which are exempt if there be a sufficient distress besides on the land whence the rent issues; Co. Litt. 47 a; implements of trade, as a loom in actual use, where there is a sufficient distress besides; 4 Term 565; other things in actual use, as a horse whereon a person is riding, an axe in the hands of a person cutting wood, and the like; Co. Litt. 47 a.

The leading case upon exemptions from distress, Simpson v. Hartopp, Willes 512, 1 Sm. L. Cas. (9th Am. ed.) 721, has been the subject of critical review in England after the lapse of 150 years with respect to a curious application of one of its exceptions to the rule subjecting to distress all property on the premises, including that of third persons. The exception declared by Willes, J., of "things delivered to a person exercising a public trade, to be carried, wrought, worked up, or managed in the way of his trade or employ," was the subject of construction in [1908] 1 Ch. 49, where pictures sent to an art club for exhibition were held not to be within it, because the owner could not show that the pictures were delivered to the club "for the purposes of trade, his trade being a public trade." In this judgment, Neville, J., says that it seems extraordinary that in the year 1907 "it should be possible in a country which boasts of civilization, which purports to protect the property of the law-abiding citizen, to raise such question. But so it is. The rule that the landlord is entitled to distrain on the property of third persons upon the premises, subject to certain exceptions, has up to the present day escaped the zeal of the legal reformer and therefore I have to deal with the law as I find it." He then proceeds to find "it impossible," as is remarked by an annotator, "to extend an irrational exception, formulated towards the middle of the eighteenth century, from a still less reasonable rule which has been a part of the law of landlord and tenant ever since leasehold interests have been known to the law;" 24 L. Q. Rev. 49. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision, but on the ground that the exception was laid down by Willes, J., in 1744 "with great accuracy" and must be adhered to as a definition, and the word "managed" used by him was equivalent to "disposed of," which would not apply to the case. Thus, though reaching the same result, they differed from Neville, J., who put the case on the ground that "public trade" meant that which was open to all buyers and not to those only of the club.

At common law a distress could not be made after the expiration of the lease. This evil was corrected by statute in Pennsylvania in 1772. Similar legislative enactments exist in most of the other states. In Philadelphia, the landlord may, under certain circumstances, apportion his rent, and distrain before it becomes due.

A distress may be made either upon or off the land. It generally follows the rent, and is, consequently, confined to the land out of which it issues; Woodf. Landl. & T. 456. If two pieces of land, therefore, are let by two separate demises, although both be contained in one lease, a joint distress cannot be made for them; for this would be to make the rent of one issue out of the other; Rep. t. Hardw. 245; 2 Stra. 1040. But where lands lying in different counties are let together by one demise at one entire rent, and it does not appear that the lands are separate from each other, one distress may be made for the whole rent; 1 Ld. Raym. 55; 12 Mod. 76. And where rent is charged upon land which is afterwards held by several tenants, the grantee or landlord may distrain for the whole upon the land of any of them; because the whole rent is deemed to issue out of every part of the land; Rolle, Abr. 671. If there be a house on the land, the distress may be made in the house. If the outer door or window be open, a distress may be taken out of it; Rolle, Abr. 671. If an outer door be open, an inner door may be broken for the purpose of taking a distress, but not otherwise; Cas. t. Hard. 168. In levying a distress for rent entrance was obtained into the courtyard through a gate, and being there, the bailiff broke open the main door of the warehouse and distrained therein; the court held the distress illegal, for the reason that the door that was broken was the outer door; 68 Law T. 742. A distress was held lawful where a party climbed over the wall surrounding the yard of a house and entered the house by an open window; [1894] 1 Q. B. 119. Barges on a river, attached to the leased premises (a wharf) by ropes, cannot be distrained; 6 Bingh. 150.

By an act of 1772 in Pennsylvania copied from the act of 11 Geo. II. c. 19, where a tenant fraudulently removes his goods from the premises to prevent a distress, the landlord may distrain on them within 30 days after removal, but not on goods previously sold bona fide and for a valuable consideration to one not privy to the fraud. To bring a case within the act, the removal must take place after the rent becomes due, and must be secret, not made in open day; for such removal cannot be said to be clandestine within the meaning of the act; Grace v. Shively, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 217; 7 Bingh. 423; 1 Mood. & M. 535. This English statute has been re-enacted in many of the states, but the period during which the goods may be followed varies in different states. In Louisiana the landlord may follow goods removed from his premises for fifteen days after removal, provided they continue to be the property of the tenant; La. Civ. Code 2675; Tayl. Landl. & T. § 538. It has been made a question whether goods are protected that were fraudulently removed on the night before the rent had become due; 4 Campb. 135. The goods of a stranger cannot be pursued; they can be distrained only while they are on the premises; Adams v. La Comb, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 440, 1 L. Ed. 214.

A distress for rent may be made either by the person to whom it is due, or, which is the preferable mode, by a constable or bailiff, or other officer properly authorized by him. If made by a constable or bailiff, he must be properly authorized to make it; for which purpose the landlord should give him a written authority, usually called a warrant of distress; but a subsequent assent and recognition given by the party for whose use the distress has been made is sufficient; Hamm. N. P. 382.

Being thus provided with the requisite authority to make a distress, he seizes the tenant's goods, or some of them in the name of the whole, and declares that he takes them as a distress for the sum expressed in the warrant to be due by the tenant to the landlord, and that he takes them by virtue of the said warrant; which warrant he ought, if required, to show; 1 Leon. 50. When making the distress, it ought to be made for the whole rent; but if goods cannot be found at the time sufficient to satisfy the whole, or the party mistake the value of the thing distrained, he may make a second distress; Bradb. Distr. 129, 130. It must be taken in the daytime after sunrise and before sunset; except for damage feasant, which may be in the night; Co. Litt. 142 a.

As soon as a distress is made, an inventory of the goods should be made, and a copy of it delivered to the tenant, together with a notice of taking such distress, with the cause of taking it, and an opportunity thus afforded the owner to replevy or redeem the goods. This notice of taking a distress is not required by the statute to be in writing; and, therefore, parol or verbal notice may be given either to the tenant on the premises, or to the owner of the goods distrained; 12 Mod. 76. And although notice is directed by the act to specify the cause of taking, it is not material whether it accurately state the period of the rent's becoming due; Dougl. 279; or even whether the true cause of taking the goods be expressed therein; 7 Term 654. If the notice be not personally given, it should be left in writing at the tenant's house, or, according to the directions of the act, at the mansion-house, or other most notorious place on the premises charged with the rent distrained for.

The distrainer may leave or impound the distress on the premises for the five days mentioned in the act, but becomes a trespasser after that time; Woglam v. Cowperthwaite, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 69, 1 L. Ed. 292. As in many cases it is desirable, for the sake of the tenant, that the goods should not be sold as soon as the law permits, it is usual for him to sign an agreement or consent to their remaining on the premises for a longer time, in the custody of the distrainer, or of a person by him appointed for that purpose. While in his possession, the distrainer cannot use or work cattle distrained, unless it be for the owner's benefit, as to milk a cow, or the like; 5 Dane, Abr. 34. Goods distrained for rent may be replevied by a claimant thereof before sale; Lardner v. Ins. Co., 32 W. N. C. (Pa.) 62.

Before the goods are sold, they must be appraised by two reputable freeholders, who shall take an oath or affirmation, to be administered by the sheriff, under-sheriff, or coroner, in the words mentioned in the act. The next requisite is to give public notice of the time and place of sale of the things distrained; see Whitton v. Milligan, 153 Pa. 376, 26 Atl. 22; after which, if they have not been replevied, they may be sold by the proper officer, who may apply the proceeds to the payment and satisfaction of the rent, and the expenses of the distress, appraisal, and sale; Woodf. Landl. & T. 1322. The overplus, if any, is to be paid to the tenant. A distrainer has always been held strictly accountable for any irregularity he might commit, although accidental, as well as for the taking of anything more than was reasonably required to satisfy the demand; Bradb. Dist.; Gilbert, Rent.

At common law a landlord who had distrained could not sell the goods; Davis v. Davis, 128 Pa. 108, 18 Atl. 514.

DISTRESS INFINITE. In English Practice. A process commanding the sheriff to distrain a person from time to time, and continually afterwards, by taking his goods by way of pledge to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon. In this case no distress can be immoderate, because, whatever its value may be, it cannot be sold, but is to be immediately restored on satisfaction being made; 3 Bla. Com. 231. It was the means anciently resorted to to compel an appearance. See ATTACHMENT; ARREST.

DISTRIBUTEES. The persons who are entitled under the statute of distribution to the personal estate of one who has died intestate. Henry v. Henry, 31 N. C. 279.

DISTRIBUTION. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DISTRICT. A certain portion of the country, separated from the rest for some special purpose.

The United States is divided into judicial districts, in each of which is established a district court; they are also divided into election districts, collection districts, etc.

It may be construed to mean territory; Com. v. Dumbauld, 97 Pa. 305; and in the revenue laws the words "district" and "port" are often used in the same sense; Ayer v. Thacher, 3 Mas. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 684.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY. District attorneys of the United States are appointed for a term of four years in each judicial district, whose duty it is to prosecute, in such district, all delinquents, for crimes and offences cognizable under the authority of the United States, and all civil actions in which the United States shall be concerned, except in the supreme court, in the district in which the court shall be holden. R. S. § 767. He must appear upon the record for the United States as plaintiff, in order that the United States should be recognized as such on the record; U. S. v. Doughty, 7 Blatch. 424, Fed. Cas. No. 14,986; U. S. v. Blaisdell, 3 Ben. 132, Fed. Cas. No. 14,608; U. S. v. McAvoy, 4 Blatch. 418, Fed. Cas. No. 15,654. They are under the direction of the attorney-general and must report to him.

The officer who represents the state in criminal proceedings within a particular county is also, in some of the states, called district attorney. As a prosecuting attorney he is a quasi judicial officer and stands indifferent between the accused and any private interest; People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422, 16 N. W. 794.

See PROSECUTION; PROSECUTOR.

DISTRICT COURTS. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

DISTRICT MESSENGER SERVICE. The service is not that of a common carrier, but the furnishing of messengers to be used by the employer in any way in which they could be properly employed, in the course of which the messenger becomes for the time the servant of the employer and the company is not liable for his dishonesty in the ordinary course of his employment unless there was failure to use proper care in his selection; Haskell v. Messenger Co., 190 Mass. 189, 76 N. E. 215, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091, 112 Am. St. Rep. 324, 5 Ann. Cas. 796.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. A portion of the country, originally ten miles square, which was ceded to the United States by the states of Virginia and Maryland, over which the national government has exclusive jurisdiction.

Under the constitution, congress is authorized to "exercise exclusive jurisdiction in all cases whatsoever, over such district, not exceeding ten miles square, as may, by cession of particular states and the acceptance of congress, become the seat of government of the United States." In pursuance of this authority, the states of Maryland and Virginia ceded to the United States a small territory on the banks of the Potomac, and congress, by the act of July 16, 1790, accepted the same, for the permanent seat of the government of the United States.

By the act of July 11, 1846, congress ceded back the county of Alexandria, part of the District of Columbia, to the state of Virginia.

The seat of government was removed from Philadelphia to the District in December, 1800. As it exists at present, it constitutes but one county, called the county of Washington.

By act of Congress of Feb. 21, 1871, a territorial government was created for the District; 16 Stat. L. 419; which was not a mere municipality in its restricted sense, but was held to be placed upon the same footing with that of the states or territories within the limits of the act; Grant v. Cooke, 7 D. C. 165. This government was, however, abolished by act of June 20, 1874, and a temporary government by commissioners was thereby created, which existed until by act of June 11, 1878, provision was made for the continuance of the District "as a municipal corporation" and its control by the federal government through these commissioners, two of whom are appointed by the president and confirmed by the senate, and the other is an engineer officer of the army to be detailed for that service by the president. It is a municipal corporation having a right to sue and be sued, and is subject to the ordinary rules that govern the law of procedure between private persons. The sovereign power is lodged in the government of the United States, and not in the corporation of the District; Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 132 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 19, 33 L. Ed. 231. Congress is its local legislature; Gibbons v. District of Columbia, 116 U. S. 404, 6 Sup. Ct. 427, 29 L. Ed. 680; and exercises over it full and entire jurisdiction both of a political and municipal nature; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 300, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170; Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 18 Sup. Ct. 521, 42 L. Ed. 243; and it may legislate with respect to people and property therein as may the legislature of a state over any of its municipalities; Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 637, 690, 24 L. Ed. 1098.

The District differs from a territory in that the latter is the fountain from which rights ordinarily flow, though congress may intervene, while in the former the body of private rights is created and controlled by congress and not by a legislature of the District; Kawanamako v. Polyblank, 205 U. S. 349, 354, 27 Sup. Ct. 526, 51 L. Ed. 834.

The District of Columbia and the territorial districts of the United States are not states within the meaning of the constitution and of the Judiciary Act, so as to enable a citizen thereof to sue a citizen of one of the states in the federal courts; Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 445, 2 L. Ed. 332; New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 91, 4 L. Ed. 44; Seton v. Hanham, R. M. T. Charl. (Ga.) 374. Kent says: "However extraordinary it might seem to be, that the courts of the United States, which were open to aliens, and to the citizens of every state, should be closed upon the inhabitants of those districts (territories and the District of Columbia), on the construction that they were not citizens of a state, yet as the court observed, this was a subject for legislative, and not for judicial consideration." 1 Com. 349. It might be suggested as a consideration not here adverted to, that the theory on which this right of suing in federal courts is based is possible prejudice to the rights of a citizen of another state or an alien in the state court. In the District of Columbia and territories this would not apply, as their courts are created by the federal government.

For the judiciary, see UNITED STATES COURTS.

DISTRICTIO. A distraint, or distress. Cowell.

DISTRINGAS. A writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to distrain a person of his goods and chattels to enforce a compliance with what is required of him.

It is used to compel an appearance where the party cannot be found, and in equity may be availed of to compel the appearance of a corporation aggregate. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4191; Comyns, Dig. Process (D 7); Chitty, Pr.; Sellon, Pr.

A form of execution in the actions of detinue and assize of nuisance. Brooke, Abr. pl. 26; Barnet v. Ihrie, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 44.

DISTRINGAS JURATORES (Lat. that you distrain jurors). A writ commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. 3 Bla. Com. 354. It issues at the same time with the venire, though in theory afterwards, founded on the supposed neglect of the juror to attend. 3 Steph. Com. 590.

DISTRINGAS NUPER VICE COMITEM (Lat. that you distrain the late sheriff). A writ to distrain the goods of a sheriff who is out of office, to compel him to bring in the body of a defendant, or to sell goods attached under a fi. fa., which he ought to have done while in office, but has failed to do. 1 Tidd, Pr. 313.

It can only issue after a return of seizure of goods to the value, etc.; Kline v. Church, 16 Pa. Dist. R. 559, where the practice was considered, although the writ has long fallen into disuse, and cases in 6 Mod. 295, and Zane v. Cowperthwaite, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 312, 1 L. Ed. 152, were cited.

DISTURBANCE. A wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering or disquieting the owner in the enjoyment of it. 3 Bla. Com. 235; Downing v. Baldwin, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 298; Files v. Magoon, 41 Me. 104. The remedy for a disturbance is an action on the case, or, in some instances in equity, by an injunction.

DISTURBANCE OF COMMON. Any act done by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or hindered. The remedy is by distress (where beasts are put on his common) or by an action on the case, provided the damages are large enough to admit of his laying an action with a per quod. Cro. Jac. 195; Co. Litt. 122; 3 Bla. Com. 237; 1 Saund. 546; 4 Term 71.

DISTURBANCE OF FRANCHISE. Any acts done whereby the owner of a franchise has his property damaged or the profits arising thence diminished. The remedy for such disturbance is a special action on the case; Cro. Eliz. 558; 2 Saund. 113 b; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 236; Bassett v. Mfg. Co., 28 N. H. 438.

Equity will grant an injunction against disturbance of a franchise in certain cases; Mohawk Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 554; Georgetown v. Canal Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 91, 9 L. Ed. 1012; President, etc., of Delaware & M. R. Co. v. Stump, 8 G. & J. (Md.) 479, 29 Am. Dec. 561.

DISTURBANCE OF PATRONAGE. The hindrance or obstruction of the patron to present his clerk to a benefice. 3 Bla. Com. 242. The principal remedy was a writ of right of advowson; and there were also writs of darrein presentment and of quare impedit. Co. 2d Inst. 355; Fitzh. N. B. 31.

DISTURBANCE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP. The interference with the good order of religious assemblies has been described as disturbance, and in some of the states statutes have been passed to meet the offence; State v. Oskins, 28 Ind. 364; Wall v. Lee, 34 N. Y. 141; Cockreham v. State, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 11; Owen v. Henman, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 548, 37 Am. Dec. 481; Taffe v. State, 90 Ga. 459, 16 S. E. 204; State v. Karnes, 51 Mo. App. 293; Williams v. State, 83 Ala. 68, 3 South. 743; Ball v. State, 67 Miss. 358, 7 South. 353.

It is not necessary to constitute the offence that the congregation shall be actually engaged in acts of religious worship at the time of the disturbance, but it is sufficient if they are assembled for the purpose of worship; State v. Ramsay, 78 N. C. 448; State v. Lusk, 68 Ind. 264.

To support a conviction for disturbing public worship, the evidence must show a wilful disturbance; Prucell v. State, (Tex.) 19 S. W. 605; Richardson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 470; Lancaster v. State, 53 Ala. 398, 25 Am. Rep. 625; State v. Lusk, 68 Ind. 264; State v. Bryson, 82 N. C. 576.

A Christmas festival is not a religious assembly; Layne v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 199; nor is a church business meeting; Wood v. State, 11 Tex. App. 318. A Sunday school is not divine service; Appeal of Gass, 73 Pa. 39, 13 Am. Rep. 726.

DISTURBANCE OF TENURE. Breaking the connection which subsists between lord and tenant. 3 Bla. Com. 242; 2 Steph. Com. 513.

DISTURBANCE OF WAYS. This happens where a person who hath a right of way over another's ground by grant or prescription is obstructed by enclosures or other obstacles, or by ploughing across it, by which means he cannot enjoy his right of way, or at least in so commodious a manner as he might have done; 3 Bla. Com. 242; Pope v. Devereaux, 5 Gray (Mass.) 409; McTavish v. Carroll, 7 Md. 352, 61 Am. Dec. 353; Shroder v. Brenneman, 23 Pa. 348; Okeson v. Patterson, 29 Pa. 22.

DITCH. The words "ditch" and "drain" have no technical or exact meaning. They both may mean a hollow place in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected or passes off. Goldthwait v. Inhabitants of East Bridgewater, 5 Gray (Mass.) 64. See EASEMENT; DRAIN.

DIVERSION. A turning aside or altering the natural course of a thing. The term is chiefly applied to the unauthorized changing the course of a water-course to the prejudice of a lower proprietor. Rap. & Lawr. L. Dict. See Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 299, 42 Am. Dec. 739; 6 Price 1.

One who has a natural gas well on his place may explode nitroglycerine therein for the purpose of increasing the flow, though it has the effect of drawing the gas from the land of another; Greenfield Gas. Co. v. Gas Co., 131 Ind. 599, 31 N. E. 61.

The owner of land through which flows a stream of water, may recover damages from one who diverts the water, for any actual injury suffered therefrom in the enjoyment of his land; Clark v. R. Co., 145 Pa. 438, 22 Atl. 989, 27 Am. St. Rep. 710; Case v. Hoffman, 84 Wis. 438, 54 N. W. 793, 20 L. R. A. 40, 36 Am. St. Rep. 937. The fact that one diverts water maliciously is of no importance in determining whether a legal right of plaintiff has been violated; Paine v.

Chandler, 134 N. Y. 385, 32 N. E. 18, 19 L. R. A. 99. See RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; WATER-COURSE; GAS; OIL.

DIVERSITY OF PERSON. The plea of a prisoner in bar of execution that he is not the person convicted. 4 Steph. Com. 368; Moz. & W. Law Dict.

DIVERSO INTUITU. From a different view or point of view; with a different view, design, or purpose; by a different course or process. 1 W. Bla. 89; 9 East 311; D'Wolf v. Rabaud, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 500, 7 L. Ed. 227; 4 Kent, Com. 211 (b).

DIVEST. See DEVEST.

DIVIDED COURT. See PRECEDENT.

DIVIDEND. A portion of the principal or profits divided among several owners of a thing. Williston v. R. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 400; Taft v. R. Co., 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Attorney General v. Bank, 21 N. C. 545; Cary v. Sav. Union, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 38, 22 L. Ed. 779. See Rose v. Barclay, 191 Pa. 594, 43 Atl. 385, 45 L. R. A. 392.

As confined to corporations it is "that portion of the profits and surplus funds of the corporation which has been actually set apart by a valid resolution of the board of directors, or by the shareholders at a corporate meeting, for distribution among the shareholders according to their respective interests, in such a sense as to become segregated from the property of the corporation, and to become the property of the shareholders distributively." 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2126; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 486, 14 Sup. Ct. 968, 38 L. Ed. 793.

In the commonest use of the term dividends are a sum which a corporation sets apart from its profits to be divided among its members. Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156; which, for the purpose of declaring a dividend, consist of the excess of its cash and other property on hand over its liabilities; Hubbard v. Weare, 79 Ia. 678, 44 N. W. 915.

Dividends cannot usually be paid out of the capital but only from the profits. The former is a trust fund for the stockholders; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2152; which each of them is entitled to have preserved intact; Slayden v. Coal Co., 25 Mo. App. 439; but this principle does not apply when the capital from its nature is liable to waste and depreciation, as in case of companies to work a mine or a patent; 41 Ch. Div. 1.

Where dividends are required to be declared out of profits merely of a railroad company, the rule for ascertaining the profits is to exclude from consideration all debts other than what are commonly understood by the term funded debts, but to treat as deductions debts incurred and due for engines, rails, and the like, which should and would have been paid at the time if the funds had been in hand and are necessary deductions from the property; 29 Beav. 272; and as to what are net earnings in the sense of surplus profits and therefore susceptible of definition, see Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 420, 25 L. Ed. 274; 99 Am. Dec. 762, note; Excelsior Water & Mining Co. v. Pierce, 90 Cal. 131, 27 Pac. 44.

In England it was held that dividends must be payable in money; L. R. 14 Eq. 517; and it has been said there that the whole of the profits of a corporation must be divided periodically; L. R. 4 Ch. 494; but this is perhaps too broadly stated; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 201. Neither of the above rules obtains in America: here stock and scrip dividends are very common; Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542; Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72; Howell v. Ry. Co., 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 378; State v. R. Co., 6 Gill (Md.) 363; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 448; and in the absence of statutory restriction are lawful; Williams v. Telegraph Co., 93 N. Y. 162; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 471, 15 Am. Rep. 121; Com. v. Ry. Co., 74 Pa. 83; and bonds may be issued to the stockholders of a railroad corporation in place of cash, as the dividends representing earnings appropriated to the construction account, and these dividends, having been duly earned, may be declared for four years at once instead of each year; Wood v. Lary, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 550.

The declaration of dividends is within the implied scope of the authority of the directors, and unless controlled by the action of the corporation itself they have authority, in their sole discretion, to declare dividends and to fix the time and place of payment within the limits of reason and good faith with the stockholders; State v. Bank, 6 La. 745; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 420, 25 L. Ed. 274; Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Park v. Locomotive Works, 40 N. J. Eq. 114, 3 Atl. 762; Excelsior Water & Mining Co. v. Pierce, 90 Cal. 131, 27 Pac. 44; Williams v. Telegraph Co., 93 N. Y. 162; and as to time and place; King v. R. Co., 29 N. J. L. 82. See Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. City of Belfast, 77 Me. 445, 1 Atl. 362; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Nickals, 119 U. S. 296, 7 Sup. Ct. 209, 30 L. Ed. 363.

Where stockholders, including directors, met and agreed to a division of profits, but without formally declaring a dividend, their action was equivalent to such declaration; Spencer v. Lowe, 198 Fed. 961, 117 C. C. A. 497. Generally courts will not interfere in behalf of a common stockholder to compel the declaration of a dividend except in case of fraud or abuse of discretion; Howell v. R. Co., 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 378; Pratt v. Pratt, Read & Co., 33 Conn. 446; Smith v. Mfg. Co., 29 Ala. 503; Hunter v. Roberts, Throp & Co., 83 Mich. 63, 47 N. W. 131; nor will equity restrain the declaration of a dividend where the propriety of declaring one is fairly within the discretion of the directors; 41

Ch. Div. 1. Dividends may be applied by the corporation to debts due by the stockholder where the right of set-off would exist with respect to other creditors; Ex parte Winsor, 3 Sto. 411, Fed. Cas. No. 17,884; but this right exists only where the dividend has been declared and therefore a stockholder cannot refuse to pay interest due to the corporation in anticipation that a dividend will be declared; Ely v. Sprague, 1 Clarke, Ch. (N. Y.) 351. It has been held that unpaid dividends are assets of the corporation available for creditors in case of its insolvency; Curry v. Woodward, 44 Ala. 305; but this view is disapproved and declared unsound; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2134. Dividends improperly declared may be recalled; id. § 2135; and even if paid, it has been held that they may be reclaimed; Lexington Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Page, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 412, 66 Am. Dec. 165; but this decision is doubted; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2135; although approved in a case which did not require the court to go so far but only to hold that the dividend, not having been paid, was not collectible; Slayden v. Coal Co., 25 Mo. App. 439.

But where the directors, in fraud of a stockholder, set aside all the earnings for working capital, equity required the directors to declare a dividend out of the net earnings not needed for the corporate business; Lawton v. Bedell (N. J.) 71 Atl. 490. Equity will order a surplus of earnings of a life insurance company to be distributed to stockholders, if not needed for its business and the directors have arbitrarily or unreasonably withheld them; Blanchard v. Ins. Co., 78 N. J. Eq. 471, 79 Atl. 533.

When the fact that a dividend has been voted by the directors is not made public or communicated to the stockholders, and no fund is set apart for payment, the vote may be rescinded; Ford v. Thread Co., 158 Mass. 84, 32 N. E. 1036, 20 L. R. A. 65, 35 Am. St. Rep. 462. There can be no discrimination among stockholders of the same class in respect to dividends, but if one stockholder is discriminated against, he cannot recover his share ratably from the others, until at least he has established his right as a creditor of the company and pursued his remedy against it; Peckham v. Van Wagenen, 83 N. Y. 40, 38 Am. Rep. 392.

A stockholder cannot recover the profits made by a corporation until a dividend has been declared; Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 78, 18 Am. Rep. 156; Appeal of Moss, 83 Pa. 269, 24 Am. Rep. 164; Goodwin v. Hardy, 57 Me. 143, 99 Am. Dec. 758; Beveridge v. R. Co., 112 N. Y. 1, 19 N. E. 489, 2 L. R. A. 648; but after a dividend has been declared, and a demand made therefor by a stockholder, he may sue in assumpsit for the amount due him; Jones v. R. Co., 57 N. Y. 196; Brown v. Nav. Co., 49 Pa. 270; and a stockholder has been allowed to follow the amount of his dividend into the hands of the receiver of the company; In re Le Blanc, 14 Hun 8; Beers v. Spring Co., 42 Conn. 17; the declaration of the dividend is an admission of indebtedness in money; Ehle v. Bank, 24 N. Y. 548; and it is no defence to show that the earnings were received in other property; id. The earnings of the corporation are part of the corporate property, and, until separated from the general mass, the interest of the stockholders therein passes with the transfer of the stock; and this is irrespective of the time during which earnings have accrued. By the declaration of a dividend, however, the earnings, to the extent declared, are separated from the general mass and are appropriated to the then stockholders, who become creditors of the corporation for the amount of the dividend. The earnings represented by the dividend, although the fruit of the general property of the company, are no longer represented by the stock, but become a debt of the company to the individual who, at the time of the declaration of the dividend, was the owner of the stock. That the dividend is payable at a future date makes no distinction in the right. The debt exists from the time of the declaration of the dividend, though payment be postponed. This right could of course be transferred, by special agreement, with the stock, but not otherwise. The dividend would not pass as an incident of the stock; Wheeler v. Sleigh Co., 39 Fed. 347; Clark v. Campbell, 23 Utah 569, 65 Pac. 496, 54 L. R. A. 508, 90 Am. St. Rep. 716.

Mandamus will not lie to compel the payment of dividends declared by a private corporation; Van Norman v. Mfg. Co., 41 Mich. 166, 49 N. W. 925.

Dividends must be so declared as to give each stockholder his proportional share of profits; Jones v. R. R. Co., 57 N. Y. 196; Ryder v. R. Co., 13 Ill. 516; L. R. 3 Ch. 262; Atlantic & O. Telegraph Co. v. Com., 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 366; and if one person is excepted, he may sue for his dividends, for the reason that such exception is void; Hill v. Coal & Min. Co. (Mo.) 21 S. W. 508. They can properly be declared only out of profits actually earned; and when improperly declared and paid, they may be recovered back; Comstock v. Drohan, 71 N. Y. 9.

It is said that in Great Britain it is well settled that where a corporation, whether authorized or unauthorized by law to increase its capital stock, accumulates and invests part of its earnings, and afterwards apportions them among its shareholders as capital, the amount so apportioned must be deemed an accretion to the capital of each share, the income of which only is payable to a tenant for life; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, 34 L. Ed. 525.

Where a company, by a majority of the votes, has decided not to divide the money, but to turn it all into capital, it must be held capital from that time; L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 635; L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385. The same principle was established in Massachusetts before the last cited English case had come before the courts of England; Atkins v. Albree, 12 Allen (Mass.) 359; Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Daland v. Williams, 101 Mass. 571; Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121. And in Connecticut, Rhode Island and Maine a dividend of new shares representing accumulated earnings is held to be capital and not income; Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 618; Boardman v. Mansfield, 79 Conn. 634, 66 Atl. 169, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793, 118 Am. St. Rep. 178; In re Brown, 14 R. I. 371, 51 Am. Rep. 397; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428. A stock dividend is held not to distribute property; Kalbach v. Clark, 133 Ia. 215, 110 N. W. 599, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, 12 Ann. Cas. 647; but simply dilutes the shares as they existed before; Williams v. Telegraph Co., 93 N. Y. 189. In In re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618, 11 N. E. 149, the court applied the same rules as between the remainderman and the person entitled for life to the income of shares bequeathed in trust, rejected the test of determining what part of a cash dividend should be deemed principal and what part income, by ascertaining how much was earned before and how much after the death of the testator, approved the English doctrine above cited, and said that from the shares in question no income could accrue, no profit arise to the holder until declared by the company, and that yet should be deemed to have been in the mind of the testator, and not the earnings or profits as ascertained by a third person, or a court upon an investigation of the business of the company.

Where the votes of the corporation left the stockholders at liberty to take the cash dividend or to take new stock and treat the dividend as payment for it, it cannot be said to be a stock dividend; Davis v. Jackson, 152 Mass. 58, 25 N. E. 21, 23 Am. St. Rep. 801. In Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72, it was held that the surplus earnings of a corporation that were not divided at the date of a trust deed belonged to the corpus of the trust as a part of the capital of the trust fund, and that dividends declared out of surplus earnings accrued since the date of the trust deed were income for the life tenant.

Stock which a corporation has acquired from its stockholder in payment of a debt, and which it distributes among its remaining stockholders as surplus earnings, goes to the life tenant, and not to the remainder-man; Green v. Bissell, 79 Conn. 547, 65 Atl. 1056, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011, 118 Am. St. Rep. 156, 9 Ann. Cas. 287.

In Holbrook v. Holbrook, 74 N. H. 201, 66 Atl. 124, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768, it is said the method to be pursued is to inquire into the actual nature and source of the dividend. If it is found to represent surplus earnings accrued since the creation of the trust, it is income and goes to the life tenant. If it is found to represent earnings accrued prior to the creation of the trust, it is capital and goes to the corpus of the trust. And if it is found in whole or in part to represent the increase in value of the corporate plant and business, whether it took place before or after the trust was created, it is also to that extent capital, citing Jones v. Railroad, 67 N. H. 234, 30 Atl. 614, 68 Am. St. Rep. 650; Van Blarcom v. Dager, 31 N. J. Eq. 783; Hite's Devises v. Hite's Ex'r, 93 Ky. 257, 20 S. W. 778, 19 L. R. A. 173, 40 Am. St. Rep. 189. As the court in making the inquiry concerns itself with the substance of the transaction, and not the form in which the corporation has seen fit to clothe it, the fact that a dividend is distributed in cash or stock is of little, if of any, importance in determining whether it is capital or income. The inquiry is largely one of fact, and the dividend is capital or income as the fact discloses into which of the above enumerated classes it falls. That it is said is the logic of the decision of the case in Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72, supra, and to be supported by the great weight of authority in this country; McLouth v. Hunt, 154 N. Y. 179, 48 N. E. 548, 39 L. R. A. 230; Ashhurst v. Field's Adm'r, 26 N. J. Eq. 1; Appeal of Earp, 28 Pa. 368; Smith's Estate, 140 Pa. 344, 21 Atl. 438, 23 Am. St. Rep. 237; Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545, 28 Atl. 565, 44 Am. St. Rep. 310; Hite's Devises v. Hite's Ex'r, 93 Ky. 257, 20 S. W. 778, 19 L. R. A. 173, 40 Am. St. Rep. 189; Pritchitt v. Trust Co., 96 Tenn. 472, 36 S. W. 1064, 33 L. R. A. 856.

In Pennsylvania it is held that when stock is bequeathed in trust for the use of one for life with remainder over, surplus profits accumulated during the testator's life, but not divided until after his death, belong to the corpus of his estate; while dividends of earnings made after his death, whether in cash, stock, or scrip, go to the tenant for life; Smith's Estate, 140 Pa. 344, 21 Atl. 438, 23 Am. St. Rep. 237. In Appeal of Earp, 28 Pa. 368, the earnings from which a stock dividend was declared had accumulated partly before and partly after the death of the testator, and the court held that such dividend should be apportioned between the corpus and income in the proportion that the value of the stock at the testator's death bore to the value of the stock, including the new shares, after the dividend. The principle of apportionment of extraordinary dividends, earned partly before and partly after the inception of the life estate, has also been recognized and applied; Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Ind. 545, 28 Atl. 565, 44 Am. St. Rep. 310; Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 176, 97 Am. Dec. 650; Pratt v. Douglas, 38 N. J. Eq. 541. In Hawaii, the court, after discussing the various rules, adopted the doctrine which treats stock and cash dividends alike, holding that only so much of the new stock allotted to the trustee as was of the par value of the stock so allotted should be apportioned to the life tenant, and the rest should be held as part of the corpus; 12 Haw. 309.

The value of a right to subscribe to additional stock, which depends on the earnings of the corporation since the creation of a trust for the benefit of a life tenant and remainderman, is income; Holbrook v. Holbrook, 74 N. H. 201, 66 Atl. 124, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

In England it was at first held that all extra dividends belonged to the remainderman; 10 Ves. 185; 4 Ves. 800; but the House of Lords finally determined that stock dividends should pass to the remainderman and cash dividends to the life tenant, except in the case of companies which could not legally increase their capital stock, and extra dividends should go to the remainderman; 12 App. Cas. 385.

When arising under a will, the testator's intention must be ascertained, and this is ordinarily that the life tenant shall have the income and bonuses declared by the company; [1893] 3 Ch. 337 (C. A.), following 12 App. Cas. 385, where, upon an examination of many authorities, it was held that a reserved fund set apart out of profits and afterwards distributed as a bonus dividend, to be applied by stockholders in part payment of a new allotment of shares partly paid up, was held capital. Bramwell, L. J., said he could deduce no principle from the authorities.

A note in 26 Harv. L. Rev. 77, classifies the cases as follows: In Massachusetts and a number of cases following the rule of that state, it was held that stock dividends pass to the remaindermen and cash dividends from earnings to the life tenant; Lyman v. Pratt, 183 Mass. 58, 66 N. E. 423; Boardman v. Mansfield, 79 Conn. 634, 66 Atl. 169; DeKoven v. Alsop, 205 Ill. 309, 68 N. E. 930, 63 L. R. A. 587; Millen v. Guerrard, 67 Ga. 284, 44 Am. Rep. 720; Bryan v. Aikin (Del.) 82 Atl. 817. In Pennsylvania and states following the same rule, the courts have distinguished between the life tenant and remainderman with respect to dividends representing earnings before or since the creation of the trust fund; Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. 368; Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 176, 97 Am. Dec. 650; Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545, 28 Atl. 565, 44 Am. St. Rep. 310; Soehnelein v. Soehnelein, 146 Wis. 330, 131 N. W. 739; Miller v. Payne, 150 Wis. 354, 136 N.

W. 811; Pritchitt v. Trust Co., 96 Tenn. 472, 36 S. W. 1064, 33 L. R. A. 856.

Another rule adopted in New York and Kentucky gives the dividends to the life tenant, whether they be of stock or cash representing accumulated earnings; McLouth v. Hunt, 154 N. Y. 179, 48 N. E. 548, 39 L. R. A. 230; Hite's Devises v. Hite's Ex'rs, 93 Ky. 257, 20 S. W. 778, 19 L. R. A. 173, 40 Am. St. Rep. 189. Other cases follow so much of the Massachusetts rule as treats stock dividends as part of the principal; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, 34 L. Ed. 525; In re Brown, 14 R. I. 371, 51 Am. Rep. 397; Kaufman v. Woolen Mills Co., 93 Va. 673, 25 S. E. 1003. The conclusion is reached by the writer (26 Harv. L. Rev. 77) that while all the rules stated are open to objections, that of the Massachusetts courts is the most workable.

See 42 Amer. L. Rev. 25, for a discussion of the subject.

As used in the United States Corporation Tax Act (August 5, 1909), the so-called dividends of a mutual life insurance company doing business on the level premium plan, consisting merely of the portion of the loading of a premium charged in excess of the cost of insurance and returned annually after the first year to the policy holders to reduce their subsequent premiums, are not income and therefore not taxable under that act; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Herold, 198 Fed. 199 (an instructive case on the practice of life insurance companies in this respect); to the same effect, Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Com., 128 Ky. 174, 107 S. W. 802; Fuller v. Ins. Co., 70 Conn. 647, 41 Atl. 4; L. R. 14 App. Cas. 381.

In another sense, according to some old authorities, dividend signifies one part of an indenture.

DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS. This theory "was in its origin directed, not against popular liberty, but against papal and ecclesiastical claims to supremacy in temporal as well as spiritual affairs." Figgis, "The Theory of the Divine Right of Kings."

DIVINE SERVICE. The name of a feudal tenure, by which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain, as to sing so many masses, etc. 2 Bla. Com. 102; Mozl. & W. Dict.

In its modern use the term does not include Sunday schools; Appeal of Gass, 73 Pa. 39, 13 Am. Rep. 726.

DIVISA. In Old English. A device, award, or decree; also a devise; bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm. Also a court held on the boundary, in order to settle disputes of the tenants. Wharton.

DIVISIBLE. That which is susceptible of being divided.

A contract cannot, in general, be divided in such a manner that an action may be brought, or a right accrue, on a part of it; Shaw v. Turnpike Co., 2 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 454. But some contracts are susceptible of division: as, when a reversioner sells a part of the reversion to one man and a part to another, each shall have an action for his share of the rent which may accrue on a contract to pay a particular rent to the reversioner; Thomas v. Smith, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 404. See APPORTIONMENT. But when it is to do several things at several times, an action will lie upon every default; Badger v. Titcomb, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 409, 26 Am. Dec. 611. See Aldrich v. Fox, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 316; Symmes v. Frazier, 6 Mass. 344, 4 Am. Dec. 142; PERFORMANCE.

DIVISION. In English Law. A particular and ascertained part of a county. In Lincolnshire division means what riding does in Yorkshire.

DIVISION OF OPINION. Disagreement among those called upon to decide a matter.

When, in a company or society, the parties having a right to vote are so divided that there is not a plurality of the whole in favor of any particular proposition, or when the voters are equally divided, it is said there is division of opinion. The term is especially applied to a disagreement among the judges of a court such that no decision can be rendered upon the matter referred to them.

When the judges of a court are divided into three classes, each holding a different opinion, that class which has the greatest number shall give the judgment: for example, on a habeas corpus, when a court is composed of four judges, and one is for remanding the prisoner, another is for discharging him on his own recognizance, and the two others are for discharging him absolutely, the judgment will be that he be discharged; Rudyard's Case; Bacon, Abr. Habeas Corpus (B 10), Court, 5.

A certificate under the act of 1891 should contain a proper statement of the facts on which the question of law arises; the entire record should not be transmitted; Emsheimer v. New Orleans, 186 U. S. 33, 22 Sup. Ct. 770, 46 L. Ed. 1042.

DIVISUM IMPERIUM. A divided jurisdiction. Applied e. g. to the jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity over the same subject. 1 Kent 366.

DIVORCE. The dissolution or partial suspension, by law, of the marriage relation.

The dissolution is termed divorce from the bond of matrimony, or, in the Latin form of the expression, a vinculo matrimonii; the suspension, divorce from bed and board, a mensa et thoro. The former divorce puts an end to the marriage; the later leaves it in full force. The term divorce is sometimes also applied to a sentence of nullity, which establishes that a supposed or pretended marriage either never existed at all, or at least was voidable at the election of one or both of the parties.

The more correct modern usage, however, confines the signification of divorce to the dissolution of a valid marriage. What has been known as a divorce a mensa et thoro may more properly be termed a legal separation. So also a sentence or decree which renders a marriage void ab initio, and bastardizes the issue, should be distinguished from one which is entirely prospective in its operation; and for that purpose the former may be termed a sentence of nullity. The present article will accordingly be confined to divorce in the strict acceptance of the term. For the other branches of the subject, see SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO; NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

Marriage, being a legal relation, and not (as sometimes supposed) a mere contract, can only be dissolved by legal authority.

The relation originates in the consent of the parties, but, once entered into, it must continue until the death of either husband or wife, unless sooner put an end to by the sovereign power. In Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 210, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654, it is said that whilst marriage is often termed by text writers and in decisions of courts a civil contract, it is something more. When the contract to marry is executed by the marriage, a relation between the parties is created which cannot change. Other contracts may be modified, restricted, or enlarged, or entirely released upon the consent of the parties, but not so with marriage. The relation once formed, the law steps in and holds the parties to various obligations and liabilities. The supreme court then approves the views laid down in Adams v. Palmer, 51 Me. 483, where it is said that when the contracting parties have entered into the marriage state, they have not so much entered into a contract as into a new relation, the rights, duties, and obligations of which rest not upon their agreement, but upon the general law of the state, statutory or common; they are of law, not of contract. It was of contract that the relation should be established, but being established the power of the parties as to its extent or duration is at an end. Their rights under it are determined by the will of the sovereign as evidenced by the law. They can neither be modified nor changed by any agreement of the parties. It is a relation for life and the parties cannot terminate it at any shorter period by virtue of any contract they may make. "Marriage has been said to be something more than a mere contract, religious or civil; to be an institution"; L. R. 1 P. & D. 130. In England, until the middle of the last century no authority existed in any of the judicial courts to grant a divorce in the strict sense of the term. The subject of marriage and divorce generally belonged exclusively to the various ecclesiastical courts; and they were in the constant habit of granting what were termed divorces a mensa et thoro, for various causes, and of pronouncing sentences of nullity; but they had no power to dissolve a marriage, valid and binding in its origin for causes arising subsequent to its solemnization. For that purpose recourse must be had to parliament; 2

Burn, Eccl. Law 202; Macq. Parl. Fr. 470 (after having first obtained an ecclesiastical decree a mensa et thoro and recovered damages against the adulterer in an action of crim. con. This practice began about 1669). But in 1857 a court was created, "The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes," upon which was conferred exclusively all jurisdiction over matrimonial matters then vested in the various ecclesiastical courts, and also the jurisdiction theretofore exercised by parliament in granting divorces. At present divorce causes are heard, in the first instance, in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, whence an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal.

In Ireland there is no divorce a vinculo, except by act of parliament.

In this country the usage has been various. Formerly it was common for the various state legislatures, like the English parliament, to grant divorces by special act. This practice is now much less common. In many states it has been expressly prohibited by state constitutions; 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 1471. Such an act is constitutional; Wright v. Wright's Lessee, 2 Md. 429, 56 Am. Dec. 723; Berthelemy v. Johnson, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 90, 38 Am. Dec. 179; and does not offend against the constitutional provision which forbids laws impairing the obligation of contracts, even though there was no valid ground for divorce and the wife was not notified; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654, where the husband was a resident of the territory. See also State v. Duket, 90 Wis. 272, 63 N. W. 83, 31 L. R. A. 515, 48 Am. St. Rep. 928. Generally, at the present time, the jurisdiction to grant divorces is conferred by statute upon courts of equity, or courts possessing equity powers, to be exercised in accordance with the general principles of equity practice, subject to such modifications as the statute may direct. The action is statutory only; there is no common-law jurisdiction over the subject of divorce; Ackerman v. Ackerman, 200 N. Y. 73, 93 N. E. 192. The practice of the English ecclesiastical courts, which is also the foundation of the practice of the new court for divorce and matrimonial causes in England, has never been adopted to any considerable extent in this country; but it is said that in some jurisdictions the principles and practice of the ecclesiastical courts are followed so far as they are applicable to our altered conditions and in accord with the spirit of our laws; 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. 460. See Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365; J. G. v. H. G., 33 Md. 401, 3 Am. Rep. 183.

Numerous and difficult questions are constantly arising in regard to the validity in one state of divorces granted by the courts or legislature of another state. The subject is treated in 2 Bish. Mar. Div. and Sep. § 128. The learned author there states the following propositions, which he elaborates with great care: First, the tribunals of a country have no jurisdiction over a cause of divorce, wherever the offence may have occurred, if neither of the parties has an actual bona fide domicile within its territory; secondly, to entitle the court to take jurisdiction, it is sufficient for one of the parties to be domiciled in the country; both need not be, neither need the citation, when the domiciled party is plaintiff, be served personally on the defendant, if such personal service cannot be made, but there should be reasonable constructive notice, at least; thirdly, the place where the offence was committed, whether in the country in which the suit is brought or a foreign country, is immaterial; fourthly, the domicile of the parties at the time of the offence committed is of no consequence, the jurisdiction depending on their domicile when the proceeding is instituted and the judgment is rendered; fifthly, it is immaterial to this question of jurisdiction in what country or under what system of divorce laws the marriage was celebrated; sixthly, without a citation within the reach of process, or an appearance, the jurisdiction extends only to the status and what depends directly thereon, and not to collateral rights.

The doctrine of the first proposition is said not to have been thoroughly established in England; 2 Bish. Mar. D. & Sep. § 43; but it is fully established in America; Davis v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 318; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21; State v. Arrington, 25 Minn. 29; People v. Smith, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 414; Cast v. Cast, 1 Utah, 112; Smith v. Smith, 43 La. Ann. 1140, 10 South. 248; Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 21 S. W. 154; De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 24 N. E. 996, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652; Watkins v. Watkins, 135 Mass. 83; Arrington v. Arrington, 102 N. C. 491, 9 S. E. 200; Appeal of Platt, 80 Pa. 501; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366; Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 21 Sup. Ct. 551, 45 L. Ed. 804; Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, 181 U. S. 179, 21 Sup. Ct. 553, 45 L. Ed. 807. Mr. Bishop maintains the second proposition as fully supported on principle and authority; see especially Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Thompson v. State, 28 Ala. 12; Wakefield v. Ives, 35 Ia. 238; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 108, 19 L. Ed. 604; Richards v. Richards, 19 D. C. 431; but see People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Story, Conf. Laws, Redf. ed. As to the third proposition, which is said by the same author to be universal, see Hanberry v. Hanberry, 29 Ala. 719; Clark v. Clark, 8 N. H. 21; Holmes v. Holmes, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 305; Pawling v. Willson, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 192. The fifth proposition is universally recognized; see Dorsey v. Dorsey, 7 Watts (Pa.) 349, 32 Am. Dec. 767; Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372; Thompson v. State, 28 Ala. 12; Standridge v. Standridge, 31 Ga. 223. See, however, 2 Cl. & F. 568.

When both husband and wife are domiciled in the state where the divorce is granted, the decree of divorce is without doubt valid everywhere; Leith v. Leith, 39 N. H. 38; Harding v. Alden, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Hanover v. Turner, 14 Mass. 227, 7 Am. Dec. 203; Garner v. Garner, 56 Md. 128; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 237, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415, 15 N. E. 707, 2 Am. St. Rep. 447; Arrington v. Arrington, 102 N. C. 491, 9 S. E. 200; Hubbell v. Hubbell, 3 Wis. 664, 62 Am. Dec. 702; Cheely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 328, 28 L. Ed. 298; Barrett v. Failing, 111 U. S. 524, 4 Sup. Ct. 598, 28 L. Ed. 505; Roth v. Roth, 104 Ill. 35, 44 Am. Rep. 81. See L. R. 6 P. D. 35.

If the court making the decree had jurisdiction, it will be held conclusive in other states; In re James' Estate, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; People v. Allen, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 611; Hawkins v. Ragsdale, 80 Ky. 353, 44 Am. Rep. 483; Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158; and jurisdiction will be presumed; Knowlton v. Knowlton, 155 Ill. 158, 39 N. E. 595; unless want of it appears upon the record; Werner v. Werner, 30 Ill. App. 159; Collins v. Collins, 80 N. Y. 1; Morey v. Morey, 27 Minn. 265, 6 N. W. 783; or it may be shown as against the record; Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117, 17 N. W. 720, 50 Am. Rep. 247; Adams v. Adams, 154 Mass. 290, 28 N. E. 260, 13 L. R. A. 275.

As to the right of the wife to acquire a different domicile from that of the husband for the purpose of jurisdiction in a suit for divorce, see DOMICIL.

There has been much difference of opinion as to the extra-territorial effect of constructive service by publication as between states. If both parties are domiciled within the state the decree is of force in other states; Hood v. Hood, 11 Allen (Mass.) 196, 87 Am. Dec. 709; Burlen v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; but if only one, the decree determines his or her status; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 734, 24 L. Ed. 565; Shafer v. Bushnell, 24 Wis. 372; Adams v. Adams, 154 Mass. 290, 28 N. E. 260, 13 L. R. A. 275. Where the custody of children is involved it is held that constructive service of summons cannot give jurisdiction where the defendant and the children are out of the state and do not appear, even if their domicile is within the state; De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165.

The view cited from Bishop concerning the extra-territorial operation of the decree under the constitution is held in Harding v. Alden, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Anthony v. Rice, 110 Mo. 233, 19 S. W. 423; Chapman v. Chapman, 48 Kan. 636, 29 Pac. 1071; Thompson v. Thompson, 91 Ala. 591, 8

South. 419, 11 L. R. A. 443; the contrary view is taken in Van Inwagen v. Van Inwagen, 86 Mich. 333, 49 N. W. 154; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195, 14 N. W. 33, 443, 43 Am. Rep. 706; Flower v. Flower, 42 N. J. Eq. 152, 7 Atl. 689; Doerr v. Forsythe, 50 Ohio St. 726, 35 N. E. 1053, 40 Am. St. Rep. 703; Com. v. Steiger, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 334; [1893] Prob. 89.

Where the husband removed to Minnesota and there secured a divorce on constructive service of notice on the wife, who did not appear, it was held in a subsequent suit for divorce by the wife in New York that the Minnesota decree was invalid; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 29 N. E. 98, 14 L. R. A. 220, 27 Am. St. Rep. 517; and to the same effect are O'Dea v. O'Dea, 101 N. Y. 23, 4 N. E. 110; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274. The ground of these cases is that the court rendering the decree under such circumstances, though having jurisdiction to establish the status of the parties in the state where the divorce is granted, yet has no jurisdiction over their status in New York; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 29 N. E. 98, 14 L. R. A. 220, 27 Am. St. Rep. 517; Lynde v. Lynde, 162 N. Y. 405, 56 N. E. 979, 48 L. R. A. 679, 76 Am. St. Rep. 332; Atherton v. Atherton, 155 N. Y. 129, 49 N. E. 933, 40 L. R. A. 291, 63 Am. St. Rep. 650, which case was reversed in Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155, 21 Sup. Ct. 544, 45 L. Ed. 794, where it was held that actual notice need not be given to a non-resident defendant to bind her by a decree of divorce, if reasonable efforts to give her actual notice as required by the statutes of the state granting the decree are made. The decision in this case was expressly placed on the ground that the suit was brought in the state of the matrimonial domicile. A later case in the supreme court held that the mere domicile within the state of one party to the marriage does not give the courts of that state jurisdiction to render a decree of divorce enforceable in all the other states by virtue of the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution, against a non-resident who did not appear and was only constructively served with notice of the action; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1. The court in this case made the following classification: (a) States where the power to decree a divorce is recognized, based upon the mere domicile of the plaintiff, although the decree when rendered will be but operative within the borders of the state, wholly irrespective of any force which may be given such decree in other states. Under this heading all of the states are embraced with the possible exception of Rhode Island. (b) States which decline, even upon principles of comity, to recognize and enforce as to their own citizens, within their own borders, decrees of divorce rendered in other states, when the court rendering the same had jurisdiction over only one of the parties. Under this heading is embraced Massachusetts, New Jersey (with the qualification made by the decision in Felt v. Felt, 59 N. J. Eq. 606, 45 Atl. 105, 49 Atl. 1071, 47 L. R. A. 546, 83 Am. St. Rep. 612), and New York.

(c) States which, whilst giving some effect to decrees of divorce rendered against its citizens, in other states where the court had jurisdiction of the plaintiff alone, either place the effect given to such decrees upon the principle of state comity alone, or make such limitations upon the effect given to such decree as indubitably establishes that the recognition given is a result merely of state comity. As the greater includes the less, this class of course embraces the cases under the previous heading. It also includes Alabama, Maine, Ohio, and Wisconsin. (d) Cases which, although not actually so deciding, yet lend themselves to the view that ex parte decrees of divorce rendered in other states would receive recognition by virtue of the due faith and credit clause. And this class embraces Missouri and Rhode Island.

This analysis and classification, the court said, serves conclusively to demonstrate that the limited recognition which is given in most of the states to such ex parte decrees of divorce rendered in other states is wholly inconsistent with the theory that such limited recognition is based upon the operation of the full faith and credit clause of the constitution, and on the contrary is consistent only with the conception that such limited recognition as is given is based upon state comity. In Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1, it was held that a decree of divorce rendered in Connecticut, where the husband had his domicile, against a non-resident defendant who had never been domiciled in that state, was not, by virtue of the full faith and credit clause, enforceable in all the other states.

This decision was by a divided court. In 19 Harv. L. Rev. 586, it is elaborately criticised, but the supreme court of Utah (infra), in deciding whether it was justified in granting a divorce, or whether it had jurisdiction, where the husband had abandoned his matrimonial domicile in that state, was constructively served with notice, and failed to appear, followed the Haddock Case and in a careful analysis of it, to determine if under its ruling the decision of the Utah court would be entitled to full faith and credit, held that it would; that a man cannot change the matrimonial domicile by abandoning his wife and going into another state to reside, and laid down the following propositions deduced from it:

Divorces may be granted by state courts, upon constructive service, where statutory cause and residence co-exist, which become binding upon the parties, the courts of all states, and upon all persons: (1) In cases where the parties are residents of the state at the time of the marriage and thus established a domicile of matrimony in that state and the complaining party continues this domicile up to the time of the action. (2). In all cases where the parties are married out of the state, but come to reside in the state afterwards and recognize the marriage relation within the state and thus establish a domicile of matrimony therein, and the party bringing the action continues this marital domicile up to the time of bringing the action. (3) In all cases where a statutory cause and residence co-exist where personal service is had; State v. Morse, 31 Utah 213, 87 Pac. 705, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1127.

Where the full faith and credit clause of the constitution is invoked to compel the enforcement in one state of a decree rendered in another, the question of the jurisdiction of the court by which the decree was rendered is open to inquiry, and if there was no jurisdiction either of the subject-matter or of the person of the defendant, the courts of another state are not required, by virtue of the full faith and credit clause, to enforce such decree; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 id. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1.

Where substituted service was made upon a non-resident defendant in accordance with the laws of the state granting the divorce, it has been held in New York that the decree of divorce was entitled to full extra-territorial validity under the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution; North v. North, 47 Misc. 180, 93 N. Y. Supp. 512; but the deserted spouse had acquired a bona fide domicile in the state granting the decree. It is said that this case marks an important development in this branch of the New York law (19 Harv. L. Rev. 61), rendered necessary by the decision of the supreme court in the Atherton Case, 181 U. S. 155, 21 Sup. Ct. 544, 45 L. Ed. 794, reversing 155 N. Y. 129, 49 N. E. 933, 40 L. R. A. 291, 63 Am. St. Rep. 650, which, following the New York rule that divorce is a proceeding in personam, required that the defendant should be personally served with process within the jurisdiction of the divorce court.

A provision in the Georgia Code of 1895, § 5237, that records and judicial proceedings, properly authenticated, shall have such faith and credit given them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the court from which they were taken, was held not to apply to a decree of divorce granted in Kansas based on constructive and not actual service of process on a wife who remained in Georgia; but, it not appearing that any fraud or concealment was practiced by the husband, the Georgia courts, recognized the validity of the decree on the ground of comity; Joyner v. Joyner, 131 Ga. 217, 62 S. E. 182, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647, 127 Am. St. Rep. 220.

A decree of a state court, having jurisdiction of the parties, that a divorce granted in another state is valid, is held binding in a third state in an attack there upon such decree; Bidwell v. Bidwell, 139 N. C. 402, 52 S. E. 55, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 324, 111 Am. St. Rep. 797, where a North Dakota decree was assailed for lack of jurisdiction and for duress and fraud by the husband in obtaining it. The Massachusetts court, in which the wife sued for divorce, held the Dakota decree valid, as did the court in North Carolina, where after six years she again sued for divorce and it was held that the validity of the North Dakota divorce was established by the Massachusetts court and the plaintiff was estopped by the Massachusetts decree from further questions concerning the one in Dakota.

In New Jersey it was held that a court of chancery, on a bill filed by a wife, had jurisdiction to enjoin the husband from prosecuting a suit for divorce in another state, the jurisdiction of which he had invoked on a false and fraudulent allegation of his residence in that state; Kempson v. Kempson, 58 N. J. Eq. 94, 43 Atl. 97; Kempson v. Kempson, 63 N. J. Eq. 783, 52 Atl. 360, 625, 58 L. R. A. 484, 92 Am. St. Rep. 682. The defendant in this suit had disregarded the injunction and obtained a final decree of divorce. He returned to New Jersey with a new wife, and was committed for contempt. The Vice Chancellor reported a decree that the defendant should be fined and be imprisoned until he should have the decree of the North Dakota court set aside. On appeal, the order of the Vice Chancellor was so far modified as to require the defendant to present the truth to the court in North Dakota and in good faith to urge that its decree be set aside, as only that court could vacate its decree, and the defendant clearly had no power to insure the result. And see Kittle v. Kittle, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 72, where a defendant in a divorce suit was enjoined from prosecuting a subsequent suit in another state for a divorce which he intended to press to judgment, before the former was terminated, where all the witnesses were in the former state, and the wife was peculiarly unable to defend a suit in the other state.

In several states divorces are by statute inoperative when a person goes out of the state and obtains elsewhere a divorce for a cause not valid in the state from which he goes. And in Massachusetts the courts have held invalid decrees, for causes not cognizable in that state, granted in another state, for a divorce when the party went there to procure it; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 156, 23 Am. Rep. 299; or to annul a marriage; Loker v. Gerald, 157 Mass. 42, 31 N. E. 709, 16 L. R. A. 497, 34 Am. St. Rep. 252; and such a decree does not violate the full faith and credit clause of the United States constitution; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366; and such a divorce was held invalid as against public policy, in Wisconsin, where the marriage in another state was considered as having been entered into for the purpose of evading the statute; Lanham v. Lanham, 136 Wis. 360, 117 N. W. 787, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1085; but where it was not shown that the party went to the other state for that purpose and the wife had executed a release to the husband, she was not permitted to impeach the decree; Loud v. Loud, 120 Mass. 14; and so where an appearance was entered in the other state; Elliott v. Wohlfrom, 55 Cal. 384; or where there has been obtained a bona fide domicile elsewhere; Gregory v. Gregory, 76 Me. 535.

The supreme court of the United States has no jurisdiction to re-examine the judgment of a state court, recognizing as valid the decree of a court of a foreign country annulling a marriage; Roth v. Ehman, 107 U. S. 319, 2 Sup. Ct. 312, 27 L. Ed. 499. See Whart. Conf. Laws.

It was never the practice of the English parliament to grant a divorce for any other cause than adultery; and it was the general rule to grant it for simple adultery only when committed by the wife, and upon the application of the husband. To entitle the wife, other circumstances must ordinarily concur, simple adultery committed by the husband not being sufficient; Macq. Parl. Pr. 473. The English statute of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, before referred to, prescribes substantially the same rule,—it being provided, § 27, that the husband may apply to have his marriage dissolved "on the ground that his wife has, since the celebration thereof, been guilty of adultery," and the wife, "on the ground that, since the celebration thereof, her husband has been guilty of incestuous bigamy, or of bigamy with adultery, or of rape, or of sodomy, or bestiality, or of adultery coupled with such cruelty as without adultery would have entitled her to a divorce a mensa et thoro, or of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse, for two years or upwards."

In this country the question depends upon the statutes of the several states, the provisions of which are far from uniform. In some of the states, also, the matter is left wholly or in part to the discretion of the court. See Bish. Mar. D. & Sep.; Weber v. Weber, 16 Or. 163, 17 Pac. 866. For more specific information, recourse must be had to the statutes of the several states.

Some of the more important grounds for divorce are: desertion; for a statutory period; Whitfield v. Whitfield, 89 Ga. 471, 15 S. E. 543; Millowitsch v. Millowitsch, 44 Ill. App. 357; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 65 Vt. 623, 27 Atl. 609 (see DESEPTION); abandonment; McLean v. Janin, 45 La. Ann. 664, 12 South. 747; adultery; Carter v. Carter, 37

Ill. App. 219; McGrall v. McGrall, 48 N. J. Eq. 532, 22 Atl. 582; cruelty; De Zwaan v. De Zwaan, 91 Mich. 279, 51 N. W. 998; Day v. Day, 84 Ia. 221, 50 N. W. 979; Mayhew v. Mayhew, 61 Conn. 233, 23 Atl. 966, 29 Am. St. Rep. 195; 69 Law T. 152; Glass v. Wynn, 76 Ga. 319; Myers v. Myers, 83 Va. 806, 6 S. E. 630 (see LEGAL CRUELTY); habitual drunkenness; McBee v. McBee, 22 Or. 329, 29 Pac. 887, 29 Am. St. Rep. 613; De Lesdernier v. De Lesdernier, 45 La. Ann. 1364, 14 South. 191; Page v. Page, 43 Wash. 293, 86 Pac. 582, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1054; conviction of crime, in most states; incurable insanity, in some states; failure to support; and impotence, relationship, incapacity to enter into the contract, fraud, duress, etc.

Fraud in the contract is an offence or wrong done by one spouse to another, so affecting the essential conditions of the marriage status as practically to destroy that relation, and render the continuance of the bond an injury to the state as well as to the parties. The wrong becomes complete on the completion of the marriage contract. It may consist in false statements as to existing facts which affect one or more of the essential purposes of the status. The injured spouse may however condone the injury and accept the relation or, upon discovery of the wrong, may apply for a divorce; Gould v. Gould, 78 Conn. 242, 61 Atl. 604, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531.

Concealment of epilepsy is a fraud within the meaning of a statute allowing divorce for fraud in the contract of marriage, where the statute forbids an epileptic to marry under penalty of imprisonment. Such statute is valid and a marriage in disregard of it is voidable, not void; id.

Where a statute gave a court of chancery sole cognizance to decree a marriage null and void where either of the parties was at the time insane, drunkenness was held not insanity for which a divorce could be granted; Elzey v. Elzey, 1 Houst. (Del.) 308; nor was an excessive indulgence in morphine considered a ground for divorce under a statute permitting divorce for habitual drunkenness; Youngs v. Youngs, 130 Ill. 230, 22 N. E. 806, 6 L. R. A. 548, 17 Am. St. Rep. 313; Dawson v. Dawson, 23 Mo. App. 169. It is said there must be an involuntary tendency to become intoxicated as often as the temptation is presented, which comes from a fixed habit acquired from frequent and excessive indulgence; McBee v. McBee, 22 Or. 329, 29 Pac. 887, 29 Am. St. Rep. 613; Burns v. Burns, 13 Fla. 369. As an independent ground, drunkenness is held in Maryland to furnish no cause for divorce; Shutt v. Shutt, 71 Md. 193, 17 Atl. 1024, 17 Am. St. Rep. 519; Mason v. Mason, 131 Pa. 161, 18 Atl. 1021. Where the statute coupled habitual intemperance with intolerable cruelty as a cause for divorce, it was said the habitual use of intoxicating liquor, though producing excitement, will not justify a divorce. The habit must be so gross as to produce suffering or want in the family to a degree which cannot be reasonably borne. The term cannot well be defined, but must be applied to cases as they arise by inclusion or exclusion, and the existence of the condition in question decided as a matter of fact; Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 186, 36 Atl. 34, 34 L. R. A. 449, 57 Am. St. Rep. 95, where it is said: "While there may be, on the one hand, such a clear case of intemperate habits as to justify the court in saying that such and such facts constitute a condition of habitual intemperance, or, on the other hand, such an entire absence of proof, beyond an occasional indulgence in the use of ardent spirits, as to warrant the opposite conclusion, yet the main field of inquiry and the determination of the question must be submitted to the jury, and the questions on this submission must be decided by them."

If at the time of the marriage the wife was with child by another man, it may be ground for divorce; Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87; or the marriage may be declared null and void ab initio; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen (Mass.) 605; Carris v. Carris, 24 N. J. Eq. 516; contra, [1897] P. D. 263; but where the wife concealed the fact that she had been previously married and divorced and had a child, it was not such fraud as to entitle the husband to a sentence of nullity; Donnelly v. Strong, 175 Mass. 157, 55 N. E. 892.

The existence of venereal disease at the time of marriage is held ground for annulment; Ryder v. Ryder, 66 Vt. 158, 28 Atl. 1029, 44 Am. St. Rep. 833; Smith v. Smith, 171 Mass. 404, 50 N. E. 933, 41 L. R. A. 800, 68 Am. St. Rep. 440 (where there was refusal to consummate and the court confined its decision to that case, considering it the stronger because of the prompt action); and it is also, during marriage, cause for divorce, being put upon the ground that the communication of such disease to the other spouse is extreme cruelty; Cook v. Cook, 32 N. J. Eq. 475; 28 E. L. & Eq. 603, 29 L. J. Mat. 57; L. R. 1 P. & D. 702, Curt. 678; McMahon v. McMahon, 186 Pa. 485, 40 Atl. 795, 41 L. R. A. 802; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 420, 39 Atl. 516; Holthoefer v. Holthoefer, 47 Mich. 260, 643, 11 N. W. 150 (where the doctrine is sustained, though the divorce was refused in a case termed by Cooley, J., as "quite peculiar," the wife being found diseased, with no suspicion against her chastity, and the husband found on examination to have no signs of it); and having the disease has been held sufficient cause without communicating it; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 765; Canfield v. Canfield, 34 Mich. 519; Hanna v. Hanna, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 21 S. W. 720; where the court was not prepared to say that it would not entitle the wife to a divorce, if the husband were diseased, without proof that he had communicated it to her; a reasonable apprehension of injury is sufficient; 1 Hagg. Con. 35. The libellant must have been ignorant as to the existence and nature of the disease, otherwise there may be waiver and condonation; Rehart v. Rehart (Or.) 25 Pac. 775; but if she was ignorant, the divorce will be granted; Wilson v. Wilson, 16 R. I. 122, 13 Atl. 102.

Charges held not to be grounds of divorce are that the wife entered into love-making, secret correspondence and meetings with young men and the like, which the court characterized as "flirting"; Hancock v. Hancock, 55 Fla. 680, 45 South. 1020, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 670; the refusal of a man to permit his wife actively to control his business, though it result in the inability to live harmoniously together; Root v. Root, 164 Mich. 638, 130 N. W. 194, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 740. The practice of Christian Science as a doctor by a wife may give her husband ground for divorce under a statute authorizing divorce for treatment seriously injuring health or endangering reason, even though such alleged injury is due to the husband's abnormal sensitiveness; Robinson v. Robinson, 66 N. H. 600, 23 Atl. 362, 15 L. R. A. 121, 49 Am. St. Rep. 632.

In the Philippine Islands adultery of the husband must be accompanied by public scandal and disgrace to entitle the wife to a divorce; De La Rama v. De La Rama, 201 U. S. 303, 26 Sup. Ct. 485, 50 L. Ed. 765.

The Uniform Divorce Act has been passed in Delaware, New Jersey, and Wisconsin.

See ABANDONMENT; ADULTERY; LEGAL CRUELTY; HABITUAL DRUNKARD; INSANITY; IMPOTENCE. As to divorce laws in all countries, see 3 Burge, Colonial Law, by Renton & Phillimore.

Some of the principal defences in suits for divorce are: Connivance, or the corrupt consent of a party to the conduct of the other party, whereof he afterwards complains. This bars the right of divorce, because no injury was received; for what a man has consented to he cannot say was an injury; 2 Bish. Mar. & D. § 204. See Brown v. Grove, 116 Ind. 84, 18 N. E. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 823; Pettee v. Pettee, 77 Hun 595, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1067. And this may be passive as well as active; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 87. See Morrison v. Morrison, 136 Mass. 310. See CONNIVANCE. Collusion, which is an agreement between husband and wife for one of them to commit, or appear to commit, a breach of matrimonial duty, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain the legal remedy of divorce, as for a real injury. Where the act has not been done, collusion is a real or attempted fraud upon the court; where it has, it is also a species of connivance; in either case it is a bar to any claim for divorce; 2 Bish. Mar. & D. § 251. See COLLUSION. Condonation, or the conditional forgiveness or remission by the husband or wife of a matrimonial offence which the other has committed. While the condition remains unbroken, condonation, on whatever motive it proceeded, is an absolute bar to the remedy for the particular injury condoned; 2 Bish. Mar. & D. § 268; Farmer v. Farmer, 86 Ala. 322, 5 South. 434; 60 Law J. Prob. 73; O'Connor v. O'Connor, 109 N. C. 139, 13 S. E. 887; Nullmeyer v. Nullmeyer, 49 Ill. App. 573. For the nature of the condition, and other matters, see CONDONATION. Recrimination, which is a defence arising from the complainant's being in like guilt with the one of whom he complains. It is incompetent for one of the parties to a marriage to come into court and complain of the other's violation of matrimonial duties, if the party complaining is guilty likewise; Redington v. Redington, 2 Colo. App. 8, 29 Pac. 811. When the defendant sets up such violation in answer to the plaintiff's suit, this is called, in the matrimonial law, recrimination; 2 Bish. Mar. & D. § 340. See RECRIMINATION.

The foregoing defences, though available in all divorce causes, are more frequently applicable where a divorce is sought on the ground of adultery.

The consequences of divorce are such as flow from the sentence by operation of law, or flow from either the sentence or the proceeding by reason of their being directly ordered by the court and set down of record. In regard to the former, they are chiefly such as result immediately and necessarily from the definition and nature of a divorce. Being a dissolution of the marriage relation, the parties have no longer any of the rights, nor are subject to any of the duties, pertaining to that relation. They are henceforth single persons to all intents and purposes. It is true that the statutes of some of the states contain provisions disabling the guilty party from marrying again; but these are in the nature of penal regulations, collateral to the divorce, and which leave the latter in full force.

In regard to rights of property as between husband and wife, a sentence of divorce leaves them as it finds them. Consequently, all transfers of property which were actually executed, either in law or fact, continue undisturbed; for example, the personal estate of the wife, reduced to possession by the husband, remains his after the divorce the same as before. On the termination of a tenancy by the entirety, created by a conveyance to husband and wife, by an absolute divorce, they afterward hold the land as tenants in common without survivorship; Stelz v. Shreck, 128 N. Y. 263, 28 N. E. 510, 13 L. R. A. 325, 26 Am. St. Rep. 475. See Hopson v. Fowlkes, 92 Tenn. 697, 23 S. W. 55, 23 L. R. A. 805, 36 Am. St. Rep. 120. But it puts an end to all rights depending upon the marriage and not actually vested; as, dower in a wife, all rights of the husband in the real estate of the wife, and his right to reduce to possession her choses in action; Lawson v. Shotwell, 27 Miss. 630; Gould v. Crow, 57 Mo. 200; Whitsell v. Mills, 6 Ind. 229; Clark v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 85; Townsend v. Griffin, 4 Harr. (Del.) 440; Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 541; Legg v. Legg, 8 Mass. 99; Renwick v. Renwick, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 420; Doe v. Brown, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 309; Oldham v. Henderson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 254; Arrington v. Arrington, 102 N. C. 491, 9 S. E. 4; American Legion of Honor v. Smith, 45 N. J. Eq. 466, 17 Atl. 770; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654; Barrett v. Failing, 111 U. S. 525, 4 Sup. Ct. 598, 28 L. Ed. 505; Lamkin v. Knapp, 20 Ohio St. 454. In respect to dower, however, it should be observed that a contrary doctrine has been settled in New York, it being there held that immediately upon the marriage being solemnized the wife's right to dower becomes perfect, provided only she survives her husband; Wait v. Wait, 4 N. Y. 95; Forrest v. Forrest, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 102.

Courts will annul or vacate decrees of divorce on sufficient showing after the death of one or both of the parties thereto, where property rights are involved; Johnson v. Coleman, 23 Wis. 452, 99 Am. Dec. 193; Lawrence v. Nelson, 113 Ia. 277, 85 N. W. 84, 57 L. R. A. 583; Wood v. Wood, 136 Ia. 128, 113 N. W. 492, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891, 125 Am. St. Rep. 223; Shafer v. Shafer, 30 Mich. 163; or where it is shown that the divorce was fraudulently obtained; Appeal of Fidelity Ins. Co., 93 Pa. 242 (where the rule to vacate it was not filed until thirteen years after the decree was obtained and after the death of the party obtaining it); Brown v. Grove, 116 Ind. 84, 18 N. E. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 823 (twenty years after the date of the decree and long after the death of the party obtaining it); or where lack of jurisdiction to grant the decree is shown; Rine v. Hodgson, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint 275; Willman v. Willman, 57 Ind. 500.

One against whom a divorce is obtained who accepts the benefit of the decree, and acts in a way which would be illegal but for the divorce so granted, cannot, after a long lapse of time and after the death of the other party, deny its validity, or assert that it was obtained without due notice; In re Richardson's Estate, 132 Pa. 292, 19 Atl. 82; Mohler v. Shank's Estate, 93 Ia. 273, 61 N. W. 981, 34 L. R. A. 161, 57 Am. St. Rep. 274; nor can one who invokes the jurisdiction of a state and submits himself thereto be heard to question such jurisdiction; Matter of Morrisson, 52 Hun 102, 5 N. Y. Supp. 90, affirmed in 117 N. Y. 638, 22 N. E. 1130; and his representatives can occupy no better position than he would have, if living; id. If the defendant in a divorce decree cannot attack it because it was obtained by his own fraud, his administrator cannot attack it because of such fraud; Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76, 35 N. E. 761, 39 Am. St. Rep. 156. In Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064, where no property rights were involved, it was held that, by the death of a party, a suit for a divorce was absolutely abated, and that the purpose of the action being to change the personal status of the plaintiff in her relations to her husband after her death, there was none which could be changed by judgment; and in Barney v. Barney, 14 Ia. 189, there being no property in which the husband, except for the divorce, would have had an interest at the death of the wife, and no fraud being alleged, it was held that the suit abated. Where in an action for dower in Ohio the defence was set up that the deceased had previously obtained a divorce in an Indiana court, of which it was proved that the wife had no knowledge until after the death of the husband, and the record did not show the ground upon which the decree was based, it was held that the decree acted only on the marital relations, and having been rendered without jurisdiction of the person of the wife, her property rights in Ohio were unaffected; Doerr v. Forsythe, 50 Ohio St. 726, 35 N. E. 1055, 40 Am. St. Rep. 703.

The death of the complainant in a divorce suit, before a writ of error, was held not to destroy the subject-matter of the suit, as respects the jurisdiction of the court of review; although the record fails to show that any property right was involved; Chatterton v. Chatterton, 231 Ill. 449, 83 N. E. 161, 121 Am. St. Rep. 339, where the court approved of decisions denying that, by the death of a party in such suit, the marriage status was forever destroyed and that there was no subject matter of which a court of review could assume jurisdiction; Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236, where the writ of error was taken before the death of the party and a motion to amend the record, so as to give effect to the judgment as of a prior term, was allowed; Wren v. Moss, 2 Gilman (Ill.) 72, where it was held that a writ of error might be prosecuted after the death of the other party, to reverse the decree; Wren v. Moss, 1 Gilman (Ill.) 560, where a motion to abate the suit as to alimony and to make the executor a party for a writ of error was allowed.

A decree of divorce may be reviewed after the death of a party, either on a writ of error; Israel v. Arthur, 6 Colo. 85; or appeal; Shafer v. Shafer, 30 Mich. 163. Such a decree was properly vacated and annulled by the court, after the death of the husband who had obtained it, there being evidence of fraud and imposition on the part of the libellant; Appeal of Boyd, 38 Pa. 241. A case constantly cited to the effect that a divorce obtained by fraud may be set aside after the death of a party has been properly characterized as merely a dictum, since the decision was upon other grounds and that question was not involved; 57 L. R. A. 583, 589, note, where the cases to that date upon the right to contest the validity of a divorce decree, after the death of a party, are collected and reviewed with discrimination. But where a divorce had been obtained by the plaintiff who subsequently died, a motion to set aside the judgment for fraud was properly denied and it was suggested that the proper course was an action in the nature of a bill of revivor bringing before the court all the heirs at law and others interested in the property left by decedent; Watson v. Watson, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 267; and to the same effect is Groh v. Groh, 35 Misc. 354, 71 N. Y. Supp. 985. These cases having been in New York, where the writ of error was abolished, the method of review suggested was doubtless the only one available. In Michigan, where the practice, it is believed, is very similar to that of New York, there is a similar case; Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831; and a precisely similar case citing and relying upon the Michigan case is Roberts v. Roberts, 19 R. I. 349, 33 Atl. 872; and in a later Michigan case it was held that in simple divorce proceedings aimed at no independent relief after the death of one party, no decree could be made relating back to his lifetime; Wilson v. Wilson, 73 Mich. 620, 41 N. W. 817. Where the plaintiff in a suit for divorce dies pending the trial, before submission to the jury, if the issues are found in his favor, judgment of divorce will be entered as of the first day of the term while he was alive; Webber v. Webber, 83 N. C. 280. Cases which hold that the action is of a personal nature and abates with the death of the party bringing it are Hunt v. Hunt, 75 Misc. 209, 135 N. Y. Supp. 39; Dwyer v. Nolan, 40 Wash. 459, 82 Pac. 746, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 551, 111 Am. St. Rep. 919, 5 Ann. Cas. 890 (where it was held that the decree could not be set aside for want of jurisdiction); Wood v. Wood, 1 Boyce (Del.) 134, 74 Atl. 560 (where the court refused to make absolute a decree nisi and set it aside on the petition and affidavit of the defendant suggesting the death of the plaintiff); In re Crandall, 196 N. Y. 127, 89 N. E. 578, 134 Am. St. Rep. 830, 17 Ann. Cas. 874; Strickland v. Strickland, 80 Ark. 451, 97 S. W. 659; Hite v. Trust Co., 156 Cal. 765, 106 Pac. 102; but where the plaintiff died, after the entry of a interlocutory judgment by default, the court had power to render its final decree in accordance therewith after the death of the party; John v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 262, 90 Pac. 53 (this being exactly the reverse of the Delaware case cited).

Of those consequences which result from the direction or order of the court, the most important are: Alimony, or the allowance which a husband, by order of court, pays to his wife, living separate from him, for her maintenance. The allowance may be for her use either during the pendency of a suit,—in which case it is called alimony pendente lite,—or after its termination, called permanent alimony. As will be seen from the foregoing definition, alimony, especially permanent alimony, pertains rather to a separation from bed and board than to a divorce from the bond of matrimony. Indeed, it is generally allowed in the latter case only in pursuance of statutory provisions.

A court has no authority to grant a decree of divorce in favor of a libellant after he has moved the court that no decree be entered; Milliman v. Milliman, 45 Colo. 291, 101 Pac. 58, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999, 132 Am. St. Rep. 181; see, also, Adams v. Adams, 57 Misc. 150, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1064, where it appeared that the defendant had denied the marriage and the court refused to dismiss the suit on libellant's motion; Winans v. Winans, 124 N. Y. 140, 26 N. E. 293. See Milliman v. Milliman, 45 Colo. 291, 101 Pac. 58, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999, 132 Am. St. Rep. 181.

As a general rule of practice, the uncorroborated evidence of a co-respondent is held not sufficient to grant a divorce; Delaney v. Delaney, 71 N. J. Eq. 246, 65 Atl. 217, reversing 69 N. J. Eq. 602, 61 Atl. 266; Herrick v. Herrick, 31 Mich. 298; Evans v. Evans, 93 Ky. 512, 20 S. W. 605; but the court may act upon it, if satisfied that the story told is true and that there is no collusion; 21 T. L. R. 676; (1907) P. 334. The denial of the adultery by defendant and the co-respondent is competent and, although of little weight against clear proof, in the absence of it, was held sufficient; Mayer v. Mayer, 21 N. J. Eq. 246.

As to the Effect on a Will. It has been held that a divorce alone does not revoke a previously executed will; In re Brown's Estate, 139 Ia. 219, 117 N. W. 260; Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 21, 69 N. W. 303; Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307; Card v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am. Rep. 187; L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 597; L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685. It is said that it is probable that a divorce granted at the suit of the wife with alimony expressly decreed to be in lieu of all her rights in the property of her husband, testamentary and otherwise, would by implication of law revoke the will of her husband in so far as it made provision for her; 1 Underhill, Wills 265. In a Michigan case it is held that when at the time a decree of divorce is granted, the parties to the action settle and adjust their property rights by mutual agreement, without mentioning wills theretofore made by them, the decree of divorce and settlement constituted an implied revocation of the will so theretofore made. The court said that by the decree of divorce and the property settlement the parties became strangers to each other, neither thereafter owing to the other either legal or moral obligations or duties, and that there was therefore a complete change in their relations, within the rule of implied revocation of wills; Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 54 N. W. 699, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, followed in Donaldson v. Hall, 106 Minn. 502, 119 N. W. 219, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1073, 130 Am. St. Rep. 621, 16 Ann. Cas. 541. In Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 18, 69 N. W. 303, however, it was held that the doctrine of revocation by implication of law was based upon a presumed alteration of intention, arising from the changed condition and circumstances of the testator, or on the presumption that the will would have been different had it been executed under altered circumstances, and that a settlement of a woman's property rights upon obtaining a divorce from her husband does not work a revocation of a will previously executed by the husband.

As to questions arising from divorce relating to the custody of children, see PARENT AND CHILD.

By the civil law, the child of parents divorced is to be brought up by the innocent party at the expense of the guilty party. Ridley's View, pt. 1, c. 3, § 9, citing 8th Collocation.

DO UT DES. I give that you may give. See CONSIDERATION.

DO UT FACIAS. I give that you may do. See CONSIDERATION.

DOCK. The enclosed space occupied by prisoners in a criminal court.

The space between two wharves. See City of Boston v. Lecraw, 17 How. (U. S.) 434, 15 L. Ed. 118. The owner of a dock is liable to a person who, by his invitation, and in the exercise of due care, places a vessel in the dock, for injury to the vessel caused by a defect thereon which the owner negligently allows to exist; Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 236.

DOCK WARRANT. A negotiable instrument, in use in England, given by the dock-owners to the owner of goods imported and warehoused in the docks, as a recognition of his title to the goods, upon the production of the bills of lading, etc. Pulling on the Customs of London.

DOCKAGE. The sum charged for the use of a dock. In the case of a dry dock, it has been held in the nature of rent. Ives v. The Buckeye State, 1 Newb. 69, Fed. Cas. No. 7117. See WHARFAGE.

DOCKET. A formal record of judicial proceedings; a brief writing. A small piece of paper or parchment having the effect of a larger. Blount. An abstract. Cowell.

To docket is said to be by Blackstone to abstract and enter into a book; 3 Bla. Com. 397. The essential idea of a modern docket, then, is an entry in brief in a proper book of all the important acts done in court in the conduct of each case from its commencement to its conclusion. See Colby, Pr. 154.

In common use, it is the name given to the book containing these abstracts. The name of trial-docket is given to the book containing the cases which are liable to be tried at a specified term of court, called also calendar, or list.

The docket should contain the names of the parties and a minute of every proceeding in the case. It is kept by the clerk or prothonotary of the court. The docket entries form the record until the technical record is made up in proper form; State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409; McGrath v. Seagrave, 2 Allen (Mass.) 443, 79 Am. Dec. 797; Leathers v. Cooley, 49 Me. 337; Tracy v. Maloney, 105 Mass. 90; and this is true of the entries in the docket of a justice of the peace; Davidson v. Slocomb, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 464; Ellsworth v. Learned, 21 Vt. 535. A sheriff's docket is not a record; Thomas v. Wright, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 91; Stevenson v. Weissner, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 343.

DOCKMASTERS. Officers appointed to direct the mooring of ships, so as to prevent the obstruction of dock entrances.

DOCTOR. Means commonly a practitioner of medicine, of whatever system or school. Corsi v. Maretzek, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 1. See PHYSICIANS.

DOCTORS COMMONS. An institution near St. Paul's Cathedral in London, where the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts were held until the year 1857. 3 Steph. Com. 306, n.

In 1768 a royal charter was obtained by virtue of which the members of the society and their successors were incorporated under the name and title of "The College of Doctors of Laws exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts." The College consists of a president (the dean of the arches for the time-being) and of those doctors of laws who, having regularly taken that degree in either of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and having been admitted advocates in pursuance of the rescript of the archbishop of Canterbury, shall have been elected fellows of the college in the manner prescribed by the charter.

DOCUMENT OF TITLE. By the Factors' Act 56, Vict. c. 39, § 4, it is stated to mean any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate warrant, or order for the delivery of goods, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business, as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing, or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented. Benj. Sales 788.

DOCUMENTS. The deeds, agreements, title-papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact. See Hazard v. Durant, 12 R. I. 99.

If a document is lost, secondary evidence of its contents may be given, after laying a proper foundation therefor by proving its former existence, and its due execution, and satisfactorily accounting for the failure to produce it. The burden of proving all these facts rests on the party who seeks to introduce secondary evidence of the document claimed to have been lost; Earley v. Euwer, 102 Pa. 333; Elwell v. Cunningham, 74 Me. 127. See

American Life Insurance & Trust Co. v. Rosendale, 77 Pa. 507. See LOST INSTRUMENT.

In Civil Law. Evidence delivered in the forms established by law, of whatever nature such evidence may be. The term is, however, applied principally to the testimony of witnesses. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 165. See EVIDENCE.

DOE, JOHN. The name of the fictitious plaintiff in the action of ejectment. 3 Steph. Com. 618.

DOG. See ANIMAL; EXPEDITION.

In almost all languages this word is used as a term or name of contumely or reproach. See 3 Bulstr. 226; 2 Mod. 260; 1 Leon. 143; and the title Action on the Case for Defamation in the Digests.

A tax on dogs is constitutional, and so is a provision that in case of refusal to pay the tax, the dog may be killed; Blair v. Forehand, 100 Mass. 136, 97 Am. Dec. 82, 1 Am. Rep. 94; Mowery v. Town of Salisbury, 82 N. C. 175; contra, Archer v. Baertschi, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 12; Jenkins v. Ballantyne, 8 Utah 245, 30 Pac. 760, 16 L. R. A. 689. A proceeding of the most stringent character for the destruction of dogs kept contrary to municipal regulations is constitutional; Julienne v. City of Jackson, 69 Miss. 34, 10 South. 43, 30 Am. St. Rep. 526.

DOGMA. In Civil Law. The word is used in the first chapter, first section, of the second Novel, and signifies an ordinance of the senate. See, also, Dig. 27. 1. 6.

DOING BUSINESS. See FOREIGN CORPORATION.

DOLE. A part or portion. Dole-meadow, that which is shared by several. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

DOLÉANCE. A peculiar appeal in the Channel Islands. It is a personal charge against a judicial officer, either of misconduct or of negligence. L. R. 6 P. C. 155. It still exists in a modified form. L. R. 5 A. C. 348. See 48 L. Jour. 281.

DOLI CAPAX. Capable of mischief; having knowledge of right and wrong. 4 Bla. Com. 22, 23; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 26, 27.

DOLI INCAPAX (Lat.). Incapable of distinguishing good from evil. A child under seven is absolutely presumed to be doli incapax; between seven and fourteen is, prima facie, incapax doli, but may be shown to be capax doli. 4 Bla. Com. 23; Broom, Max. 310; Williams v. State, 14 Ohio 222, 45 Am. Dec. 536; People v. Randolph, 2 Park. Cr. R. (N. Y.) 174. See DISCRETION; AGE.

DOLLAR (Germ. Thaler). The money unit of the United States.

It was established under the confederation by resolution of congress, July 6, 1785. This was originally represented by a silver piece only; the coinage of which was authorized by the act of congress of Aug. 8, 1786. The same act also established a decimal system of coinage and accounts. But the coinage was not effected until after the passage of the act of April 2, 1792, establishing a mint, 1 U. S. Stat. L. 246; and the first coinage of dollars commenced in 1794. The law last cited provided for the coinage of "dollars or units, each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar, as the same was then current, and to contain three hundred and seventy-one grains and four-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure silver, or four hundred and sixteen grains of standard silver."

The Spanish dollar known to our legislation was the dollar coined in Spanish America, North and South, which was abundant in our currency, in contradistinction to the dollar coined in Spain, which was rarely seen in the United States. The intrinsic value of the two coins was the same; but, as a general (not invariable) distinction, the American coinage bore pillars, and the Spanish an escutcheon or shield; all kinds bore the royal effigy.

The milled dollar, so called, is in contradistinction to the irregular, misshapen coinage nicknamed cob, which a century ago was executed in the Spanish-American provinces,—chiefly Mexican. By the use of a milling machine the pieces were figured on the edge, and assumed a true circular form. The pillar dollar and the milled dollar were in effect the same in value, and, in general terms, the same coin; though there are pillar dollars ("cobs") which are not milled, and there are milled dollars (of Spain proper) which have no pillars.

The weight and fineness of the Spanish milled and pillar dollars is eight and one-half pieces to a Castilian mark, or four hundred and seventeen and fifteen-seventeenth grains Troy. The limitation of four hundred and fifteen grains in our law of 1806, April 10, 2 U. S. Stat. L. 374, was to meet the loss by wear. The legal fineness of these dollars was ten dineros, twenty granos, equal to nine hundred and two and seven-ninths thousandths: the actual fineness was somewhat variable, and always below. The Spanish dollar and all other foreign coins are ruled out by the act of congress of Feb. 21, 1857, 13 U. S. Stat. 1856-57, 163, they being no longer a legal tender. But the statements herein given are useful for the sake of comparison: moreover, many contracts still in existence provide for payment (of ground-rents, for example) in Spanish milled or pillar dollars. The following terms, or their equivalent, are frequently used in agreements made about the close of the last and the beginning of the present century: "silver milled dollars, each dollar weighing seventeen pennyweights and six grains at least." This was equal to four hundred and fourteen grains. The standard fineness of United States silver coin from 1792 to 1836 was fourteen hundred and eighty-five parts fine silver in sixteen hundred and sixty-four. Consequently, a piece of coin of four hundred and fourteen grains should contain three hundred and sixty-nine and forty-six hundredths grains pure silver.

By the act of Jan. 18, 1837, § 8, 5 U. S. Stat. 137, the standard weight and fineness of the dollar of the United States was fixed as follows: "of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of pure metal and one hundred of alloy," the alloy to consist of copper; and it was further provided that the weight of the silver dollar should be four hundred and twelve and one-half grains (412 1-2).

The weight of the silver dollar has not been changed by subsequent legislation; but the proportionate weight of the lower denomination of silver coins has been diminished by the act of Feb. 21, 1853, 11 U. S. Stat. L. 160. By this act the half-dollar (and the lower coins in proportion) is reduced in weight fourteen and one-quarter grains below the previous coinage: so that the silver dollar which was embraced in this act weighs twenty-eight and one-half grains more than two half-dollars. The silver dollar then, consequently, ceased to be current in the United States; but it continued to be coined to supply the demands of the West India trade and a local demand for cabinets, etc.

But the act of Feb. 28, 1873, 20 U. S. Stat. L. c. 20, restored the standard silver dollar of the act of Jan. 18, 1837, as a legal tender for all debts except where otherwise stipulated in the contract, and required the monthly purchase of not less than two million and not more than four million dollars worth of silver bullion and the coinage of the same into standard silver dollars, but this latter clause was repealed by act of July 14, 1890. The act of Feb. 12, 1873, introduced the trade-dollar, of the weight of four hundred and twenty grains Troy, intended chiefly, if not wholly, to supplant the Mexican dollar in trade with China and the East. It has found its way, however, all over the United States, and, as it has been declared by a joint resolution of congress of July 22, 1876, 19 Stat. L. p. 215, not to be a legal tender, has led to great inconvenience. The coinage of the trade-dollar was terminated and its redemption and recoinage in standard dollars was directed by the act of March 3, 1887, 24 Stat. L. 643. See also U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 563, 774.

By the act of November 1, 1893, it is declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. It is further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetalism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts.

By the act of March 3, 1849, a gold dollar was authorized to be coined at the mint of the United States and the several branches thereof, conformably in all respects to the standard of gold coins now established by law, except that on the reverse of the piece the figure of the eagle shall be omitted. It is of the weight of 25.8 grains, and of the fineness of nine hundred thousandths. This dollar was made the unit of value by act of congress Feb. 12, 1873, and it was further provided that such dollar, when worn by natural abrasion, and so reduced in weight after twenty years of circulation (as evidenced by date on the face of such coin), will be redeemed by the United States Treasury or its offices, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe for the protection of the Government against fraudulent abrasions and other practices; U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3505, 3511. Its coinage was discontinued by act of September 26, 1890.

A charge of one-fifth per centum was formerly made for converting gold bullion into coin, but by act of Jan. 14, 1876, this law was repealed.

The one dollar and the three dollar gold pieces are no longer coined. See 26 Stat. L. 485.

When the word dollars is used in a bequest or in any instrument for the payment of money, the amount is payable in whatever the United States declares to be legal tender, whether coin or paper money, but not in real or personal property in which money has been invested; Halsted v. Meeker's Ex'rs, 18 N. J. Eq. 136; Lanning v. Sisters of St. Francis, 35 N. J. Eq. 396; Bank of State v. Burton, 27 Ind. 426; Miller v. Lacy, 33 Tex. 351; *Hart v. #### DOLLO. The Spanish form of dolus.

DOLUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A fraudulent address or trick used to deceive some one; a fraud. Dig. 4. 3. 1. Any subtle contrivance by words or acts with a design to circumvent. 2 Kent 560; Code 2. 21.

Dolus differs from culpa in this, that the latter proceeds from an error of the understanding, while to constitute the former there must be a will or intention to do wrong. Wolffius, Inst. § 17.

As opposed to dolus, culpa imports negligence, heedlessness, or temerity, as well as indirect intention (i. e. of consequence intended but not desired). G. Campbell, Analysis of Austin 78. See CULPA. It seems doubtful, however, whether the general use of the word dolus in the civil law is not rather that of very great negligence, than of fraud, as used in the common law. A distinction was also made between dolus and fraus, the essence of the former being the intention to deceive, while that of the latter was actual damage resulting from the deceit.

Such acts or omissions as operate as a deception upon the other party, or violate the just confidence reposed by him, whether there be a deceitful intent (malus animus) or not. Pothier, Traité de Dépôt, nn. 23, 27; Story, Bailm. § 20 a; Webb's Poll. Torts 18; 2 Kent 506, n.

DOLUS MALUS (Lat.). Fraud. Deceit with an evil intention. Distinguished from dolus bonus, justifiable or allowable deceit. Calvinus, Lex.; Broom, Max. 349; 1 Kaufmann, Mackeld. Civ. Law 165. Misconduct. Magna negligentia culpa est, magna culpa dolus est (great negligence is a fault, a great fault is fraud). 2 Kent 560, n.

DOM. PROC. An abbreviation of Domus Procerum, the House of Lords.

DOMAIN. Dominion; territory governed. Possession; estate. Land about the mansion-house of a lord. The right to dispose at our pleasure of what belongs to us.

A distinction has been made between property and domain. The former is said to be that quality which is conceived to be in the thing itself, considered as belonging to such or such person, exclusively of all others. By the latter is understood that right which the owner has of disposing of the thing. Hence domain and property are said to be correlative terms; the one is the active right to dispose of, the other a passive quality which follows the thing and places it at the disposition of the owner. 3 Toullier, n. 83. But this distinction is too subtle for practical use. Puffendorff, Droit de la Nat. l. 4. c. 4, 106 § 2. See 1 Bla. Com. 105; Clef des Lois Rom.; Domat; 1 Hill, Abr. 24; 2 id. 237; EMINENT DOMAIN.

DOMBOC (spelled, also, often dombec. Sax.). The name of codes of laws among the Saxons. Of these King Alfred's was the most famous. 1 Bla. Com. 46; 4 id. 411.

The domboc of king Alfred is not to be confounded with the domesday-book of William the Conqueror.

DOME (Sax.). Doom; sentence; judgment. An oath. The homager's oath in the black book of Hereford. See Doom.

DOMESDAY-BOOK. The record of the survey of England instituted by William the Conqueror and effected by inquests of local jurors. It was begun in 1085 and completed in 1086.

It was primarily a fiscal survey—the liability for paying “geld” in the past and the liability for paying “geld” in the future were the chief points to be ascertained. It has been called “a great rate book.” Incidentally it gives a marvelously detailed picture of the legal, social, and economic state of England, but a picture which, in some respects, is not easily interpreted; Maitl. 2 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 76. It is preserved in two manuscript volumes; the second deals with the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk; the first with the rest of England.

The first is a folio of 382 leaves; the second is a quarto volume of 450 leaves. It is probable that the second was compiled first; Round, Feud. Engl. 140. It was printed by royal command in 1783. A third volume, containing a general introduction and indexes, and a fourth, containing various documents supposed to be connected with the survey, were published in 1816.

It early acquired the name of “Domesday.” The Dialogus de Scaccario ascribes the name to the fact that the people were reminded by it of the Day of Judgment. Hales' theory (Domesday of St. Paul's XI) is that the name was derived from the fact that the inquisitions on which it was based were held on the “Domes-days,” or law-days, of the various hundreds.

“If English history is to be understood, the law of Domesday Book must be mastered. We have here an absolutely unique account of feudalism in two different stages of its growth, the more trustworthy, though the more puzzling, because it gives us particulars and not generalities.” Maitland, Domesday and Beyond 3. It is not a collection of laws; nor a register of title; it is a “geld” book; id. For a partial bibliography, see 2 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. L. H. 77. See Round, Feudal England; 11 Engl. Hist. Rev. 209 (Pollock); Ellis, General Introd. to Domesday; Ballard, Domesday Boroughs; Ballard, Domesday Inquest; 2 Holdsworth, Hist. E. L. 118; 1 Soc. DOMESMEN (Sax.). An inferior kind of judges. Men appointed to doom (judge) in matters in controversy. Cowell. Suitors in a court of a manor in ancient demesne, who are judges there. Blount; Whishaw; Termes de la Ley. See JURY.

DOMESTIC ATTACHMENT. See ATTACHMENT.

DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES. This term in a state statute is used, generally, of manufactures within its jurisdiction. Com. v. Giltinan, 64 Pa. 100.

DOMESTIC PORT. See HOME PORT.

DOMESTICS. Those who reside in the same house with the master they serve. The term does not extend to workmen or laborers employed out-of-doors. Ex parte Meason, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 167; Cook v. Dodge, 6 La. Ann. 276; Richardson v. State, 43 Tex. 456; Merlin, Répert. The act of congress of April 30, 1790, s. 25, used the word domestic in this sense. This term does not extend to a servant whose employment is out of doors and not in the house; Wakefield v. State, 41 Tex. 556.

Formerly this word was used to designate those who resided in the house of another, however exalted their station, who performed services for him. Voltaire, in writing to the French queen, in 1748, says, “Deign to consider, madam, that I am one of the domestics of the king, and consequently yours, my companions, the gentlemen of the king,” etc.; but librarians, secretaries, and persons in such honorable employments would not probably be considered domestics, although they might reside in the houses of their respective employers.

Pothier, to point out the distinction between a domestic and a servant, gives the following example:—A literary man who lives and lodges with you, solely to be your companion, that you may profit by his conversation and learning, is your domestic; for all who live in the same house and eat at the same table with the owner of the house are his domestics; but they are not servants. On the contrary, your valet-de-chambre, to whom you pay wages, and who sleeps out of your house, is not, properly speaking, your domestic, but your servant. Pothier, Proc. Cr. sect. 2, art. 5, § 5; Pothier, Obl. 710, 828; 9 Toullier, n. 314; H. de Pansy, Des Justices de Paix, c. 30, n. 1.

DOMICIL. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 188; Tanner v. King, 11 La. 175; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 505; White v. Brown, Wall. Jr. 217, Fed. Cas. No. 17,538; Horne v. Horne, 31 N. C. 99; Holliman's Heirs v. Peebles, 1 Tex. 673; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 530; Chaine v. Wilson, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 673; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312.

The domicile of a person is that place or country in which his habitation is fixed, without any present intention of removing therefrom. [1892] 3 Ch. 180; Story, Conf. L. § 43.

Dicey defines domicile as, in general, the place or country which is in fact his permanent home, but is in some cases the place or country which, whether it be in fact his home or not, is determined to be his home by a rule of law; Dicey, Dom. 42; and again as "that place or country either (1) in which he in fact resides with the intention of residence (animus manendi); or (2) in which, having so resided, he continues actually to reside, though no longer retaining the intention of residence; or (3) with regard to which, having so resided there, he retains the intention of residence, though he, in fact, no longer resides there;" id. 44. The same definition substantially is given in Dicey, Conf. Laws (Moore's ed.) 727. It is there said not to include cases of domicile created by operation of law.

Domicil is "a habitation fixed in some place with the intention of remaining there always." Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. i, c. xix, s. 218, Du Domicile.

"The place where a person has established the principal seat of his residence and of his business." Pothier, Introd. Gen. Cout. d'Orleans, ch. 1, s. 1, art. 8.

"That place is to be regarded as a man's domicile which he has freely chosen for his permanent abode [and thus for the centre at once of his legal relations and his business]." Savigny, S. 353.

"A residence at a particular place, accompanied with [positive or presumptive proof of] an intention to remain there for an unlimited time." Phillimore, Int. Law 49.

"That place is properly the domicile of a person in which he has voluntarily fixed the habitation of himself and his family, not for a mere special and temporary purpose, but with a present intention of making it his permanent home, unless and until something (which is unexpected or uncertain) shall occur to induce him to adopt some other permanent home." 28 L. J. Ch. 361, 366, per Kindersley, V. C. It is said to be a relation between an individual and a particular locality or country. 22 Harv. L. Rev. 220; In re Reed's Will, 48 Or. 500, 87 Pac. 763.

It has been said that there is no precise definition of the word; 25 L. J. Ch. 730; but Dicey (Domicil, App. and in his Conf. Laws 731) dissects from this statement. In the latter work the learned writer says that "the attempts which have been made to define domicile, and of the criticisms upon such attempts, lead to results which may be summed up as follows:

"First, Domicil, being a complex term, must, from the nature of things, be capable of definition. In other words, it is a term which has a meaning, and that meaning can be explained by analyzing it into its elements.

"Secondly. All the best definitions agree in making the elements of domicile 'residence' and 'animus manendi.'

"Thirdly. Several of these definitions—such, for example, as Story's Phillimore's, or Vice-Chancellor Kindersley's—have succeeded in giving an explanation of the meaning of domicile, which, even if not expressed in the most precise language, is substantially accurate.

"Fourthly. The reason why English courts have been inclined to hold that no definition of domicile is satisfactory is, that they have found it impossible to reconcile any definition with three sets of judicial decisions or dicta (an officer in the service of the East India Company; an Englishman acquiring a domicile in another country; and a person residing in another country for his health). When, however, these sets are examined, it is found that two of them consist of cases embodying views of domicile now admitted to be erroneous, whilst the third set can be reconciled with all the best definitions of domicile." Dicey, Conf. Laws 735.

A person must have a domicile for purposes of taxation; Thorndike v. City of Boston, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 242; Borland v. City of Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424; Church v. Rowell, 49 Me. 367; for jurisdiction; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366; Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 21 Sup. Ct. 551, 45 L. Ed. 804; Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, 181 U. S. 179, 21 Sup. Ct. 553, 45 L. Ed. 867; Ayer v. Weeks, 65 N. H. 248, 18 Atl. 1108, 6 L. R. A. 716, 23 Am. St. Rep. 37; for succession; Gilman v. Gilman, 52 Me. 165, 83 Am. Dec. 502; Merrill's Heirs v. Morrisett, 76 Ala. 433; Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556; for administration; Hindman's Appeal, 85 Pa. 466; for pauper settlement; Abington v. North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 177; for loyal character; Desmare v. U. S., 93 U. S. 605, 23 L. Ed. 959; for homestead exemption; Shepherd v. Cassiday, 20 Tex. 24, 70 Am. Dec. 372; for attachment; Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 308; Hicks v. Skinner, 72 N. C. 1. A person can, however, have but one domicile at a time; Desmare v. U. S., 93 U. S. 605, 23 L. Ed. 959; Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158; Evans v. Payne, 30 La. Ann. 502; Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556; Abington v. North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 170; but Cockburn (Nationality) says that it is quite possible for a person to have two domicils. See Morse, Citizenship 100. And it is said that a person may have both a civil and a commercial domicile; Dacey, Conf. Laws 740.

A bachelor cannot claim the place where he takes his meals as his residence for voting purposes, when he keeps a business office and sleeping apartments in connection therewith in another place, where he spends most of his time; State v. Savre, 129 Ia. 122, 105 N. W. 387, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452; Behrensmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591, 26 N. E. 704 (where an engineer had a room in one state and took his meals in another); Carter v. Putnam, 141 Ill. 138, 30 N. E. 681 (where an unmarried man was in business in one town and took the greater number of his meals with his father, who lived in another, keeping part of his clothing in each place); Longhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 Atl. 300, 27 L. R. A. 330.

Where a house was located on the line between two towns, it was said by Shaw, C. J., that if it could be ascertained where the occupant usually slept, this would be a preponderating circumstance, and, in the absence of other proof, decisive; Inhabitants of Abington v. Inhabitants of North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 170.

Domicil may be either national or domestic. In deciding the question of national domicile, the point to be determined will be in which of two or more distinct nationalities a man has his domicile. In deciding the matter of domestic domicile, the question is in which subdivision of the nation does the person have his domicile. Thus, whether a person is domiciled in England or France would be a question of national domicile, whether in Norfolk or Suffolk county, a question of domestic domicile. The distinction is to be kept in mind, since the rules for determining the two domicils, though frequently, are not necessarily, the same; see 2 Kent 449; Story, Conf. Laws § 39; Westl. Priv. Int. Law 15; Wheat. Int. Law 123.

The Romanists and civilians seem to attach about equal importance to the place of business and of residence as fixing the place of domicile; Pothier, Introd. Gen. Cout. d'Orleans, c. 1, art. 1, § 8; Story, Conf. Laws § 42. This may go far towards reconciling the discrepancies of the common law and civil law as to what law is to govern in regard to contracts.

Legal residence, inhabitancy, and domicile are generally used as synonymous; Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 70; Del Hoyo v. Brundred, 20 N. J. L. 328; Bartlett v. Brisbane, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 489; Moore v. Wilkins, 10 N. H. 452; Cooper v. Galbraith, 3 Wash. C. C. 555, Fed. Cas. No. 3,193; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 505; Holmes v. Greene, 7 Gray (Mass.) 299; Church v. Crossman, 49 Ia. 447; but much depends on the connection and purpose; In re Thompson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 43; Lyman v. Fiske, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 231, 28 Am. Dec. 293; Inhabitants of Exeter v. Inhabitants of Brighton, 15 Me. 58; "residence" has a more restricted meaning than "domicil;" Chariton County v. Moberly, 59 Mo. 238; Foster v. Hall, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 346; Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424. So also in insolvency statutes; Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231; those relating to administration and distribution; White v. Tennant, 31 W. Va. 790, 8 S. E. 596, 13 Am. St. Rep. 896; testamentary matters; In re Zerega's Will, 20 N. Y. Supp. 417; eligibility for public office; People v. Platt, 50 Hun 454, 3 N. Y. Fraser*, 54 Ia. 289, 6 N. W. 293; Penfield v. R. Co., 29 Fed. 494. Within divorce statutes, residence has been construed as equivalent to domicile; Graham v. Graham, 9 N. D. 88, 81 N. W. 44; Downs v. Downs, 23 App. D. C. 381; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Ia. 36; but it must be an actual residence; Hamill v. Talbott, 81 Mo. App. 210. Besides mere bodily presence within the state, there must be the present bona fide purpose of abiding there indefinitely as a home; Graham v. Graham, 9 N. D. 88, 81 N. W. 44; mere length of time during which a person has lived in a particular locality is not controlling; and if he remain there longer than the period of time required to give him a legal residence, but without any intention of making it his permanent place of residence, he does not become a resident thereof; Sylvester v. Sylvester, 109 Ia. 401, 80 N. W. 547.

The term citizenship ordinarily conveys a distinct idea from that of domicile; State v. Adams, 45 Ia. 99, 24 Am. Rep. 760; but it is often construed in the sense of domicile; Morris v. Gilmer, 129 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 289, 32 L. Ed. 690; Comitis v. Parkerson, 56 Fed. 556, 22 L. R. A. 148.

Two things must concur to establish domicile,—the fact of residence and the intention of remaining. These two must exist or must have existed in combination; State v. Hallett, 8 Ala. 159; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb.

(N. Y.) 504; Shelton v. Tiffin, 6 How. (U. S.) 163, 12 L. Ed. 387; Lyman v. Fliske, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 231, 28 Am. Dec. 293; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 530; Leach v. Sc. 44; In re Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134. This principle of revival, however, is said not to apply where both domiciles are domestic; 5 Madd. 379; Am. Lead. Cas. 714. Where a young man left the state of his original domicile to go to another state to fill a definite engagement for a year and for his health, and at the end of such engagement, returned to the domicile of his origin, it was held that if he had ever renounced his domicile of origin, he had regained it by reverter, it not appearing that he had a domicile elsewhere; Mayo v. Society, 71 Miss. 590, 15 South. 791.

Mere taking up residence is not sufficient, unless there be an intention to abandon a former domicile; Bradley v. Lowry, Speers, Eq. (S. C.) 1, 39 Am. A subsequent intent may be grafted on a temporary residence; 2 C. Rob. 322. Removal to a place with an intention of remaining there for an indefinite period and as a place of fixed present domicile, constitutes domicile, though there be a floating intention to return; 2 B. & P. 228; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 374. Both inhabitancy and intention are to a great extent matters of fact, and may be gathered from slight indications; Pearce v. State, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 63, 60 Am. Dec. 135; Berry v. Hull, 6 N. M. 643, 30 Pac. 936. A statute as to acquiring a residence will be strictly construed, and where a person spends part of his time in one state and the other part at his home in another, and where he has no business in the former but appears to be gaining a residence for the purpose of divorce only, he is not a bona fide resident; Albee v. Albee, 43 Ill. App. 370. The place where a person lives is presumed to be the place of domicile until facts establish the contrary; 2 B. & P. 228, n.; 2 Kent 532; Shepard v. Wright, 113 N. Jr. 750; but where he was a non-resident of the state for many years and until within two months prior to his death, the presumption is that he was a non-resident at the time of his death; Price v. Price, 156 Pa. 617, 27 Atl. 291.

Proof of domicile does not depend upon any particular fact, but upon whether all the facts and circumstances taken together tend to establish the fact; Inhabitants of Abington v. Inhabitants of North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 170; Appeal of Hindman, 85 Pa. 466. Engaging in business and voting in a particular place are evidence of domicile there; *Myr. Prob. A finding that a person intended to fix his domicile in the city wherein he was taxed for personal property was sustained on evidence that he had actually resided there for four years and had built an expensive house with the evident intention of making it his permanent home; and this against his own testimony as to his intention; Beecher v. Common Council of Detroit, 114 Mich. 228, 72 N. W. 206.

Domicil is said to be of three kinds,—domicil of origin, or by birth, domicile by choice, and domicile by operation of law. The place of birth is the domicil by birth if at that time it is the domicile of the parents; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 405; Hardy v. De Leon, 5 Tex. 211. See Sasportas v. De La Motta, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 38. The domicile of a legitimate child is that of its father; L. R. 1 P. & D. 611; Inhabitants of Freetown v. Inhabitants of Taunton, 16 Mass. 52; Lacy v. Williams, 27 Mo. 280; Kennedy v. Ryall, 67 N. Y. 379; Dresser v. Illuminating Co., 49 Fed. 257; Kelly v. Garrett, 67 Ala. 304; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 405; Blumenthal v. Tannenholz, 31 N. J. Eq. 194; Desesbats v. Berquier, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 349, 2 Am. Dec. 448; 5 Ves. 786; see De Jarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415. Westlake (Int. Law) maintains that a posthumous child takes its mother's domicile; but see Whart. Conf. Laws § 35. The domicile by birth of a minor continues to be his domicile till changed; Overseers of Paterson Tp. v. Overseers of Byram Tp., 23 N. J. L. 394; Hiestand v. Kuns, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 345, 46 Am. Dec. 481. See Dresser v. Illuminating Co., 49 Fed. 257. It changes with that of the father; Allgood v. Williams, 92 Ala. 551, 8 South. 722; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751; even though there was an agreement between the parents upon their separation that the mother should have the control of the child; Lanning v. Gregory, 100 Tex. 310, 99 S. W. 542, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 690, 123 Am. St. Rep. 809.

A student does not change his domicile by residence at college; Granby v. Amherst, 7 Mass. 1; Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698; Sanders v. Getchell, 76 Me. 158, 49 Am. Rep. 606; Hart v. Lindsey, 17 N. H. 235, 43 Am. Dec. 597; and a prisoner removed from his domicile for temporary imprisonment does not acquire a new domicile; Barton v. Barton, 74 Ga. 761; Young v. Pollak, 85 Ala. 439, 5 South. 279; Topsham v. Lewiston, 74 Me. 237, 43 Am. Rep. 584; or a convict for a long term; Topsham v. Lewiston, 74 Me. 237, 43 Am. Rep. 584; or a fugitive from justice though intending never to return; Cobb v. Rice, 130 Mass. 231; but see Young v. Pollak, 85 Ala. 439, 5 South. 279. A change of residence for purposes of health does not generally establish a new domicile; Ex parte Blumer, 27 Tex. 734; Still v. Woodville, 38 Miss. 646. Absence in the service of the government does not necessarily affect the domicile; Hannon v. Grizzard, 89 N. C. 115; Dennis v. State, 17 Fla. 389; In re Town of Highlands, 22 N. Y. Supp. 137; depending, of course, on the intention of the party; Darragh v. Bird, 3 Or. 229; Wood v. Fitzgerald, id. 568; Mooar v. Harvey, 128 Mass. 219. A diplomatic representative residing abroad does not change his domicile; Com. v. Jones, 12 Pa. 365; or a consul; Woodbridge v. Wilkins, 3 How. (Miss.) 360; or one in the military or naval service; Brewer v. Linnaeus, 36 Me. 428; Mooar v. Harvey, 128 Mass. 219; nor a sailor absent on duty; Hallet v. Bassett, 100 Mass. 167.

It was held, however, in Tennessee, on a suit for divorce, that the acquisition of an actual home in Washington, by the petitioner, with the intention of remaining there for an indefinite time, countervailed declarations of intention to return to Tennessee upon the happening of an uncertain future event; Sparks v. Sparks, 114 Tenn. 666, 88 S. W. 173; so one who left a state for the purpose of teaching school (the question arising as to the statute of limitations); Dignam v. Shaff, 51 Wash. 412, 98 Pac. 1113, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996; Redfearn v. Hines, 123 Ga. 391, 51 S. E. 407.

The domicile of origin always remains in abeyance, as it were, to be resorted to the moment the domicile of choice is given up. If one leaves a domicile of choice, with the intention of acquiring a new one, his domicile of origin attaches the moment he leaves the former, and persists until he acquires the latter; J. R. 1 Sc. App. 441; Marks v. Marks, 75 Fed. 321; Dacey, Dom. 92. This, however, can only be true of national, as distinguished from local domicile; when a local domicile of choice is acquired, it certainly persists until a new one is adopted.

Domicil by choice is that domicile which a person of capacity of his free will selects to be such.

Domicil is conferred in many cases by operation of law, either expressly or consequentially. The domicile of the husband is that of the wife; Hanberry v. Hanberry, 29 Ala. 719; McAfee v. University, 7 Bush (Ky.) 135; Wingfield v. Rhea, 77 Ga. 84; Babbitt v. Babbitt, 69 Ill. 277; Mason v. Homer, 105 Mass. 116; Baldwin v. Flagg, 43 N. J. L. 495; 7 Il. L. C. 390; Anderson v. Watt, 138 U. S. 694, 11 Sup. Ct. 449, 34 L. Ed. 1078. A woman on marriage takes the domicile of her husband, and a husband, if entitled to a divorce, may obtain it though the wife be actually resident in a foreign state; 2 Cl. &

F. 488; Parrett v. Palmer, 8 Ind. App. 356, 35 N. E. 713, 52 Am. St. Rep. 479; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 299; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195, 14 N. W. 33, 443, 43 Am. Rep. 706. But, where it is necessary for her to do so, the wife may acquire a separate domicile, which may be in the same jurisdiction; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 108, 19 L. Ed. 604; Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 659; Gould v. Crow, 57 Mo. 204; Chapman v. Chapman, 129 Ill. 386, 21 N. E. 803; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. (U. S.) 582, 16 L. Ed. 226; contra, 2 Cl. & F. 488; Dacey, Dom. 104. She may rest on her husband's domicile for the purpose of obtaining a divorce; Masten v. Masten, 15 N. H. 159; Williamson v. Parisien, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 389; Fickle v. Fickle, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 203; Person v. Person, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 148; McDermott's Appeal, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 251. See Wood v. Wood, 54 Ark. 172, 15 S. W. 459; 30 Am. L. Rev. 604; DIVORCE.

A wife divorced a mensa et thoro may acquire a separate domicile so as to sue her husband in the United States courts; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. (U. S.) 582, 16 L. Ed. 226; so where the wife is deserted; Moffatt v. Moffatt, 5 Cal. 280; 2 E. L. & Eq. 52; 2 Kent 573; but the right to do so springs from the necessity for its exercise; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Atherton v. Atherton, 155 N. Y. 129, 49 N. E. 933, 40 L. R. A. 291, 63 Am. St. Rep. 650; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 604; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1. The wife of an insane person may change her domicile; McKnight v. Dudley, 148 Fed. 204, 78 C. C. A. 162.

Where a husband and wife had an established permanent residence in Minnesota, and the wife was compelled by her husband's threats to remove to Massachusetts, compliance with his commands was held not to constitute an abandonment of her domicile in Minnesota, though she remained in Massachusetts several years; Bechtel v. Bechtel, 101 Minn. 511, 112 N. W. 883, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100; so a wife's absence from the city, after being deserted by her husband, without the intention of making her home elsewhere, was held not sufficient to change her domicile in a suit for divorce; Humphrey v. Humphrey, 115 Mo. App. 361, 91 S. W. 405. Where the domicile of matrimony was in a particular state, and the husband abandoned his wife and went into another state to avoid his marital obligations, such other state did not become a new domicile of matrimony, and therefore was not to be treated as the actual or constructive domicile of the wife; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1.

A British subject born in England had resided in France under such circumstances that the English law would deem him domiciled there, although he did not acquire a domicile which the French law would recognize. He died leaving a will disposing of movables in England; held that the will should be governed by the English law; 22 T. L. R. 711, following [1903] 1 Ch. 821. Under somewhat similar circumstances, the personal property of a decedent was held to be subject to the law of France, which recognizes a conjugal domicile analogous to what is known in our law as a matrimonial domicile, and is distinguished from that domicile which is required for the purpose of contracting a lawful marriage; Harral v. Harral, 39 N. J. Eq. 279, 51 Am. Rep. 17, where it was held that the government authorization required by the French code to establish a domicile in France is not necessary to establish a conjugal domicile, citing Le Breton v. Nouchet, 3 Mart. O. S. (La.) 60, 5 Am. Dec. 736; Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs (Tenn.) 620, 33 Am. Dec. 168; Glenn v. Glenn, 47 Ala. 204; Mason v. Homer, 105 Mass. 116, to the point that with respect to the property rights of husband or wife in the personal property of the other, derived from the marriage relation, the place where the marriage was celebrated is not decisive; these rights depend on the matrimonial domicile. An English case held that where the matrimonial domicile was English, the English courts had jurisdiction to entertain a suit for judicial separation, though the domicile of the parties was German; 23 T. L. R. 539. So in suits for nullity, residence and not domicile is the test of jurisdiction; 48 L. J. P. 1; 71 id. 74; [1902] P. 143.

Divorce is regulated by the law of the domicile of the parties; [1895] A. C. 517. A domicile for this purpose requires both the animus and the factum; L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 307; and the intention is itself a question of fact, to be determined by evidence, the declarations of the party not being conclusive; [1892] 3 Ch. 180.

The domicile of a widow remains that of her deceased husband until she makes a change; Story, Conf. Laws § 46; Miffin Tp. v. Elizabeth Tp., 18 Pa. 17.

Commercial domicile. There may be a commercial domicile acquired by maintenance of a commercial establishment in a country, in relation to transactions connected with such establishments; 1 Kent 82; Lau Ow Bew v. U. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340; U. S. v. Chin Quong Look, 52 Fed. 203. See Dacey, Dom. 341; The Dos Hermanos, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 76, 4 L. Ed. 189.

This is such a residence in a country for purposes of trade as makes a person's trade or business contribute to, or form part of the resources of such country. The question is whether he is or is not residing in such country with the purpose of continuing to trade there; Dacey, Conf. Laws 737. The intention of remaining in the commercial domicile is the intention to continue to reside and trade there for the present; id. 738. Commercial domicile is not forfeited by temporary absence at the domicile of origin; Lau Ow Bew v. U. S., 144 U. S. 63, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340; but if a person go into a foreign country and engage in trade there, he is, by the law of nations, to be considered a merchant of that country, and subject for all civil purposes, whether that country be hostile or neutral; 3 B. & P. 113; 3 C. Rob. 12; 1 Hagg. 103, 104; U. S. v. Gillies, 1 Pet. C. C. 159, Fed. Cas. No. 15,206; Murray v. The Charming Betsy, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 64, 2 L. Ed. 208; and this whether the effect be to render him hostile or neutral in respect to his bona fide trade; 1 Kent 75; 3 B. & P. 113; 1 C. Rob. 249.

Corporations. If the term domicile can apply to corporations, they have their domicile wherever they are created; L. R. 1 Ex. 428; 5 H. L. 416; City of St. Louis v. Ferry Co., 40 Mo. 580; see North & South Rolling Stock Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 234, 35 N. E. 608, 24 L. R. A. 462; irrespective of the residence of the officers or the place where the business is transacted; Merrick v. Van Santvoord, 34 N. Y. 208. If the charter does not fix the domicile, and the directors hold their meetings in several places, the domicile for taxing purposes will be where the by-laws require the stockholders to hold their meetings; Grundy County v. Coal Co., 94 Tenn. 295, 29 S. W. 116. The New York rule is that it is to be where the principal place of business is situated; Austen v. Telephone Co., 73 Hun 96, 25 N. Y. Supp. 916. The place where the business is done and where its personal property is situated is the situs of such property for taxation; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur, 2 Ariz. 428, 19 Pac. 157, 1 L. R. A. 244, 2 Interst. Com. Rep. 189.

A permanent foreign agency of an insurance company may create an independent domicile in the place of the agency, for the purpose of enforcing legal obligation; Martine v. Life Ins. Soc., 53 N. Y. 339, 13 Am. Rep. 529. See Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black (U. S.) 286, 17 L. Ed. 130. See FOREIGN CORPORATION; CITIZEN.

Change of domicile. Any person, sui juris, may make any bona fide change of domicile at any time; 5 Madd. 379; President, etc., of Harvard College v. Gore, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 370; 35 E. L. & Eq. 532. And the object of the change does not affect the right, if it be a genuine change with real intention of permanent residence; Cooper v. Galbraith, 3 Wash. C. C. 546, Fed. Cas. No. 3,193; Case v. Clarke, 5 Mas. 70, Fed. Cas. No. 2,490; Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine 594, Fed. Cas. No. 2,517; Young v. Pollak, 85 Ala. 439, 5 South. 279. Domicile is not lost by going to another state to seek a home, but continues until the home is obtained; Labe v. Brauss, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 255. Where the parties had abandoned their domicile and were on their way to their future home, the former domicile was not lost before their arrival at the place of the new domicile; Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158. Until a new domicile is obtained, the old one is not lost; Desmare v. U. S., 93 U. S. 605, 23 L. Ed. 959; Inhabitants of Monson v. Inhabitants of Fairfield, 55 Me. 117; but is presumed to continue until shown to have been changed; Anderson v. Watt, 138 U. S. 694, 11 Sup. Ct. 449, 34 L. Ed. 1078; Desmare v. U. S., 93 U. S. 605, 23 L. Ed. 959.

To constitute a change of domicile three things are essential: (1) Residence in another place; (2) an intention to abandon the old domicile; and (3) an intention of acquiring a new one; or as some writers express it there must be an animus non revertendi and an animus manendi, or animus et factum; Berry v. Wilcox, 44 Neb. 82, 62 N. W. 249, 48 Am. St. Rep. 706; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312; 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 212; 10 H. L. Cas. 272; In re Reed's Will, 48 Or. 500, 87 Pac. 763.

The factum is the transfer of the bodily presence, and the animus is the intention of residing permanently or for an indefinite period. A wife's removal into another state for the benefit of her husband's health and a residence there for twelve years will not change the original domicile; In re Reed's Will, 48 Or. 500, 87 Pac. 763; Ensor v. Graff, 43 Md. 291; Cruger v. Phelps, 21 Misc. 252, 47 N. Y. Supp. 61; Still v. Corp. of Woodville, 38 Miss. 646; 10 Cl. & F. 42; Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 69. In 73 L. J. K. B. N. S. 613, reversing 85 L. T. N. S. 508, 65 J. P. 819, the House of Lords held that the burden of proving that one whose domicile of origin was in the United States had changed his domicile was not overcome by proof that he originally came to England on account of his health, and lived there for twenty-seven years, describing himself as an American citizen, purchasing property in the United States in the hope of finally making his home there, etc. The Lord Chancellor said that if the decedent intended to make England his permanent home, that country would become his domicile, notwithstanding that such intention was formed on account of the condition of his health, but that he could not bring himself to a conclusion from the facts whether the decedent entertained that intention or not, and expressly rested his opinion against a change of domicile upon the fact that the burden was upon the party asserting a change of domicile to establish it.

In the acquisition of a new domicile, more is required than a mere change of residence; there must be a fixed intention to renounce birthright in the place of original domicile and to adopt the political and municipal status involved by permanent residence of choice elsewhere; [1906] A. C. 56; 94 L. T. 33 (an Englishman who lived the greater part of each year for thirty years in Scotland); and a case in 23 Ch. Div. 532, denies the acquisition of a domicile of choice by a British subject in any part of China, on account of differences of religion, customs, etc. See 24 L. Q. R. 440, where the case of British diplomatic agents, etc., residing in India is discussed, and the view taken that their home domicile is not lost. But it is held in Mather v. Cunningham, 105 Me. 326, 74 Atl. 809, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761, 18 Ann. Cas. 692, that the usual law of domicile applies to an American as to acquiring a domicile in Shanghai.

A native of the United States, who had lived twenty-seven years in England, but always described himself as an American citizen, and had bought property in Baltimore in the hope of finally making his home there, though from the state of his health a voyage across the Atlantic was impracticable, was held not to have abandoned his domicile of origin; [1904] A. C. 287. But a Scotchman who for thirty years had lived in Ceylon, where he was engaged in business, and who never spoke of any intention of taking up his residence in Great Britain, but frequently expressed his dislike for the Scottish climate and people, was held to have, animo et facto, abandoned his domicile of origin in Scotland and acquired a domicile of choice in Ceylon; [1907] Sc. 333, Ct. of Sess.

There are limitations to the power to change a minor child's domicile in the case of alien parents; 5 East 221; People v. Mercen, 8 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 47; 2 Kent 226; and of the mother, if a widow; Burge 38; Carlisle v. Tuttle, 30 Ala. 613; see Brown v. Lynch, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 214; Dé Jarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415; however, if she acquires a new domicile by remarriage, the child's domicile does not change; Ryall v. Kennedy, 40 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 347; Brown v. Lynch, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 214; Inhabitants of Walpole v. Inhabitants of Marblehead, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 528; Allen v. Thomason, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 536, 54 Am. Dec. 55. See [1893] 3 Ch. 490; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751; Johnson v. Copeland's Adm'r, 35 Ala. 521. If a father abandons his children, who are cared for and live with their grandmother for several years, and he subsequently removes them against her will, the residence of the children is not changed; Guardianship of Vance, 92 Cal. 195, 28 Pac. 229; Dresser v. Illuminating Co., 49 Fed. 257.

The guardian is said to have the same power over his ward that a parent has over his child; Holyoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 20, 16 Am. Dec. 372; Wheeler v. Hollis, 33 Tex. 512; Pedan v. Robb's Adm'r, 8 Ohio 227; 1 Blinn. 349, n.; 2 Kent 237. But see contra, Hiestand v. Kuns, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 345, 46 Am. Dec. 481. The point is not settled in England; Dacey, Dom. 133. See 3 Mer. 67; Appeal of Taney, 9 W. N. C. (Pa.)

564. "It has been generally held that a guardian can change the ward's domicile from one county to another in the same state; Anderson v. Anderson's Estate, 42 Vt. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 334; L. R. 5 Q. B. 325. It is doubtful, to say the least, whether the guardian can remove the ward's domicile out of the state in which he was appointed; L. R. 12 Eq. 617; Daniel v. Hill, 52 Ala. 430. A guardian appointed in a state where the ward is temporarily residing cannot change the ward's domicile from one state to another;" Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751. But see Woodward v. Woodward, 87 Tenn. 644, 11 S. W. 892. The mere appointment of a guardian will not prevent the ward from changing his domicile where he has sufficient mental capacity to do so; Mowry v. Latham, 17 R. I. 480, 23 Atl. 13; Talbot v. Chamberlain, 149 Mass. 57, 20 N. E. 305, 3 L. R. A. 254. It may be considered questionable whether the guardian can change the national domicile of his ward; 2 Kent 226; Story, Conf. Laws § 506.

The domicile of a lunatic may be changed by the direction or with the assent of his guardian; Holyoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 20, 16 Am. Dec. 372; Anderson v. Anderson's Estate, 42 Vt. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 334; In re Kingsley, 160 Fed. 275; contra, Inhabitants of Pittsfield v. Inhabitants of Detroit, 53 Me. 442. See L. R. 1 P. & M. 611; 3 Ves. Jr. 198; 9 W. R. 764. If the incompetent has enough mind left to form an animus manendi, the assent of the guardian to a change of domicile has been held immaterial; Appeal of Culver, 48 Conn. 165; Talbot v. Chamberlain, 149 Mass. 57, 20 N. E. 305, 3 L. R. A. 254; see 22 Harv. L. R. 220.

The husband may not change his domicile after committing an offence which entitles the wife to a divorce, so as to deprive her of her remedy; Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372; Republic of Texas v. Skidmore, 2 Tex. 261. And it is said the wife may not in the like case acquire a new domicile; Frary v. Frary, 10 N. H. 61, 32 Am. Dec. 395; Harding v. Alden, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Sawtell v. Sawtell, 17 Conn. 284; Fickle v. Fickle, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 203; Richardson v. Richardson, 2 Mass. 153; Tolen v. Tolen, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 407, 21 Am. Dec. 742.

The law of the place of domicile governs as to all acts of the parties, when not controlled by the lex loci contractus or lex rei sitæ. Personal property of the woman follows the law of the domicile upon marriage. It passes to the husband, if at all, in such cases as a legal assignment by operation of the law of domicile, but one which is recognized extra-territorially; 2 Rose 97; Holmes v. Remsen, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 267, 11 Am. Dec. 269; Story, Conf. Laws § 423.

The state and condition of the person according to the law of his domicile will generally, though not universally, be regarded in other countries as to acts done, rights acquired, or contracts made in the place of his native domicile; but as to acts, rights, and contracts done, acquired, or made out of his domicile, the lex loci will generally govern in respect to his capacity and condition; 2 Kent 234. See LEX LOCI.

The disposition of, succession to, or distribution of the personal property of a decedent, wherever situated, is to be made in accordance with the law of his actual domicile at the time of his death; 8 Sim. 310; Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Sto. 755, Fed. Cas. No. 5,707; Rankin v. Holloway, 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 617; Bradley v. Lowry, Speers, Eq. (S. C.) 3, 39 Am. Dec. 142; Graham v. Public Adm'r, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 127; Leach v. Pillsbury, 15 N. H. 137.

The principle applies equally to cases of voluntary transfer, of intestacy, and of testaments; 5 B. & C. 451; Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Sto. 755, Fed. Cas. No. 5,707; 3 Hagg. 273; Harrison v. Nixon, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 503, 9 L. Ed. 201; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 191, 3 Am. Dec. 535; Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 286, 17 Am. Dec. 372; French v. Hall, 9 N. H. 137, 32 Am. Dec. 341; In re Roberts' Will, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 519; Harvey v. Richards, 1 Mas. 381, Fed. Cas. No. 6,184; Thomas v. Tanner, 6 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 52.

Wills are to be governed by the law of the domicile as to the capacity of parties; 1 Jarm. Wills 3; and as to their validity and effect in relation to personal property; Irving v. McLean, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 53; Conover v. Chapman, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 436; Smith v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 8 L. Ed. 212; Barnes' Adm'r v. Brashear, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 382; 3 Curt. Eccl. 468; Goodall v. Marshall, 11 N. H. 88, 35 Am. Dec. 472; Hunter v. Bryson, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 483, 25 Am. Dec. 313; Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556; Johnson v. Copeland's Adm'r, 35 Ala. 521; Gilman v. Gilman, 52 Me. 165, 83 Am. Dec. 502; Appeal of Carey, 75 Pa. 201; but by the lex rei sitæ as to the transfer of real property; Calloway v. Doe, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 372; Robertson v. Barbour, 6 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 527; Potter v. Titcomb, 22 Me. 303; Bailey v. Bailey, 8 Ohio 239; U. S. v. Crosby, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 115, 3 L. Ed. 287; Applegate v. Smith, 31 Mo. 166; Holman v. Hopkins, 27 Tex. 38; 14 Ves. 541; Appeal of Carey, 75 Pa. 201. See LEX REI SITÆ.

The forms and solemnities of the place of domicile must be observed; 4 M. & C. 76; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 191, 3 Am. Dec. 535; Desesbats v. Berquier, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 336, 2 Am. Dec. 448; Holmes v. Remsen, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 460, 8 Am. Dec. 581; Harvey v. Richards, 1 Mas. 381, Fed. Cas. No. 6,184; Armstrong v. Lear, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 169, 6 L. Ed. 589; Gilman v. Gilman, 52 Me. 165, 83 Am. Dec. 502; Johnson v. Copeland's Adm'r, 35 Ala. 521.

The local law is to determine the character of property; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 630, 31 Am. Dec. 264; Story, Conf. Laws § 447; Erskine, Inst. b. 3, tit. 9, § 4. And it is held that a state may regulate the succession to personal as well as real property within its limits, without regard to the lex domicilii; Jones v. Marable, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 116.

The interpretation of a will of movables is to be according to the law of the place of the last domicile of the testator; L. R. 3 H. L. 55; Appeal of Freeman, 68 Pa. 151; 4 Bligh 502; Harrison v. Nixon, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 483, 9 L. Ed. 201. But so far as its validity is concerned, it does not matter that after the will was made in one domicile the testator obtained a new domicile, where he died; Whart. Conf. Laws § 592; Story, Conf. Laws § 479 g. See Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556. But it must be valid under the law of the new domicile.

In England, by statute, a will does not become invalid nor is its construction altered by reason of the testator's change of domicile after making it; Dacey, Dom. 308. It has been said that the rules as to construction of wills apply whether they be of real or personal property, unless in case of real property it may be clearly gathered from the terms of the will that the testator had in view the lex rei sitæ; Story, Conf. Laws § 479 h; 2 Bligh 60; 4 M. & C. 76. But see, contra, Whart. Conf. Laws § 597. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; LEX REI SITÆ; WILL.

Uniform acts have been passed in some states providing that a will executed outside a state is good in a state if valid in the state of its execution (Colorado, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Rhode Island, Washington, Wisconsin, Alaska).

Distribution of the personal property of an intestate is governed exclusively by the law of his actual domicile at the time of his death; 5 B. & C. 438; Dannelli v. Dannelli's Adm'r, 4 Bush (Ky.) 51; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (U. S.) 400, 14 L. Ed. 472; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 193, 3 Am. Dec. 535; Holmes v. Remsen, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 460, 8 Am. Dec. 581; Harvey v. Richards, 1 Mas. 418, Fed. Cas. No. 6,184; Leach v. Pillsbury, 15 N. H. 137. This includes the ascertainment of the person who is to take; Story, Conf. Laws § 481; 2 Ves. 35; 2 Keen 293. The descent of real estate depends upon the law of the place of the real estate; 8 L. R. Ch. 842; Harvey v. Ball, 32 Ind. 99; Kerr v. Moon, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 565, 6 L. Ed. 161; 14 Ves. 541; Grimball v. Patton, 70 Ala. 626; Pratt v. Douglas, 38 N. J. Eq. 516; Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26. The question whether debts are to be paid by the administrator from the personalty or realty is to be decided by the law of his domicile; 9 Mod. 66; 2 Keen 293.

Insolvents and bankrupts. An assignment of property for the benefit of creditors valid by the law of the domicile is generally recognized as valid everywhere; Bish. Insolv. Debt. 385; Holmes v. Remsen, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 471, 8 Am. Dec. 581; 2 Rose 97; 1 Cr. M. & R. 296; Train v. Kendall, 137 Mass. 366; Ackerman v. Cross, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 465; Appeal of Smith, 104 Pa. 381; Van Winkle v. Armstrong, 41 N. J. Eq. 402, 5 Atl. 449; in the absence of positive statute to the contrary; Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 286, 17 Am. Dec. 372; Oliver v. Townes, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 93, 100; Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 353, 6 Am. Dec. 466; but not to the injury of citizens of the foreign state in which property is situated; 5 East 131; Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 596, 16 Am. Dec. 212; Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 360, 6 Am. Dec. 466; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Johnson v. Parker, 4 Bush (Ky.) 149; Kidder v. Tufts, 48 N. H. 125; Burk v. McClain, 1 H. & McH. (Md.) 236; Moore v. Willett, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 663. But a compulsory assignment by force of statute is not of extra-territorial operation; Holmes v. Remsen, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 229, 11 Am. Dec. 269; Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 353, 6 Am. Dec. 466; Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 286, 17 Am. Dec. 372; Wood v. Parsons, 27 Mich. 159. Distribution of the effects of insolvent or bankrupt debtors is to be made according to the law of the domicile, subject to the same qualifications; Story, Conf. Laws § 323, 423 a. See, generally, 13 Am. L. Rev. 261; Whart. Conf. Laws; Morse, Citizenship; Tiffany; Schouler, Domestic Relations; CONFLICT OF LAWS; BANKRUPT; FOREIGN CORPORATION; INSOLVENCY.

DOMINANT. That to which a servitude or easement is due, or for the benefit of which it exists. Distinguished from servient, that from which it is due.

DOMINICUM (Lat. domain; demain; demesne). A lordship. That of which one has the lordship or ownership. That which remains under the lord's immediate charge and control.

In this sense it is equivalent to the Saxon bordlands. Spelman, Gloss.; Blount. In regard to lands for which the lord received services and homage merely, the dominicum was in the tenant.

In Domesday Book it meant the home farm as distinguished from the holdings of the tenants. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. in Eleventh Century 353.

Property; domain; anything pertaining to a lord. Cowell.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A church, or any other building consecrated to God. Du Cange.

DOMINION. Ownership or right to property. 2 Bla. Com. 1. "The holder has dominion of the bill." 8 East 579.

Sovereignty or lordship, as the dominion of the seas. Black, L. Dict. See DOMINIUM.

DOMINIUM (Lat.). Perfect and complete property or ownership in a thing.

Plenum in re dominium, — plena in re potestas. This right is composed of three principal elements: The right to use, the right to enjoy, and the right to dispose of the thing, to the exclusion of every other person. To use a thing, ius utendi tantum, consists in employing it for the purposes for which it is fit, without destroying it, and which employment can therefore be repeated; to enjoy a thing, ius fruendi tantum, consists in receiving the fruits which it yields, quidquid ex re nascitur; to dispose of a thing, ius abutendi, is to destroy it, or to transfer it to another. Thus, he who has the use of a horse may ride him, or put him in the plow to cultivate his own soil; but he has no right to hire the horse to another and receive the fruits which he may produce in that way.

On the other hand, he who has the enjoyment of a thing is entitled to receive all the profits or revenues which may be derived from it.

And, lastly, he who has the right of disposing of a thing, ius abutendi, may sell it, or give it away, etc., subject, however, to the rights of the usuary or usufructuary, as the case may be.

These three elements, usus, fructus, abusus, when united in the same person, constitute the dominium; but they may be, and frequently are, separated, so that the right of disposing of a thing may belong to Primus, and the rights of using and enjoying to Secundus, or the right of enjoying alone may belong to Secundus, and the right of using to Tertius. In that case, Primus is always the owner of the thing, but he is the naked owner, inasmuch as for a certain time he is actually deprived of all the principal advantages that can be derived from it. Secundus, if he has the use and enjoyment, ius utendi et fruendi simul, is called the usufructuary, usufructuarius; if he has the enjoyment only ius fruendi tantum, he is the fructuarius; and Tertius, who has the right of use, ius utendi tantum, is called the usuary, usuarius. But this dismemberment of the elements of the dominium is essentially temporary; if no shorter period has been fixed for its duration, it terminates with the life of the usuary, fructuary, or usufructuary; for which reason the rights of use and usufruct are called personal servitudes. Besides the separation of the elements of the dominium among different persons, there may also be a ius in re, or dismemberment, so far as real estates are concerned, in favor of other estates. Thus, a right of way over my land may exist in favor of your house; this right is so completely attached to the house that it can never be separated from it, except by its entire extinction. This class of iura in re is called predial or real servitudes. To constitute this servitude, there must be two estates, belonging to different owners; these estates are viewed in some measure as juridical persons, capable of acquiring rights and incurring obligations. The estate in favor of which the servitude exists is the creditor-estate; and the estate by which the servitude is due, the debtor-estate. See Hunter, Roman Law 221; EMINENT DOMAIN.

DOMINIUM DIRECTUM (Lat.). Legal ownership. Ownership as distinguished from enjoyment.

DOMINIUM DIRECTUM ET UTILE (Lat.). Full ownership and possession united in one person.

DOMINIUM UTILE (Lat.). The beneficial ownership. The use of the property.

DOMINUS (Lat.). The lord or master; the owner. Ainsworth, Lat. Lex. The owner or proprietor of a thing, as distinguished from him who uses it merely. Calvinus, Lex. A master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney. Story, Ag. § 3; Ferriere, Dict.

In Civil Law. A husband. A family. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

DOMINUS LITIS (Lat.). The master of suit. The client, as distinguished from an attorney.

And yet it is said that, although he who has appointed an attorney is properly called dominus litis, the attorney himself, when the cause has been tried, becomes the dominus litis. Vicat.

DOMINUS NAVIS. In Civil Law. The absolute owner of a ship. Wharton.

DOMITÆ (Lat.). Tame; subdued; not wild.

Applied to domestic animals, in which a man may have an absolute property. 2 Bla. Com. 391.

DONATARIUS (L. Lat.). One to whom something is given. A donee.

DONATIO (Lat.). A gift. A transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it. Vicat. The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of it from himself to another person, without any consideration. See Indiana N. & S. R. W. Co. v. City of Attica, 56 Ind. 476; Georgia Penitentiary Co. No. 2 v. Nelms, 65 Ga. 499, 38 Am. Rep. 793.

A donation is never perfected until it has been accepted; for an acceptance is requisite to make the donation complete. See Assent; Ayl. Pand. tit. 9; Clef des Lois Rom.; 2 Kent 438; Penfield v. Thayer, 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 305; Ivey's Adm'r v. Owens, 28 Ala. N. S. 641. In old English law and in the modern law, in several phrases, the word retains the extended sense it has in the civil law.

Its literal translation, gift, has acquired in real property law a more limited meaning, being applied to the conveyance of estates tail. 2 Bla. Com. 316; Littleton § 59; West, Symb. § 254; 4 Cruise, Dig. 51. There are several kinds of donatio: as, donatio simplex et pura (simple and pure gift without compulsion or consideration); donatio absoluta et larga (an absolute gift); donatio conditionalis (a conditional gift); donatio stricta et coarctura (a restricted gift, as, an estate tail).

DONATIO INTER VIVOS (Lat. a gift between living persons). A contract which takes place by the mutual consent of the giver, who divests himself of the thing given in order to transmit the title of it to the donee, gratuitously, and the donee who accepts and acquires the legal title to it. See GIFT; DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA (Lat. a gift in prospect of death). A gift made by a person in sickness, or other immediate peril, who, apprehending his death as near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another, the possession of any personal goods, to keep as his own in case of donor's decease. 2 Bl. Com. 514; Gourley v. Linsensbiger, 51 Pa. 345.

The civil law defines it to be a gift under apprehension of death: as, when anything is given upon condition that if the donor die the donee shall possess it absolutely, or return it if the donor should survive or should repent of having made the gift, or if the donee should die before the donor. Adams v. Nicholas, 1 Miles (Pa.) 109.

It differs from a legacy, inasmuch as it does not require proof in the court of probate; 2 Stra. 777; see 1 Bligh, N. S. 531; and no assent is required from the executor to perfect the donee's title; 2 Ves. 120; 1 S. & S. 245. It differs from a gift inter vivos because it is ambulatory and revocable during the donor's life because it may be made to the wife of the donor, and because it is liable for his debts, and it requires actual delivery; Poullain v. Poullain, 79 Ga. 11, 4 S. E. 81. This division of gifts is taken from the Roman law, as are also the rules by which they are governed. 2 Kent 439. See also as to these distinctions Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 33.

The donor need not be in extremis; Larra-bee v. Hascall, 88 Me. 511, 34 Atl. 408, 51 Am. St. Rep. 440. It has been considered essential to the validity of the gift that the donor should die of the very malady from which death was apprehended at the time of making the gift; Williams v. Chamberlain, 165 Ill. 210, 46 N. E. 250; Conser v. Snowden, 54 Md. 175, 39 Am. Rep. 368; but the better opinion is that while it is not a requisite that he should die from the very disease or peril from which he apprehended death, yet there must be no intervening recovery, and it is essential that his death ensue as a result of some disease or peril existing or impending at the time the gift was made; Peck v. Scofield, 186 Mass. 108, 71 N. E. 109; Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572, 26 N. E. 627, 11 L. R. A. 684, 21 Am. St. Rep. 758. A soldier ordered to the seat of war is not in such imminent peril as will justify his making a gift causa mortis; Linsensbiger v. Gourley, 56 Pa. 166, 94 Am. Dec. 51; but such gifts have been held valid where the donor never returned alive, but fell in battle or died in camp; Virgin v. Gaither, 42 Ill. 39; Gass v. Simpson, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 288. A gift made in contemplation of suicide is utterly void as against public policy; Dur-yea v. Harvey, 183 Mass. 429, 67 N. E. 351.

A delivery of more than was intended to be given cannot overrule the donor's intention, and the donee can take only as much as was intended to be given; Crippen v. Adams, 132 Mich. 31, 92 N. W. 496. The delivery need not be made to the donee personally, but may be made to another as his agent or trustee, and that without his knowledge at the time of making the gift; Sheedy v. Roach, 124 Mass. 472, 26 Am. Rep. 680; Williams v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343, 22 N. E. 1071, 6 L. R. A. 366. Where actual manual tradition cannot be made, either from their nature or their situation at the time, in such cases the delivery may be constructive, although in all cases it must be as nearly perfect and complete as the nature of the property and attendant circumstances and conditions will permit; Newman v. Bost, 122 N. C. 524, 29 S. E. 848. Technically, there must be an acceptance by the donee as well as a delivery by the donor; Yancy v. Field, 85 Va. 756, 8 S. E. 721; Anmon v. Martin, 59 Ark. 191, 26 S. W. 826; but this is a matter of slight practical importance, for where the gift is beneficial to the donee an acceptance will be presumed; Devol v. Dye, 123 Ind. 321, 24 N. E. 246, 7 L. R. A. 439; Blazo v. Coch-rane, 71 N. H. 585, 53 Atl. 1026.

To constitute a good donatio mortis causa: first, the thing given must be personal property; Wells v. Tucker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 370; a bond; Wells v. Tucker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 370; 2 Ves. Sen. 431; 3 Madd. 184; bank notes; Michener v. Dale, 23 Pa. 59; 2 Bro. C. C. 612; White v. Wager, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 250; 3 P. Wms. 356; certificates of stock; Walsh v. Sexton, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 251; a policy of life insurance; 1 B. & S. 109; Gourley v. Linsensbiger, 51 Pa. 345; and a check offered for payment during the life of the donor; 4 Bro. C. C. 286; will be so considered; but a check not so presented, which had not passed into the hands of a bona fide holder, is revoked by the death of the decedent; L. R. 6 Eq. 198; Burke v. Bishop, 27 La. Ann. 465, 21 Am. Rep. 567; Simmons v. Society, 31 Ohio St. 457, 27 Am. Rep. 521; Matter of Smith, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 632; Beals v. Crowley, 59 Cal. 665; aliter, as to a check given abroad; L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 730. See Taylor's Estate, 154 Pa. 183, 25 Atl. 1061, 18 L. R. A. 855. A check to a wife expressing that it was to enable her to buy mourning, was held under peculiar circumstances a valid donatio mortis causa; 1 P. Wms. 441. A note not negotiable, or if negotiable, not indorsed, but delivered, passes by such a donation; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 24; Tiedm. Com. Pap. 252; Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray (Mass.) 418; but in Bradley v. Hunt, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 54, 23 Am. Dec. 597, this is limited to bank notes and notes payable to bearer. A certificate of deposit which is delivered to a person for the use of a third party, though not indorsed, is a valid gift; Conner v. Root, 11 Colo. 183, 17 Pac. 773; Reed v. Barnum, 36 Ill. App. 525; contra, Dunn v. Bank, 109 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 1139; see Daniel v. Smith, 64 Cal. 346, 30 Pac. 575. A check cannot be the subject of a donatio mortis causa, unless paid in the donor's lifetime; death revokes the bank's authority to pay; 4 Bro. C. C. 286; Burke v. Bishop, 27 La. Ann. 465, 21 Am. Rep. 567; Second Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282. But in such case a check has been considered as of a testamentary character; 3 Curt. Eccl. 650; and see 1 P. Wms. 441 (supra). Where a man made a gift of his check to his son to be collected after his death, and the bank, knowing the drawer was dead, paid the check, it must pay the amount of the check to the personal representatives; Pullen v. Bank, 138 Cal. 169, 66 Pac. 740, 71 Pac. 83, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19. A check or note or other negotiable instrument of a person other than the donor may be the subject of such gift; L. R. 15 Ch. D. 651; L. R. 6 Eq. 198; Burke v. Bishop, 27 La. Ann. 465, 21 Am. Rep. 567. Though unaccepted by the bank, a check for the entire amount of the drawer's balance delivered to a person as a gift of the money, operates as an assignment of the fund and is valid as a gift mortis causa; Varley v. Sims, 100 Minn. 331, 111 N. W. 269, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828, 117 Am. St. Rep. 694, 10 Ann. Cas. 473. There must be a parting with the dominion over the subject matter of the gift, with a present design that the title shall pass out of the donor and to the donee; Liebe v. Battmann, 33 Or. 241, 54 Pac. 179, 72 Am. St. Rep. 705.

A husband cannot gratuitously dispose of his personality in this way to defeat the widow's statutory rights therein; Hatcher v. Buford, 60 Ark. 169, 29 S. W. 641, 27 L. R. A. 507; and the same is true as to the wife; Baker v. Smith, 66 N. H. 422, 23 Atl. 82.

Title to the property passes to the donee upon its delivery to him, but remains subject to defeasance while the donor lives; Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray (Mass.) 418; Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 17; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500. A gift of this nature cannot avail against creditors and the donee takes subject to the right of personal representative to reclaim it if necessary for the payment of deceased's debts; Dunn v. Bank, 109 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 1139.

The delivery of a savings-bank book passes the money in bank; Hill v. Stevenson, 63 Me. 364, 18 Am. Rep. 231; Sheedy v. Roach, 124 Mass. 412, 26 Am. Rep. 680; Pierce v. Bank, 129 Mass. 425, 37 Am. Rep. 371; Camp's Appeal, 36 Conn. 88, 4 Am. Rep. 39; Tillinghast v. Wheaton, 8 R. I. 536, 5 Am. Rep. 621, 94 Am. Dec. 126; contra, Walsh's Appeal, 122 Pa. 177, 15 Atl. 470, 9 Am. St. Rep. 83, 1 L. R. A. 535; see Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848. A banker's deposit note is a good subject of gift; 44 Ch. Div. 76; but where the bank book is already in the hands of the donee, a statement by the donor that his wife may have it is not sufficient; Drew v. Hagerty, 81 Me. 231, 17 Atl. 63, 3 L. R. A. 230, 10 Am. St. Rep. 255. See 36 Cent. Law J. 354; 31 Am. Law Reg. 681; 34 id. 85, for discussions and annotations on this subject. A mortgage is a good gift; 5 Madd. 351; 1 Bligh, N. S. 497; a policy of insurance; 1 Best & Sm. 109; 33 Beav. 619; a receipt for money; 4 De G. & Sm. 517; bonds; 3 Atk. 214; 1 Bligh, N. S. 497; bank notes; 2 Eden 125; Sel. Ch. Cas. 14; 3 P. Wms. 356; 2 Bro. C. C. 612.

A promissory note of the sick man made in his last illness is not a valid donation; 5 B. & C. 501; Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 204, 25 Am. Dec. 378; Craig v. Craig, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 76; Smith v. Kitt-ridge, 21 Vt. 238; Helfenstein's Estate, 77 Pa. 328, 18 Am. Rep. 449. See Flint v. Pattee, 33 N. H. 520, 66 Am. Dec. 742; Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 410, 46 Am. Dec. 328; Waring Adm'r v. Edmonds, 11 Md. 424; Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 87; Graves v. Safford, 41 Ill. App. 659; 6 Harv. L. Rev. 36. In England, bills delivered on a death-bed but without consideration, are valid donations; 27 Beav. 303; but a gift of the donor's own cheque, if not payable until after his death, is not valid; 27 Ch. D. 631. See also 5 Ch. D. 730; 4 D. M. & G. 249. As to a gift of money, see Corle v. Monkhouse, 50 N. J. Eq. 537, 25 Atl. 157.

Second, the gift must be made by the donor in peril of death, and to take effect only in case the giver dies; Bisph. Eq. 70; Wells v. Tucker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 370; 1 Bligh, N. S. 530; Blanchard v. Sheldon, 43 Vt. 513; Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 313; Kirk v. McCusker, 3 Misc. 277, 22 N. Y. Supp. 780; a gift made in apprehension of death from a surgical operation is valid; Rid-den v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572. There is quite a conflict of authority as to whether a gift by a soldier about to join the army is a valid donatio causa mortis, with the weight of authority against sustaining them. They have been upheld, it may possibly be considered, in Virgin v. Gaither, 42 Ill. 39; but this case is explained in Travis on Sales as a gift inter vivos on condition; a case cited as upholding them, Baker v. Williams, 34 Ind. 547, is overruled if it does so hold; Smith v. Dorsey, 38 Ind. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 118; which holds them invalid, as do also Gourley v. Linsenbigler, 51 Pa. 345; Irish v. Nutting, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 370; Dexheimer v. Gautier, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 216 (Barbour, J., dissenting). See Gass v. Simpson, 4 Cold. (Tenn.) 288.

Such a gift is only good when made in relation to the death of the person by illness affecting him at the time; 2 Ves. Jr. 121; but if it appear that the donation was made when the donor was ill and only a few days or weeks before his death, it will be presumed that it was made in the last illness and in contemplation of death; 1 Wms. Ex. 845; Dole v. Lincoln, 31 Me. 422.

When a gift was made in contemplation of death, but the donor so far recovered as to be able to attend to his business, and then died of the same disease, held not a good donatio; Weston v. Hight, 17 Me. 287, 35 Am. Dec. 250. That the donor lived fourteen days; Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 17; three days; Wells v. Tucker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 370; Goulding v. Horbury, 85 Me. 227, 27 Atl. 127, 35 Am. St. Rep. 357; six hours; Michener v. Dale, 23 Pa. 63; after making the gift, does not invalidate it. There seems to be no rule limiting the time within which the gift must be made before death; Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 313.

Third, there must be an actual delivery of the subject to or for the donee, in cases where such delivery can be made; Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 208; Miller v. Jeffress, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 472; Dole v. Lincoln, 31 Me. 422; Grymes v. Ilone, 49 N. Y. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 313; Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147; Daniel v. Smith, 75 Cal. 548, 17 Pac. 683; L. R. 6 Eq. 474; Emery v. Clough, 63 N. H. 552, 4 Atl. 796, 56 Am. Rep. 543; McCord's Adm'r v. McCord, 77 Mo. 166, 46 Am. Rep. 9; Kiff v. Weaver, 94 N. C. 274, 55 Am. Rep. 601. The delivery must be as complete as the nature of the property will admit of; Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324, 96 Am. Dec. 464, where taking the key of a trunk, putting goods into the trunk and returning the key to its place at the request of the owner, who expressed a desire, in his last illness, to make the trunk and its contents a donatio mortis causa, was held not to be a sufficient delivery.

Where one about to commit suicide indorsed a promissory note and placed it in an envelope directed to a friend in the same house and then shot himself, held no delivery; Liebe v. Battmann, 33 Or. 241, 54 Pac. 179, 72 Am. St. Rep. 705. The gift of the keys of a box deposited in a vault of a bank containing bonds, etc., is a sufficient constructive delivery of the contents of the box; Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848; 2 Ves. Sen. 431; Prec. Ch. 300; [1891] W. N. 201 (where donor delivered the keys of a trunk to donee, and said the trunk and its contents were donee's); Debinson v. Emmons, 158 Mass. 592, 33 N. E. 706; but see Goulding v. Horbury, 85 Me. 227, 27 Atl. 127, 35 Am. St. Rep. 357. An intention to give is sufficiently manifested from the fact that a person in extremis hands a package of bonds to another saying, "These bonds are for you;" Vander v. Roach, 73 Cal. 614, 15 Pac. 354. Delivery can be made to a third person for the use of a donee; Wells v. Tucker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 370; Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 340; Southerland v. Southerland's Adm'r, 5 Bush (Ky.) 591; but not if the third party is the agent of the giver; 2 Coll. 356. The acceptance is presumed, unless the contrary appear; In re Dunlap's Estate, 94 Mich. 11, 53 N. W. 788.

To make such a gift valid there must be a renunciation by the donor and an acquisition by the donee, of all interest and title to the property intended to be given; Wetmore v. Brooks, 18 N. Y. Supp. 852.

To constitute such a gift, the subject must be delivered either to the donee or to some person for his use and benefit, and the donor must part with all dominion over the property, and the title must vest in the donee, subject to the right of the donor at any time to revoke the gift; Daniel v. Smith, 75 Cal. 548, 17 Pac. 683.

It is an unsettled question whether such kind of gift appearing in writing, without delivery of the subject, can be supported; 2 Ves. 120; Smith v. Downey, 38 N. C. 268; but Lord Hardwicke expressed the opinion that it could be; 2 Ves. Sen. 440; 1 id. 314; contra, 1 Wms. Ex. 855. And see Thompson v. Thompson, 12 Tex. 327. By the Roman and civil law, a gift mortis causa might be made in writing; Dig. lib. 39, t. 6, l. 28; 2 Ves. Sen. 440; 1 id. 314.

Upon the recovery of the donor and his consequent ability to comply with the statute, the dispensation from its requirements ceases and the gift mortis causa, though valid when made, becomes of no further force. No expression to this effect is necessary; Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 63; Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848.

The essentials are also thus stated: 1. It must be in view of donor's death. 2. With express or implied intention that it shall only take effect by reason of existing disorder. 3. Delivery by the donor to the donee or some one on his behalf; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 33; but this is not so satisfactory as the well-settled enumeration above given.

A donatio mortis causa does not require the executor's assent; 2 Ves. Jr. 120; is revocable by the donor during his life; Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 339; Parker v. Marston, 27 Me. 196; Lee v. Luther, 3 Woodb. & M. 519, Fed. Cas. No. 8,196; Jones v. Brown, 34 N. H. 439; Doran v. Doran, 99 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 929; by recovery; 3 Macn. & G. 664; Wms. Ex. 651; or resumption of possession; 2 Ves. Sen. 433; but not by a subsequent will; Prec. Chanc. 300; contra, Jayne v. Murphy, 31 Ill. App. 28; but may be satisfied by a subsequent legacy; 1 Ves. Sen. 314. And see Shirley v. Whitehead, 36 N. C. 130. It may be of any amount of property; Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591. It is liable for the testator's debts; Dunn v. Bank, 109 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 1139; Emery v. Clough, 63 N. H. 552, 4 Atl. 796, 56 Am. Rep. 543; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500; a gift providing for the payment of certain bills and a division of the remaining property is valid; Loucks v. Johnson, 70 Hun 565, 24 N. Y. Supp. 267.

A gift mortis causa is none the less valid because it embraces the entire personal estate of the donor, and the testimony of one credible witness is sufficient to establish such a gift; Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848; Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591; but see Headley v. Kirby, 18 Pa. 326; Marshall v. Berry, 13 Allen (Mass.) 43; and a gift accompanied by the condition that part thereof is to be applied to the payment of the donor's debts is good; Wetmore v. Brooks, 18 N. Y. Supp. 852.

For a thorough discussion of this subject, see Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 51; 36 Am. L. Reg. 247, 289; note to Ward v. Turner, Wh. & T. L. C. Eq.; 36 Cent. Law J. 354; 32 id. 27.

DONATIO PROPTER NUPTIAS (Lat. gift on account of marriage). In Roman

Law. A gift made by the husband as a security for the marriage portion. The effect of the act of making such a gift was different according to the relation of the parties at the time. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Called, also, a mutual gift.

The name was originally applied to a gift made before marriage, and was then called a donatio ante nuptias; but in process of time it was allowed to be made after marriage as well, and was then called a donatio propter nuptias.

DONATION. See DONATIO.

DONATIVE. See ADVOWSON.

DONEE. One to whom a gift is made or a bequest given; one who is invested with a power of appointment: he is sometimes called an appointee. 4 Kent 316.

DONIS, STATUTE DE. See DE DONIS, THE STATUTE.

DONOR. One who makes a gift. One who gives lands in tail. Termes de la Ley.

DONUM (Lat.). A gift.

The difference between donum and munus is said to be that donum is more general, while munus is specific. Munus is said to mean donum with a cause for the giving (though not a legal consideration), as on account of marriage, etc. Donum is said to be that which is given from no necessity of law or duty, but from free will, "from the absence of which, if they are not given, no blame arises; but if they are given, praise is due." Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

DOOM. Judgment.

DOOM OF THE ASSESSOR. See ASSESSMENT.

DOOR. The place of usual entrance into a house, or into a room in the house.

To authorize the breach of an outer door in order to serve process, the process must be of a criminal nature; and even then a demand of admittance must first have been refused; 5 Co. 94; State v. Smith, 1 N. H. 346; Bell v. Clapp, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 6 Am. Dec. 339; Kelsy v. Wright, 1 Root (Conn.) 83; State v. Shaw, 1 Root (Conn.) 134; Banks v. Farwell, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 156; Com. v. Reynolds, 120 Mass. 190, 21 Am. Rep. 510; Cabill v. People, 106 Ill. 621; Hawkins v. Com., 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 395, 61 Am. Dec. 147. The outer door may also be broken open for the purpose of executing a writ of habere facias; 5 Co. 93; Bac. Abr. Sheriff (N 3).

An outer door cannot, in general, be broken for the purpose of serving civil process; Oystead v. Shed, 13 Mass. 520, 7 Am. Dec. 172; Snyder v. Brosse, 51 Ill. 357, 99 Am. Dec. 551; Hooker v. Smith, 19 Vt. 151, 47 Am. Dec. 679; 1 M. & W. 336; Curtis v. Hubbard, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 437, 40 Am. Dec. 292; but after the defendant has been arrested, and he takes refuge in his own house, the officer may justify breaking an outer door to take him; Fost. 320; 1 Rolle 138; Cro. Jac. 535; Allen v. Martin, 10 Wend.

(N. Y.) 300, 25 Am. Dec. 564. When once an officer is in the house, he may break open an inner door to make an arrest; Fitch v. Loveland, Kirb. (Conn.) 386; Hubbard v. Mace, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 127; 13 M. & W. 52; Prettyman v. Dean, 2 Harr. (Del.) 494. See 1 Toullier, n. 214, p. 88; L. R. 2 Q. B. 593; or break the outer door to get out; 7 A. & E. 826.

DORMANT. Sleeping; silent; not known; not acting. One whose name and transactions as a partner are professedly concealed from the world; Mitchell v. Dall, 2 H. & G. (Md.) 159; Kelley v. Hurlburt, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 534; Pitts v. Waugh, 4 Mass. 424; National Bank of Salem v. Thomas, 47 N. Y. 15. Coll. Partn. § 4. The term is applied, also, to titles, rights, judgments, and executions. As to the latter, see Storm v. Woods, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 110; Kimball v. Munger, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 364.

DORMANT JUDGMENT. One that has become inoperative so far as the right to issue execution thereon is concerned. General Electric Co. v. Hurd, 171 Fed. 984. See JUDGMENT.

DOS (Lat.). In Roman Law. That which is received by or promised to the husband from the wife, or any one else by her influence, for sustaining the burdens of matrimony. There are three classes of dos. Dos profectitia is that which is given by the father or any male relative from his property or by his act; dos adventitia is that which is given by any other person or from the property of the wife herself; dos receptitia is where there is a stipulation connected with the gift relating to the death of the wife. Vicat; Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange; 1 Washb. R. P. 147.

In English Law. The portion bestowed upon a wife at her marriage by her husband. 1 Washb. R. P. 147; 1 Cruise, Dig. 152.

Dower generally. The portion which a widow has in the estate of her husband after his death. Park, Dower.

This use of the word in the English law, though, as Spelman shows, not strictly correct, has still the authority of Tacitus (de Mor. Germ. 18) for its use. And if the general meaning of marriage portion is given to it, it is strictly as applicable to a gift from the husband to the wife as to one from the wife to the husband. It occurs often, in the phrase dos de dote peti non debet (dower should not be sought of dower). 1 Washb. R. P. 209.

DOS RATIONABILIS (Lat.). A reasonable marriage portion. A reasonable part of her husband's estate, to which every widow is entitled, of lands of which her husband may have endowed her on the day of marriage. Co. Litt. 336. Dower, at common law. 2 Bla. Com. 134.

DOSSIER (Fr.). A brief; a bundle of papers.

DOT (a French word adopted in Louisiana). The fortune, portion, or dowry which a woman brings to her husband by the marriage. Bulsson v. Thompson, 7 Mart. La. (N. S.) 460.

DOTAGE. That feebleness of the mental faculties which proceeds from old age. A diminution or decay of that intellectual power which was once possessed. 1 Bland, Ch. 389. See DEMENTIA.

DOTAL PROPERTY. By the civil law in Louisiana, by this term is understood that property which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradotal property, otherwise called paraphernal property, is that which forms no part of the dowry. La. Civ. Code, art. 2335.

The effect of marriage under the civil law as found in the digest was that the wife brought her dos and the husband his antidos into the marriage. In all other property belonging to them they each retained the rights of owners in their separate capacities uncontrolled by their relation of husband and wife; Ballinger, Community Property § 2. See COMMUNITY.

DOTATION. In French Law. The act by which the founder of a hospital, or other charity, endows it with property to fulfil its destination.

NOTE. In Spanish Law. The property and effects which a woman brings to her husband for the purpose of aiding him with the rents and revenues thereof to support the expenses of the marriage. Las Partidas, 4. 11. 1. "Dos," says Cujas, "est pecunia marito, nuptiarum causa, data vel promissa." The dower of the wife is inalienable, except in certain specified cases, for which see Escriche, Dic. Raz. Note.

As an English verb it has been defined to be delirious, silly or insane. Gates v. Meredith, 7 Ind. 441.

NOTE ASSIGNANDA. In English Law. A writ which lay in favor of a widow, when it was found by office that the king's tenant was seized of tenements in fee or fee-tail at the time of his death, and that he held of the king in chief. Such widows were called king's widows.

NOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ which lies for a widow to whom no dower has been assigned. 3 Bla. Com. 182. By 23 and 24 Vict. c. 126, an ordinary action commenced by writ of summons has taken its place; but it remains in force in the United States, and under the designation of dower unde nihil habet, is the form in common use for the recovery of dower at law; 1 Washb. R. P. 290; 4 Kent 63.

DOUBLE AVAIL OF MARRIAGE. See DUPLEX VALOR MARIAGII.

DOUBLE COMPLAINT. See DUPLEX QUERELA.

DOUBLE COSTS. See COSTS.

Bouv.—59

DOUBLE EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of twenty dollars or units.

It is so called because it is twice the value of the eagle, and, consequently, weighs five hundred and sixteen grains of standard fineness, namely, nine hundred thousandths fine. It is a legal tender for twenty dollars to any amount. Act of March 3 1849, 6 Stat. L. 397. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3511, 3514. The double eagle is in value the largest coin issued in the United States. The first issue was made in 1849. See act of Feb. 12, 1873, 17 Stat. L. p. 426; EAGLE.

DOUBLE INSURANCE. Where divers insurances are made upon the same interest in the same subject against the same risks in favor of the same assured, in proportions exceeding the value. 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 359, 366.

See INSURANCE, sub-title, Double Insurance.

A like excess in one policy is over-insurance. If the valuation of the whole interest in one policy is double that in another, and half of the value is insured in each policy according to the valuation in that policy, it is not a double insurance; its being so or not depends on the aggregate of the proportions, one-quarter, one-half, etc., insured by each policy, not upon the aggregate of the amounts.

Where the insurance is on the interests of different persons, though on the same goods, it is not double insurance; Wells v. Ins. Co., 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 107; nor is it where carrier and shipper each insure; Royster v. Roanoke N. & B. S. B. Co., 26 Fed. 492.

In case of double insurance, the assured may sue upon all the policies and is entitled to judgment upon all, but he is entitled to but one satisfaction; therefore, if during the pendency of suits on several policies concerning the same risk and interest, the loss is paid in full by one company, the actions against the others must fail, and the insurer paying the loss has a remedy against the other insurers for a proportionate share of the loss. If there be any doubt as to whether the policies cover the same property or interest, evidence is admissible to show the fact; Wiggin v. Ins. Co., 18 Pick. (Mass.) 145, 29 Am. Dec. 576; Ætnea Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Vose v. Ins. Co., 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 302; Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553; Sloat v. Ins. Co., 49 Pa. 14, 88 Am. Dec. 477; Merrick v. Ins. Co., 54 Pa. 277; May, Ins. § 13.

The question of double insurance does not generally arise in life insurance, as there is no fixed value to the life, and the person in each case is to pay a fixed sum without regard to other insurance. But where the insurable interest has an ascertainable value the question may arise, as where two policies are taken out in different offices, by a creditor, on the life of a debtor, and for the same debt. Then only the value of the interest can be recovered and the amount recovered on the first policy is to be deducted from the amount payable on the second; May, Ins. § 440. See INSURANCE.

DOUBLE PLEA. The alleging, for one single purpose, two or more distinct grounds of defence, when one of them would be as effectual in law as both or all. See DUPPLICITY.

By the statute 4 Anne, c. 16, in England, and by similar statutes in most if not all of the states, any defendant in any suit, and any plaintiff in replevin in any court of record, may plead as many several matters as may be necessary for a defence, with leave of court. This statute allows double pleading; but each plea must be single, as at common law; Laves, Pl. 131; 1 Chit. Pl. 512; Andr. Steph. Pl. 320; and the statute does not extend to the subsequent pleadings; Com. Dig. Pleader (E 2); Story, Pl. § 72; Gould, Pl. c. 8; Doctrina Plac. 222. In criminal cases a defendant cannot plead a special plea in addition to the general issue; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 85.

DOUBLE POSSIBILITY. A possibility upon a possibility. 2 Bla. Com. 170. See CONJUNCT REMAINDER.

DOUBLE RENT. In English Law. Rent payable by a tenant who continues in possession after the time for which he has given notice to quit, until the time of his quitting possession. Stat. 11 Geo. II. c. 19; Fawcett, L. & T. 304. The provisions of this statute have been re-enacted in New York, and some other states, though not generally adopted in this country.

DOUBLE TAX. See TAX.

DOUBLE OR TREBLE DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

DOUBLE USE. A term used in patent law to indicate that a later device is merely a new application of an older device, not involving the exercise of the inventive faculty.

In construing letters patent for new applications of old devices, if the new use be so nearly analogous to the former one that it would occur to a person of ordinary mechanical skill, it is only a case of double use; but if the relations between them are remote, and especially if the use of the old device produce a new result, it may involve an exercise of the inventive faculty—much depending upon the nature of the changes required to adapt the device to its new use; Potts v. Creager, 155 U. S. 597, 15 Sup. Ct. 194, 39 L. Ed. 275. See PATENT.

DOUBLE VOUCHER. A voucher which occurs when the person first vouched to warranty comes in and vouches over a third person. See a precedent, 2 Bla. Com. App. V. p. xvii.; VOUCHER.

The necessity for double voucher arises when the tenant in tail is not the tenant in the writ, but is tenant by warranty; that is, where he is vouched, and comes in and confesses the warranty. Generally speaking, to accomplish this result a previous conveyance is necessary, by the tenant in tail, to a third person, in order to make such third person tenant to a writ of entry. Pres. Conv. 125, 126.

DOUBLE WASTE. When a tenant bound to repair suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully fells timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste. Co. Litt. 53. See WASTE.

DOUBT. The uncertainty which exists in relation to a fact, a proposition, or other thing; an equipoise of the mind arising from an equality of contrary reasons. Ayliffe, Pand. 121.

Some rules, not always infallible, have been adopted in doubtful cases, in order to arrive at the truth. 1. In civil cases, the doubt ought to operate against him who, having it in his power to prove facts to remove the doubt, has neglected to do so. In cases of fraud, when there is a doubt, the presumption of innocence ought usually to remove it. 2. In criminal cases, whenever a reasonable doubt exists as to the guilt of the accused, that doubt ought to operate in his favor. In such cases, particularly when the liberty, honor, or life of an individual is at stake, the evidence to convict ought to be clear and devoid of all reasonable doubt.

The term reasonable doubt is often used, but not easily defined. Failure to explain reasonable doubt in a charge is not error; Thigpen v. State, 11 Ga. App. 846, 76 S. E. 596. The words require no definition; Buchanan v. State, 11 Ga. App. 756, 76 S. E. 73. It is a better practice not to define it; Holmes v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 926; State v. Reed, 62 Me. 129. "It is not mere possible doubt; because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in such a condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. The burden of proof is upon the prosecutor. All the presumptions of law independent of evidence are in favor of innocence; and every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. If upon such proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal. For it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary; but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. This we take to be proof beyond reasonable doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should go further than this, and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether." Per Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Schmidt v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 534; Bethell v. Moore, 19 N. C. 311; State v. Goldsborough, Houst. Cr. Rep. (Del.) 316. In approving the opinion of Shaw, C. J., the court in People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 395, says: "There can be no 'reasonable doubt' of a fact after it has been clearly established by satisfactory proof." No man should be deprived of life under the form of law unless the jury can say upon their conscience that the evidence is sufficient to show beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the crime charged; Davis v. U. S., 160 U. S. 469, 16 Sup. Ct. 353, 40 L. Ed. 499.

Reasonable doubt is the result of the proof, not the proof itself; whereas the presumption of innocence is one of the instruments of proof going to bring about the proof from which reasonable doubt arises; thus one is a cause and the other an effect. To say that one is the equivalent of the other is therefore to say that legal evidence can be excluded from the jury, and that such exclusion may be cured by instructing them correctly in regard to the method by which they are required to reach their conclusions upon the proof actually before them; Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 Sup. Ct. 394, 39 L. Ed. 481. It must be an actual, substantial doubt, arising from the evidence or want of evidence in the case; Langford v. State, 32 Neb. 782, 49 N. W. 766.

If the evidence produced in a criminal action be of such a convincing character that the jurors would unhesitatingly be governed by it in the weighty and important matters of life, they may be said to have no reasonable doubt respecting the guilt or innocence of the accused, notwithstanding the uncertainty which attends all human evidence. Therefore, a charge to the jury that if after an impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence, they can truthfully say that they have an abiding conviction of the defendant's guilt, such as they would be willing to act upon in the more weighty and important matters relating to their own affairs, they have no reasonable doubt, is not erroneous; Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 431, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708.

Proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support. It is proof "to a moral certainty," as distinguished from an absolute certainty. As applied to a judicial trial for crime, the two phrases are synonymous and equivalent; and each signifies such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible; Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 24. It must be founded on a consideration of all the circumstances and evidence, and not on mere conjecture or speculation; Kennedy v. State, 107 Ind. 144, 6 N. E. 305, 57 Am. Rep. 99; and must not be a mere mistaking of the imagination or misplaced sympathy; State v. Murphy, 6 Ala. 845; but natural and substantial, not forced or fanciful; State v. Bodekee, 34 Ia. 520; such an honest uncertainty existing in the minds of a candid, impartial and diligent jury as fairly strikes the conscientious mind and clouds the judgment; Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. 9. It must not be a mere fanciful, vague, speculative or possible doubt, but a reasonable, substantial doubt, remaining after the consideration of all the evidence; State v. Uzzo, 6 Pennw. (Del.) 212, 65 Atl. 775. The subject is discussed in an address by J. S. Burger, before the State Bar Association of Kansas; 11 Am. Lawy. 440; and the history of the doctrine is stated, as well as the difficulty and danger of trying to define it, though the doctrine itself is strongly urged "as the shield of innocence and the champion of liberty." It is said to have been first used in the treason trials in Dublin in 1798.

A much quoted and much criticized definition is that of Dillon, J., in State v. Ostrander, 18 Ia. 437, approved in Polin v. State, 14 Neb. 540, 16 N. W. 898. Other attempts to define reasonable doubt are State v. Hayden, 45 Ia. 17; State v. Nelson, 11 Nev. 334; 4 F. & Fin. 383; U. S. v. Jackson, 29 Fed. 503; State v. Kearley, 26 Kan. 77, per Brewer, J.; People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482; Lane v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 560, 55 S. W. 831; State v. Swain, 68 Mo. 605. The difficulty of a satisfactory definition is discussed in 57 Am. L. Reg. 419, where C. J. Shaw's definition is criticized and that in Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1, supra, is suggested as better. And in Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708, it was approved as contrasted with C. J. Shaw's definition. The whole subject was there considered and the necessity was stated of allowing the trial judge considerable latitude in the way of explanation.

In the Tichborne Case Lord Cockburn charged the jury: "It is the business of the prosecution to bring home guilt to the accused to the satisfaction of the jury. But the doubt of which the accused is entitled to the benefit must be the doubt that a rational—that a sensible—man may fairly entertain, not the doubt of a vacillating mind that has not the moral courage to decide, but shelters itself in vain scepticism." 14 Harv. L. Rev. 87.

An instruction that "reasonable doubt is a doubt you can give a reason for" is erroneous; Abbott v. Territory, 20 Okl. 119, 94 Pac. 179, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 129 Am. St. Rep. 818; Pettine v. New Mexico, 201 Fed. 489, 119 C. C. A. 581. It is said that to require an affirmative reason for a reasonable doubt of guilt places upon the defendant the burden of furnishing to every juror a reason why he is not satisfied as to guilt, with the certainty which the law requires; also, that such an instruction casts on the defendant the burden of furnishing reasons for not finding him guilty, whereas it is on the prosecution to make out a case excluding all reasonable doubt; State v. Cohen, 108 Ia. 208, 78 N. W. 857, 75 Am. St. Rep. 213. So in Carr v. State, 23 Neb. 749, 37 N. W. 630; Darden v. State, 73 Ark. 315, 84 S. W. 507. In State v. Sauer, 38 Minn. 438, 38 N. W. 355, it was said that there is a serious objection to requiring a juror to be able to express in words the ground of his doubt, because he might well have a reasonable doubt and yet find it difficult to give a reason for it.

But a contrary view is held in Butler v. State, 102 Wis. 364, 78 N. W. 590: "A doubt cannot be reasonable unless there is a reason for it, and if such reason exists, it can be given." To the same effect: People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 503, 3 N. E. 493; State v. Rounds, 76 Me. 123. In State v. Jefferson, 43 La. Ann. 995, 10 South. 199, it was held to be a "serious, sensible doubt such as you could give a good reason for." The doubt ought not to be a capricious one, but a substantial doubt, which the jury could give a reason for; Marshall v. U. S., 197 Fed. 511, 117 C. C. A. 65.

In Alabama there are numerous and conflicting cases.

There are also cases which, though criticizing the rule that requires the jury to have a reason for a doubt, have held that its application in a charge is not a reversible error, if it be part of a charge defining the difference between a reasonable and a vague doubt; Thibert v. Supreme Lodge, 78 Minn. 450, 81 N. W. 220, 47 L. R. A. 136, 79 Am. St. Rep. 412; Klyce v. State, 78 Miss. 450, 28 South. 827; People v. Stubenvoll, 62 Mich. 329, 28 N. W. 883.

The cases are collected in 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, note.

DOVE. See ANIMAL.

DOWAGER. A widow endowed; one who has a jointure.

In England, this is a title or addition given to the widow of a prince, duke, earl, or other nobleman, to distinguish her from the wife of the heir, who has the right to bear the title; 1 Bla. Com. 224.

DOWER (from Fr. douer, to endow). The provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of her husband, for her support and the nurture of her children. Co. Litt. 30 a; 2 Bla. Com. 130; 4 Kent 35; Washb. R. P. 146.

There were five species of dower in England (Littleton § 51):

1. Dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, where a man of full age, on coming to the church-door to be married, endowed his wife of a certain portion of his lands.

2. Dower ex assensu patris, which differed from dower ad ostium ecclesiæ only in being made out of the lands of the husband's father and with his consent.

3. Dower by common law, where the widow was entitled during her life to a third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in law or in fact of an inheritable estate, at any time during the coverture, and which any issue she might have had might by possibility have inherited.

4. Dower by custom, where a widow became entitled to a specified portion of her husband's lands in consequence of some local or particular custom.

5. Dower de la plus belle (de la plus beale), where the widow on suing the guardian in chivalry for dower, was required by him to endow herself of the fairest portion of any lands she might hold as guardian in socage, and thus release from dower the lands of her husband held in chivalry. This was abolished along with the military tenures, of which it was a consequence; 2 Bla. Com. 132, n.

Of these, the first and second were created by the act of the parties, the third and fourth by the law. The two classes represent the old order and the new. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 157. In later days the former class was superseded by the latter class or by jointures.

By the Dower Act in England (1833) the widow is entitled to dower out of equitable estates as well as legal, but only out of those estates to which the husband is beneficially entitled at his death.

Dower in the United States, although regulated by statutes differing from each other in many respects, conforms substantially to that at the common law; 1 Washb. R. P. 149; see Schoul. Hus. & W. 455.

Where a statute provided that no estate in dower be allotted to the wife on the death of her husband, it took away a wife's inchoate right of dower in lands previously alienated by her husband without joining her in the deed; Richards v. Land Co., 47 Fed. 854; the inchoate right of the wife is not such a vested right or interest as cannot be taken away by legislative action; Richards v. Land Co., 54 Fed. 209, 4 C. C. A. 290.

Of what estates the wife is dowable. Her right to dower is always determined by the laws of the place where the property is situate; Duncan v. Dick, Walker (Miss.) 281; O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4 Ia. 381; Lamar v. Scott, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) 562.

She is entitled to one-third of all lands, tenements, or hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of which her husband may have been seized during the coverture, in fee or in tail; 2 Bla. Com. 131; Gorham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 611.

She was not dowable of a term for years, however long; Park, Dow. 47; Spangler v. Stanler, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 36.

The inheritance must be an entire one, and one of which the husband may have corporeal seisin or the right of immediate corporeal seisin: Plowd. 506; Caruthers v. Wilson, 1 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 527.

Dower does not attach in an estate held in joint tenancy; but the widow of the survivor has dower: Co. Litt. § 45; Mayburry v. Brien, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 21, 10 L. Ed. 646. But where the principle of survivorship is abolished, this disability does not exist; Davis v. Logan, 9 Dana (Ky.) 185; Reed v. Kennedy, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 67.

An estate in common is subject to dower; Wilkinson v. Parish, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 653; Totten v. Stuyvesant, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 500; Pyncheon v. Lester, 6 Gray (Mass.) 314; Clift v. Clift, 87 Tenn. 17, 9 S. W. 198, 360; Parrish v. Parrish, 88 Va. 529, 14 S. E. 325; Chew v. Chew, 1 Md. 172. But the dower in land owned by the husband in common with others is divested by partition thereof in a suit to which the husband is a party, though the wife is not joined; Holley v. Glover, 36 S. C. 404, 15 S. E. 605, 16 L. R. A. 776, 31 Am. St. Rep. 883. See 2 Can. L. T. 15.

In the case of an exchange of lands, the widow may claim dower in either, but not in both; Co. Litt. 31 b; if the interests are unequal, then in both; Wilcox v. Randall, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 633; Mosher v. Mosher, 32 Me. 412; Cass v. Thompson, 1 N. H. 65, 8 Am. Dec. 36.

She is entitled to dower in mines belonging to her husband, if opened by him in his lifetime on his own or another's land; 1 Taunt. 402; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 460; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Moore v. Rollins, 45 Me. 493. See In re Seager's Estate, 92 Mich. 186, 52 N. W. 299, where she was held to be entitled whether the mines were opened before or after her husband's death; Black v. Min. Co., 49 Fed. 549; id. 52 Fed. 859, 3 C. C. A. 312. See also Seager v. McCabe, 92 Mich. 186, 52 N. W. 299, 16 L. R. A. 247. But in Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 36 Atl. 201, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601 she was held to have no right to operate for oil or gas, where such operations had not commenced during the lifetime of her husband. Where a statute gave the surviving husband or wife a one-third interest in the real estate of the other, the life tenant is entitled only to the income upon one-third of the oil produced; Swayne v. Oil Co., 98 Tex. 597, 86 S. W. 740, 69 L. R. A. 986, 8 Ann. Cas. 1117.

She had the right of dower in various species of incorporeal hereditaments: as, rights of fishing, and rents; Co. Litt. 32 a; 2 Bla. Com. 132; Chase's Case, 1 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 227, 17 Am. Dec. 277; but the rents should be estates of inheritance; 2 Cruise, Dig. 291.

In most of the states she is dowable of wild lands; Chapman v. Schroeder, 10 Ga.

321; Macaulay's Ex'r v. Land Co., 2 Rob. (Va.) 507; Hickman v. Irvine's Heirs, 3 Dana (Ky.) 121; Allen v. McCoy, 8 Ohio, 418; Pike v. Underhill's Adm'r, 24 Ark. 124; Brown v. Richards, 17 N. J. Eq. 32; Joyner v. Speed, 68 N. C. 236, contra, Kuhn v. Kaler, 14 Me. 409; Johnson v. Perley, 2 N. H. 56, 9 Am. Dec. 35.

She has no right of dower in a pre-emption claim; Well's Guardian v. Moore, 16 Mo. 478; Davenport v. Farrar, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 314.

At law there was nothing to prevent her from having dower in lands which her husband held as trustee. But, as she would take it subject to the trust, courts of equity were in the habit of restraining her from claiming her dower in lands which she would be compelled to hold entirely to another's use, till it was finally established, both in England and the United States, that she is not entitled in such case to dower; Firestone v. Firestone, 2 Ohio St. 415; Bartlett v. Gouge, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 152; Park, Dow, 105.

At common law she was not dowable of the estate of a cestui que trust; 2 Sch. & L. 387; 4 Kent 43; Lenox v. Notrebe, Hempst. 251, Fed. Cas. No. 8,246c. See Watson's Estate, 139 Pa. 461, 22 Atl. 638. But by the Dower Act this restriction was removed in England; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 501. The common-law rule that a widow could only have dower in the legal estates of the husband has been either expressly or impliedly changed by statute in the majority of states, and she now has a right of dower in his equitable estates as well, but only in those of which he died seised; In re Ransom, 17 Fed. 233; Morse v. Thorsell, 78 Ill. 604; and if the husband has aliened an equitable estate, although his wife may not have consented, the dower is defeated; Taylor v. Kearn, 68 Ill. 341; Miller v. Stump, 3 Gill (Md.) 304. In Delaware a widow is not dowable out of an equitable estate of her deceased husband, except in intestate lands; Cornog v. Cornog, 3 Del. Ch. 407, but the law upon this subject is not uniform; Stelle v. Carroll, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 201, 9 L. Ed. 1056; Hamlin v. Hamlin, 19 Me. 141; Shoemaker v. Walker, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 554; Rowton v. Rowton, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 92. In some states, dower in equitable estates is given by statutes; while in others the severe common-law rule has not been strictly followed by the courts; Hawley v. James, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 318; Lawson v. Morton, 6 Dana (Ky.) 471; Lewis v. James, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 537; Thompson v. Thompson, 46 N. C. 430; Miller v. Stump, 3 Gill (Md.) 304.

A mortgagee's wife, although her husband has the technical seisin, had no dowable interest till the estate becomes irredeemable; 4 Dane, Abr. 671; 4 Kent 42; Foster v.

Dwinel, 49 Me. 53, 2 Ves. Jr. 631; Waller v. Waller's Adm'r, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 83.

A widow was not dowable of an equity of redemption under the common law; In re Ransom, 17 Fed. 331; L. R. 6 Ch. D. 218; Cox v. Garst, 105 Ill. 342; Glenn v. Clark, 53 Md. 607; Pickett v. Buckner, 45 Miss. 243; Hopkinson v. Dumas, 42 N. H. 296; Eddy v. Moulton, 13 R. I. 105; nor did the English courts admit the doctrine until the statute of 1833; Ld. Ch. Redesdale in 2 S. & L. 388; but, as was said by Chancellor Bates in Cornog v. Cornog, 3 Del. Ch. 407, the American courts, being free to carry the equitable view of mortgaged estates to its logical results, have uniformly allowed dower in an equity of redemption; Mayburry v. Brien, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 38, 10 L. Ed. 646; Simonton v. Gray, 34 Me. 50; Newton v. Cook, 4 Gray (Mass.) 46; Titus v. Neilson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 452; Taylor v. McCrackin, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 262; Heth v. Cocke, 1 Rand. (Va.) 344; Fish v. Fish, 1 Conn. 559; Hastings v. Stevens, 29 N. H. 564; Hinchman v. Stiles, 9 N. J. Eq. 361; but after the surplus proceeds of sale have been applied by the sheriff to a judgment against the husband, it is too late to assert the widow's claim to equitable dower; Gemmill v. Richardson, 4 Del. Ch. 599. See on this subject 11 Can. L. T. 281.

In reference to her husband's contracts for the purchase of lands, the rule seems to be, in those states where dower is allowed in equitable estates, that her right attaches to her husband's interest in the contract, if at his death he was in a condition to enforce specific performance; Hawley v. James, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 318; Smith v. Addleman, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 406; Rowton v. Rowton, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 92; Robinson v. Miller, 1 B. Monr. (Ky.) 93; Reed v. Whitney, 7 Gray (Mass.) 533; Owen v. Robbins, 19 Ill. 545; Thompson v. Thompson, 46 N. C. 430. If his interest has been assigned before his death, or forfeited, or taken on execution, her dower-right is defeated; Pritts v. Ritchey, 29 Pa. 71; Secrest v. McKenna, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 72; Dean's Heirs v. Michell's Heirs, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 451; Heed v. Ford, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 114; Rowton v. Rowton, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 91.

She is entitled to dower in lands actually purchased by her husband and upon which the vendor retains a lien for the unpaid purchase-money, subject to that lien; McClure v. Harris, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 261; Crane v. Palmer, 8 Blackf. Ind. 120; Ellicott v. Welch, 2 Bland. Ch. (Md.) 242; Williams v. Woods, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 408; or upon which her husband has given a mortgage to secure the purchase-money, subject to that mortgage; Henagan v. Harlike, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 285. See Seibert v. Todd, 31 S. C. 206, 9 S. E. 822, 4 L. R. A. 606.

She is not entitled to dower in partnership lands purchased by partnership funds and for partnership purposes, until the partnership debts have been paid; Burnside v. Merri-ck, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 537; Woolridge v. Wilkins, 3 How. (Miss.) 372; Loubat v. Nourse, 5 Fla. 350; Duhring v. Duhring, 20 Mo. 174; Drewry v. Montgomery, 28 Ark. 250; Willet v. Brown, 65 Mo. 148, 27 Am. Rep. 265; Campbell v. Campbell, 30 N. J. Eq. 417. She has been denied dower in land purchased by several for the purposes of sale and speculation; Coster v. Clarke, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 428; it has been treated as personalty so far as was necessary to settle the partnership affairs, the right of dower being subject to the debts of the firm; Young v. Thrasher, 115 Mo. 222, 21 S. W. 1104; Mallory v. Russell, 71 Ia. 63, 32 N. W. 102, 60 Am. Rep. 776; Wheatley's Heirs v. Calhoun, 12 Leigh (Va.) 264, 37 Am. Dec. 654.

Sometimes she is allowed dower out of money, the proceeds of real estate sold by order of court, or by the wrongful act of an agent or trustee; Jennison v. Hapgood, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 345; Beavers v. Smith, 11 Ala. 33; Church v. Church, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 434; Willet v. Beatty, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 172; Thompson v. Cochran, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 72, 46 Am. Dec. 68.

Her claim for dower has been held not subject to mechanics' liens; Shaeffer v. Weed, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 511; Nazareth Literary & Benevolent Inst. v. Lowe, 1 B. Monr. (Ky.) 257.

The principle of equitable contribution applies equally to dower, as to other incumbrances; Eliason v. Eliason, 3 Del. Ch. 260.

She is not entitled to dower in an estate pur autre vie; Gillis v. Brown, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 388; or in a vested remainder; Fisk v. Eastman, 5 N. H. 240; Moore v. Esty, 5 N. H. 479; Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh (Va.) 29; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 161; or in reversion of the husband, where he dies before the termination of the life estate; Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 433, 28 N. E. 751, 34 N. E. 254.

In some states she has dower only in what the husband died seised of; Winstead v. Winstead's Heirs, 2 N. C. 243; 4 Kent 41.

The wife's dower will be protected against the voluntary conveyance of the husband made pending a marriage engagement, under the same circumstances in which the husband is relieved against an ante-nuptial settlement by the wife; Chandler v. Hollingsworth, 3 Del. Ch. 99. This case is considered by Washburn and Bishop as the leading case and is approved by both authors; 3 Washb. R. P. 359; 2 Bish. M. W. § 343, note 2, quoting the greater portion of the opinion of Bates, Ch.

Requisites of. Three things are usually said to be requisite to the consummation of a title to dower, viz.: marriage, seisin of the husband, and his death; 4 Kent 36; 1 Washb. R. P. 169; King v. King, 61 Ala. 481; Wait v. Wait, 4 N. Y. 99.

The marriage must be a legal one; though, if voidable and not void, she will have her dower unless it is dissolved in his lifetime; Smart v. Whaley, 6 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 308; Co. Litt. 33 a; 1 Cruise, Dig. 164; Higgins v. Breen, 9 Mo. 501; Jones v. Jones, 28 Ark. 21.

The husband must have been seised in the premises of an estate of inheritance at some time during the coverture. It may not be an actual seisin; a seisin in law with the right of immediate corporeal seisin is sufficient; Eldredge v. Forrestal, 7 Mass. 253; Mann v. Edson, 39 Me. 25; Dunham v. Osborn, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 635; Shoemaker v. Walker, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 554; 1 Cruise, Dig. 166; Young v. Young, 45 N. J. Eq. 27, 16 Atl. 921; Houston v. Smith, 88 N. C. 312. Possession by a widow of the mansion house of her husband, and her unassigned right of dower, do not prevent the heir from being seised thereof so that his widow may acquire dower therein; Null v. Howell, 111 Mo. 273, 20 S. W. 24. It is not necessary that the seisin of the husband should be a rightful one. The widow of a disseisor may have dower against all who have not the rightful seisin; Scribn. Dow. 702. See Toomey v. McLean, 105 Mass. 122.

So, although the estate is a defeasible one, provided it is one of inheritance, she may claim her dower until it is defeated; Co. Litt. 241; Doughty v. Doughty, 7 N. J. Eq. 241; 10 Co. 95.

The seisin is not required to remain in the husband any particular length of time. It is sufficient if he is seised but an instant, to his own benefit and use; Young v. Tarbell, 37 Me. 509; 2 Bla. Com. 132; Kade v. Lauber, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 382; but a mere instantaneous seisin for some other purpose than proprietorship will not give the wife dower; Stanwood v. Dunning, 14 Me. 290; Wooldridge v. Wilkins, 3 How. (Miss.) 369; Edmondson v. Welsh, 27 Ala. 578; McCauley v. Grimes, 2 G. & J. (Md.) 318, 20 Am. Dec. 434; Emerson v. Harris, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 475.

Where he purchases land and gives a mortgage at the same time to secure the purchase-money, such incumbrance takes precedence of his wife's dower; Stow v. Tift, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 458, 8 Am. Dec. 266; Reed v. Morrison, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 18; Holbrook v. Finney, 4 Mass. 566, 3 Am. Dec. 243; Moore v. Esty, 5 N. H. 479; Griggs v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 22; Bogie v. Rutledge, 1 Bay (S. C.) 312; Smith v. Stanley, 37 Me. 11, 58 Am. Dec. 771.

The death of the husband. 1 Cruise, Dig. 168. What was known as civil death in England did not give the wife right of dower; 2 Crabb. R. P. 130; Wooldridge v. Lucas, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 51; Platner v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 129. Imprisonment for life is declared civil death in some of the states.

How dower may be prevented or defeated.

At common law, alienage on the part of the husband or wife prevented dower from attaching; 2 Bla. Com. 131; Priest v. Cummings, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 617; Stokes v. O'Fallon, 2 Mo. 32. This disability is partially done away with in England, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, and is almost wholly abolished in the United States. See ALIEN.

It is well established that the wife's dower is defeated whenever the seisin of her husband is defeated by a paramount title; Co. Litt. 240 b; 4 Kent 43.

The foreclosure of a mortgage given by the husband before marriage, or by the wife and husband after marriage, will defeat her right of dower; Stow v. Tift, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 458, 8 Am. Dec. 266; Reed v. Morrison, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 18; Nottingham v. Calvert, 1 Ind. 527; Bisland v. Hewett, 11 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 164; Wilson v. Davisson, 2 Rob. (Va.) 384; Ingram v. Morris, 4 Harr. (Del.) 111; Shope v. Schaffner, 140 Ill. 470, 30 N. E. 872; Boorum v. Tucker, 51 N. J. Eq. 135, 26 Atl. 456. And in Pennsylvania, whether the wife joined or not. Like force would be given to a vendor's lien or mortgage for the purchase-money, or to a judgment lien outstanding at the time of marriage.

Her right to dower in the estate which she has joined with her husband in mortgaging is good against every one but the mortgagee; Whitehead v. Middleton, 2 How. (Miss.) 692; Eaton v. Simonds, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 98; Hastings v. Stevens, 20 N. H. 564; Young v. Tarbell, 37 Me. 509. The same is true in regard to an estate mortgaged by her husband before coverture; Eaton v. Simonds, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 98. In neither case would the husband have the right to cut off her claim for dower by a release to the mortgagee, or an assignment of his equity of redemption; Titus v. Neilson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 452; Swaine v. Perine, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 482, 9 Am. Dec. 318; Eaton v. Simonds, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 98; McIver v. Cherry, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 713; Heth v. Cocke, 1 Rand. (Va.) 344; Simonton v. Gray, 34 Me. 50; Harrison v. Eldridge, 7 N. J. L. 392. As to a purchase and mortgage for the purchase-money before marriage, in which the husband releases the equity of redemption after marriage, see Jackson v. Dewitt, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 316.

An agreement on the part of the husband to convey before dower attaches, if enforced, will extinguish her claim; Adkins v. Hohmes, 2 Ind. 197; Bowie v. Berry, 3 Md. Ch. 359.

Dower will not be defeated by the determination of the estate by natural limitation; as, if the tenant in fee die without heirs, or the tenant in tail; 8 Co. 34; 4 Kent 49; Northcut v. Whipp, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 73. Whether it will be defeated by a conditional limitation by way of executory devise or shifting use, is not yet fully settled; Co. Litt. 241 a, Butler's note 170; Sugd. Pow. 333; 3

B. & P. 652. But it seems that the weight of American authority is in favor of sustaining dower out of such estates; Evans v. Evans, 9 Pa. 190; Milledge v. Lamar, 4 Desaus. (S. C.) 617. See 1 Washb. R. P. 216.

Dower will be defeated by operation of a collateral limitation: as, in the case of an estate to a man and his heirs so long as a tree shall stand, and the tree dies; 3 Prest. Abstr. 373; 4 Kent 49.

In some states it will be defeated by a sale on execution for the debts of the husband; Gardiner v. Miles, 5 Gill (Md.) 94; London v. London, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 1; Kennerly v. Ins. Co., 11 Mo. 204; Den v. Frew, 14 N. C. 3, 22 Am. Dec. 708; but see Thomas v. Thomas, 73 Ia. 657, 35 N. W. 693. In Missouri it is defeated by a sale in partition; Lee v. Lindell, 22 Mo. 202, 64 Am. Dec. 262. See Jackson v. Edwards, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 498; Van Gelder v. Post, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 577. See 25 Alb. L. J. 387.

It is defeated by a sale for the payment of taxes; Jones v. Devore, 8 Ohio St. 430.

It is also defeated by exercise of the right of eminent domain during the life of the husband. Nor has the widow the right of compensation for such taking. The same is true of land dedicated by her husband to public use; Gwynne v. City of Cincinnati, 3 Ohio 24, 17 Am. Dec. 576.

How dower may be barred. A divorce from the bonds of matrimony was at common law a bar to dower; 2 Bla. Com. 130; Wait v. Wait, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 192; Hinson v. Bush, 84 Ala. 368, 4 South. 410; Pullen v. Pullen, 52 N. J. Eq. 9, 28 Atl. 719; but the woman's right to dower, or something equivalent to it, is reserved by statutes in most of the states, if she be the innocent party; Forrest v. Forrest, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 102. A judgment of divorce in another state, for cause other than adultery, which has the effect to deprive the wife of dower in the state where rendered, will not have such effect in New York; the United States constitution makes a judgment in another state conclusive as to the fact of divorce, but gives no extra-territorial effect on land of the husband; Van Cleaf v. Burns, 133 N. Y. 540, 30 N. E. 661, 15 L. R. A. 542.

By the common law neither adultery alone nor with elopement was a bar to dower; 2 Scrib. Dow. 531; but by the statute of Westminster 2d, a wife who eloped and lived in adultery forfeited her dower-right. This provision has been re-enacted in several of the states and recognized as common law in others; Lecompte v. Wash, 9 Mo. 555; Stegall v. Stegall, 2 Brock. 256, Fed. Cas. No. 13,351; Cogswell v. Tibbetts, 3 N. H. 41; Walters v. Jordan, 35 N. C. 361, 57 Am. Dec. 558; 4 Dane, Abr. 676; Bell v. Nealy, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 312, 19 Am. Dec. 686; contra, Schiffer v. Pruden, 64 N. Y. 47; Lakin v. Lakin, 2 Allen (Mass.) 45; Littlefield v. Paul, 69 Me. 527; Bryan v. Batcheller, 6 R. I. 543, 78 Am. Dec. 454. Dower is not barred even if the wife commit adultery, if she be abandoned by her husband and he be profligate and intemperate and an adulterer; Rawlins v. Buttel, 1 Houst. (Del.) 224; nor if she be deserted by her husband, will her subsequent seduction and adultery operate as a bar; Appeal of Nye, 126 Pa. 341, 17 Atl. 618; 6 U. C. C. P. 310; Shaffer v. Richardson's Adm'r, 27 Ind. 122. For an analysis of decisions and reference to state statutes on this subject, see 2 Scrib. Dow. 531.

A widow who had been convicted as accessory before the fact to her husband's murder was held entitled to dower; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794.

Dower is barred by an annuity given the wife in a divorce decree, and charged on the husband's real estate, where the wife had taken her maintenance under the decree; Adams v. Storey, 135 Ill. 448, 26 N. E. 582, 11 L. R. A. 790, 25 Am. St. Rep. 392.

The widow of a convicted traitor could not recover dower; 2 Bla. Com. 130; but this principle is not recognized in this country; Wms. R. P. 103, n.

Nor does she in this country, as at common law, forfeit her dower by conveying in fee the estate assigned to her; 4 Kent 82; Wms. R. P. 121, 125, n.; Robinson v. Miller, 1 B. Monr. (Ky.) 88.

The most common mode formerly of barring dower was by jointure; Scrib. Dow. 389; Craig's Heirs v. Walthall, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 518; Stilley v. Folger, 14 Ohio 610; West v. Walker, 77 Wis. 557, 46 N. W. 819. Marriage is a sufficient consideration to support an ante-nuptial contract for release of dower; Shea's Appeal, 121 Pa. 302, 15 Atl. 629, 1 L. R. A. 422; Worrell v. Forsyth, 141 Ill. 22, 30 N. E. 673. Now it is usually done by joining with her husband in conveying the estate. Formerly this was done by levying a fine, or suffering a recovery; 4 Kent 51; 2 Bla. Com. 137; now it is by deed executed with her husband and acknowledged in the form required by statute; Wms. R. P. 189; Coburn v. Herrington, 114 Ill. 104, 29 N. E. 478; Mitch. R. P. 156; which is the mode prevailing in the United States. The husband must usually join in the act; Moore v. Tisdale, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 352; Ulp v. Campbell, 19 Pa. 361; Page v. Page, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 196; Shaw v. Russ, 14 Me. 432.

Words of grant will be sufficient although no reference is made in the deed to dower eo nomine; Dundas v. Hitchcock, 12 How. (U. S.) 256, 13 L. Ed. 978; Smith v. Handy, 16 Ohio 236.

In most of the states her deed must be acknowledged, and in the form pointed out by statute; Williams v. Robson, 6 Ohio St. 510; Kirk v. Dean, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 341; Scanlan v. Turner, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 421; Clark v. Redman, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 379; which must appear in the certificate; Elwood v. Klock, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 50. She should be of age at the time; Jones v. Todd, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 359; Thomas v. Gammel, 6 Leigh (Va.) 9; Cunningham v. Knight, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 399; Markham v. Merrett, 7 How. (Miss.) 437, 40 Am. Dec. 76. She cannot release her dower by parol; see Wood v. Lee, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 57; Keeler v. Tatnell, 23 N. J. L. 62. A parol sale of lands in which the husband delivers possession does not exclude dower; Williams v. Dawson, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 316. But it has been held that she may bar her claim for dower by her own acts operating by way of estoppel; Heth v. Cocke, 1 Rand. (Va.) 344; Dougrey v. Topping, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 94; Reed v. Morrison, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 18; Gardiner v. Miles, 5 Gill (Md.) 94.

A release of dower by a wife direct to her husband will not enable him by his sole deed to convey the land free of dower right, for, if the release is at all effectual, the husband becomes vested with a fee simple and the dower-right immediately reattaches by operation of law; House v. Fowle, 22 Or. 303, 29 Pac. 890; but where the wife has power to release her dower by an attorney in fact, she may constitute her husband attorney for the purpose; Wronkow v. Oakley, 133 N. Y. 505, 31 N. E. 521, 16 L. R. A. 209, 28 Am. St. Rep. 661.

A release of dower has been presumed after a long lapse of time; Barnard v. Edwards, 4 N. H. 321; Evans v. Evans, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 507.

At common law there was no limitation to the claim for dower; 4 Kent 70. As to the statutes in the different states, see id. note; 1 Washb. R. P. 217. Adverse possession for seven years with claim and color of title and payment of taxes will bar a claim of dower; Brian v. Melton, 125 Ill. 647, 18 N. E. 318; Null v. Howell, 111 Mo. 275, 20 S. W. 24; but see Boling v. Clark, 83 La. 481, 50 N. W. 57.

The right to dower does not depend on the existence of the family relation at the death of the husband and is not barred by desertion; Nye's Appeal, 126 Pa. 341, 17 Atl. 618, 12 Am. St. Rep. 873.

Upon the doctrine of dos de dote, see 1 Washb. R. P. 209.

In some states the wife may elect to take half of the husband's estate in lieu of dower under certain contingencies; Welch v. Anderson, 28 Mo. 293; or she may accept a devise in lieu of dower; Nelson v. Brown, 66 Hun 311, 20 N. Y. Supp. 978; Stone v. Vandermark, 146 Ill. 312, 34 N. E. 150; Bannister v. Bannister, 37 S. C. 529, 16 S. E. 612; Goodrum v. Goodrum, 56 Ark. 532, 20 S. W. 353.

It seems that a contract to marry on condition that the wife should receive no portion of the husband's lands may be valid; Spiva v. Jeter, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 434.

How and by whom dower may be assigned. Her right to have dower set out to her accrued immediately upon the death of her husband; but until it is assigned she has no right to any specific part of the estate; 2 Bla. Com. 139. She was allowed by Magna Carta to occupy the principal mansion of her husband for forty days after his death, if it were on dowable lands. This right is variously recognized in the states; Stokes v. McAllister, 2 Mo. 163; Doe v. Carrol, 16 Ala. 148; Chaplin v. Simmons' Heirs, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 337; Stedman v. Fortune, 5 Conn. 462. In some states, she may remain in possession of the principal mansion-house and messuages thereto belonging until dower has been assigned; Grimes v. Wilson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 331. This makes her tenant in common with the heir to the extent of her right of dower; and an assignment only works a severance of the tenancy; 4 Kent 62; Stokes v. McAllister, 2 Mo. 163.

There were two modes of assigning dower; one by "common right," where the assignment was by legal process; the other "against common right," which rested upon the widow's assent and agreement.

Dower of "common right" must be assigned by metes and bounds, where this is possible, unless the parties agree to a different form; 2 Penning, 521; 1 Rolle, Abr. 683; Style 276; Perkins 407.

If assigned "against common right," it must be by indenture to which she is a party; Co. Litt. 34 b; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314.

Where assigned of common right, it must be unconditional and absolute; Co. Litt. 34 b, n. 217; 1 Rolle, Abr. 682; and for her life; 1 Bright, Husb. & W. 379.

Where it is assigned not by legal process, it must be by the tenant of the freehold; Co. Litt. 35 a. It may be done by an infant; 2 Bla. Com. 136; McCormick v. Taylor, 2 Ind. 336; or by the guardian of the heir; 2 Bla. Com. 136; Young v. Tarbell, 37 Me. 509. Dower may be assigned in partition; Thomas v. Thomas, 73 Ia. 657, 35 N. W. 693.

As between the widow and heir, she takes her dower according to the value of the property at the time of the assignment; Thompson v. Morrow, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 290, 9 Am. Dec. 358; Wooldridge v. Wilkins, 3 How. (Miss.) 360; Mosher v. Mosher, 15 Me. 371; Green v. Tennant, 2 Harr. (Del.) 336; Summers v. Babb, 13 Ill. 483.

As between the widow and the husband's alienee, she takes her dower according to the value at the time of the alienation; Hale v. James, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 328; Tod v. Baylor, 4 Leigh (Va.) 498. This was the ancient and well-established rule; Humphrey v. Phinney, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 484; Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56. But in this country the rule in respect to the alienee seems now to be that if the land had been enhanced in value by his labor and improvements, the widow shall not share in these; Thompson v. Morrow, 5

S. & R. (Pa.) 289, 9 Am. Dec. 358; Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56; Tod v. Baylor, 4 Leigh (Va.) 498; Wilson v. Oatman, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 223; Barney v. Frowner, 9 Ala. 901; Baden v. McKenny, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 268; Felch v. Finch, 52 Ia. 563, 3 N. W. 570; McGehee v. McGehee, 42 Miss. 747; if it has been enhanced by extraneous circumstances, such as the rise and improvement of property in the neighborhood, she is to have the full benefit of this; Smith v. Addleman, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 406; Powell v. M'f'g Co., 3 Mas. 375, Fed. Cas. No. 11,356; Johnston v. Vandyke, 6 McLean, 422, Fed. Cas. No. 7,426; Wms. R. P. 191, n.

There seems to be no remedy for her now in either country where the land has deteriorated in value by the waste and mismanagement of the alienee or by extraneous circumstances; McClanahan v. Porter, 10 Mo. 746; see Westcott v. Campbell, 11 R. I. 378; but she must be content to take her dower in the property as it was at the time of her husband's death; 1 Washb. R. P. 239. See Sanders v. McMillian, 98 Ala. 144, 11 South. 750, 18 L. R. A. 425, 39 Am. St. Rep. 19. Where the widow dies without asserting her claim, neither her personal representatives, nor those of her assignee of such dower right, can maintain an action to have dower admeasured or for a gross sum in lieu thereof; Howell v. Newman, 59 Hun 538, 13 N. Y. Supp. 648; Pollitt v. Kerr, 49 N. J. Eq. 66, 22 Atl. 800.

Dower may also be recovered in equity, the jurisdiction of which, as Chancellor Kent says, "has been thoroughly examined, clearly asserted, and definitively established;" 4 Kent 71; and nearly half a century later this language is repeated as correctly expressing the result of the authorities; Bisph. Eq. § 495. The jurisdiction was asserted in the U. S. at an early period; Grayson v. Moncure, 1 Leigh (Va.) 449; Kendall v. Honey, 5 T. B. Mour. (Ky.) 284; Stevens v. Smith, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 64, 20 Am. Dec. 205; Swaine v. Perine, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 482, 9 Am. Dec. 318; Badgley v. Bruce, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 98; and although in New Jersey in the time of Kent the equitable jurisdiction was denied; 4 Kent 72; Harrison v. Eldridge, 7 N. J. L. 392; it was afterwards asserted and sustained; 1 Green Ch. 349. The jurisdiction is concurrent with that of courts of law, which must settle the legal title when that is in controversy, "but if that be admitted or settled, full and effectual relief can be granted to the widow in equity both as to the assignment of dower and the damages;" 4 Kent 71; and in many respects the remedy in equity possesses great advantages over that at law; Bisph. Eq. § 496. As to the remedies afforded both by law and equity for the enforcement of dower, see 1 Washb. R. P. 226; 4 W. R. 459.

Nature of the estate in dower. Until the death of her husband, the wife's right of dower is not an interest in real estate of which value can be predicated; Moore v. City of New York, 8 N. Y. 110, 59 Am. Dec. 473. And although on the death of her husband this right becomes consummate, it remains a chose in action until assignment; 4 Kent 61; Green v. Putnam, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 500; Johnson v. Shields, 32 Me. 424; Shield's Heirs v. Batts, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 12; McClanahan v. Porter, 10 Mo. 746; Hilleary v. Hilleary's Lessee, 26 Md. 289.

During coverture a wife has such an interest in her husband's lands which have been conveyed by him without her joining in the deed, as will make a release by her a valuable consideration; Howlett v. Dilts, 4 Ind. App. 23, 30 N. E. 313. See Brooks v. McMeekin, 37 S. C. 285, 15 S. E. 1019.

Until assignment, she has no estate which she can convey or which can be taken on execution for her debts; 2 Keen 527; Tompkins v. Fonda, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 448; Gooch v. Atkins, 14 Mass. 378; Summers v. Babb, 13 Ill. 483; Rausch v. Moore, 48 Ia. 611, 30 Am. Rep. 412; Webb v. Boyle, 63 N. C. 271; contra, Powell v. Powell, 10 Ala. 900.

But where she does sell or assign this right of action, equity will protect the rights of the assignee and sustain an action in the widow's name for his benefit; Lamar v. Scott, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 516; Powell v. Powell, 10 Ala. 900; Potter v. Everitt, 42 N. C. 152; Parton v. Allison, 109 N. C. 674, 14 S. E. 107. She may mortgage her undivided dower interest, which is valid in equity; Herr v. Herr, 90 Ia. 538, 58 N. W. 897.

She can release her claim to one who is in possession of the lands, or to whom she stands in privity of estate; Blain v. Harrison, 11 Ill. 384; Jackson v. Vanderheyden, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 167, 8 Am. Dec. 378; Johnson v. Shields, 32 Me. 424; Saltmarsh v. Smith, 32 Ala. 404; Saunders v. Blythe, 112 Mo. 1, 20 S. W. 319; 8 L. R. Q. B. D. 31; Weaver v. Sturtevant, 12 R. I. 537.

But as soon as the premises have been set out and assigned to her, and she has entered upon them, the freehold vests in her by virtue of her husband's seisin; Co. Litt. 239 a; Inhabitants of Windham v. Inhabitants of Portland, 4 Mass. 384; Norwood v. Marrow, 20 N. C. 578. Her estate is a continuation of her husband's by appointment of the law; Conant v. Little, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 189; Baker v. Baker, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 67; Love v. McClure, 99 N. C. 290, 6 S. E. 247, 250.

The legislature may change the relative rights of husband and wife after marriage, and may substitute for inchoate dower another and larger estate to be carved out of that of the husband after his death; Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37; but not after the husband's death; Bottorff v. Lewis, 121 Ia. 27, 95 N. W. 262; nor as against one who has contracted for a judgment lien on the husband's property, although such judgment was not entered until after the statute was passed; Davidson v. Richardson, 50 Or. 323, 91 Pac. 1080, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 319, 126 Am. St. Rep. 738. And it is held that a statute enlarging dower by extending it to the husband's equitable estate did not apply to a widow married before the statute was passed; Slingluff v. Hubner, 101 Md. 652, 61 Atl. 320.

See Scribner, Dower; Dembitz, Land Titles; Tudor; Washburn; Cruise; Tiedeman, Real Property; DIVORCE; ELECTION OF RIGHTS; ASSIGNMENT OF DOWER; QUARANTINE.

DOWRESS. A woman entitled to dower. See DOWER.

DOWRY. Formerly applied to mean that which a woman brings to her husband in marriage: this is now called a portion. This word is sometimes confounded with dower. See Co. Litt. 31; La. Civ. Code; Dig. 23. 3. 76; Code 5. 12. 20; Buard v. De Russy, 6 Rob. (La.) 111; Gates v. Legendre, 10 Rob. (La.) 74; De Young v. De Young, 6 La. Ann. 786; Cutter v. Waddingham; 22 Mo. 254.

DRAFT. An order for the payment of money, drawn by one person on another. Wildes v. Savage, 1 Sto. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 17,653. It is said to be a nomen generalissimum, and to include all such orders. ibid., per Story, J. It is frequently used in corporations where one agent draws on another; in such case it may be treated either as an accepted bill or a promissory note; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 350; Tiedeman, Com. Pap. § 128. Drafts come within a statutory provision respecting "bills and notes for the direct payment of money;" Gilstrap v. R. Co., 50 Mo. 491. They are frequently given for mere convenience in keeping accounts, and providing concurrent vouchers, and it is not necessary to present such a draft to the drawee or to give notice of non-payment before suing the corporation; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 350; Dennis v. Water Co., 10 Cal. 369; Mobley v. Clark, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 391; Shaw v. Stone, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 256. A draft by directors of an assurance company on its cashier was said to contain all that is essential to constitute a promissory note; 9 C. B. 574. Drafts are frequently used between municipal officers, and are not usually negotiable instruments; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 352. But it has been held that municipal warrants or orders for the payment of debts, if authorized and drawn in negotiable language, may be sued on by the transferee; id. 353; Kelley v. City of Brooklyn, 4 Hill. (N. Y.) 265. They must be presented for payment before suit; Pease v. Inhabitants of Cornish, 19 Me. 193; contra, Steel v. Davis County, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 469.

Draft, in a commercial sense, is an allowance to the merchant where the duty is ascertained by weight, to insure good weight to him; it is a small allowance in weighable goods, made by the king to the importer; it is to compensate for any loss that may occur from the handling of the scales, in the weighing, so that, when weighed the second time, the article will hold out good weight. Napier v. Barney, 5 Blatchf. 192, Fed. Cas. No. 10,009.

Also the rough copy of a legal document before engrossing.

DRAGO DOCTRINE. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a letter to the Argentine Minister at Washington, December 29, 1902, that the forcible intervention of states to secure the payment of public debts due to their citizens from foreign states is unjustifiable and dangerous to the security and peace of the nations of South America. The doctrine was not new, but became associated with the name of Drago, owing to his publication of an elaborate exposition of it shortly before the Second Hague Conference. The subject was brought before the Conference by the United States and a Convention was adopted in which the contracting powers agreed, with some restrictive conditions, not to have recourse to armed force for the recovery of contract debts claimed by their nationals against a foreign state. Higgins, 184-197.

DRAGOMAN. An interpreter employed in the east, and particularly at the Turkish court.

DRAIN. To conduct water from one place to another, for the purpose of drying the former.

The right of draining water through another man's land. This is an easement or servitude acquired by grant or prescription. See 3 Kent 436; 7 M. & G. 354.

In Goldthwait v. Inhabitants of East Bridgwater, 5 Gray (Mass.) 63, it was said that the word drain has no technical or exact meaning. It was considered fully in People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 639.

A state may provide for the construction of canals for draining marshy and malarious districts, and of levees to prevent inundations; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569. The expenses of such works may be charged against parties specially benefited and be made a lien upon their property; id. The law under which such an assessment is made does not deprive one of property without due process of law; id. Taylor v. Crawford, 72 Ohio St. 560, 74 N. E. 1065, 69 L. R. A. 805. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN; TAXATION; LEGISLATIVE POWER; ASSESSMENT.

DRAINAGE DISTRICT. The organization of a drainage district is within the power of the state; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569; for the exclusive benefit of the territory within the district; Commissioners of Union Drainage Dist. No. 3 v. Com'rs, 220 Ill. 176, 77 N. E. 71; and the lands within the district may be assessed to pay the entire cost, on the theory that they alone are benefited; Bradbury v. Drainage Dist., 236 Ill. 36, 86 N. E. 163, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 15 Ann. Cas. 904. It is correct to say that a drainage district is a quasi-corporation, if the act under which it is organized does not make it a corporation in fact; but it is not created for political purposes or for the administration of civil government. It is not liable for the unauthorized acts of its commissioners, but the district has the power of eminent domain for the purposes of its organization; Bradbury v. Drainage Dist., 236 Ill. 36, 86 N. E. 163, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 15 Ann. Cas. 904. They have been classed as municipal corporations; Commissioners of Havana Tp. Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Kelsey, 120 Ill. 482, 11 N. E. 256.

Where, in the construction of a levee, an upper owner was damaged by having the water thrown back on his lands, and there was no negligence on the part of the district in the performance of the work, he could not recover; Bradbury v. Drainage Dist., 236 Ill. 36, 86 N. E. 163, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 15 Ann. Cas. 904; Lamb v. Reclamation Dist., 73 Cal. 125, 14 Pac. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 775 (where a lower owner was damaged by overflow, caused by the necessary work of a reclamation district). See POLICE POWER; ASSESSMENT; RIVERS.

DRAM. A liquid containing alcohol; something that can intoxicate. Lacy v. State, 32 Tex. 228. See Wright v. People, 101 Ill. 134.

DRAW. To drag (on a hurdle) to the place of execution. Anciently no hurdle was allowed, but the criminal was actually dragged along the road to the place of execution. A part of the ancient punishment of traitors was to be thus drawn. 4 Bla. Com. 92, 377.

DRAWBACK. An allowance made by the government to merchants on the re-exportation of certain imported goods liable to duties, which in some cases consists of the whole, in others of a part, of the duties which had been paid upon the importation. Goods can thus be sold in a foreign market at their natural cost in the home market. See U. S. R. S. tit. 34, c. 9.

DRAWEE. A person to whom a bill of exchange is addressed, and who is requested to pay the amount of money therein mentioned. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

DRAWER. The party who makes a bill of exchange.

DRAWING. Every person who applies for a patent for an invention is required to furnish a drawing or drawings illustrative of that invention: provided from the nature of the case the invention can be so illustrated. Drawings are also required on application for a patent for a design. See PATENT.

DRAWLATCHES. Thieves; robbers. Cowell.

DREDGE. Formerly applied to a net or drag for taking oysters; now a machine for cleansing canals and rivers. To dredge is to gather or take with a dredge, to remove sand, mud, and filth from the beds of rivers, harbors, and canals, with a dredging machine. 15 Can. L. T. 268.

DREIT DREIT. Droit droit. Double right. A union of the right of possession and the right of property. 2 Bla. Com. 199.

DRENGAGE. A variety of feudal tenure by serjeanty (q. v.), often occurring in the northern counties of England, involving a kind of general service. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. in Eleventh Cent. 62. Little is known of it; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 132.

DRIFTWAY. A road or way over which cattle are driven. 1 Taunt. 279; Selw. N. P. 1037; Woolr. Ways 1. The term is in use in Rhode Island. 2 Hilliard, Abr. Prop. 33.

DRIP. The right of drip is an easement by which the water which falls on one house is allowed to fall upon the land of another.

Unless the owner has acquired the right by grant or prescription, he has no right so to construct his house as to let the water drip over his neighbor's land; 1 Rolle, Abr. 107. See 3 Kent 436; Dig. 43. 23. 4. 6; 11 Ad. & E. 40.

DRIVER. One employed in conducting a coach, carriage, wagon, or other vehicle with horses, mules, or other animals.

The law requires that a driver should possess reasonable skill and be of good habits; if, therefore, he is not acquainted with the road he undertakes to drive; 3 Bing. 314, 321; drives with reins so loose that he cannot govern his horse; 2 Esp. 533; does not give notice of any serious danger on the road; 1 Campb. 67; takes the wrong side of the road; 4 Esp. 273; incautiously comes in collision with another carriage; 1 Stark. 423; 1 Campb. 167; or does not exercise a sound and reasonable discretion in travelling on the road to avoid dangers and difficulties, and any accident happens by which any passenger is injured, both the driver and his employers will be responsible; Barnes v. Hurd, 11 Mass. 57; 6 Term 659; 1 East 106; 4 B. & Ald. 590; Maury v. Talmadge, 2 McLean, 157, Fed. Cas. No. 9,315.

It has been held that the conductor of a street railway is not a driver; Isaacs v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418; and one who drove a wagon loaded with calves and drawn by horses was held not to be "driving or conducting" cattle; L. R. 1 Q. B. 259.

DROF-LAND (Drift-land). A yearly payment made by some to their landlords for driving their cattle through the manor to fairs and markets. Cowell.

DROIT (Fr.). In French Law. Law. The whole body of law, written and unwritten.

A right. No law exists without a duty. Toullier, n. 96; Pothier, Droit.

In English Law. Right. Co. Litt. 158.

A person was said to have droit droit, plurimum juris, and plurimum possessionis, when he had the freehold, the fee, and the property in him. Crabb, Hist. E. L. 406.

Recht, Droit, Diritto.—These terms are all closely connected with each other and with the English right. The French and Italian words are derivatives of the Latin directus and rectus, these being cognate with recht and right; 15 L. Q. R. 369.

DROIT-CLOSE. The name of an ancient writ directed to the lord of ancient demesne, and which lies for those tenants in ancient demesne who hold their lands and tenements by charter in fee-simple, in fee-tail, for life, or in dower. Fitzh. N. B. 23.

DROIT COUTUMIER. In French Law. Common law.

DROIT D'ACCESSION. In French Law. That property which is acquired by making a new form out of the material of another. The civil law rule is that if the thing can be reduced to the former matter it belongs to the owner of the matter, e. g. a statue made of gold; but if it cannot so be reduced it belongs to the person who made it, e. g. a statue made of marble. This subject is treated of in the Code Civil de Napoléon, art. 565, 577; Merlin, Répert. Accession; Malleville's Discussion, art. 565. See ACCESSION.

DROIT D'AUBAINE. A rule by which all the property of a deceased foreigner, whether movable or immovable, was confiscated to the use of the state, to the exclusion of his heirs, whether claiming ab intestato or under a will of the deceased. Finally abolished in 1819. Boyd's Wheat. Int. Laws § 82.

The word aubaine signifies hospes loci, peregrinus advena, a stranger. It is derived, according to some, from alibi, elsewhere, natus, born, from which the word albinus is said to be formed. Others, as Cujas, derive the word directly from advena, by which word aubains or strangers are designated in the capitularies of Charlemagne. See Du Cange; Trévoux, Dict.

DROIT DE NAUFRAGE. In French Law. The right of a seigneur, who owns the seashore, or the king, when a vessel is wrecked, to take possession of the wreckage and to kill the crew or sell them as slaves. 14 Yale L. Jour. 129.

DROIT NATUREL (Fr.). The law of nature. See JURISPRUDENCE.

DROITS OF ADMIRALTY. Rights claimed by the government over the property of an enemy. In England, it has been usual in maritime wars for the government to seize and condemn, as droits of admiralty, the property of an enemy found in her ports at the breaking out of hostilities. 1 C. Rob. 196; 13 Ves. 71; 1 Edw. 60; 3 Bos. & P. 191. The power to exercise such a right has not been delegated to, nor has it ever been claimed by, the United States government; Benedict, Adm. § 33; Brown v. U. S., 8 Cra. 110, 3 L. Ed. 504.

The droits formerly attaching to the office of Lord High Admiral consisted of flotsam, jetsam, ligan, treasure, deodands, derelicts, all goods picked up at sea, fines, etc., sturgeons and all such large fish, all ships and goods of an enemy coming into any port, creek or road, all ships seized at sea, salvage, and a share of prizes. 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 318. The Droit Book of the High Court, 1618-1737, is extant. See 15 L. Q. R. 359; Marsden, Admiralty, Droits and Salvage.

For a case of the condemnation to the Crown of goods taken from convicted pirates, see 1 W. Rob. 423.

DROITS CIVILS. In French Law.

Private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualité) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them, and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners, although not resident in France, may be sued on contracts made by them in France, and (unless possessed of sufficient real property in France) are obliged to give security; 12 C. B. 801; Brown, Law Dict.

DROITURAL. What belongs of right; relating to right: as, real actions are either droitual or possessory,—droitual when the plaintiff seeks to recover the property. Finch, Law 257. See WRIT OF RIGHT.

DRUGGIST. One who deals in medicinal substances, vegetable, animal, or mineral, uncompounded. State v. Holmes, 28 La. Ann. 765, 26 Am. Rep. 110.

In America the term druggist is used synonymously with apothecary, although, strictly speaking, a druggist is one who deals in medicinal substances, vegetable, animal, or mineral, before being compounded, while composition and combination are really the business of the apothecary. The term is here used in its double sense, and throughout this article is to be read as if druggist or apothecary. In England an apothecary was formerly a sub-physician, or privileged practitioner. He was the ordinary medical man, or family medical attendant, in that country.

Druggists are subject to the general rule of law that persons who hold themselves out to the world as possessing skill and qualification for a particular trade or profession are bound to reasonable skill and diligence in the performance of their duties. Accordingly the law implies an undertaking on the part of apothecaries that they shall use a reasonable degree of care and skill in the treatment of their customers; Chit. Contr. 553; Gwynn v. Duffield, 66 Ia. 708, 24 N. W. 523, 55 Am. Rep. 286; Walton v. Booth, 34 La. Ann. 913; Beckwith v. Oatman, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 265. This rule is probably more strict here than in England; Webb's

Poll. Torts 26, note. A druggist, whether under a license or not, holds himself out as competent for that business, but not to prescribe as a physician; and for any lack of capacity or for negligence, he is answerable in damages to the person injured, the same principles of law applying to him as to a medical practitioner; Bish. Non-Contr. L. § 716. In dispensing poisons, he is required to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of his customers; Sutton's Adm'r v. Wood, 120 Ky. 23, 85 S. W. 201, 8 Ann. Cas. 594.

Where a customer asked for a preparation for a specified purpose (corrosive sublimate for external application to kill lice) and the druggist made the solution so strong (85 per cent.) as to cause severe injury, he was held liable, though it was labelled "Poison Carbolic Acid"; it was the druggist's duty to give proper instructions; Goldberg v. Hegeman & Co., 60 Misc. 107, 111 N. Y. Supp. 679. Where a solution was called for to cleanse a wound, plaintiff had a right to assume that that which was furnished would be at least harmless, if not efficient, and could be applied without further injury; Horst v. Walter, 53 Misc. 591, 103 N. Y. Supp. 750.

A druggist is required to know the properties of the medicines he sells and to employ capable assistants; Smith v. Hays, 23 Ill. App. 244; it is no defence that he used ordinary care; Fleet v. Hollenkemp, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 219, 56 Am. Dec. 563; or that the clerk who negligently put up the prescription was a competent pharmacist; Burgess v. Drug Co., 114 Ia. 275, 86 N. W. 307, 54 L. R. A. 364, 89 Am. St. Rep. 359. The highest degree of skill is not to be expected nor can it reasonably be required of all; Simonds v. Henry, 39 Me. 156, 63 Am. Dec. 611.

Perhaps a higher degree of skill than is the usual rule was required in Fleet v. Hollenkemp, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 219; where it was held that any mistake made by the druggist, if the result of ignorance or carelessness, renders him liable to the injured party; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455. Where one, whether an apothecary or not, negligently gave a customer poison and the customer swallowed it and was injured, he who negligently gave the poison was guilty of a tort, and liable for the injury to the customer unless the latter was also guilty of negligence which contributed to the injury; Gwynn v. Duffield, 61 Ia. 64, 15 N. W. 594, 47 Am. Rep. 802. If a druggist negligently sells a deadly poison as a harmless medicine to A, who administers it to B and B takes it as a medicine and dies in a few hours by reason thereof, a right of action against the druggist survives to B's administrator; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298. The sale of an article in itself harmless, which becomes dangerous only by being used in combination with some other article, without any knowledge on the part of the vendor that it was to be used in such combination, does not render him liable to an action by one who purchased the article from the original vendee and is injured while using it in a dangerous combination, although by mistake the article sold was different from that which was intended to be sold; Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen (Mass.) 514.

A druggist who sells to one person for the use of another a hair wash made by himself and represented not to be injurious, is liable to the person for whom it was purchased when used as directed, for injuries arising from such use, the intended use by the third person being known to the vendor; L. R. 5 Ex. 1. The maker of a proprietary medicine recommended for the cure of a certain disease, the bottle having on it directions for use, who sells the medicine, so put up, to a druggist, is liable to one who buys it from the druggist and is injured by its use according to the directions on the bottle; Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 10 S. E. 118, 5 L. R. A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324.

Where a druggist selling a poisonous medicine, fully and clearly warned the person of its nature and gave him accurate directions as to the quantity which he could safely take, and the person was injured or killed by taking an overdose in disregard of the directions, the druggist is not liable for negligence simply because he failed to put a label marked "Poison" on the package as directed by statute. The customer disregarding the warning and direction of the vendor was guilty of negligence; Wohlfahrt v. Beckert, 92 N. Y. 490, 44 Am. Rep. 406.

An unlicensed druggist who conducts a drug store cannot escape the penalty of the law for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors by showing that the sales were made for medicinal purposes by his clerk, who was a licensed pharmacist; State v. Norton, 67 Ia. 641, 25 N. W. 842. A druggist is not liable if he compounds carefully another's prescription; Ray v. Burbank, 61 Ga. 505, 34 Am. Rep. 103. But if he sell one medicine for another and an injury result therefrom, it is no defence for him to show that the case was negligently treated; Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576, 11 N. W. 392, 41 Am. Rep. 728. An apothecary, if guilty of criminal negligence, and fatal results follow, may be convicted of manslaughter; 1 Lew. Cr. Cas. 169. See PHYSICIAN.

DRUGS. Substances used in the composition of medicines or in dyeing and in chemical operations. Webst. Dict.

"Drugs and Medicines," when used in insurance policies, include saltpetre; Collins v. Ins. Co., 79 N. C. 279, 28 Am. Rep. 322. It is a question of fact whether benzine is a drug; Carrigan v. Ins. Co., 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

Where a druggist was charged with selling peppermint lozenges on Sunday, it appeared that the statute permitted the selling of "drugs and medicines" on that day. They were held prima facie within the statute; 33 U. C. Q. B. 543. So a mixture of rosewater and prussic acid to be used as a lotion is within the same terms; L. R. 4 Q. B. 296.

For pure food and drug law, see FOOD AND DRUGS.

DRUMMER. A travelling salesman. One who solicits custom. Thomas v. City of Hot Springs, 34 Ark. 553, 36 Am. Rep. 34. "Commercial agents who are travelling for wholesale merchants and supplying the retail trade with goods, or rather, taking orders for goods to be shipped to the retail merchant." Singleton v. Fritsch, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 93. See COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER; COMMERCE.

DRUNKENNESS. In Medical Jurisprudence. The condition of a man whose mind is affected by the immediate use of intoxicating drinks.

This condition presents various degrees of intensity, ranging from a simple exhilaration to a state of utter unconsciousness and insensibility. In the popular phrase, the term drunkenness is applied only to those degrees of it in which the mind is manifestly disturbed in its operations. In the earlier stages it frequently happens that the mind is not only not disturbed, but acts with extraordinary clearness, promptitude, and vigor. In the latter the thoughts obviously succeed one another without much relevance or coherence, the perceptive faculties are active, but the impressions are misconceived, as if they passed through a distorting medium, and the reflective powers cease to act with any degree of efficiency. Some of the intermediate stages may be easily recognized; but it is not always possible to fix upon the exact moment when they succeed one another. In some persons peculiarly constituted, a fit of intoxication presents few if any of these successive stages, and the mind rapidly loses its self-control, and for the time is actually frenzied, as if in a maniacal paroxysm, though the amount of the drink may be comparatively small. The same phenomenon is observed sometimes in persons who have had some injury of the head, who are deprived of their reason by the slightest indulgence.

The habitual abuse of intoxicating drinks is usually followed by a pathological condition of the brain, which is manifested by a degree of intellectual obtuseness, and some insensibility to moral distinctions once readily discerned. The mind is more exposed to the force of foreign influences, and more readily induced to regard things in the light to which others have directed them. In others it produces a permanent mental derangement, which, if the person continue to indulge, is easily mistaken by common observers for the immediate effects of hard drinking. These two results—the mediate and the immediate effects of drinking—may coexist; but it is no less necessary to distinguish them from each other, because their legal consequences may be very different. Moved by the latter, a person goes into the street and abuses or assaults his neighbors; moved by the former, the same person makes his will, and cuts off with a shilling those who have the strongest claims upon his bounty. In a judicial investigation, one class of witnesses will attribute all his extravagances to drink, while another will see nothing in them but the effect of insanity. The medical jurist should not be misled by either party, but be able to refer each particular act to its proper source.

Drunkenness may be the result of dipsomania. Rather suddenly, and perhaps without much preliminary indulgence, a person manifests an insatiable thirst for strong drink, which no considerations of propriety or prudence can induce him to control. He generally retires to some secluded place, and there, during a period of a few days or weeks, he swallows enormous quantities of liquor, until his stomach refuses to bear any more. Vomiting succeeds, followed by sickness, depression, and disgust for all intoxicating drinks. This affection is often periodical, the paroxysms recurring at periods varying from three months to several years. Sometimes the indulgence is more continuous and limited, sufficient, however, to derange the mind, without producing sickness, and equally beyond control. Dipsomania may result from moral causes, such as anxiety, disappointment, grief, sense of responsibility; or physical, consisting chiefly of some anomalous condition of the stomach. Esquirol, Mal. Men. ii. 73; Marc, de la Folie, ii. 605; Ray, Med. Jur. 497; Macnish, Anatomy of Drunkenness, chap. 14.

The common law showed but little disposition to afford relief, either in civil or criminal cases, from the immediate effects of drunkenness. It has never considered that mere drunkenness alone as a sufficient reason for invalidating any act. In Crane v. Conklin, 1 N. J. Eq. 346, 22 Am. Dec. 519, it was said that the early cases held that relief could not be granted against a contract made by one who was intoxicated, unless the intoxication was brought about by the other party, but that that rule had been changed; that courts will not interfere to assist a person on the ground of intoxication merely, but will, if any unfair advantage has been taken of his situation. To the same effect, Baird v. Howard, 51 Ohio St. 57, 36 N. E. 732, 22 L. R. A. 846, 46 Am. St. Rep. 550, but such contracts have been held void where it appeared that actual intoxication dethroned the reason or that the party's understanding was so impaired as to render him mentally unsound; Burnham v. Burnham, 119 Wis. 509, 97 N. W. 176, 100 Am. St. Rep. 895; Wright v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 275, 32 N. W. 605, 8 Am. St. Rep. 886; that the drunkenness must have been such as to have drowned reason, memory and judgment and to have impaired the mental faculties to such an extent as to render the party non compos mentis for the time being; Martin v. Harsh, 231 Ill. 384, 83 N. E. 164, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000; that at the time the party did not fully understand the nature of the transaction; 7 Idaho 292; that the party was incapable of knowing or understanding the nature or quality of the act; Benton v. Sikyta, 84 Neb. 808, 122 N. W. 61, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1057; so destitute of reason as not to know the consequences of his contract; Fowler v. Water Co., 208 Pa. 473, 57 Atl. 959; incapable of knowing what he was doing; Cook v. Timber Co., 78 Ark. 47, 94 S. W. 695, 8 Ann. Cas. 251.

It has been held that there must be a degree of drunkenness which may be called excessive, where a party is so far deprived of his reason as to render him incapable of understanding the consequences of his act; J.

I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Meyers, 78 Neb. 685, 111 N. W. 602, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 970; Conant v. Jackson, 16 Vt. 335; Johns v. Fritchey, 39 Md. 258; Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174, 76 Am. Dec. 101; Taylor v. Purcell, 60 Ark. 606, 31 S. W. 567; Kuhlman v. Wieben, 129 Ia. 188, 105 N. W. 445, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666; Drummond v. Hopper, 4 Harr. (Del.) 327; Fowler v. Water Co., 208 Pa. 473; or where it is of such a degree as to make his mind similar to that of an idiot or a lunatic; Harbison v. Lemon, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 51, 23 Am. Dec. 376; when he is in such a condition as to be unable to understand the nature of the transaction; Ryan v. Schutt, 135 Ill. App. 554; or is deprived entirely of his reason; Bing v. Bank, 5 Ga. App. 578, 63 S. E. 652. It must be so extreme that the party sought to be charged was incapable of assenting; Wade v. Colvert, 2 Mill, Const. (S. C.) 26, 12 Am. Dec. 652; because the very essence of a contract is the assent of the party; id.; Longhead v. Commission Co., 64 Mo. App. 559. That one may plead his intoxication in avoidance of a contract is held in Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371, 24 L. Ed. 271.

The leading English case is 13 M. & W. 623, which holds that there is a class of contracts from which a party cannot be released, even by proof of complete drunkenness at the time they were entered into. This class embraces transactions where the law raises the assent essential to their execution, such as actions for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, or paid by him to the defendant's use. So a tradesman who supplies a drunken man with necessities may recover the price of them if the party keeps them when he becomes sober, although a count for goods bargained and sold would fail. The contract may be ratified by him when he becomes sober; L. R. 8 Exch. 132, where it was said that the judges in 13 M. & W. 623, used the word void, but that they did not mean absolutely void, but only that a drunken man's contract could not be enforced against his will, not that it was incapable of ratification. To the same effect, McClure v. Mausell, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 119; Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Hinton, 158 Ala. 470, 48 South. 546; Eaton's Adm'r v. Perry, 29 Mo. 96; Brockway v. Jewell, 52 Ohio St. 187, 39 N. E. 470 (holding that a drunken man may be bound on an implied contract).

The contract of a drunken man is not void but voidable only; 8 Am. Rep. 251, note. See also 1 Ames, Cas. on Bills and Notes 558; Carpenter v. Rodgers, 61 Mich. 384, 28 N. W. 156, 1 Am. St. Rep. 595; see Rice v. Peet, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 503; Joest v. Williams, 42 Ind. 565, 13 Am. Rep. 377; Bates v. Ball, 72 Ill. 108. The party must rescind the contract within a reasonable time after recovery; Fowler v. Water Co., 208 Pa. 473;

57 Atl. 959; Shaw v. R. Co., 126 App. Div. 210, 110 N. Y. Supp. 362; Kelly v. R. Co., 154 Ala. 573, 45 South. 906; Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Meyers, 78 Neb. 685, 111 N. W. 602, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 970. If a person when sober agree to sign a contract, he cannot avail himself of intoxication at the time of signature as a defence; Strickland v. Parlin & Orendorf Co., 118 Ga. 213, 44 S. E. 997; Fagan v. Wiley, 49 Or. 480, 90 Pac. 910. When carried so far as to deprive the party of all consciousness, a strong presumption of fraud is raised; and on that ground courts may interfere; 1 Ves. 19; 18 id. 12; Thackrah v. Haas, 119 U. S. 499, 7 Sup. Ct. 311, 30 L. Ed. 486; Jones v. McGruder, 87 Va. 360, 12 S. E. 792. In equity it is not so much the drunkenness of one party as the fraud and imposition of the other; Cook v. Bagnell Timber Co., 78 Ark. 47, 94 S. W. 695, 8 Ann. Cas. 251; Calloway v. Witherspoon, 40 N. C. 128. Drunkenness in such a degree as to render the testator unconscious of what he is about, or less capable of resisting the influence of others, avoids a will; Shelf. Lun. 274, 304; Dimond's Estate, 3 Pa. D. R. 554; but not if at the time the testator could comprehend the nature of his act; Bannister v. Jackson, 45 N. J. Eq. 702, 17 Atl. 692.

In actions for torts, drunkenness is not regarded as a reason for mitigating damages; Co. Litt. 247a; Webb, Poll. Torts 59, n. See Hanvey v. State, 68 Ga. 612. Courts of equity, too, have declined to interfere in favor of parties pleading intoxication in the performance of some civil act; but they have not gone the length of enforcing agreements against such parties; 1 Story, Eq. § 232; Youn v. Lamont, 56 Minn. 216, 57 N. W. 478; 18 Ves. Jr. 12; 1 Ves. 19. "A drunkard who is voluntarius demon," says Coke, "hath no privilege thereby: Whatever ill or hurt he doth, his drunkenness doth aggravate it." Lawyers have occasionally shown a disposition to distinguish between the guilt of one who commits an offence unconsciously, though in consequence of vicious indulgence, and that of another who is actuated by malice aforethought and acts deliberately and coolly. In Pennsylvania, as early as 1794, it was remarked that, as drunkenness clouds the understanding and excites passion, it may be evidence of passion only, and of want of malice and design; Add. Pa. 257. See Meyers v. Com., 83 Pa. 144. In 1819, Justice Holroyd decided that the fact of drunkenness might be taken into consideration in determining the question whether the act was premeditated or done only with sudden heat and impulse; Rex v. Grundle, 1 Russ. Cr. 8. This particular decision, however, was, a few years afterwards, pronounced to be not correct law; 7 C. & P. 145. Again, it was held that drunkenness, by rendering the party more excitable under provocation, might be taken into consideration in determining the sufficiency of the provocation; 7 C. & P. 817. In Rex v. Monkhouse, 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 55, it was declared that there might exist a state of drunkenness which takes away the power of forming any specific intention.

In this country, courts have gone still further in regarding drunkenness as incompatible with some of the elements of crime. It has been held, where murder was defined to be wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing, that the existence of these attributes is not compatible with drunkenness; State v. Bullock, 13 Ala. 413; Swan v. State, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 136; Haile v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 154; State v. McCants, 1 Speers (S. C.) 384; and when a man's intoxication is so great as to render him unable to form a wilful, deliberate, and premeditated design to kill, or of judging of his acts and their legitimate consequences, then it reduces what would otherwise be murder in the first degree to murder in the second degree; People v. Harris, 29 Cal. 678; Com. v. Jones, 1 Leigh (Va.) 612; People v. Robinson, 2 Park C. R. (N. Y.) 235; Ayres v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 396; Mooney v. State, 33 Ala. 419; State v. Johnson, 41 Conn. 584; Rafferty v. People, 66 Ill. 118; Jones v. Com., 75 Pa. 403. See Bernhardt v. State, 82 Wis. 23, 51 N. W. 1009; State v. Zorn, 22 Or. 591, 30 Pac. 317; People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 425, 30 Pac. 581. But where one who intends to kill another becomes voluntarily intoxicated for the purpose of carrying out the intention, the intoxication will have no effect upon the act; Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 9 South. 835, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232; Springfield v. State, 96 Ala. 81, 11 South. 250, 38 Am. St. Rep. 85. See People v. Young, 102 Cal. 411; 36 Pac. 770; and if one person gets another drunk and persuades him to commit a crime, he is legally responsible; McCook v. State, 91 Ga. 740, 17 S. E. 1019.

Intoxication does not excuse crime, but may show an absence of malice; Wilkerson v. Com., 88 Ky. 29, 9 S. W. 836, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 656; Engelhardt v. State, 88 Ala. 100, 7 South. 154; and the burden of proof is on the defendant to show intoxication to such an extent as to render him incapable of malice; State v. Hill, 46 La. Ann. 27, 14 South. 294, 49 Am. St. Rep. 316.

If one commits robbery while so drunk as not to know what he was doing, he will not be deemed to have taken the property with a felonious intent; Keeton v. Com., 92 Ky. 522, 18 S. W. 359.

It has been already stated that strong drink sometimes, in consequence of injury to the head, or some peculiar constitutional susceptibility, produces a paroxysm of frenzy immediately, under the influence of which the person commits a criminal act. Cases of this kind have been too seldom tried to make it quite certain how they would be regarded in law. It is probable, however, that the plea of insanity would be deprived of its validity by the fact that, sane or insane, the party was confessedly drunk. In a case where injury of the head had been followed by occasional paroxysms of insanity, in one of which the prisoner killed his wife, it appeared that he had just been drinking, and that intoxication had sometimes brought on the paroxysms, though they were not always preceded by drinking. The court ruled that if the mental disturbance were produced by intoxication it was not a valid defence; and accordingly the prisoner was convicted and executed. Trial of M'Donough, Ray, Med. Jur. 514. The principle is that if a person voluntarily deprives himself of reason, he can claim no exemption from the ordinary consequences of crime; 3 Par. & Fonbl. Med. J. 39; and the courts hold that voluntary intoxication is no justification or excuse for crime; State v. O'Neil, 51 Kan. 651, 33 Pac. 287, 24 L. R. A. 555; People v. Bell, 49 Cal. 485; State v. Bullock, 13 Ala. 413; Estes v. State, 55 Ga. 31; State v. Tatro, 50 Vt. 483; Colbath v. State, 4 Tex. App. 76. Milder views have been advocated by writers of note, and have appeared in judicial decisions. Alison, referring to the class of cases just mentioned, calls it inhuman to visit them with the extreme punishment otherwise suitable. Prin. of Crim. Law of Scotland 654. See, also, 23 Am. Jur. 290. When a defendant sets up the defence of delirium tremens, and there is evidence to support the plea, the court in charging the jury is bound to set forth the law applicable to such a defence; 12 Rep. 701. This disease is a species of insanity, and one who labors under it is not responsible for his acts; 1 Wh. & Stillé, Med. Jur. § 202. While drunkenness is no excuse for crime, mania a potu is; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657. See People v. Williams, 43 Cal. 344; Fisher v. State, 64 Ind. 435; Lanergan v. People, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 266. Where dipsomania affects the intellect and not merely the will, it may be a defence; 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 506. See Flanigan v. People, 86 N. Y. 559, 40 Am. Rep. 556; People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 486, 39 Pac. 24. Where a person, in regard to a particular act, though knowing right from wrong, has lost his power to discriminate, in consequence of mental disease, he will be exempt from crime; 3 Witth. & Beck. 507. See State v. McDaniel, 115 N. C. 807, 20 S. E. 622. Dipsomania would hardly be considered, in the present state of judicial opinion, a valid defence in a capital case, though there have been decisions which have allowed it, holding the question whether there is such a disease, and whether the act was committed under its influence, to be questions of fact for the jury; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533; State v. Johnson, 40 Conn. 136; 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 409.

The law does recognize two kinds of in-culpable drunkenness, viz.: that which is produced by the "unskilfulness of the physician," and that which is produced by the "contrivance of enemies." Russ. Cr. 8. To these there may perhaps also be added that above described, where the party drinks no more liquor than he has habitually used without being intoxicated, but which exerts an unusually potent effect on the brain, in consequence of certain pathological conditions. See Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 86; 1 Benn. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 113. See INSANITY; DELIRIUM TREMENS.

DRY EXCHANGE. A term invented for disguising and covering usury,—in which something was pretended to pass on both sides, when in truth nothing passed on one side; whence it was called dry. Stat. 3 Hen. VII. c. 5; Wolffius, Ins. Nat. § 657.

DRY RENT. Rent-seck; a rent reserved without a clause of distress.

DRY TRUST. A passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee beyond turning over the money or property to the cestui que trust. Black, L. Dict. See TRUST.

DUBITANTE. Doubting. Affixed in law reports to a judge's name, to signify that he doubts the correctness of a decision.

DUCAT. The name of a foreign coin.

The ducat, or sequin, was originally a gold coin of the middle ages, apparently a descendant from the bezant of the Greek-Roman Empire. For many centuries it constituted the principal international currency, being intended, or supposed, to be made of pure gold, though subsequently settled at a basis a little below. It is now nearly obsolete in every part of the world. Its average value is about $2.26 of our money. It is said they appeared earliest in Venice, and that they bore the following motto: Sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste Ducatus (Let this Duchy which thou rulest be dedicated to thee, O Christ)—whence the name ducat.

The silver ducat was formerly a coin of Naples, weighing three hundred and forty-eight grains, eight hundred and forty-two thousandths fine; consequent value, in our money, about eighty-one cents; but it now exists only as a money of account.

DUCES TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS. A writ directing the sheriff to bring a person whom he returned as so sick that he could not be brought without endangering his life. Cowell. Now obsolete.

DUCKING-STOOL. A stool or chair in which common scolds were formerly tied and plunged into water. The ducking-stool is mentioned in the Domesday Book; it was extensively in use throughout Great Britain from the fifteenth till the beginning of the eighteenth century. Cent. Dict. The last recorded instance in England was in 1809. See CASTIGATORY; PUNISHMENT.

DUE. Just and proper, as due care, due rights. Ryerson v. Boorman, 8 N. J. Eq. 701; Jones v. Inhabitants of Andover, 10 Allen (Mass.) 18; Butterfield v. Western R. Corp., 10 Allen (Mass.) 532, 87 Am. Dec. 678. A due presentment and demand of payment must be made. See Bank of Pennsylvania v. McCalmont, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 307; Collins's Adm'x v. Janey, 3 Leigh (Va.) 389; Simms v. Slacum, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 300, 2 L. Ed. 446.

What ought to be paid; what may be demanded.

It differs from owing in this, that sometimes what is owing is not due: a note payable thirty days after date is owing immediately after it is delivered to the payee, but it is not due until the thirty days have elapsed. But see Allen v. Patterson, 7 N. Y. 476, 57 Am. Dec. 542; Scudder v. Scudder, 10 N. J. L. 340; U. S. v. Bank of North Carolina, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 36, 8 L. Ed. 308.

The word "due," unlike "arrears," has more than one signification, and expresses two distinct ideas. At times it signifies a simple indebtedness without reference to the time of payment; at others it shows that the day of payment has passed; Wiggin v. Knights of Pythias, 31 Fed. 125; Scudder v. Scudder, 10 N. J. L. 345.

DUE-BILL. An acknowledgment of a debt in writing. This instrument differs from a promissory note in many particulars: it is not payable to order, nor is it assignable by mere indorsement. Byles, Bills *11, n. (t). See I. O. U.; PROMISSORY NOTES.

DUE CARE. Reasonable care adapted to the circumstances of the case. Butterfield v. Western R. Corp., 10 Allen (Mass.) 532; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. State, 54 Md. 656. See BAILMENT; NEGLIGENCE.

DUE COURSE OF LAW. This phrase is synonymous with "due process of law," or "the law of the land," and means law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 19 Kan. 542. But see DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. 3 Story, Const. 264, 661; Miller, Const. 664; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378.

This definition embodies the earlier conception; 2 Co. Inst. 51; but it was long ago held too narrow; Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Company, 18 How. (U. S.) 272, 15 L. Ed. 372, where a distress warrant to collect a balance due from a collector of customs, under executive authority, prescribed by law, was held due process within the Vth Amendment; and the same ruling is made under the XIVth Amendment; Ballard v. Hunter, 204 U. S. 241, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 51 L. Ed. 461, where it was said that the phrase, "has never been defined. It does not always mean proceedings in court. Its fundamental requirement is an opportunity for a hearing and defense, but no fixed procedure is demanded," and the ruling in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616 (infra) is approved.

Any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age or custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232.

This term is considered by Coke as equivalent to the phrase "law of the land" (used in Magna Carta, c. 29), and is said by him to denote "indictment or presentment of good and lawful men." Co. 2d Inst. 50. Amendment V. of the Constitution of the United States provides: "No person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." Amendment XIV. prohibits a state from depriving a person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. A similar provision exists in all the state constitutions; the phrases "due course of law" and "the law of the land" are sometimes used; but all three of these phrases have the same meaning; and that implies conformity with the ancient and customary laws of the English people or laws indicated by parliament; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; Cooley, Const. Lim. 437, where the provisions in the various state constitutions are set forth. Miller, J., says, in that case that a general definition of the phrases which would cover every case would be most desirable, but that, apart from the risk of failure to make the definition perspicuous and comprehensive, there is a wisdom in ascertaining the extent and application of the phrase by the judicial process of exclusion and inclusion as the cases arise. In that case, however, he says also, that it must be confessed that the constitutional meaning or value of the phrase remains without that satisfactory precision of definition which judicial decisions have given to nearly all the other guaranties of personal rights found in the constitutions of the several states and of the United States. And in a much later case it was said that the phrase has never been precisely defined; while its fundamental requirement is opportunity for hearing and defense, the procedure may be adapted to the case. Proceedings in court are not always essential; Ballard v. Hunter, 204 U. S. 241, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 51 L. Ed. 461, where it was held that personal service of liens for taxes and assessments on real estate on resident owners, and constructive service by publication on non-resident owners, may be required by statute, the land being accountable to the state and the owner charged with knowledge of laws affecting it.

The liberty guaranteed is that of natural and not of artificial persons; Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520; where it was said "a corporation cannot be deemed a citizen within the meaning of the clause of the Constitution of the United States which protects the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States against being abridged or impaired by the law of a state"; the same principle was laid down in Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243, 27 Sup. Ct. 126, 51 L. Ed. 168, 7 Ann. Cas. 1104 and Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650. But corporations are persons as well as with respect to this guaranty as to that of equal protection of the laws; Covington & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970.

The full significance of the clause "law of the land" is said by Ituffin, C. J., to be that statutes which would deprive a citizen of the rights of person or property without a regular trial according to the course and usage of the common law would not be the law of the land; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 15, 25 Am. Dec. 677. Mr. Webster's explanation of the meaning of these phrases in the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629, is: "By the law of the land is more clearly intended the general law, a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities, under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land."

General Principles. The adoption of the XIVth Amendment completed the circle of protection against violations of the provision of Magna Carta, which guaranteed to the citizen his life, liberty and property against interference except by the "law of the land," which phrase was coupled in the Petition of Right with due process of law. The latter phrase was then used for the first time, but the two are generally treated as meaning the same. This security is provided as against the United States by the XIVth and Vth Amendments and as against the states by the XIVth Amendment; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 101, 24 L. Ed. 616, which declined to attempt its precise definition; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 418, 9 Sup. Ct. 763, 33 L. Ed. 193; the supreme court has frequently declared in general terms its appreciation of the value of this constitutional guaranty; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 235, 244, 4 L. Ed. 559; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 370, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 389, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780. The meaning of the phrase is discussed generally in Kennard v.

Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. Ed. 478; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552; Hagar v. Reclamation District No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. 763, 33 L. Ed. 193; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 314, 13 Sup. Ct. 105, 36 L. Ed. 986. It does not refer to any general system of law, but must be construed with reference to the historical developments of the law in each state; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. Ed. 478; and it means according to the system of law in each state and not any general one; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 93, 23 L. Ed. 678; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. Ed. 478; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232; In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 11 Sup. Ct. 191, 34 L. Ed. 796; Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 11 Sup. Ct. 577, 35 L. Ed. 225; McNulty v. California, 149 U. S. 645, 13 Sup. Ct. 959, 37 L. Ed. 882; but see Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378.

The prohibition applies to all instrumentalities of a state; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979; it is sufficient if the legislation is general, in its operation and enforceable by usual methods adapted to the case; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 32 L. Ed. 623. What is due process of law in a particular state is regulated by the law of the state; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; although a state cannot make due process of law of anything which it chooses to declare such by its own legislation; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616.

Due process of law means such acts of government as settled maxims of law and custom sanction and permit; Ex parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 402; in the regular course of administration according to the prescribed forms; Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559; according to the law of the land; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. Ed. 678; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. Ed. 478; and with respect to taxation, as to which the question is so frequently raised, it has been said that the assessment of taxes is necessarily summary and need not be by judicial proceeding; so a levy by a collector under a state law is valid; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251, where the subject is fully treated; and taxation for railroad aid bonds; Talcott v. Pine Grove, 1 Flipp. 120, Fed. Cas. No. 13,735; the clause has reference to the modes of ascertaining rights, not to the objects and purposes of a statute; id.

Legislation is not open to the charge of depriving one of his rights without due process of law, if it be general in its operation upon the subject to which it relates and is enforceable by usual methods adapted to the nature of the case; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 32 L. Ed. 623. As was said by Field, J., in Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 21 L. Ed. 929: "No one has ever pretended, that I am aware of, that the XIVth Amendment interferes in any respect with the police power of the state." In that case it was held that the right to sell liquor, as far as it exists, is not a right growing out of citizenship of the United States.

The Distinction Between the Two Amendments. While the language of the Vth and XIVth Amendments is the same, yet as they were engrafted upon the Constitution at different times and under widely different circumstances, it may be that questions may arise in which different constructions and applications of their provisions may be proper; French v. Pav. Co., 181 U. S. 324, 328, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879; citing Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; then quoting from Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616 as follows: "It is not a little remarkable that while this provision has been in the Constitution of the United States, as a restraint upon the authority of the federal government for nearly a century, and while during all that time, the manner in which the powers of that government have been exercised has been watched with jealousy, and subjected to the most rigid criticism in all its branches, this special limitation upon its powers has rarely been invoked in the judicial forum or the more enlarged theatre of public discussion. But while it has been a part of the Constitution, as a restraint upon the power of the states, only a very few years, the docket of this court is crowded with cases in which we are asked to hold that state courts and state legislatures have deprived their own citizens of life, liberty or property without due process of law. There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision as found in the XIVth Amendment." The court then stated that it would "proceed in the present case on the assumption that the legal import of the phrase due process of law is the same in both amendments." See Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 11 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 10 Sup. Ct. 324, 33 L. Ed. 772; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031.

It was not intended by the XIVth Amendment to impose on the states, when exercising their power of taxation, any more rigid or stricter curb than that imposed on the federal government, in the exercise of a similar power by the Vth Amendment. French v. Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 329, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879. And in another case the court said: "It by no means follows that a long and consistent construction put upon the Vth Amendment relating to public improvements within the District of Columbia is to be deemed overruled by a decision concerning the operation of the XIVth Amendment as controlling state legislation." Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 384, 21 Sup. Ct. 616, 45 L. Ed. 900.

The privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, protected by the XIVth Amendment, are those arising out of the nature and essential character of the federal government, and granted or secured by the constitution; and due process of law and the equal protection of the laws are secured if the laws operate on all alike, and do not subject the individual to an arbitrary exercise of the powers of government; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 382, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 535, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232; due process of law in the XIVth Amendment refers to that law of the land in each state which derives its authority from the inherent and reserved powers of the state exerted within the limits of those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the basis of all our civil and political institutions; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519. It implies conformity with the natural and inherent principles of justice and forbids the taking of one's property without compensation, and requires that no one shall be condemned in person or property without opportunity to be heard; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; the proceedings need not be in a court of justice, but according to the forms thereof; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616. The proceedings must be appropriate to the case and just to the parties affected, and pursued in the ordinary manner and adapted to the end to be attained, with opportunity to be heard, when necessary, for the just protection of rights; Turpin v. Lemon, 187 U. S. 51, 23 Sup. Ct. 20, 47 L. Ed. 70. See editorial notes on What is Due Process of Law in 24 L. Ed. 436; 42 L. Ed. 865. Appropriate regulation of property is not deprivation of due process of law; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 521, 24 L. Ed. 734.

In Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 235, 4 L. Ed. 559, Johnson, J., says: "As to the words from Magna Carta incorporated in the constitution of Maryland, after volumes spoken and written with a view to their exposition, the good sense of mankind has at length settled down to this,— that they were intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice."

"Due process of law undoubtedly means, in the due course of legal proceedings, according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights;" Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 209, 62 Am. Dec. 160; but not necessarily judicial proceedings; it may include summary proceedings, if not arbitrary or unequal, as for collection of taxes; McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 37, 24 L. Ed. 335; nor is the right of appeal essential; where a statute has fixed the time and place of meeting of any board or tribunal, no special notice to parties interested is required; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563.

Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice is due process; and when secured by the law of the state, the constitutional requirement is satisfied; Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 11 Sup. Ct. 577, 35 L. Ed. 225. The phrase as used in the constitution does not "mean a statute passed for the purpose of working the wrong. That construction would render the restriction absolutely nugatory, and turn this part of the constitution into mere nonsense. The people would be made to say to the two houses: 'You shall be vested with the legislative power of the state, but no one shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges of a citizen, unless you pass a statute for that purpose. In other words, you shall not do the wrong unless you chose to do it;'" per Bronson, J., in Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274. "The meaning of these words is that no man shall be deprived of his property without being heard in his own defence." Kinney v. Beverly, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 318, 336.

Cooley (Const. Lim. 441) says: "Due process of law in each particular case means, such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs."

Taking property under the taxing power is taking it by due process of law; High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363; Springer v. U. S., 102 U. S. 586, 26 L. Ed. 253. In this connection, it is said in State v. Allen, 2 McCord (S. C.) 56: "We think that any legal process which was originally founded in necessity, has been consecrated by time, and approved and acquiesced in by universal consent, . . . is embraced in the alternative 'law of the land.'" In Brown v. Levee Com'rs, 50 Miss. 479, it is said that these constitutional provisions do not mean the general body of the law as it was at the time the constitution took effect; but they refer to certain fundamental rights which that system of jurisprudence of which ours is derivative has always recognized; if any of these are disregarded in the proceedings by which a person is condemned to the loss of property, etc., then the deprivation has not been by due process of law. And it has been held that the state cannot deprive a person of his property without due process of law through the medium of a constitutional convention any more than it can through an act of the legislature; Clark v. Mitchell, 69 Mo. 627. Exaction of tolls under a state statute for the use of an improved waterway, is not a deprivation of property within the federal constitution; Sands v. Improv. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 8 Sup. Ct. 113, 31 L. Ed. 149.

It follows necessarily, from the confessed inability of the courts to form a general definition and their settled rule of dealing with each case separately upon its own facts, that in a discussion of the subject it is convenient to illustrate the course of decisions by a selection of them showing different phases of the application of the principle.

Limitations on the Legislation of the States. Acts of a municipal corporation are not wanting in due process of law if such acts, when done or ratified by the state, would not be inconsistent with the Amendment, the latter being not intended to bring under federal control everything done by states illegally under state laws, but only the acts of states or their instrumentalities in violations of rights secured by the Constitution of the United States; Owensboro Waterworks Co. v. Owensboro, 200 U. S. 38, 26 Sup. Ct. 249, 50 L. Ed. 361; it does not control mere forms of procedure in state courts or regulate their practice. It only requires that the person condemned has had sufficient notice and an adequate opportunity to defend; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 177 U. S. 230, 20 Sup. Ct. 620, 44 L. Ed. 747. The guaranty is secured within the meaning of the Amendment if the law operates on all alike and does not subject the individual to an arbitrary exercise of the powers of government; Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 11 Sup. Ct. 577, 35 L. Ed. 225; it requires only that a person accused of crime shall be subjected to law in the regular course of the administration in courts of justice; In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 11 Sup. Ct. 191, 34 L. Ed. 796; that the accused be present at every stage of the trial, but not in the appellate court, when he has counsel, and when that court is merely deciding as to prejudicial error below; Dowdell v. U. S., 221 U. S. 325, 31 Sup. Ct. 590, 55 L. Ed. 753.

"No right, privilege, or immunity in respect of due process, at any stage in the duty of affording it arises under the XIVth Amendment unless there be denial of the right by the state or its officers;" no immunity is secured against the lawlessness of private individuals who take a prisoner from the custody of the state officers and murder him to prevent his having the benefits of a trial by operation of the state's established course of judicial procedure; U. S. v. Powell, 151 Fed. 648, a very comprehensive opinion by Jones, D. J., in the circuit court of Alabama.

While the XIVth Amendment protects the citizen in his right to engage in any lawful business, it does not prevent legislation intended to regulate useful occupations, which, because of their nature and location, may prove injurious or offensive to the public. It does not prevent a municipality from prohibiting any business which is inherently vicious and harmful; nor does it prevent a state from regulating or prohibiting a non-useful occupation which may become harmful to the public, and the regulation or prohibition need not be postponed until the evil is flagrant; Murphy v. California, 225 U. S. 623, 32 Sup. Ct. 697, 56 L. Ed. 1229, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153. There is nothing in the XIVth Amendment to prevent a state from requiring individuals to make, on receiving due compensation, such concessions to each other as the public welfare demands, and a statute permitting the exercise of the right of eminent domain for railways, etc., for working mines, was held to be constitutional and to authorize condemnation of the right to cross the land of a private owner by an aerial bucket line, necessary for the working of a mine; Strickley v. Min. Co., 200 U. S. 527, 26 Sup. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 581, 4 Ann. Cas. 1174; Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 25 Sup. Ct. 676, 49 L. Ed. 1085, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171.

Acts and Proceedings Held Valid. Statutes or ordinances which have been held valid as not being deprivations of liberty or property without due process of law are: Prohibiting the carrying of dangerous weapons; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 14 Sup. Ct. 874, 38 L. Ed. 812; creating a board of registration for physicians; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563 (where it was said that due process of law is not necessarily judicial process and the right of appeal is not essential to it); taxing stocks of railroads in other states (held not unconstitutional because no similar tax was laid upon stock of domestic railroads or foreign railroads doing business in Alabama, the property of the former class of railroads being untaxed and that of the latter two classes being taxed by the state); Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 23 Sup. Ct. 401, 47 L. Ed. 669; imposing a personal tax on all property in or out of the state; Glidden v. Harrington, 189 U. S. 255, 23 Sup. Ct. 574, 47 L. Ed. 798 (where it was said that what is required by the XIVth Amendment, in the assessment of ordinary annual taxes on personal property, should be construed liberally, and while notice may be required, it need not be personal, but may be by publication or by posting at polling places, and it was also held in another case that in condemning property for municipal purposes, it is sufficient to give notice by publication, with opportunity for hearing; Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 21 Sup. Ct. 616, 45 L. Ed. 900. So the right is not infringed by imposing liabilities on particular classes, as an act making persons driving herds over a highway liable for damages done to it; Jones v. Brinn, 165 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. Ct. 282, 41 L. Ed. 677; or sheep owners for grazing on the public domain; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499; or making railroads liable to employes for the negligence of fellow employes; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 1161, 32 L. Ed. 107; or for fires caused by locomotives; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611; or requiring railroads to pay damages for the diminution in value of farms by the company's failure to put up fences and cattle guards; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Emmons, 149 U. S. 364, 13 Sup. Ct. 870, 37 L. Ed. 769; requiring log owners to pay fees of state officer for surveying and scaling logs; Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 126, 20 Sup. Ct. 325, 44 L. Ed. 400; making mine owners liable for defaults of mine managers and examiners selected by them under a state law; Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 27 Sup. Ct. 412, 51 L. Ed. 708; requiring railroad stockholders to pay their just proportion of bonded debt; Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. Ed. 496; the exaction of tolls for the use of an improved water way; Sands v. Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 288, 8 Sup. Ct. 113, 31 L. Ed. 149; subjecting buildings used for gaming to the payment of money lost at play; Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. 31, 50 L. Ed. 157; authorizing the destruction of nets used in illegal fishing; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385; subjecting a railroad corporation to a rule of negligence prescribed by a general act under which it is incorporated; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zerneck, 183 U. S. 582, 22 Sup. Ct. 229, 46 L. Ed. 339; taking private property under state law authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain for taking private property; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 17 Sup. Ct. 130, 41 L. Ed. 489; as corporate franchises; Greenwood v. Freight Co., 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. Ed. 961; for flooding lands; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 50 L. Ed. 274; construction of a levee; Eldridge v. Trezevant, 160 U. S. 452, 16 Sup. Ct. 345, 40 L. Ed. 490; condemnation of a right of way across a placer mining claim; Strickley v. Min. Co., 200 U. S. 527, 26 Sup. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 581, 4 Ann. Cas. 1174; constructing a dam in a stream not navigable, paying the damage to owners; Head v. Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 9, 5 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 889; condemnation of shares of stock of a railroad for its improvement under a state law; Offield v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 372, 27 Sup. Ct. 72, 51 L. Ed. 231; acts imposing special burdens on public service corporations, as requiring an electric company to pay salaries to commissioners to supervise them; New York v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 12 Sup. Ct. 880, 36 L. Ed. 666; compelling a railroad company to pay for the removal of a grade crossing; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269; requiring the removal of a bridge and culvert; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; requiring the lowering or removal of a tunnel which had become an obstruction to navigation since its construction; West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Illinois, 201 U. S. 506, 26 Sup. Ct. 518, 50 L. Ed. 845; requiring a railroad company to pay for examiners as to competency of its employes; Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352; requiring railroad to furnish track connections at intersections; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194; requiring a gas company to change the location of its pipes; New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Drainage Commission, 197 U. S. 453, 25 Sup. Ct. 471, 49 L. Ed. 831.

So the guaranty is not infringed by compulsory vaccination; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; prohibition against sales of options on grain; Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425; regulating charges of warehousemen; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; the danger that testimony taken in a proceeding under a state law may incriminate the witness in a possible prosecution under the federal anti-trust law; Jack v. Kansas, 199 U. S. 372, 26 Sup. Ct. 73, 50 L. Ed. 234, 4 Ann. Cas. 689; or by the destruction of the value of property by statute forbidding the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; or of oleomargarine; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 22 Sup. Ct. 120, 46 L. Ed. 171; or by taxing artificially colored oleomargarine, even if the tax will suppress the manufacture; McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 49 L. Ed. 78, 1 Ann. Cas. 561; making water rents a prior lien on land; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, 5 Sup. Ct. 612, 28 L. Ed. 1102; subordinating claims of non-resident mortgagee to those of resident creditors of a foreign corporation; Sully v. Bank, 173 U. S. 289, 20 Sup. Ct. 935, 44 L. Ed. 1072; the appointment of a receiver in a railroad foreclosure suit; St. Louis, G. & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 478, 15 Sup. Ct. 443; 39 L. Ed. 502; precluding defense by life insurance company based on false and fraudulent statement in application unless the matter represented actually contributed to the death of the insured; Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243, 27 Sup. Ct. 126, 51 L. Ed. 168, 7 Ann. Cas. 1104 (where it was said that liberty means liberty of natural and not artificial persons); assessment for opening streets on the front foot rule, held not void because levied after the work was completed or because, when the work was ordered, the city could under a statute repealed after the work was completed and before assessment, include part of the expenses in general taxes and levy the assessment on a valuation basis under which a smaller amount would have been assessed against these lands; City of Seattle v. Kelleher, 195 U. S. 351, 25 Sup. Ct. 44, 49 L. Ed. 232; the imposition of some duty on transfer of stock; New York v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736; limiting to eight hours a day the period of work in under-ground mines; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; a New York tax on a Pennsylvania fire insurance company on premiums received in New York, being the same that was required in Pennsylvania; Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 7 Sup. Ct. 108, 30 L. Ed. 342 (where it was held a condition precedent to doing business in the state).

The grant by a state to a corporation of the exclusive right or privilege of maintaining slaughter houses, guarded by proper limitation of prices to be charged and imposing the duty of providing ample conveniences, with permission to all owners of stock to land, and to all butchers to slaughter, at those places is valid; Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394.

Among the statutes and judicial or administrative proceedings which have been held not to be obnoxious to the XIVth Amendment, as deprivation of property without due process of law, are the following: Providing for the widening of a street; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 11 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419; regulating contests between persons claiming judicial offices; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. Ed. 478; making water rates a charge on lands prior to liens; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, 5 Sup. Ct. 612, 28 L. Ed. 1102; authorizing any person to erect and maintain a mill dam in a navigable stream, paying to the owners of the lands affected damages assessed in a judicial proceeding; Head v. Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 9, 5 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 889; providing for drainage of low lands, damages to be assessed by commissioners after notice and hearing; Wurts v.

Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 5 Sup. Ct. 1086, 29 L. Ed. 229; a tax law giving notice to the taxable by requiring statement of his property, with public sessions when he has a right to be present and to be heard, with an opportunity in a suit at law to contest the validity of the proceeding; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 115 U. S. 321, 6 Sup. Ct. 57, 29 L. Ed. 414; for valuation and classification of property with different provisions as to different classes for ascertaining the value and a right of appeal, applying the same means and methods to individuals of each class; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 115 U. S. 321, 6 Sup. Ct. 57, 29 L. Ed. 414; requiring railroads to erect and maintain cattle guards and in default thereof to be liable for double damages; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463; or to fence a track under penalty of double damages; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 9 Sup. Ct. 207, 32 L. Ed. 585; Speelman v. Ry. Co., 71 Mo. 434; the imposition upon property of a tax or other burden for reclamation of swamp lands; Reclamation Dist. No. 108 v. Hagar, 4 Fed. 366; and see Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 11 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 9 Sup. Ct. 192, 32 L. Ed. 544; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031; a paving law originating proceedings on petition of two-thirds of the owners of lots bordering on a street, and taxing abutting owners; Schaefer v. Werling, 188 U. S. 516, 23 Sup. Ct. 449, 47 L. Ed. 570; Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 24 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195; and as to back-lying property; Voris v. Glass Co., 163 Ind. 599, 70 N. E. 249; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Porter, 210 U. S. 177, 28 Sup. Ct. 647, 52 L. Ed. 1012 (where it was held that the legislature may create back taxing districts of property extending back); assessment for paving, etc., not void because lot is not benefited by the improvements owing to its present use; the land must be considered simply in its general relations and apart from its particular use at the time; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Paving Co., 197 U. S. 430, 25 Sup. Ct. 466, 49 L. Ed. 819; charging the cost of paving against lots fronting on a street according to the frontage, the XIVth Amendment being held not applicable; French v. Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879; providing for the assessment of damages for laying out, etc., streets upon owners of land benefited thereby and determining the amount of tax and also what lands are benefited, with notice to and hearing of each owner at some stage of the proceeding upon the question of his proportion of the tax to be assessed; People v. City of Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 8 Sup. Ct. 921, 31 L. Ed. 763; an order of

Ed. 249; contra, Shaw, C. J., in Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329; see also State v. Starling, 15 Rich. (S. C.) 120; the trial of cases without a jury; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; the principle with respect to such details being that the provision against taking property without due process of law does not apply where the party has had a fair trial in a court of justice according to the modes of proceeding applicable to such case; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. Ed. 478; the fact that the judgment of a commissioner is final does not operate as a deprivation of due process of law; Ex Parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 402; nor does the entry of a judgment on forfeited recognizance; People v. Quigg, 59 N. Y. 83; a statute authorizing the immigration commissioner to prevent the landing of lewd women; Ex Parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 402; prohibiting any person from making or mending burglars' tools; Ex parte Roberts, 166 Mo. 207, 65 S. W. 726; prohibiting saloons from selling liquor in places where women are permitted to enter; Cronin v. Adams, 192 U. S. 108, 24 Sup. Ct. 219, 48 L. Ed. 365 (where the court said: "There is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors by retail; it is not a privilege of a citizen of a state or of a citizen of the United States); a statute making the owner of premises on which liquor is sold with his knowledge liable for all damages resulting from the intoxication of any person purchasing the liquor; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of billiard halls (not unconstitutional either as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law, or as depriving him of the equal protection of the laws); Murphy v. California, 225 U. S. 623, 32 Sup. Ct. 697, 56 L. Ed. 1229, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153; (and the classification regulating billiard halls based on hotels having twenty-five rooms is reasonable; Murphy v. California, 225 U. S. 623, 32 Sup. Ct. 697, 56 L. Ed. 1229, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153); the discharge of a jury in a murder trial for cause shown before being sworn; Howard v. Kentucky, 200 U. S. 164, 26 Sup. Ct. 189, 50 L. Ed. 421 (where it was held that the amendment was not intended to interfere with the power of the state to protect life, liberty or property of citizens, or with the power of adjudication of its courts, in administering process provided by the state law); regulation by the state of admission of persons to places of amusement, with the provision that persons holding tickets therefor shall be admitted if not under the influence of liquor, boisterous or of immoral character; Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520; statutes authorizing the administration on the estates of absentees if the period of absence be fixed and not unreasonably brief; Cunnius v. School Dist., 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121, affirming id., 206 Pa. 469, 56 Atl. 16, 98 Am. St. Rep. 790; a municipal ordinance providing for the inspection of good products kept in storage and for the summary seizure and destruction of what is unfit for use; North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, 151 Fed. 120; the restriction of the right of appeal to an intermediate appellate court in lieu of the state supreme court; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989; a review by an appellate court of final judgment in a criminal case not being necessary to constitute due process; McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684, 14 Sup. Ct. 913, 38 L. Ed. 867; the entry of a judgment on a bond which is forfeited is not invalid; Janes v. Reynolds' Adm'rs, 2 Tex. 250; nor the entry of a judgment for money which is void for want of proper service; York v. Texas, 137 U. S. 15, 11 Sup. Ct. 9, 34 L. Ed. 604; authorizing the sale of animals running at large; Campau v. Langley, 39 Mich. 451, 33 Am. Rep. 414; making a garnishee liable to pay a judgment if he fails to render a sworn account; Vaughan v. Furlong, 12 R. I. 127; conviction and sentence to death of a prisoner when after the verdict one of the jurors was insane, the court having upon inquiry found that he was of sufficient mental capacity during the trial to act as a juror; Jordan v. Massachusetts, 225 U. S. 167, 32 Sup. Ct. 651, 56 L. Ed. 1038.

A transfer or succession tax is valid; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; Magoun v. Bank, 170

U. S. 283, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1037; it does not violate either the XIVth Amendment or sec. 10 of art. I, of the constitution: Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 22 Sup. Ct. 213, 46 L. Ed. 196 (where it was held that the opinion in Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. [U. S.] 456, 15 L. Ed. 127, though prior to the XIVth Amendment, correctly defines the limits of jurisdiction between the state and federal governments in respect of controlling the assets of decedents both before and after that amendment); nor does a state inheritance tax; Campbell v. California, 200 U. S. 87, 26 Sup. Ct. 182, 50 L. Ed. 382 (where it was said that the XIVth Amendment does not deprive the state of the right to regulate and burden the right of inheritance, but at the most can only be held to restrain such an exercise of power as would exclude the conception of judgment and discretion and be so obviously arbitrary and unreasonable as to be beyond the pale of governmental authority); a provision in the California constitution that "all contracts for the sales of shares of capital stock of any corporation or association on margin shall be void and any money paid on such contracts may be recovered by the party paying it by suit in any court of competent jurisdiction," directed against sales on margins; Ottis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 47 L. Ed. 323. A tax law which gives a right to be heard, but does not extend a rehearing on appeal to railroad companies, though it does to ordinary taxpayers, is valid; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031, where Brewer, J., says: "The power of a state to make classifications in judicial or administrative proceedings carries with it the right to make such a classification as will give to parties belonging to one class two hearings and to parties belonging to a different class only a single hearing;" and on this authority a statute making final the decision of an inferior court in a local option election contest was held valid; Saylor v. Duel, 236 Ill. 429, 86 N. E. 119, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

An erroneous decision does not deprive the unsuccessful party of liberty without due process of law; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91; nor do mere errors in the administration of a state statute not unconstitutional; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 11 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419; nor imprisonment under a valid law, though there was error in the proceedings; In re Ah Lee, 5 Fed. 899; nor error in a charge to a jury in a criminal case; Davis v. Texas, 139 U. S. 651, 11 Sup. Ct. 675, 35 L. Ed. 300. The guaranty is not violated by an order requiring an attorney to defend an accused person gratuitously; Presby v. Klickitat County, 5 Wash. 329, 31 Pac. 876. The XIVth Amendment did not change the law as held prior to it that regulation of the use, or even of the price of the use, of private property, was not depriving the owner of it without due process of law; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77.

Acts and Proceedings Which Violate the Guaranty of Due Process of Law. Acts of a state held to infringe the guaranty of due process of law are: Taking property by the state for public use without compensation; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979; Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 115 U. S. 321, 6 Sup. Ct. 57, 29 L. Ed. 414; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Drainage Com'rs, 200 U. S. 561, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 50 L. Ed. 596; and so also if taken under a judgment of the state court though authorized by statute; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979; but if compensation was provided for before a proper tribunal there is due process of law; Backus v. Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 18 Sup. Ct. 445, 42 L. Ed. 853; Otis Co. v. Mfg. Co., 201 U. S. 140, 26 Sup. Ct. 353, 50 L. Ed. 696. The exclusion of colored men on account of race from the grand jury was held a denial of rights under the XIVth Amendment; Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 24 Sup. Ct. 257, 48 L. Ed. 417.

Other acts held unconstitutional were: One forbidding the manufacture of cigars in tenement houses; In re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; and a New York statute respecting the sale of oleomargarine; People v. Rosenberg, 138 N. Y. 410, 34 N. E. 285 (on the other hand the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania act on the same subject was affirmed; Powell v. Commonwealth, 114 Pa. 265); a prohibition against laundries except of brick or stone, without the consent of the supervisors, because clearly intended for discrimination against the Chinese; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; a statute requiring every member of a firm of plumbers to be a registered plumber, whether his duties require him to have knowledge of that trade or not, is an unwarranted interference with liberty and property; Schnaier v. Importation Co., 182 N. Y. 83, 74 N. E. 561, 70 L. R. A. 722, 108 Am. St. Rep. 790; State v. Smith, 42 Wash. 237, 84 Pac. 851, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, and note, 114 Am. St. Rep. 114, 7 Ann. Cas. 577; so is a statute forbidding women to work in a factory before 6 a. m. or after 9 p. m.; People v. Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 81 N. E. 778, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 12 Ann. Cas. 798; and one limiting hours of labor for employes of bakers; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133, reversing People v. Lochner, 177 N. Y. 145, 69 N. E. 373, 101 Am. St. Rep. 773 (the bake shop case); but it was held otherwise as to limiting hours of labor in employments when health is involved, as in underground mines; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; Ex parte Kair, 28 Nev. 425, 82 Pac. 453, 6 Ann. Cas. 893; State v. Mfg. Co., 34 Mont. 571, 87 Pac. 980, 9 Ann. Cas. 204; State v. Cantwell, 179 Mo. 245, 78 S. W. 569; or for a woman to work in a factory, laundry or mechanical establishment more than ten hours a day; Muller v. State of Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 28 Sup. Ct. 324, 52 L. Ed. 551, 13 Ann. Cas. 957, affirming State v. Muller, 48 Or. 252, 85 Pac. 855, 120 Am. St. Rep. 805, 11 Ann. Cas. 88; or limiting hours of work for children under sixteen; State v. Shorey, 48 Or. 396, 86 Pac. 881, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1121; In re Spencer, 149 Cal. 396, 86 Pac. 896, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105.

Denial of due process of law by municipal authorities while acting as a board of equalization amounts to a denial by the state; Raymond v. Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757; the guaranty is denied by imprisonment under a void ordinance; In re Lee Long, 18 Fed. 253; but not under a valid law by reason of error in the proceedings; In re Ah Lee, 5 Fed. 899, 6 Sawy. 410.

Statutes authorizing the destruction of property used for unlawful gaming were held void; Lowry v. Rainwater, 70 Mo. 152, 35 Am. Rep. 420; so also the sale of land to satisfy void street assessments which the legislature has unconstitutionally attempted to validate; Brady v. King, 53 Cal. 44; the commitment to the workhouse of an alleged pauper by two overseers ex parte and without hearing; City of Portland v. City of Bangor, 65 Me. 120, 20 Am. Rep. 681, reversing earlier cases before the adoption of the XIVth Amendment. A judgment in personam without service within the jurisdiction is void; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; see York v. Texas, 137 U. S. 15, 11 Sup. Ct. 9, 34 L. Ed. 604; no judgment of a court is due process of law if rendered without jurisdiction or notice to the party; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896. A statute providing that the use of an easement shall not be evidence of a right thereto is unconstitutional as to rights acquired prior thereto; Reynolds v. Randall, 12 R. I. 522; and so is an act purporting to make a tax deed conclusive evidence of title; Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 13 Sup. Ct. 508, 37 L. Ed. 410 (it may be made prima facie evidence); an act fixing absolute liability on a corporation to make compensation for injuries done to property without fault, when no one else would be liable under the general law; Zeigler v. R. Co., 58 Ala. 594; an act authorizing a lien on a tombstone and its sale for non-payment without provision for adjusting the rights of the parties; Brooks v.

Tayntor, 17 Misc. 534, 40 N. Y. Supp. 445; a statute dispensing with personal service in proceedings where it is practicable and usual, the parties being within the jurisdiction; Brown v. Board of Levee Com'rs, 50 Miss. 468; imposing an assessment for local improvement without notice or an opportunity for hearing; it is not enough that the owner may have notice and hearing, the law must provide for it; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Savannah, 96 Ga. 680, 23 S. E. 847; Violett v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 561, 23 S. E. 909, 31 L. R. A. 382, 53 Am. St. Rep. 825.

The proceedings of a board of equalization of state taxes, its decision being conclusive, are reviewable in the federal courts at the suit of one claiming that he was deprived thereby of due process of law; Raymond v. Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757, where a tax was held to be an illegal discrimination against property of the same class where it was so great as to cause insolvency.

A state statute requiring that no railroad company shall require a stipulation from its employes waiving damages for injury violates their liberty of contract, and is also void as class legislation in violation of the Ohio constitution; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co., 71 Fed. 931.

A county ordinance, of which the manifest purpose is to limit the number of any kind of game to be killed or taken by one person in a day, and making it a misdemeanor to use a repeating shotgun or magazine gun, is void; In re Marshall, 102 Fed. 323 (but such prohibition is valid when directed against aliens, and is not in contravention of the treaty between Italy and the United States; Com. v. Patson, 231 Pa. 46, 79 Atl. 928).

In Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443, it was held that taking private property under a rule which excluded any inquiry as to special benefits, the necessary operation of which was to the extent of the excess of the cost of opening the street in question over any special benefits accruing to the abutting property therefrom, was a taking of private property for private use without compensation.

A state statute establishing a board of medical examiners and conditions under which persons will be licensed to practice osteopathy does not deprive one who refuses to apply for a license therein of his property under due process of law or deny him the equal protection of the law; Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. 286, 56 L. Ed. 439; nor does a state statute making entries in public records prima facie, but not conclusive, evidence of the validity of the proceedings referred to; Reitler v. Harris, 223 U. S. 437, 32 Sup. Ct. 248, 56 L. Ed. 497.

Contempt of Court. A commitment for contempt of court is not obnoxious to this constitutional provision; State v. Becht, 23 Minn. 411; Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67 Ia. 619, 25 N. W. 832, 56 Am. Rep. 360; In re Clayton, 59 Conn. 510, 21 Atl. 1005, 13 L. R. A. 66, 21 Am. St. Rep. 128; State v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624; Com. v. Gibbons, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 527; In re Barnes, 204 N. Y. 108, 97 N. E. 508; Eilenbecker v. District Court, 134 U. S. 31, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801; whether under the inherent power of courts or under statutes authorizing summary punishment; In re Barnes, 147 App. Div. 396, 132 N. Y. Supp. 908; Brown v. Powers (Ia.) 134 N. W. 73; nor is a commitment for failure to pay a tax, not resorted to until other means of collection have failed, and then only upon a showing of property possessed, not accessible to levy, but enabling the owner to pay if he chooses; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 10 Sup. Ct. 324, 33 L. Ed. 772; but a person summarily adjudged guilty of contempt by a court without a hearing or service upon him of any process, for an act not committed in the presence of the court, and imprisonment for non-payment of the fine imposed, is deprived of his liberty without due process of law; Ex parte Stricker, 109 Fed. 145.

To punish for contempt by striking an answer from the files and condemning as by default is denial of due process of law; but, under the power conferred by statute, the answer of a foreign corporation was stricken from the files and a judgment rendered as by default because of the failure or refusal of the corporation defendant to produce books and papers from outside of the state as required by the statute; Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645; which decision on this point, was based upon the undoubted right of the legislature to create a presumption in respect to the want of foundation of an asserted defense against a defendant who suppresses, or fails to produce, evidence when legally called upon to produce it.

Where a railroad rate statute was held unconstitutional by a federal court and all the defendants, including the attorney general, were enjoined from enforcing it, and the attorney general refused to comply with the order, and was fined and committed for contempt, the supreme court refused to discharge him on habeas corpus, it being considered that he was a state officer charged with the duty of enforcing the statute, if constitutional, and therefore was properly joined as a defendant; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764.

Notice. Guarantee by the XIVth Amendment does not require a state to adopt a particular form of procedure, so long as the accused has had sufficient notice and an adequate opportunity to defend himself, and a state may determine, free from federal interference or control, in what courts crime may be prosecuted and by what courts the prosecution may be reviewed; Rogers v. Peck, 199 U. S. 425, 26 Sup. Ct. 87, 50 L. Ed. 250.

The essential elements of due process of law are notice and opportunity to defend; Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 436, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 45 L. Ed. 1165; "in determining whether such rights were denied we are governed by the substance of things and not by mere form;" id., citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 177 U. S. 230, 20 Sup. Ct. 620, 44 L. Ed. 747; it is not necessary that the proceedings in a state court should be by particular mode, but only that there shall be a regular course of proceedings in which notice is given of the claim asserted and an opportunity to defend against it"; Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 45 L. Ed. 1165, citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 177 U. S. 230, 20 Sup. Ct. 620, 44 L. Ed. 747.

While the essential element of due process is opportunity to be heard, a necessary condition of which is notice; Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 45 L. Ed. 1165; personal notice is not always necessary; Jacob v. Roberts, 223 U. S. 261, 32 Sup. Ct. 303, 56 L. Ed. 429.

It is necessary that a tax payer be afforded a hearing, of which he must have notice, and this requirement is not satisfied by the mere right to file objections in writing; Londoner v. Denver, 210 U. S. 373, 28 Sup. Ct. 708, 52 L. Ed. 1103, where it was held that the legislature may authorize municipal improvements without any petition of land owners who are to be assessed therefor and the proceedings of the municipality in accordance with the charter and without hearings, do not deny due process of law to land owners who are afforded a hearing on the assessment itself.

Federal courts follow state courts in deciding as to notice and service under a state statute; Ballard v. Hunter, 204 U. S. 241, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 51 L. Ed. 461.

A statute providing for the taking of private property for a railroad and for the assessment of damages by commissioners, need not, under the Delaware constitution, provide for notice to the owner of the time and place of meeting of the commissioners, nor need it secure to the owner a hearing; the United States constitution and amendments impose no restraint upon the states in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and the words, "due course of law," in the state constitution do not apply thereto; Wilson v. R. Co., 5 Del. Ch. 524, in which case the authorities are collected and the construction of these words exhaustively considered by Saulsbury, Ch. But as to this and some other cases, holding that notice is not required, see EMINENT DOMAIN, subtit. Notice and Procedure.

As to the doctrine of due process before the civil war, see articles by E. S. Corwin in 24 Harv. L. Rev. 366, 460.

See 27 Am. Law Reg. 611, 700; 28 id. 129; 31 Am. St. Rep. 104; 48 Am. Dec. 269; Le Grand v. U. S., 12 Fed. 583; San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 13 Fed. 783; 3 L. R. A. 194; 4 L. R. A. 724; 21 L. R. A. 789.

As to assessments for improvements or benefits, see ASSESSMENTS; EMINENT DOMAIN.

DUELLING. The fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a precedent quarrel. It differs from an affray in this, that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design.

When one of the parties is killed, the survivor is guilty of murder; 1 Russ. Cr. 443; Smith v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 228; as the deliberate killing of another in a duel is not a killing in a heat of passion which will mitigate the crime, however grievous the provocation may have been; 3 East 581; 8 Carr. & P. 644; but evidence of a mutual willingness to fight upon the part of persons, one of whom killed the other in a fight, has been held to authorize an instruction that the offence was murder in the second degree; Wiley v. State (Tex.) 65 S. W. 190.

Fighting a duel, even where there is no fatal result, is of itself a misdemeanor. See 2 Com. Dig. 252; Clark, Cr. L. 340; Co. 3d Inst. 157; Const. 167; Barker v. People, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 457; State v. Herriott, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 126. For cases of mutual combat upon a sudden quarrel, see 1 Russ. Cr. 495; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 311. Under the constitutions of some states, any one directly or indirectly engaged in a duel is forever disqualified from holding public office. See Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush (Ky.) 725; Barker v. People, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 457; Moody v. Com., 4 Metc. (Ky.) 1; State v. Dupont, 2 McCord (S. C.) 334; Royall v. Thomas, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 130, 26 Am. Rep. 335; CHALLENGE.

DUELLUM. Trial by battle. Judicial combat. Spelman, Gloss. See WAGER OF BATTLE.

DUES. When used of a corporation it includes, in the Kansas constitution, all contractual liabilities, but not, as against a stockholder, an ultra vires contract. Ward v. Joslin, 105 Fed. 224, 44 C. C. A. 456.

DUKE. The title given to those who are in the highest rank of nobility in England. First held by the Black Prince, as a superior kind of earldom.

DUKE OF YORK'S LAWS. A body of laws compiled in 1665 for the government of the colony of New York.

DUM SE BENE GESSERIT (Lat. while he shall conduct himself well). These words signify that a judge or other officer shall hold his office during good behavior, and not at the pleasure of the crown nor for a certain limited time.

DUM FUIT IN PRISONA (L. Lat.). A writ which lay for a man who had aliened lands under duress by imprisonment, to restore to him his proper estates. Co. 2d Inst. 482. Abolished by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

DUM FUIT INFRA ÆTATEM (Lat.). The name of a writ which lay when an infant had made a feoffment in fee of his lands or for life, or a gift in tail. Abolished by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

It could be sued out by him after he came of full age, and not before; but in the meantime he could enter, and his entry remitted him to his ancestor's rights; Fitzh. N. B. 192; Co. Litt. 247, 337.

DUM NON FUIT COMPOS MENTIS (Lat.). The name of a writ which the heirs of a person who was non compos mentis, and who aliened his lands, might have sued out to restore him to his rights. Abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

DUM SOLA (Lat. while single or unmarried). A phrase to denote that something has been done, or may be done, while a woman is or was unmarried. Thus, when a judgment is rendered against a woman dum sola, and afterward she marries, the scire facias to revive the judgment must be against both husband and wife.

DUM SOLA ET CASTA (Lat. while unmarried and chaste). Decrees for alimony sometimes provide that it shall be paid only so long as the divorced wife remains unmarried and chaste. See DIVORCE.

DUMB. Unable to speak; mute. See DEAF AND DUMB.

DUMB-BIDDING. In sales at auction, when the amount which the owner of the thing sold is willing to take for the article is written, and placed by the owner under a candlestick, or other thing, and it is agreed that no bidding shall avail unless equal to that, this is called dumb-bidding. Babington, Auct. 44.

DUN. One who duns or urges for payment; a troublesome creditor. A demand for payment, whether oral or written. Stand. Dict.

DUNGEON. A cell under ground; a place in a prison built under ground, dark, or but indifferently lighted.

DUNNAGE. Pieces of wood placed against the sides and bottom of the hold of a vessel, to preserve the cargo from the effect of leakage, according to its nature and quality. Abbott, Shipp. 227.

There is considerable analogy between dunnage and ballast. The latter is used for trimming the ship and bringing it down to a draft of water proper and safe for sailing. Dunnage is placed under the cargo to keep it from being wetted by water getting into the hold, or between the different parcels to keep them from bruising and injuring each other; Great Western Ins. Co. v. Thwing, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 674, 20 L. Ed. 607.

DUODECIMA MANUS (Lat.). Twelve hands. The oaths of twelve men, including himself, by whom the defendant was allowed to make his law. 3 Bla. Com. 343.

DUPLEX QUERELA (Lat.). A complaint in the nature of an appeal from the ordinary to his next immediate superior for delaying or refusing to do justice in some ecclesiastical cause. 3 Bla. Com. 247.

DUPLEX VALOR MARITAGII (Lat. double the value of a marriage). Guardians in chivalry had the privilege of proposing a marriage for their infant wards, provided it were done without disparagement, and if the wards married without the guardian's consent they were liable to forfeit double the value of marriage. Co. Litt. 82 b; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 70.

DUPLICATE (Lat. duplex, double). The double of anything. A document which is essentially the same as some other instrument. 7 Mann. & G. 93; Benton v. Martin, 40 N. Y. 345.

A duplicate writing has but one effect. Each duplicate is complete evidence of the intention of the parties. When a duplicate is destroyed, for example, in the case of a will, it is presumed both are intended to be destroyed; but this presumption possesses greater or less force, owing to circumstances. When only one of the duplicates is in the possession of the testator, the destruction of that is a strong presumption of any intent to revoke both; but if he possessed both, and destroys but one, it is weaker; when he alters one, and afterwards destroys it, retaining the other entire, it has been held that the intention was to revoke both; 1 P. Wms. 346; 13 Ves. 310. But that seems to be doubted; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 548. See Com. v. Beamish, 81 Pa. 389; 49 E. C. L. 94; 103 id. 29; Nelson v. Blakey, 54 Ind. 29. As to the execution of a number of deeds, all to constitute one deed, see DEED.

In English Law. The certificate of discharge given to an insolvent debtor who takes the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors.

DUPLICATIO (Lat. a doubling). The defendant's second answer; that is, the answer to the plaintiff's replication.

DUPPLICATUM JUS (Lat. a twofold or double right). Words which signify the same as dreit dreit, or droit droit, and which are applied to a writ of right, patent, and such other writs of right as are of the same nature, and do as it were flow from it as the writ of right. Booth, Real Act. 87.

DUPLICITY (Lat. duplex, twofold; double). The union of more than one cause of action in one count in a writ, or more than one defence in one plea, or more than a single breach in a replication. Jackson v. Rundlet, 1 W. & M. 381, Fed. Cas. No. 7,145.

The union of several facts constituting together but one cause of action, or one defence, or one breach, does not constitute duplicity; Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 353; Harker v. Brink, 24 N. J. L. 333; Holland v. Kibbe, 16 Ill. 133; Beckley v. Moore, 1 McCord (S. C.) 464; State v. Bank, 33 Miss. 474; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Buford, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 115, 21 S. W. 272; State v. Christmas, 101 N. C. 749, 8 S. E. 361; Merriman v. Mach. Co., 86 Wis. 142, 56 N. W. 743; State v. Warren, 77 Md. 121, 26 Atl. 500, 39 Am. St. Rep. 401; Tracy v. Com., 87 Ky. 578, 9 S. W. 822. Though the joinder of two or more distinct offences in one count of an indictment is faulty, yet where the acts imputed are component parts of the same offence the pleading is not objectionable for duplicity; Farrell v. State, 54 N. J. L. 416, 24 Atl. 723; nor is it where one of the two offences charged is insufficiently set out; State v. Henn, 39 Minn. 476, 40 N. W. 572. It must be of causes on which the party relies, and not merely matter introduced in explanation; Dunning v. Owen, 14 Mass. 157. In trespass it is not duplicity to plead to part and justify or confess as to the residue; Parker v. Parker, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 236. If only one defence be valid, the objection of duplicity is not sustained; Porter v. Brackenridge, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 385.

It may exist in any part of the pleadings; the declaration; Morse v. Eaton, 23 N. H. 415; Jarman v. Windsor, 2 Harr. (Del.) 162; pleas; Welch v. Jamison, 1 How. (Miss.) 160; replication; Benner v. Elliott, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 451; Calhoun v. Wright, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 74; Bennett v. Martin, 6 Mo. 460; or subsequent pleadings; Tebbets v. Tilton, 24 N. H. 120; United States v. Gurney, 1 Wash. C. C. 446, Fed. Cas. No. 15,271; and was at common law a fatal defect; Robinson v. Rice, 20 Mo. 229; to be reached on demurrer only; Cunningham v. Smith, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 255, 60 Am. Dec. 333; King v. Howard, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 137; Gardiner v. Miles, 5 Gill (Md.) 94; Benner v. Elliott, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 451; People v. Clement, 4 Cal. Unrep. 493, 35 Pac. 1022. The rules against duplicity did not extend to dilatory pleas so as to prevent the use of the various classes in their proper order; Co. Litt. 304 a; Steph. Pl. App. n. 56.

Owing to the statutory changes in the forms of pleading, duplicity seems to be no longer a defect in many of the states, either in declarations; Blakeney v. Ferguson, 18 Ark. 347; pleas; King v. Howard, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 137; Bryan v. Buford, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 335; or replications; Zehnor v. Beard, 8 Ind. 96; though in some cases it is allowed only in the discretion of the court, for the furtherance of justice.

It is too late after verdict to object to duplicity in an information for a misdemeanor; State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 16 S. W. 604, 13 L. R. A. 419, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361.

DURANTE ABSENTIA. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DURANTE BENE PLACITO (Lat.). During good pleasure. The ancient tenure of English judges was durante bene placito, at the pleasure of the king. See JUDGE. 1 Bla. Com. 267, 342.

DURANTE MINORE ÆTATE (Lat.). During the minority. An infant can enter into no contracts during his minority, except those for his benefit. If he should be appointed an executor, administration of the estate will be granted, durante minore ætate, to another person. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1555.

DURANTE VIDUITATE (Lat.). During widowhood.

DURATION. Extent, limit or time. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 102.

DURBAR. In India, a court, audience, or levee.

DURESS. Personal restraint, or fear of personal injury or imprisonment. Hazelrigg v. Donaldson, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 445.

Duress of imprisonment exists where a man actually loses his liberty. If a man be illegally deprived of his liberty until he sign and seal a bond, or the like, he may allege this duress and avoid the bond; Heaps v. Dunham, 95 Ill. 583; Rollins v. Lashus, 74 Me. 218; Guilleaume v. Rowe, 94 N. Y. 268, 46 Am. Rep. 141. But if a man be legally imprisoned, and, either to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seal a bond or a deed, this is not by duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it; Co. 2d Inst. 482; Eddy v. Herrin, 17 Me. 338, 35 Am. Dec. 261; Mascolo v. Montesanto, 61 Conn. 50, 23 Atl. 714, 29 Am. St. Rep. 170. Where the proceedings at law are a mere pretext, the instrument may be avoided; Aley n. 92; 1 Bla. Com. 136.

Duress per minas, which is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem or loss of limb, must be upon a sufficient reason; 1 Bla. Com. 131. In this case, a man may avoid his own act. Coke enumerates four instances in which a man may avoid his own act by reason of menaces: For fear of loss of life; of member; of mayhem; of imprisonment; Co. 2d Inst. 483; 2 Rolle, Abr. 124; Bac. Abr. Duress, Murder, A; 2 Ld. Raym. 1578; Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 114;

Motz v. Mitchell, 91 Pa. 114; Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 205, 19 L. Ed. 134.

It has been held that restraint of goods under circumstances of hardship will avoid a contract; Collins v. Westbury, 2 Bay (S. C.) 211, 1 Am. Dec. 643; Spaid v. Barrett, 57 Ill. 289, 11 Am. Rep. 10; Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 210, 24 L. Ed. 409; 11 Exch. 578. But see Hazelrigg v. Donaldson, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 445; Maisonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. 337, Fed. Cas. No. 8,978; Block v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cl. 461; Lehman v. Shackelford, 50 Ala. 437.

The duress to avoid a deed is that which compels the grantor to do what he would not do voluntarily; Savage v. Savage, 80 Me. 472, 15 Atl. 43; Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511; Griffith v. Sitgreaves, 90 Pa. 161. If a contract is made under duress and subsequently ratified, it becomes valid; Ferrari v. Board of Health, 24 Fla. 390, 5 South. 1; Belote v. Henderson, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 471, 98 Am. Dec. 432.

The violence or threats must be such as are calculated to operate on a person of ordinary firmness and inspire a just fear of great injury to person, reputation, or fortune. See Seymour v. Prescott, 69 Me. 376; McClair v. Wilson, 18 Colo. 82, 31 Pac. 502; Bosley v. Shanner, 26 Ark. 280; Mollere v. Harp, 36 La. Ann. 471. The resisting power which any man is bound to exercise for his own protection was measured, in the common law, by the standard of a man of courage, as a part of the law itself; Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 81 N. W. 495, 47 L. R. A. 417. There is no legal standard of resistance which a person acted upon must come up to at his peril of being remediless. The question in each case is: Was the person so acted upon by threats of the person claiming the benefit of the contract, for the purposes of obtaining it, as to be bereft of the quality of mind essential to the making of a contract, and was the contract thereby obtained; Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 81 N. W. 495, 47 L. R. A. 417. The age, sex, state of health, temper, and disposition of the party, and other circumstances calculated to give greater or less effect to the violence of threats, must be taken into consideration; 1 Ky. L. Rep. 137; Parmentier v. Pater, 13 Or. 121, 9 Pac. 59; U. S. v. Huckabee, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 432, 21 L. Ed. 457.

Violence or threats will amount to duress not only where they are exercised on the contracting party, but when the wife, the husband, or children of the party are the object of them; Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 12, 82 Am. Dec. 395; Harris v. Carmody, 131 Mass. 51, 41 Am. Rep. 188. The defence was sustained where a father was coerced into executing a mortgage to secure restitution of his son's defalcation by threats of prosecution; Williamson, Halsell, Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 77 Kan. 502, 94 Pac. 807, 20 L. R.

A. (N. S.) 484; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hamilton, 73 Wis. 486, 41 N. W. 727; Bryant v. Peck & Whipple Co., 154 Mass. 460, 28 N. E. 678; where a father gave a note to avoid prosecution of his son and son-in-law; Folmar v. Siler, 132 Ala. 297, 31 South. 719; National Bank of Oxford v. Kirk, 90 Pa. 49; where a wife gave a note and mortgage to prevent prosecution of her husband, he being already under arrest; Jones v. Dannenberg Co., 112 Ga. 426, 37 N. E. 729, 52 L. R. A. 271 (even though the note was in the hands of a bona fide holder, etc.); Harris v. Webb, 101 Ga. 84, 28 S. E. 620; but not, where a son-in-law was threatened with prosecution, the father-in-law, with deliberation, gave his notes and agreed with his daughter that they should constitute an advancement; Loud v. Hamilton (Tenn.) 51 S. W. 140, 45 L. R. A. 400; or where a mortgage was given to stop a threatened prosecution of the mortgagor's husband, but no promise was given not to prosecute; Moyer v. Dodson, 212 Pa. 344, 61 Atl. 937; or where one agreed not to prosecute his agent if he would make restitution of his embezzled funds; Allen v. Dunham, 92 Tenn. 257, 21 S. W. 898.

If the violence used be only a legal constraint, or the threats only of doing that which the party using them had a right to do, they shall not invalidate the contract. A just and legal imprisonment, or threats of any measure authorized by law and the circumstances of the case, are of this description. See Norris, Peake's Ev. 440, and the cases cited; also, Watkins v. Baird, 6 Mass. 506, 4 Am. Dec. 170; Thorn v. Pinkham, 84 Me. 103, 24 Atl. 718, 30 Am. St. Rep. 335; Hilborn v. Bucknam, 78 Me. 482, 7 Atl. 272, 57 Am. Rep. 816. A man lawfully arrested on a warrant for seduction, who, to procure his discharge marries the woman, cannot have the marriage declared void; Marvin v. Marvin, 52 Ark. 425, 12 S. W. 875, 20 Am. St. Rep. 191; Lacoste v. Guidroz, 47 La. Ann. 295, 16 South. 836; Johns v. Johns, 44 Tex. 40; Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 24; Sickles v. Carson, 26 N. J. Eq. 440; Blankenmiester v. Blankenmiester, 106 Mo. App. 390, 80 S. W. 706; Griffin v. Griffin, 130 Ga. 527, 61 S. E. 16, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937, 14 Ann. Cas. 866. A marriage between cousins, upon the threat of the man that if the woman would not marry him he would blow out his brains, would not be set aside, where the woman went through the marriage ceremony without any sign of unwillingness, though the marriage was never consummated, and the man admitted that he had only married her for her money, and she was of a weak character; [1891] P. 369. To constitute duress which will be regarded as sufficient to make a payment involuntary there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed or believed to be possessed by the party exacting the payment over the person or property of another, for which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by making the payment; Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 210, 24 L. Ed. 409. There is no ironclad rule which confines an involuntary payment to cases of duress. Money compulsorily paid to prevent an injury to one's property rights comes within the same principle; Buckley v. Mayor, 30 App. Div. 463, 52 N. Y. Supp. 452. One who negotiates a loan to take up an existing mortgage upon which foreclosure proceedings have been begun, and who is required under protest to pay an illegal bonus to secure a discharge of the mortgage, acts under duress in so doing, and can recover the amount paid; Kilpatrick v. Ins. Co., 183 N. Y. 163, 75 N. E. 1124, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 574, 110 Am. St. Rep. 722.

As to other contracts it is said that threats of imprisonment, to constitute duress, must be of unlawful imprisonment. But the question is whether the threat is of imprisonment which will be unlawful in reference to the conduct of the threatener. Imprisonment that is suffered through the execution of a threat which was made for the purpose of forcing a guilty person to enter into a contract may be lawful as against the authorities and the public, but unlawful as against the threatener, when considered in reference to his effort to use for his private benefit processes provided for the protection of the public. One who has overcome the will of another for his own advantage, under such circumstances, is guilty of a perversion and abuse of laws which were made for another purpose, and he is in no position to claim the advantage of a formal contract obtained in that way, on the ground that the rights of the parties are to be determined by their language and their overt acts, without reference to the influences which moved them; Morse v. Woodworth, 155 Mass. 233, 27 N. E. 1010, 29 N. E. 525; Burton v. McMillan, 52 Fla. 469, 42 South. 849, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 120 Am. St. Rep. 220, 11 Ann. Cas. 380; Goringe v. Reed, 23 Utah, 120, 63 Pac. 902, 90 Am. St. Rep. 692; Hargreaves v. Korcek, 44 Neb. 660, 62 N. W. 1086; and to the same effect, Lomerson v. Johnston, 44 N. J. Eq. 93, 13 Atl. 8; Coffman v. Bank, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 232, 40 Am. Rep. 31; Bell v. Campbell, 123 Mo. 1, 25 S. W. 359, 45 Am. St. Rep. 505; Heaton v. Bank, 59 Kan. 281, 52 Pac. 876.

In the early common law, duress, strictly so called, was a matter of law. It was pleadable as a defence or as material to a cause of action, by alleging the existence of specific circumstances legally sufficient to constitute duress. Oppression of one person by another, causing such person to surrender something of value to another, not amounting to duress within the rigorous rules of law, regardless of whether the oppression actually deprived the oppressed party of the exercise of his free will, was remediless except by an appeal to equity, where a remedy was obtainable on the ground of unlawful compulsion; Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 81 N. W. 495, 47 L. R. A. 417, where it is said that the real foundation principle of duress is that it is the condition of mind of the wronged person at the time of the act sought to be avoided, not the means by which such a condition was produced. In its broad sense duress is now said to include all instances where a condition of mind of a person caused by fear of personal injury or loss of limb, or injury to such person's property, wife, child, or husband, is produced by the wrongful conduct of another, rendering such person incompetent to contract with the exercise of his free will power; Williamson v. Ackerman, 77 Kan. 502, 94 Pac. 807, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484, whether formerly relievable at law on the ground of duress or in equity on the ground of wrongful compulsion; Galusha v. Sherman, 105 Wis. 263, 81 N. W. 495, 47 L. R. A. 417.

Threats of unlawful imprisonment are not necessary to constitute duress. It was never contemplated in the law that either the actual use or misuse of criminal process, legal or illegal, should be resorted to for the purpose of compelling the payment of a mere debt, or to coerce the making of contracts. Ample civil remedies are afforded in the law to enforce the payment of debts and the performance of contracts; but the criminal law and the machinery for its enforcement have a wholly different purpose and cannot be employed to interfere with that wise and just policy of the law that all contracts and agreements shall be founded upon the exercise of the free will of the parties, which is the real essence of all contracts; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, Dunn & Co., 111 Ala. 456, 20 South. 651; Adams v. Bank, 116 N. Y. 606, 23 N. E. 7, 6 L. R. A. 491, 15 Am. St. Rep. 447; Henry v. Bank, 131 Ia. 97, 107 N. W. 1034; Williamson, Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 77 Kan. 502, 94 Pac. 807, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484; Burton v. McMillan, 52 Fla. 228, 42 South. 879, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159.

Excessive charges paid to railroad companies refusing to carry or deliver goods, unless these payments were made voluntarily, have been recovered on the ground of duress; 27 L. J. Ch. 137; 32 id. 225; 30 L. J. Exch. 361; 28 id. 169. Where the carrier refuses to transport stock until a special contract is signed limiting its liability, it does not bind the shipper; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dill, 48 Kan. 210, 29 Pac. 148.

Where, in addition to money penalties for delay in payment of a tax, there is forfeiture of the right to do business and risk of having contracts declared illegal for non-payment thereof, payment is made under duress. "Courts sometimes perhaps have been a little too slow to recognize the implied duress under which payment is made" of taxes; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1050; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 468, 32 Sup. Ct. 236, 56 L. Ed. 510.

The burden of proving duress is on the party alleging it; Horton v. Bloedorn, 37 Neb. 666, 56 N. W. 321.

There is said to be some conflict in the authorities upon the question whether the defence of duress by threats can be successfully urged against a bona fide holder for value of negotiable paper, and that the better opinion and weight of authority is that such defence stands upon the same footing as other defences which may be made as between the original parties, but is cut off when the paper reaches the hands of a bona fide holder; Fairbanks v. Snow, 145 Mass. 153, 13 N. E. 596, 1 Am. St. Rep. 446; Farmers' Bank of Grand Rapids v. Butler, 48 Mich. 192, 12 N. W. 36; Clark v. Pease, 41 N. H. 414; Beals v. Neddo, 2 Fed. 41, 1 McCrary 206. If such a contract be simply a voidable one, then it follows naturally that, when the contract consists of negotiable paper, the defence is cut off by transfer to a bona fide purchaser before maturity, in the same manner that other defences upon the ground of fraud are cut off; Mack v. Prang, 104 Wis. 1, 79 N. W. 770, 45 L. R. A. 407, 76 Am. St. Rep. 848. Is a defense to all save the gravest crimes, and one cannot, under compulsion kill another person, even in order to save his own life; 8 C. & P. 616.

DURHAM. See COUNTY PALATINE.

DURSLEY. In Old English Law. Blows without wounding or bloodshed; dry blows. Blount.

DUTIES. In its most enlarged sense, this word is nearly equivalent to taxes; State v. Telegraph Co., 73 Me. 518; Blake v. People, 109 Ill. 504; embracing all impositions or charges levied on persons or things; in its more restrained sense, it is often used as equivalent to customs, or imposts. Story, Const. § 949. In common use, an indirect tax imposed on the importation or consumption of goods. Pollock v. Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108.

DUTY. A human action which is exactly conformable to the laws which require us to obey them.

That which is right or due from one to another. A moral obligation or responsibility.

It differs from a legal obligation, because a duty cannot always be enforced by the law: it is our duty, for example, to be temperate in eating, but we are under no legal obligation to be so; we ought to love our neighbors, but no law obliges us to love them.

DWELLING-HOUSE. A building inhabited by man. A house usually occupied by the person there residing, and his family. The apartment, building, or cluster of buildings in which a man with his family resides. 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 104.

The importance of an exact signification for this word is often felt in criminal cases; and yet it is very difficult to frame an exact definition which will apply to all cases. It is said to be equivalent to mansion-house; Com. v. Pennock, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 199; State v. Sutcliffe, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) 372; 7 Mann. & G. 122. See 14 M. & W. 181; 4 C. B. 105; Com. v. Posey, 4 Call (Va.) 109, 2 Am. Dec. 560.

Judge Cooley, in Stearns v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 219, 15 N. W. 86, 45 Am. Rep. 37, says that in the law of burglary the dwelling-house is deemed to include whatever is within the curtilage, even though not inclosed with the dwelling, if used with it for domestic purposes; People v. Taylor, 2 Mich. 250; Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142.

It must be a permanent structure; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 557; 1 Russ. Cr. 798; must be inhabited at the time; 2 Leach 1018, n.; State v. Warren, 33 Me. 30; Ex parte Vincent, 26 Ala. 145, 62 Am. Dec. 714; Com. v. Barney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 479; People v. Cotteral, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 115; Com. v. Posey, 4 Call (Va.) 109, 2 Am. Dec. 560; Scott v. State, 62 Miss. 782. It is sufficient if a part of the structure only be used for an abode; Russ. & R. 185; Stedman v. Crane, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 295; Cole v. State, 9 Tex. 42; 2 B. & P. 508; Dale v. State, 27 Ala. 31. How far a building may be separate is a difficult question; Com. v. Estabrook, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 293; State v. Langford, 12 N. C. 253; Armour v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 379; State v. Ginns, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 583; Com. v. Sanders, 5 Leigh (Va.) 751; People v. Dupree, 98 Mich. 26, 56 N. W. 1046; Bruce v. Cloutman, 45 N. H. 37, 84 Am. Dec. 111; Chase v. Ins. Co., 20 N. Y. 52; 18 Q. B. 783; 22 Ir. L. T. Rep. 30; State v. Clark, 89 Mo. 430, 1 S. W. 332; Davis v. State, 38 Ohio St. 506; State v. Mordecai, 68 N. C. 207.

A suite of rooms in a college of the University of Cambridge is a dwelling-house; L. R. 4 C. P. 539. Six separate tenants occupied a house of ten rooms, each having exclusive possession of his part of the premises and the owner did not reside there. The outer and street door had no lock or bolt and was always kept open. The entry, stairway, and an ashpit and other conveniences were used in common. Two of the judges held that each of the six tenants occupied a "dwelling-house," and two held otherwise; L. R. 6 C. P. 327.

DWELLING-PLACE. See RESIDENCE; DOMICIL.

DYING DECLARATIONS. Dying declaration of one who did not believe in a Supreme Being are admissible, but are thereby discredited. Gambrell v. State, 92 Miss. 728, 46 South. 138, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 291, 131 Am. St. 549, 16 Ann. Cas. 147. See DECLARATION.

DYING WITHOUT ISSUE. Not having issue living at the death of the decedent.

Van Vechten v. Pearson, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 514; Fairchild v. Crane, 13 N. J. Eq. 105. In England this is the signification, by statutes 7 Will. IV.; 1 Vict. c. 26, § 29. But the old English rule, that the words, when applied to real estate, import an indefinite failure of issue, has been generally adhered to in this country; Den v. Allaire, 20 N. J. L. 6; Wilson v. Wilson, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 328; Wallis v. Woodland, 32 Md. 101. See 2 Washb. R. P. 362; 4 Kent 273.

DYNASTY. A succession of kings in the same line or family.

DYSNOMY. Bad legislation; the enactment of bad laws.

DYSPEPSIA. The group of symptoms resulting from alterations in the process of digestion due either to functional or organic diseases of the stomach.

Dyspepsia is not, in general, considered as a disease which tends to shorten life, so as to make a life uninsurable, unless the complaint has become organic dyspepsia, or was of such a degree at the time of the insurance as by its excess to tend to shorten life; 4 Taunt. 763.

E

E CONVERSO (Lat.). On the other hand; on the contrary. Equivalent to e contra.

EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States of the value of ten dollars.

It weighs two hundred and fifty-eight grains of standard fineness; that is to say, of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of pure metal and one hundred of alloy, the alloy consisting of silver and copper.

The act of February 12, 1873, Rev. Stat. § 3514, fixes the proportion of silver at in no case more than one-tenth of the whole alloy.

For all sums whatever the eagle is a legal tender for ten dollars. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3585.

EALDORMAN (Sax.). A Saxon title of honor. It was a mark of honor very widely applicable, the ealdormen being of various ranks. The chief of them were the rulers almost of provinces. After the Conquest they disappeared and the term earl became a mere title. It is the same as alderman.

See Seeböhm, Tribal Customs; 2 Freeman, Norm. Cong. 51.

EARLDORMAN. Said to be a false spelling for ealdorman. Cent. Dict. But see 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 29, giving Earldorman.

EAR-MARK. A mark put upon a thing for the purpose of distinction. Money in a bag tied and labelled is said to have an ear-mark. 3 Maule & S. 575.

Also used in equity in respect of property or a fund in the hands of a third party, which is capable of identification as belonging to the claimant out of possession.

The doctrine that money has no ear-mark is no longer law. Property entrusted to a person in a fiduciary capacity may be followed as long as it may be traced, and where a person holding money as trustee or in a fiduciary character mixed it with his own and draws out of the mixed fund for his own purposes, the court presumes that his own drawings are to come out of his own money; 13 Ch. D. 696. And see note to this case citing leading English cases in Brett's Lead. Cas. Mod. Eq. 179.

Where police officers, in arresting bank burglars, took the stolen money from them and claimed to hold it for an assignee of the burglars (their attorney for his services) and for a reward offered, it was held that an indemnity company which had indemnified the bank could recover the specific money from the police officers; Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Malone, 89 Neb. 260, 131 N. W. 200.

EAR-WITNESS. One who attests to things he has heard himself.

EARL. In English Law. A title of nobility next below a marquiss and above a viscount.

Earls were anciently called comites, because they were wont comitari regem, to wait upon the king for counsel and advice. They were also called shiremen, because each earl had the civil government of a shire. After the Norman conquest they were called counts, whence the shires obtained the names of counties. They have now nothing to do with the government of counties, their duties having devolved on the sheriff, the earl's deputy, or vicecomes. 1 Bla. Com. 338.

EARL MARSHAL. An officer who formerly was of great repute in England. He held the court of chivalry alone as a court of honor, and in connection with the lord high constable as a court having criminal jurisdiction. 3 Bla. Com. 68; 4 id. 268. The duties of the office now are restricted to the settlement of matters of form merely. It would appear, from similarity of duties and from the derivation of the title, to be a relic of the ancient office of alderman of all England. See COURT OF THE EARL MARSHAL.

EARL'S PENNY. See ABLES.

EARL'S THIRD PENNY. In the county court and in every hundred court the king was entitled to but two-thirds of the proceeds of justice and the earl got the other third, except perhaps in some exceptional cases. Maitl., Domesday and Beyond 95.

EARLDOM. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. The dignity only remains now, as the jurisdiction has been given over to the sheriff; 1 Bla. Com. 339.

EARNEST. The payment of a sum of money or delivery of a thing or token, upon the making of a contract for the sale of goods, to bind the bargain, the delivery and acceptance of which marks the final and conclusive assent of both parties to the contract.

The payment of a part of the price of goods sold, or the delivery of part of such goods, for the purpose of binding the contract. Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 54, 11 Am. Rep. 306.

It has been stated in a general way that the effect of earnest is to bind the goods sold; and, upon their being paid for without default, the buyer is entitled to them; but, notwithstanding the earnest, the money must be paid upon taking away the goods, because no other time for payment is appointed; earnest only binds the bargain, and gives the buyer a right to demand, but a demand without payment of the money is void; after earnest given, the vendor cannot sell the goods to another without a default in the vendee, and therefore if the latter does not come and pay, and take the goods, the vendor ought to go and request him, and then, if he does not come, pay for the goods, and take them away in convenient time, the agreement is dissolved, and the vendor is at liberty to sell them to any other person; 2 Bla. Com. 447; 2 Kent, Com. 495; 2 H. Bla. 316; 3 Campb. 426; Neil v. Cheves, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 537.

There is great difference of opinion as to the exact definition of this word. It had a signification at common law sufficiently well understood to warrant its use in the statute of frauds of 29 Car. II. § 17, which makes parol sales of goods, etc., void unless there is a delivery, or the buyer "give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment."

The Roman law included two kinds of earnest, one being a contract prior to that of sale and independent of it, which was practically the payment of a sum of money for what we should now call an option to purchase, to be forfeited by the purchaser if he did not buy, while, if the other party was unwilling to sell, he must return the earnest and pay an equal amount as a forfeit. The other kind of earnest was that afterwards found in the common law and might be a thing, usually a ring, which either party, generally the buyer, gave to the other as a token. It is important in reading the civil law on this topic to bear in mind these two classes. Benj. Sales § 195. Justinian changed the law on this subject by providing that either party might rescind the sale by forfeiting the amount of the earnest money; Inst. 1. 3. 23. 1. At least the text appears to be susceptible of no other meaning, but Pothier maintains that, after earnest, neither party could avoid the obligation; in this he is not followed by the later civilians. The same controversy has arisen upon a similar provision of the French code. The conclusion above stated is that of Benjamin, who cites the authorities; Sales, §§ 198-200.

In Scotland the word aries is used for earnest, and is usually applied to a small sum given to a servant on hiring, as earnest that the wage will be paid.

The word earnest "has been supposed to flow from a Phœnician source, through the ἀρραβών of the Greeks, the arra or arrha of the Latin, and the arrhes of the French. . . . The general rule appears to have been that expressed in the Institutes III. 23: 'Is qui recusat adimplere contractum, si quidem est emptor, perdit quod dedit: si vero venditor, duplum restituere compellitur, licet super arris nihil expressum est.' Furthermore, the earnest did not lose that character, because the same thing might also avail as part payment: 'Datur autem arrha vel simpliciter (says Vinnius, on Inst. III. 24) ut sit argumentum duntaxat et probatio emptionis contractæ, veluti si annulus datur; vel ut simul postea cedat in partem pretii, data certa pecunia.' From the Roman law the principles relating to the earnest appear to have passed to the earlier jurisprudence of England: 'Item cum arrarum nomine (says Bracton II. 27) aliquid datum fuerit ante traditionem, si emptorem emptionis pœnituerit, et a contractu resilire voluerit, perdat quod dedit: si autem venditorem, quod arrarum nomine receperit, emptori restitui duplicatum.' Though the liability of the vendor to return to the purchaser twice the amount of the deposit has long since departed from our law, the passage in question seems an authority for the proposition that the earnest is lost by the party who fails to perform the contract. That earnest and part payment are two distinct things is apparent from the 17th section of the statute of frauds, where they are treated as separate acts, each of which is sufficient to give validity to a parol contract." Fry, L. J., in 53 L. J. Ch. 1055, 1061.

Kent says it is only one mode of binding the bargain, and giving the buyer a right to the goods on payment; 2 Com. 495; it is a token or pledge passing between the parties by way of evidence or ratification of the sale. . . . It is mentioned in the statute of frauds, and in the French code, as an efficient act; but it has fallen into very general disuse in modern times, and seems rather to be suited to the manners of simple and unlettered ages, before the introduction of writing, than to the more precise and accurate habits of dealing at the present day. It was omitted in the New York Revised Statutes; id. (14th ed.) 495, n. (b). That it has fallen into disuse is true as to the giving of earnest in its ancient, strict, and technical sense, and its having fallen into disuse has been attributed the tendency to treat earnest and part payment as meaning the same thing, though the language of the statute of frauds implies that the former is something to bind the bargain while no part payment can be made until the contract has been closed; Benj. Sales § 189.

One definition is: "Specifically, in law, a part of the price of goods or service bargained for, which is paid at the time of the bargain to evidence the fact that the negotiation has ended in an actual contract. Hence it is said to bind the bargain." Cent. Dict. And another is: "Something given by a buyer to a seller by way of token or pledge to bind the bargain; a part or portion of goods delivered into the possession of the buyer at the time of the sale as a pledge or security for the complete fulfilment of the contract; a handsel." Encyc. Dict. And the latter authority illustrates the function of earnest as evidence of the conclusion of the contract by the Scotch law which holds a party who resiles, to fulfil the contract as well as to forfeit the earnest paid.

It is sometimes said that the question whether the earnest shall count as part of the price or wage depends on the intention of the parties, which, in the absence of direct evidence, will be inferred from the proportion which it bears to the whole sum. Int. Cyc. "If a shilling be given in the purchase of a ship or of a box of diamonds, it is presumed to be given merely in evidence of the bargain, or, in the common way of speaking, is dead earnest; but if the sum be more considerable it is reckoned up in the price." Ersk. Inst. b. iii. tit. iii. § 5.

Another writer considers "that the original view of earnest in England was, that it was a payment of a small portion of the price or wage, in token of the conclusion of the contract; and as this view seems to have been adhered to, the sum, however small, would probably then be counted as a part payment." Sto. Sales 216.

It has been a mooted question whether at common law either earnest or delivery was necessary to perfect a sale of chattels; in a case where it was objected that because there was neither, there could not be a recovery for the breach of a parol contract of sale, it was said: Earnest paid is not necessary to complete a parol contract of sale; when made, it only prevents the vendor, under any circumstances, from rescinding the contract without the assent of the vendee; and this by common law, and not by any statute; Hurlburt v. Simpson, 25 N. C. 236.

It has been much discussed whether the giving of earnest has any effect to pass the title to the property sold; and in earlier cases of the sale of specific chattels it was so held; Shep. Touchst. 224; 5 Term 409; 7 East 558; Noy, Max. 87-89; 2 Bla. Com. 447; but see the analysis of these authorities; Benj. Sales § 355. It is said by this learned writer on the subject, that there is no case in which this has been held when a completed bargain, if in writing, would not have altered the property; id. § 357; and it is concluded that the true legal effect of earnest is simply to afford conclusive evidence of a bargain actually completed with the mutual intention that it should be binding on both; and whether the property has passed in such cases is to be tested, not by the fact that earnest was given, but by the true nature of the contract concluded by the giving of earnest; id. Hence with respect to the remedy of the seller, if the buyer refuse to take the property sold, the law of earnest, properly speaking, is not concerned; but it is to be treated as in the case of contracts otherwise legally evidenced. See 2 Kent, Com. Lacey's ed. 496, note 51; SALES.

To constitute earnest to bind the bargain something must be paid or given. An instance is reported where, the buyer having drawn a shilling across the palm of the seller and returned it to his own pocket, according to a custom alleged to exist in the north of England, it was held that the statute was not satisfied; 7 Taunt. 597. This has been said to be the only reported case; Benj. Sales § 191; but it has been held that money left in the hands of a third person as a forfeiture is not sufficient; Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 54, 11 Am. Rep. 306; much less a deposit of a check; Jennings v. Dunham, 60 Mo. App. 635; Noakes v. Morey, 30 Ind. 103. The three cases last cited are usually referred to in connection with the subject of earnest. In the Massachusetts case, the question was as to the recovery of money deposited as a forfeiture, which it was argued was earnest to bind the bargain in case of a refusal to take the goods, and the court said that earnest, as used in the statute of frauds, was part payment. On the strength of this case a text-writer on the law of that state adopts the statement as a definition of earnest; Usher, Sales Per. Prop. § 113. So an authoritative writer on the statute of frauds uses the terms, earnest and part payment, as interchangeable, and discusses the question of when earnest must be paid mainly upon New York cases, although in that state the exception is confined to part payment, the "giving something in earnest" being omitted; Reed, Stat. Fr. § 226. While, therefore, the clear and philosophical definitions of the nature and effect of earnest cited from Benjamin on Sales unquestionably commend themselves as better satisfying the apparent purpose of the statute to designate two distinct acts, it must be admitted that they are constantly referred to by American courts and writers as alternative expressions of the same thing. Consequently the cases cited in text-books as laying down rules as to earnest are usually found, on examination, to be in fact cases of part payment, and they must be so read. This use of the words, interchangeably, makes unavoidable a reference to the cases just referred to, especially since the word earnest, in addition to what has been indicated as its real signification, has, in this country, certainly, an acquired meaning too general to be disregarded.

In part payment something having value must pass from the buyer to the seller; 16 M. & W. 302; Brand v. Brand, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 348; an unaccepted tender to the vendor on a call for part payment by him will not suffice to bind him, as when a remittance by mail of a check was returned to the sender; Edgerton v. Hodge, 41 Vt. 676; nor the promissory note of the buyer; Combs v. Bateman, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 573; Hooker v. Knab, 26 Wis. 511; Krohn v. Bantz, 68 Ind. 278; even if there were an express agreement that the note should be received as part payment, which in this instance there was not; id.; in this case it was held that the note was not only ineffectual as part payment, but that it could not be regarded as earnest, sufficient to bind the bargain. After referring to the Massachusetts decision, supra, that, as used in the statute of frauds, earnest was regarded as part payment of the price, the court said: "But, conceding that it may be something distinct from payment, it is quite clear that it must have some value. The note has no value whatever, because it had no consideration to support it, and its payment could not, therefore, have been enforced. To say that such a note has value, is but grasping at a shadow, and losing sight of the substance. The contract for the sale of the hogs not being valid, the note given in consideration of the agreement therefor was based upon no valid consideration;" id.; Ely v. Ormsby, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 570. But see 13 M. & W. 58; Byles, Bills *386. But when the contract was partly performed by compliance with a condition, and a note was tendered for the price, it was considered that the statute was satisfied; Gray v. Payne, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 277. A note of a third person accepted as payment is sufficient; Combs v. Bateman, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 573; or a check if paid is a payment relating back to the time when given; Hunter v. Wetsell, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 135; a stipulation that borrowed money owing from the seller to the buyer shall be treated as part payment will avail; Mattice v. Allen, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 543; but not an agreement to credit an account due from the seller and send goods for the balance; Galbraith v. Holmes, 15 Ind. App. 34, 43 N. E. 575; or a promise to pay a part of the purchase money to a creditor of the vendor or credit it in the account against him; Artcher v. Zeh, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 204; but if such debt be actually paid it is good; 21 U. C. Q. B. 340; or if accepting the promise the creditor discharge the vendor; Cotterill v. Stevens, 10 Wis. 425; but the payment must be made at the time of the agreement; Paine v. Fulton, 34 Wis. 83; and if there was no entry in the account stating that the credit was given on account of the transactions in suit it was insufficient; Teed v. Teed, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 96. A mere agreement that the price shall go in settlement of an existing account is not sufficient without more; Brabin v. Hyde, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; 16 M. & W. 302; 16 L. J. Ex. 120; nor is an agreement to sell one article and take another in part payment; Chapin v. Potter, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 366. Part payment may be by the actual delivery of anything of value, as a chattel; Dow v. Worthen, 37 Vt. 108; but a delivery of goods must be sufficient within the statute of frauds if they were in litigation; Walrath v. Ingles, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 275.

With respect to the time at which part payment must be made, it is in some states required to be at the time of making the contract; Crosby Hardwood Co. v. Tester, 90 Wis. 412, 63 N. W. 1057. It was so held in New York; Sprague v. Blake, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 63; though in a later case the question was raised and not determined; Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 119; the same day is sufficient; Brabin v. Hyde, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; and so was a payment asked and received on the following day, the contract being held to be then made for the first time; Bissell v. Balcom, 39 N. Y. 281. And when a check is given and paid upon presentation it is a payment at the time; Hunter v. Wetzell, 84 N. Y. 549, 38 Am. Rep. 544; so also a check upon a deposit in bank; McLure v. Sherman, 70 Fed. 190. In some cases it has been held that payment is not so restricted; 7 U. C. C. P. 133; Thompson v. Alger, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 435; Davis v. Moore, 13 Me. 424; Gault v. Brown, 48 N. H. 189, 2 Am. Rep. 210. It is to be observed that this question of time arises with more frequency under the New York statute which does not provide for earnest eo nomine, but only for part payment "at the time," as does also the Wisconsin statute.

See Benjamin; Blackburn; Story, Sales; Browne; Reed, Statute of Frauds; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; SALES; GOD'S PENNY.

EARNINGS. The word has been used to denote a larger class of credits than would be included in the term wages. Jenks v. Dyer, 102 Mass. 235; Somers v. Keliher, 115 Mass. 165. See Jason v. Antone, 131 Mass. 534. It also means gains derived from services or labor without the aid of capital. Brown v. Hebard, 20 Wis. 330, 91 Am. Dec. 408.

Surplus earnings is an amount owned by a company, over and above the capital and actual liabilities. People v. Board of Com'rs, 76 N. Y. 74.

Net earnings, generally speaking, are the excess of the gross earnings over the expenditures defrayed in producing them, aside from, and exclusive of, the expenditure of capital laid out in constructing and equipping the works themselves. Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 420, 25 L. Ed. 274.

They include "tips"; [1908] 1 K. B. 766. See DIVIDENDS.

EARTH. Clay, gravel, loam and the like, in distinction from the firm rock. The term also includes hard-pan, which is a hard stratum of earth. Dickinson v. City of Poughkeepsie, 75 N. Y. 76.

EASEMENT. A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general property in the owner. 2 Washb. R. P. 25; Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358.

A privilege which the owner of one adjacent tenement hath of another, existing in respect of their several tenements, by which that owner against whose tenement the privilege exists is obliged to suffer or not to do something on or in regard to his own land for the advantage of him in whose land the privilege exists. Termes de la Ley, Easements; Downing v. Baldwin, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 298; 3 B. & C. 339; Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord (S. C.) 451, 13 Am. Dec. 741; Com. v. Low, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 408; Forbes v. Balenselfer, 74 Ill. 183; Oliver v. Hook, 47 Md. 301; Strong v. Wales, 50 Vt. 361; Howell v. Estes, 71 Tex. 690, 12 S. W. 62; Koenigs v. Jung, 73 Wis. 178, 40 N. W. 801.

Although the terms are sometimes used as if convertible, properly speaking easement refers to the right enjoyed by one and servitude the burden imposed upon the other.

An interest in land created by grant or agreement, express or implied, which confers a right upon the owner thereof to some profit, benefit, dominion, or lawful use out of or over the estate of another. Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432.

In the civil law, the land against which the privilege exists is called the servient tenement; its proprietor, the servient owner; he in whose favor it exists, the dominant owner; his land, the dominant tenement. And, as these rights are not personal and do not change with the persons who may own the respective estates, it is very common to personify the estates as themselves owning or enjoying the easements; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 72; Hills v. Miller, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 254, 24 Am. Dec. 218; Boston Water Power Co. v. R. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 522.

There are said to be in England five different classes of rights which one man may have over the land of another: Easements, profits à prendre, personal licenses, customary rights, and natural rights. Odgers C. L. 561. This classification is apparently observed in the English cases. Of these subdivisions, profits à prendre and licenses are treated under these titles. "Customary rights" are referred to below. They are more common in England than here. "Natural rights" do not depend upon grant or prescription, but are really incident to property in land. Such are the right of lateral support to land by adjacent land, the right to the flow of water, and the right to air free from noxious smells. These rights, of course, exist without grant. See LATERAL SUPPORT; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; NUISANCE.

These distinctions have not always been fully observed in the cases here. The distinction between an ordinary easement and an easement in gross is that in the former there is and in the latter there is not a dominant tenement; Jones, Easements 25. Lord Cairns, L. J., said in Rangeley v. Midland R. Co., L. R. 3 Ch. 311, that there is no such thing in the civil law or in England as an easement in gross—an easement not connected with a dominant tenement. Mr. Jones (Easements 25) states that he uses the term "easement in gross" because it is in general use here by legal writers, judges and the profession, and it is useless to attempt to establish a refinement of definition intended to do away with it.

On the other hand, Sharswood, C. J., said: "That there may be the grant of an easement in gross personal to the grantee is not to be denied." Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 38, 100 Am. Dec. 597. To the same effect are 3 Kent 420; Washb. Easem. 8; Fisher v. Fair, 34 S. C. 203, 13 S. E. 470, 14 L. R. A. 333, with note citing other cases, in which the statement that "there is no such thing known to the law" as an easement in gross is characterized as a "refinement attempted to be established" by Gale (Easem. 5) and Goddard (Easem. 6).

The essential qualities of easements, properly so called, may be thus distinguished: 1. Easements are incorporeal. 2. They are imposed upon corporeal property. 3. They confer no right to a participation in the profits arising from it. 4. They must be imposed for the benefit of corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, and are usually imposed for the benefit of corporeal. 5. There must be two distinct tenements—the dominant, to which the right belongs; and the servient, upon which the obligation is imposed. 6. By the civil law it is also required that the cause must be perpetual. Gale, Easem. (8th ed.) 8.

Easements in gross are personal, are not assignable, and will not pass by a deed of conveyance; Washb. Easem. 12; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 38, 100 Am. Dec. 597; Kuecken v. Voltz, 110 Ill. 268. See 14 L. R. A. 333, n. They are not inheritable; Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 99 Am. Dec. 354; Hall v. Armstrong, 53 Conn. 554, 4 Atl. 113; but in Hankey v. Clark, 110 Mass. 262; Poull v. Mockley, 33 Wis. 482; Lonsdale Co. v. Moies, 21 Law Rep. 658, they are held to be assignable and inheritable. A way is never presumed to be in gross when it can be construed to be appurtenant to the land; French v. Williams, 82 Va. 462, 4 S. E. 591; Cadwalader v. Bailey, 17 R. I. 495, 23 Atl. 20, 14 L. R. A. 300.

Easements are also classified as continuous and discontinuous, the distinction between them being thus stated: "Continuous are those of which the enjoyment is, or may be, continual, without the necessity of any actual interference by man. Discontinuous are those, the enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as rights of way, or a right to draw water." Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505. Of the former the right to light and air would be an example, of the latter, the right to use a pump; Chase's Bla. Com. 232, note, which see as to Easements generally.

There must be two tenements owned by distinct proprietors: the dominant, to which the privilege is attached; the servient, upon which it is imposed. Tudor, Lead. Cas. 108; Grant v. Chase, 17 Mass. 443, 9 Am. Dec. 161; Meek v. Breckenridge, 29 Ohio St. 642.

Easements confer no right to any profits arising from the servient tenement; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 145, 16 Am. Dec. 333; 30 E. L. & Eq. 189; Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 419, 26 Am. Rep. 612. They are incorporeal. Like other incorporeal hereditaments they have been held not to pass without a grant; 3 Kent 434; Orleans Nav. Co. v. New Orleans, 2 Mart. La. (O. S.) 214. They are specifically distinguished from other incorporeal hereditaments by the absence of all right to participate in the profits of the soil charged with them; Gale, Easem. (8th ed.) 10.

By the common law, they may be temporary; by the civil law, the cause must be perpetual. They impose no duty on the servient owner, except not to change his tenement to the prejudice or destruction of the privilege; Gale, Easem. (8th ed.) 9; Washb. Easem. 5.

Easements are as various as the exigencies of domestic convenience or the purposes to which buildings and lands may be applied. The following attach to land as incidents or appurtenances, viz.: The right—

Of pasture on other land; of fishing in other waters; of taking game on other land; of way over other land; of receiving air, light, or heat from or over other land; of receiving or discharging water over, or having support to buildings from, other land; 3 E., B. & E. 655; of a right to take ice on a pond; Hoag v. Place, 93 Mich. 450, 53 N. W. 617, 18 L. R. A. 39; of going on other land to clear a mill-stream, or repair its banks, or draw water from a spring there, or to do some other act not involving ownership; of carrying on an offensive trade; 2 Bingh. N. C. 134; Dana v. Valentine, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 8; of burying in a church, or a particular vault; 8 H. L. Cas. 362; 11 Q. B. 666; Long v. Weller's Ex'or., 29 Gratt. (Va.) 347; Canby v. Andrews, 123 Mass. 155; Central Wharf & Wet Dock Corp. v. India Wharf, 123 Mass. 562; Onthank v. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 194, 27 Am. Rep. 35. See CEMETERY.

The right to maintain a building or other permanent structure upon the land of another cannot be acquired by custom; Attor- ney General v. Tarr, 148 Mass. 309, 19 N. E. 358, 2 L. R. A. 87.

Baxter, 76 Va. 299, 44 Am. Rep. 165; Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250, 17 Pac. 69; a furnace flue; Ingals v. Plamondon, 75 Ill. 118; an alley way; Cihak v. Klekr, 117 Ill. 643, 7 N. E. 111; Burns v. Gallagher, 62 Md. 462; a water ditch and water rights; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135; rights of way; Ellis v. Bassett, 128 Ind. 118, 27 N. E. 344, 25 Am. St. Rep. 421; McTavish v. Carroll, 7 Md. 352, 61 Am. Dec. 353; stairways in a building; Galloway v. Bonesteel, 65 Wis. 79, 26 N. W. 262, 56 Am. Rep. 616; Geible v. Smith, 146 Pa. 276, 23 Atl. 437, 28 Am. St. Rep. 796; a flow of water forced from the vendor's premises through pipes to the premises of the vendee; Toothe v. Bryce, 50 N. J. Eq. 589, 25 Atl. 182; a portion of a building projecting upon the land retained by the vendor; N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Needham, 29 Misc. 435, 61 N. Y. Supp. 992; have all been held the subject of implied easements. Rights to a several fishery in the adjoining sea enjoyed by grantees of land and their predecessors in title from time immemorial were held to pass under a royal patent, though the habendum clause recited that they were to have and to hold "the above granted land," which standing alone might not include a fishing right; Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 158, 24 Sup. Ct. 617, 48 L. Ed. 916, reversing 14 Hawaiian Rep. 465. The fact that the particular method of exercising this alleged right, while prevailing in Hawaii, differed from those known to the common law, was held to make no difference; Carter v. Hawaii, 200 U. S. 255, 26 Sup. Ct. 248, 50 L. Ed. 470.

A covenant to erect and maintain a fence on a railroad, contained in a grant of a right of way, was held to run with the land, because the covenant gave to the grantee an interest in the nature of an easement in the adjoining land of the grantor; Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175, 11 Am. Rep. 335; cited in Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 243, 34 L. Ed. 843. An easement may be created by way of exception or reservation; Claflin v. R. Co., 157 Mass. 489, 32 N. E. 659, 20 L. R. A. 638; and rights in the nature of an easement may be created by statute; Attorney General v. Williams, 174 Mass. 476, 55 N. E. 77, where an act restricted the height of buildings bordering on a public square under the power of eminent domain and provided compensation to the abutting owners. The court said that the act added to the public park rights in light and air and view over adjacent land which were "in the nature of an easement created by the statute and annexed to the park." It was further said "It would be hard to say that this statute might not have been passed in the exercise of the police power," but that, in providing compensation, it conformed to an exercise of the right of eminent domain. A similar right secured by statute is that of lateral support.

An easement of private way over land must have a particular, definite line; Crosier v. Brown, 66 W. Va. 273, 66 S. E. 326, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174. To establish an easement of a private way by prescription, the use must be continuous and uninterrupted under a bona fide claim of right adverse to the owner of the land and with his knowledge and silence. If the use is by his permission or if he denies the right, the title does not accrue; id.; verbal protests against the use prevent its accruing; Reid v. Garnett, 101 Va. 47, 43 S. E. 182; but it is held that mere verbal denial by the owner does not tend to prove that the enjoyment of the way was interrupted or had been under the owner's license; Okeson v. Patterson, 29 Pa. 22. See 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, note.

Mere knowledge by a railway company that the public and an adjoining owner are passing over its right of way will not create a right of way, especially when the company erects signs notifying the public that it is railroad property; Andries v. Ry. Co., 105 Mich. 557, 63 N. W. 526.

Forbidding an adjoining owner from using a way over his land and beginning to put up a fence will not in law prevent such adjoining owner from acquiring a right of way, when the latter with threats prevented the erection of a fence and the owner took no proceedings to establish his rights; Connor v. Sullivan, 40 Conn. 26, 16 Am. Rep. 10.

Some of these are affirmative or positive.—i. e., authorizing the commission of acts on the lands of another actually injurious to it; as, a right of way,—or negative, being only consequentially injurious; as, forbidding the owner from building to the obstruction of light to the dominant tenement. Tudor, Lead. Cas. 107; 2 Washb. R. P. 26.

All easements must originate in a grant or agreement, express or implied, of the owner of the servient tenement; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432. The evidence of their existence, by the common law, may be by proof of the agreement itself, or by prescription, requiring an uninterrupted enjoyment immemorially, or for upwards of twenty years, to the extent of the easement claimed, from which a grant is implied. A negative easement does not admit of possession; and, by the civil law, it cannot be acquired by prescription, and can only be proved by grant. Use, therefore, is not essential to its existence; Gale, Easem. 23, 81, 128; 2 Bla. Com. 263. An easement can only be created by a conveyance under seal or by long user, from which such conveyance is presumed; Cagle v. Parker, 97 N. C. 271, 2

S. E. 76; see Hammond v. Schiff, 100 N. C. 161, 6 S. E. 753; or by necessity; Butterworth v. Crawford, 46 N. Y. 349, 7 Am. Rep. 352; Cihak v. Klekr, 117 Ill. 643, 7 N. E. 111; and the burden is on one claiming that it was by virtue of a license, to prove that fact; Colburn v. Marsh, 68 Hun 269, 22 N. Y. Supp. 990. As to the creation of easements by deed, see 8 L. R. A. 617, note; and by implication, see O'Brien v. R. Co., 74 Md. 363, 22 Atl. 141, 13 L. R. A. 126.

Where the owner of a tract of land fronting upon a public highway sells a portion thereof which is entirely surrounded by the land of the grantor and of strangers with no outlet, except over the lands of the grantor, the grantee is entitled to a right of way over the grantor's land, unless the situation of the land or the object for which it is used and conveyed shows that no grant of such right was intended; Mead v. Anderson, 40 Kan. 203, 19 Pac. 708. See Kinney v. Hooker, 65 Vt. 333, 26 Atl. 690, 36 Am. St. Rep. 864.

In case of a division of an estate consisting of two or more heritages, the question whether an easement or convenience, which may have been used in favor of one in or over the other by the common owner of both, shall become attached to the one or charged upon the other in the hands of separate owners, by a grant of one or both of those parts, or upon a partition thereof, must depend, where there are no words limiting or defining what is intended to be embraced in the deed or partition, upon whether the easement is necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part of the heritage claimed as an appurtenance.

The scope of the doctrine of implication of an easement over one portion of a grantor's lands in favor of the other portion, either granted or reserved upon the sale of either portion, is said to be in much confusion in the United States. The rule in England, as quoted and adopted in perhaps the most cited of the earlier American cases, Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505, is, in effect, that where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, the purchaser takes the portion sold, with all the benefits and burdens which appear at the time of the sale to belong to it, as between it and the property which the vendor retains. . . . The parties are presumed to contract in reference to the condition of the property at the time of the sale, and neither has a right, by altering arrangements then openly existing, to change materially the relative value of the respective parts. The rule has been applied in Dixon v. Schermeier, 110 Cal. 582, 42 Pac. 1091; Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Gayton, 67 Neb. 263, 93 N. W. 163; Janes v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300; Cihak v. Klekr, 117 Ill. 643, 7 N. E. 111; Dunklee v. R. Co., 24 N. H. 489; Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 391, 44 Am. Rep. 484; Cannon v. Boyd, 73 Pa. 179;

John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 103 Ind. 582, 2 N. E. 188, 53 Am. Rep. 550; Lammott v. Ewers, 106 Ind. 310, 6 N. E. 636, 55 Am. Rep. 746. In the states where the rule has been adopted in terms, its application has been quite limited, and in some of them an early tendency to liberality has been followed by a later strictness of limitation; Griffiths v. Morrison, 106 N. Y. 165, 12 N. E. 580; Whyte v. Builders' League of New York, 164 N. Y. 429, 58 N. E. 517; Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80.

It is said that this rule has its reason in intended permanence of real estate arrangements supposed to be in the minds of grantor and grantee. But, whatever may be true in older communities, it would be difficult to find justification for any such presumption in a new and developing country, and especially in cities. There, instead of permanence, change is to be expected, and there can be but a slight reason to suppose that, upon a sale of that part of an entire tract on which stands a house, it is intended permanently to subject other parts of the tract to such obsolescent uses, although the owner of the whole had so devoted them; Miller v. Hoeschler, 126 Wis. 263, 105 N. W. 790, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327, where it is said: "The English rule, above quoted, if applied to the full extent of its words, would be against public policy." In Dillman v. Hoffman, 38 Wis. 359, doubt is suggested whether any enlargement of the doctrine of implied easements, beyond rights of way strictly necessary to the use of the dominant estate, is at all wise. Largely on the authority of that case, necessary rights of way have been implied in several cases; Jarstadt v. Smith, 51 Wis. 96, 8 N. W. 29; Galloway v. Bonesteel, 65 Wis. 79, 26 N. W. 262, 56 Am. Rep. 616; Johnson v. Borson, 77 Wis. 593, 46 N. W. 815, 20 Am. St. Rep. 146; Benedict v. Barling, 79 Wis. 551, 48 N. W. 670; but no other easement than a right of way has been held implied in that state; Miller v. Hoeschler, 126 Wis. 263, 105 N. W. 790, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327, where the conclusion is reached that even if, in some extreme cases, there must be any easement other than right of way implied from necessity, that necessity must be so clear and absolute that, without the easement, the grantee cannot, in any reasonable sense, be said to have acquired that which is expressly granted.

In New York the rule of strict necessity is applied to reservations, but not to grants; Paine v. Chandler, 134 N. Y. 385, 32 N. E. 18, 19 L. R. A. 99. The reservation of an easement will not be implied except in cases where it was apparent, continuous, and strictly necessary; Wells v. Garbutt, 132 N. Y. 430, 30 N. E. 978; Whyte v. Builders' League of New York, 164 N. Y. 429, 58 N. E. 517. The former case was approved and followed in Walker v. Clifford, 128 Ala. 67, 29 South. 588, 86 Am. St. Rep. 74. In Stuyve- sant v. Early, 58 App. Div. 242, 68 N. Y. Supp. 752, a distinction between an implied grant and an implied reservation was recognized. It was there held that a right to drain through the grantor's premises passed by implication, on the ground that the easement was visible and apparent. The court said that, if the owner had conveyed the servient tenement first, no easement would have been implied.

In New Jersey, there is no distinction between an implied grant and an implied reservation; Greer v. Van Meter, 54 N. J. Eq. 270, 33 Atl. 794; so in Seibert v. Levan, 8 Pa. 383, 49 Am. Dec. 525, the distinction between an implied grant and an implied reservation was denied, following the rule in Gale & Whately, Easem. 52: "It is true that, strictly speaking, a man cannot subject one part of his property to another by an easement, for no man can have an easement in his own property; but he obtains the same object by the exercise of another right, the general right of property; but he has, nevertheless, thereby altered the quality of the two parts of his heritage, and if, after the annexation of peculiar qualities, he alien one part of his heritage, it seems but reasonable, if the alterations thus made are palpable and manifest, that a purchaser should take the land, burdened or benefited, as the case may be, by the qualities which the previous owner had undoubtedly the right to attach to it."

In Burns v. Gallagher, 62 Md. 464, the test was said to be that the doctrine of reservation of an easement would be invoked when the necessity is so strict that it would be unreasonable to suppose the parties intended the easement in question should not be used. Where the owner of a lot, bounded on one side by a highway and on the other by the ocean, sold that half of the estate which adjoined the highway, without expressly reserving a way across it from the highway to the part he retained, and no access could be had to the unsold portion except by the ocean or by crossing the land of other owners, it was held, following the English rule, that the ocean was a public highway, and, as all communication was not shown to be cut off, the grantor must in future rely on such access as the sea afforded. Hildreth v. Googins, 91 Me. 227, 39 Atl. 550.

Where it is not necessary, it requires descriptive words of grant or reservation in the deed to create it; Washb. Easem. 95; 36 Am. Rep. 415. The common-law rule requiring the word "heirs" in the creation of an estate of inheritance by deed is inapplicable in creating a permanent easement; Chappell v. R. Co., 62 Conn. 195, 24 Atl. 997, 17 L. R. A. 420; Lathrop v. Elsner, 93 Mich. 599, 53 N. W. 791. See Claffin v. R. Co., 157 Mass. 489, 32 N. E. 659, 20 L. R. A. 638. The use of the word appurtenances is not sufficient to create an easement where none existed before; Bonelli v. Blakemore, 66 Miss. 136, 5 South. 228, 14 Am. St. Rep. 550.

An easement in land held in common cannot be acquired by one of the tenants in common in favor of land held by him in severalty, as a right of flowage over common property by a tenant owning a dam; Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412; or a right of way over the common land by the tenant to a lot in the rear owned by him; Boyd v. Hand, 65 Ga. 468.

There are many rights which in their mode of enjoyment partake of the character of easements, such as a custom for the inhabitants of a village to dance upon a particular close at all times of the year; 1 Lev. 176; for the inhabitants of a parish to play at all kinds of lawful games in a close at all seasonable times of the year; 2 H. Bl. 393; for the freemen and citizens of a town on a particular day of the year to enter upon a close and have horse races thereon; 1 H. & C. 729; that every inhabitant of a town shall have a way over certain land either to church or to market; 6 Co. Rep. 59; a right to use a strip of land as a promenade; [1900] 1 Ir. 302; a custom for victuallers to erect booths on the waste of a manor at the time of fairs; 6 A. & E. 745; for the inhabitants of a township to go on a close and take water from a spring; 4 E. & B. 702; to move vessels in a navigable tidal estuary of the Thames; [1897] 2 Q. B. 318; to deposit oysters dredged from oyster fisheries upon the foreshore in another part of the fishery; [1901] 2 K. B. 870; for all the fishermen of a parish to dry their nets on a particular close; [1904] 2 Ch. 534; [1905] 2 Ch. 538; for the inhabitants of a burgh (in Scotland) to use a strip of ground for recreation and for drying clothes; [1904] A. C. 73. As, however, the existence and validity of these rights generally depend on some local custom excluding the operation of the general rules of law (consuetudo tollit communem legem) and they are sometimes entirely independent of any express or implied agreement between the parties, they generally stand upon a different footing, and are not in all respects governed by the same principles as those which determine the boundaries of private easements. When claims of this kind are unreasonable, they are disallowed even in cases where they might possibly have formed the subject of a valid grant. When it is said that a custom is void because it is unreasonable, nothing more is meant than that the unreasonable character of the alleged custom conclusively proves that the usage, even though it may have existed immemorially, must have resulted from accident or indulgence, and not from any right conferred in ancient times on the party setting up the custom; 9 H. L. Cas. 692.

The general public cannot acquire by user a right to visit a monument or other object of interest on private property (Stonehenge); [1905] 2 Ch. Div. 188. See JUS SPATIANDI.

Easements are extinguished: by release; by merger, when the two tenements in respect of which they exist are united under the same title and to the same person; Parsons v. Johnson, 68 N. Y. 62, 23 Am. Rep. 149; by necessity, or abandonment, as by a license to the servient owner to do some act inconsistent with its existence; Cartwright v. Maplesden, 53 N. Y. 622; by cessation of enjoyment, when acquired by prescription,—the non-user being evidence of a release where the abandonment has continued at least as long as the user from which the right arose. In some cases a shorter time will suffice; 2 Washb. R. P. 56, 82, 453. An easement acquired by grant cannot be lost by mere non-user, though it may be by non-user coupled with an intention of abandonment; Welsh v. Taylor, 134 N. Y. 450, 31 N. E. 896, 18 L. R. A. 535; Edgerton v. McMullan, 55 Kan. 90, 39 Pac. 1021; Tabbutt v. Grant, 94 Me. 371, 47 Atl. 899; Cox v. Forrest, 60 Md. 74. A presumption of a way resting in grant will not be created by the fact that it is not continuously used by the dominant owner; Bombaugh v. Miller, 82 Pa. 203; [1893] A. C. 162; Tyler v. Cooper, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 94. The destruction of an easement of a private right of way for public purposes is a taking of the property of the dominant owner for which he must be compensated; U. S. v. Welch, 217 U. S. 333, 30 Sup. Ct. 527, 54 L. Ed. 787, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 385, 19 Ann. Cas. 680.

Prescription does not run against the exercise of a servitude in favor of one who resisted and prevented its exercise; Sarpy v. Hymel, 40 La. Ann. 425, 4 South. 439. Mere non-user must be accompanied by adverse use of the servient estate; Welsh v. Taylor, 134 N. Y. 450, 31 N. E. 896, 18 L. R. A. 535, with note on the effect of non-user generally. One cannot acquire a prescriptive right over his own lands or the lands of another which he occupies as tenant; Vossen v. Dautel, 116 Mo. 379, 22 S. W. 734.

An easement in favor of land held in common will be extinguished by a partition, if nothing is said about it; Livingston v. Ketcham, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 592. As to the loss or extinguishment of easements, see 1 L. R. A. 214, note.

The remedy at common law for interference with a right of easement is an action of trespass, or where it is for consequential damages and for an act not done on plaintiff's own land, of case; Brenton v. Davis, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 317, 44 Am. Dec. 769; Ganley v. Looney, 14 Allen (Mass.) 40. Where the act complained of is done in one county, but the injurious consequences thereof are felt in another, the action may be brought in the latter; Thompson v. Crocker, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 59; Worster v. Lake Co., 25 N. H.

525. Redress may also, as a general proposition, be obtained through a court of equity, for the infringement of an easement and an injunction will be granted to prevent the same; Washb. Easem. 747.

As to the distinction between an easement and a license, see LICENSE.

See Washburn, Easements; ABANDONMENT; AIR; ANCIENT LIGHTS; BACKWATER; COMMON; DAM; HIGHWAYS; LATERAL SUPPORT; PARTY-WALL; PROFIT A PRENDRE; SERVITUDE; STREET; SUPPORT; WAY.

EASTER TERM. In English Law. Formerly one of the four movable terms of the courts, but afterwards a fixed term, beginning on the 15th of April and ending on the 8th of May in every year, though sometimes prolonged so late as the 13th of May, under stat. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 70. See TERM.

EASTERLY. When this word is used alone it will be construed to mean due east; but this is a rule of necessity, growing out of the indefiniteness of the term and has no application where other words are used for the purpose of qualifying its meaning. Where such is the case it means precisely what the qualifying word makes it mean; Fratt v. Woodward, 32 Cal. 227, 91 Am. Dec. 573.

EAT INDE SINE DIE. Words used on an acquittal, or when a prisoner is to be discharged, that he may go without day; that is that he be dismissed. Dane, Abr. Index.

EAVES-DROPPERS. In Criminal Law. Such persons as wait under walls or windows or the eaves of a house, to listen to discourses and thereupon to frame mischievous tales.

The common-law punishment for this offence is fine and finding sureties for good behavior; 4 Bla. Com. 167; State v. Williams, 2 Ov. (Tenn.) 108. See Com. v. Lovett, 4 Clark (Pa.) 5; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 112; State v. Pennington, 3 Head (Tenn.) 299, 75 Am. Dec. 771; 8 Haz. Pa. Reg. 305.

EBB AND FLOW. An expression used formerly in this country to denote the limits of admiralty jurisdiction. As to jurisdiction as founded on ebb and flow of tide, see ADMIRALTY.

EBEREMURDER. See ABEREMURDER.

ECCHYMOSIS. In Medical Jurisprudence. Localized discoloration in and under the skin. An extravasation of blood by rupture of capillary vessels, and hence it follows contusion; but it may exist, as in cases of scurvy, asphyxiation and other morbid conditions, without the latter. Ryan Med. Jur. 172. Ecchymoses produced by blows upon a body but a few hours dead cannot be distinguished from those produced during life. 1 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 485; 2 Beck, Med. Jur. 22.

ECCLESIA (Lat.). An assembly. A Christian assembly; a church. A place of religious worship. Spelman, Gloss.

In the civil law this word retains its classical meaning of an assembly of whatever character. Du Cange; Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat. Voc. Jur.; Acts xix. 39. Ordinarily in the New Testament the word denotes a Christian assembly, and is rendered into English by the word church. It occurs twice in the gospels, Matt. xvi. 18, xviii. 17, but frequently in the other parts of the New Testament, beginning with Acts ii. 47. Ecclesia there never denotes the building, however, as its English equivalent church does. In the law, generally, the word is used to denote a place of religious worship, and sometimes a parsonage. Spelman, Gloss. See CHURCH.

ECCLESIASTIC. A clergyman; one destined to the divine ministry: as, a bishop, a priest, a deacon.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS. In English Law. A body appointed to consider the state of the revenues, and the more equal distribution of episcopal duties, in the several dioceses. They were first appointed as royal commissioners in 1835; were incorporated in 1836, and now comprise all the bishops of England and Wales and the Lord Chief Justice, and other persons of distinction. 2 Steph. Com. 798.

ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORATIONS. Such corporations as are composed of persons who take a lively interest in the advancement of religion, and who are associated and incorporated for that purpose. Ang. & A. Corp. § 36.

Corporations whose members are spiritual persons are distinguished from lay corporations; 1 Bla. Com. 470.

They are generally called religious corporations in the United States. 2 Kent 274; Ang. & A. Corp. § 37.

In the earlier times, the church became a large property owner. Before the device of a corporation sole was known to the law, there was the greatest uncertainty as to who the owner of church property really was. Property given to the church was given to the patron saint—the gift was in the first place to God and the saint, and only in the second place to the ecclesiastic in charge of it. But it was managed by a group of persons and they were perpetual because their numbers were always being renewed. Gradually the theory that they were personæ fictæ was evolved by the Canonists. They became persons created by law—distinct from their members, and perpetual. The change was gradually accepted by the common-law lawyers and was extended to other groups which had nothing to do with the church. The growing definiteness of the conception of the corporation had reacted upon those ecclesiastical corporations which had originally introduced the idea of persona ficta. The corporation was a person. Gifts were made to a parson for the benefit of the church and no longer to a saint. The parson became a corporation sole and gradually that theory obtained recognition at the common law; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 367; see 16 L. Q. R. 336, where Prof. Maitland suggests that "corporation sole" was first applied to a parson by Brooke, author of the Abridgment, who died in 1558. See, as to corporations sole, CORPORATION.

See ASSOCIATION; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES; CHURCH.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS (called, also, Courts Christian). The generic name for certain courts in England having cognizance mainly of spiritual matters.

In 1857 they were deprived of their jurisdiction in probate and divorce cases and they now deal only with clergymen of the Church of England in their professional character. Even over clergymen their power on questions of heresy is very limited. It is not an ecclesiastical offense to deny that the whole of the Scriptures are inspired, or to reject parts thereof as inherently incredible, etc., so long as they do not contradict the Articles or Formularies of the Church of England. Odgers, Com. L. 206.

See COURTS OF ENGLAND; CHURCH OF ENGLAND; COURT OF ARCHES; COURT OF CONVOCATION; COURT OF FACULTIES; COURT OF PECULIARS; CONSISTORY COURTS; ARCHDEACON'S COURT; PREROGATIVE COURT; PRIVY COUNCIL.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW. The law of the church.

The existence in England of a separate order of ecclesiastical courts, and a separate system of law by them administered, may be traced back to the time of William the Conqueror, who separated the civil and the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, and forbade tribunals of either class from assuming cognizance of cases pertaining to the other. The elements of the English ecclesiastical law are the canon law, the civil law, the common law of England, and the statutes of the realm. The jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical tribunals extended to matters concerning the order of clergy and their discipline, and also to such affairs of the laity as "concern the health of the soul;" and under this latter theory it grasped also cases of marriage and divorce, and testamentary causes. But in more recent times, 1830-1858, these latter subjects have been taken from these courts, and they are now substantially confined to administering the judicial authority and discipline incident to a national ecclesiastical establishment. See CANON LAW; ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS; ASSOCIATION; CHURCH; RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

ECHOUEMENT. In French Marine Law. Stranding.

ECLAMPSIA PARTURIENTII. In Medical Jurisprudence. Puerperal convulsions. Convulsive movements, loss of consciousness, and coma occurring during pregnancy, parturition or the puerperium. The attack closely resembles the convulsions of epilepsy. The disease is often fatal, causing the death of the patient in about one-fourth of all the cases, and foetal death in about one-half. Mental defects may result from eclampsia, and are occasionally permanent. American Text-book of Obstetrics.

The word eclampsia is of Greek origin Significat splendorem, fulgorem, effulgentiam, et emicationem quales ex oculis aliquando prodeunt. Metaphorice sumitur de emicatione flammæ vitalis in pubertate et ætatis vigore. Castelli, Lex. Medic.

There can be but little doubt that many of the tragical cases of infanticide proceed from this cause. The criminal judge and lawyer cannot inquire with too much care into the symptoms of this disease, in order to discover the guilt of the mother, where it exists, and to ascertain her innocence, where it does not. See two well-reported cases of this kind in the Boston Medical Journal, vol. 27, no. 10, p. 161.

EDICT (Lat. edictum). A law ordained by the sovereign, by which he forbids or commands something: it extends either to the whole country or only to some particular provinces.

Edicts are somewhat similar to public proclamations. Their difference consists in this,—that the former have authority and form of law in themselves, whereas the latter are, at most, declarations of a law before enacted.

Among the Romans this word sometimes signified a citation to appear before a judge. The edicts of the emperors, also called constitutiones principum, were new laws which they made of their own motion, either to decide cases which they had foreseen, or to abolish or change some ancient laws. They were different from rescripts or decrees, which were answers given in deciding questions brought before them. These edicts contributed to the formation of the Georgian, Hermogenian, Theodosian, and Justinian codes. See Dig. 1. 4. 1. 1; Inst. 1. 2. 7; Code 1. 1; Nov. 139.

A special edict was a judgment in a case; a general edict was in effect a statute. The prætor, at the commencement of his year of office, published a body of rules as to the remedies he would grant. In the reign of Hadrian (A. D. 131) a codified edict was published, made by Salvius Julianus, and called the Edictum Salvianum or Perpetuum.

EDICTS OF JUSTINIAN. Thirteen constitutions or laws of this prince, found in most editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they are of little use.

EDICTUM PERPETUUM. See EDICT.

EDITION. The term applies to every quantity of books put forth to the bookselling trade at one time by the publisher; 4 K. & J. 656. A new edition is published whenever, having in his warehouse a certain number of copies, the publisher issues a fresh batch of them to the public. This, according to the practice of the trade is done, as is well known, periodically, and if, after printing 20,000 copies, a publisher should think it expedient for the purpose of keeping up the price of the work, to issue them in batches of a thousand at a time, keeping the rest under lock and key, each successive issue would be a new edition in every sense of the word; 4 K. & J. 667; Short, Literature.

EDITOR. The term is held to include not only the person who writes or selects the articles for publication, but he who publishes a paper and puts it in circulation. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 721, 24 L. Ed. 565; Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 350.

EDITUS. In Old English Law. Put forth or promulgated when speaking of the passage of a statute; and brought forth or born, when speaking of the birth of a child. Black, L. Dict.

EDMUNDS ACT. An act of congress of March 22, 1882, punishing polygamy, which see.

EDUCATE. Includes proper moral, as well as intellectual and physical, instruction.

Ruohs v. Backer, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 395, 19 Am. Rep. 598. See Williams v. MacDougall, 39 Cal. 80; Merrill v. Emery, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 507; Peck v. Clafin, 105 Mass. 420; De Camp v. Dobbins, 29 N. J. Eq. 36.

EDUCATION. It may be directed particularly to either the mental, moral, or physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense it refers to them all. Mt. Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 146, 13 N. E. 354.

Legal Education. This subject has been for many years receiving earnest and extended attention in England and the United States. It has been elaborately treated at various times by committees of the American Bar Association, in which a report was made in 1879 by Carleton Hunt, chairman, and subsequent reports in 1881, 1890, 1891, and 1892. See the annual reports of those years. In 1893 the association formed a section of legal education, which has held yearly conferences for the reading of papers and discussion on the subject, which has been ably and elaborately treated. Its work in 1894 was published by the United States in the reports of the Commissioner of Education.

In 1901, an Association of American Law Schools was organized in connection with that Association, which has also held annual meetings.

The subject has also been much discussed by various State Bar Associations, as will appear by reference to their published reports.

An interesting address by Lord Russell, Lord Chief Justice of England, was delivered before the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, October, 1895. See also a paper by Austen G. Fox on the work of the New York State Board of Examiners (Am. Bar Ass'n Report, 1896, p. 543, and 10 Harv. L. Rev. 199). The following is a partial list of books and papers on the subject:

Legal Education, by Gerald B. Finch, London, 1885; 1 *Jurid. Soc. EFFECT. The operation of a law, of an agreement, or an act, is called its effect. Maize v. State, 4 Ind. 342.

By the laws of the United States, a patent cannot be granted for an effect only, but it may be for a new mode or application of machinery to produce effects; Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gall. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 17,601. See Gray v. James, 1 Pet. C. C. 394, Fed. Cas. No. 5,718.

EFFECTS. Property, or worldly substance. As thus used, it denotes property in a more extensive sense than goods. 2 Bla. Com. 294. See The Alpena, 7 Fed. 361. Indeed the word may be used to embrace every kind of property, real and personal, including things in action; as, a ship at sea; Welsh v. Parish, 1 Hill (S. C.) 155; a bond; Banning v. Sibley, 3 Minn. 389 (Gil. 282); 16 East 222; shares of capital stock; Union Nat. Bank v. Byram, 131 Ill. 92, 22 N. E. 842.

In a will, "effects" may carry the whole personal estate; 5 Madd. 72; 15 Ves. 507; but not real estate; Andrews v. Applegate, 223 Ill. 535, 79 N. E. 176, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 7 Ann. Cas. 126; Appeal of Price, 169 Pa. 294, 32 Atl. 455; unless the word "real" be added; 15 M. & W. 450; Foxall v. McKenney, 3 Cranch C. C. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 5,016; Schouler, Wills § 509. "Effects either real or personal," in the residuary clause of a will, have been held to embrace real estate; 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 236; Page v. Foust, 89 N. C. 447. When preceded or followed in a will by words of narrower import, if the bequest is not residuary, it will be confined to species of property of the same kind (ejusdem generis) with those previously described; 13 Ves. 39; Rop. Leg. 210. See 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 384, n. Generally speaking the word "effects" in a will, is equivalent to "property" or "worldly substance"; but the interpretation may be restricted to articles ejusdem generis with those previously enumerated or specified; 1 Ves. Jr. 143; 15 Ves. 500.

When "the effects" passes realty, and when personality, in a will, see 1 Jarm. Wills 585, 590; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (U. S.) 400, 420, 14 L. Ed. 472; 1 Cowp. 307; L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 561; WILL.

In a treaty between the United States and the Netherlands, "effects" was held to include real estate; Dowd v. Seawell, 14 N. C. 188; and in a treaty between Sweden and the United States "fonds et biens" (translated goods and effects) was held to embrace all kinds of property; Adams v. Akerlund, 168 Ill. 632, 48 N. E. 454. But these words in this treaty were held to apply to personal-ty only in Meler v. Lee, 106 Ia. 303, 76 N. W. 712.

EFFIGY. The figure or representation of a person.

To make the effigy of a person with an intent to make him the object of ridicule, is libel (q. v.). Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 2; 14 East 227; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 866.

In France an execution by effigy or in effigy was adopted in the case of a criminal who has fled from justice. By the public exposure or exhibition of a picture or representation of him on a scaffold, on which his name and the decree condemning him are written, he is deemed to undergo the punishment to which he has been sentenced. Since the adoption of the Code Civil, the practice has been to affix the names, qualities, or addition, and the residence, of the condemned person, together with an extract from the sentence of condemnation, to a post set upright in the ground, instead of exhibiting a portrait of him on the scaffold. Répert. de Villargues; Biret, Vocab.

EFFRACTOR. One who breaks through; one who commits a burglary.

EGO. I, myself. This term is used in forming genealogical tables, to represent the person who is the object of inquiry.

EGYPT. As to courts established by the Christian Powers in Egypt, see MIXED TRIBUNALS.

EIGHT HOUR LAWS. Statutes making eight hours a day's labor for workmen, laborers, and mechanics.

Acts regulating the hours of labor for women and children are generally upheld; Com. v. Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; Com. v. Beatty, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 5; State v. Buchanan, 29 Wash. 602, 70 Pac. 52, 59 L. R. A. 342, 92 Am. St. Rep. 930; but contra, Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 40 N. E. 454, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, where the Massachusetts case was expressly disapproved. See Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 24 Sup. Ct. 124, 48 L. Ed. 148; LIBERTY OF CONTRACT. Such statutes have been upheld in three classes of cases: (1) Occupations injurious to the health of employes; (2) occupations in which women and children are employed; (3) occupations involving the public safety and welfare. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780.

An act providing that in contracting for municipal work the contractor should bind himself not to accept more than eight hours as a day's work to be performed within nine consecutive hours or, except in case of necessity, not to employ any one for more than eight hours in twenty-four consecutive hours, was held not to violate either the federal or the New York constitution; People v. Warren, 77 Hun 120, 28 N. Y. Supp. 303; People v. Beck, 10 Misc. 77, 30 N. Y. Supp. 473, reversed on other grounds in People v. Beck, 144 N. Y. 225, 39 N. E. 80.

Other courts have held that statutes limiting a day's work for all classes of mechanics, servants and laborers (except farm and domestic workers) to eight hours are invalid as interfering with the constitutional right to contract; Low v. Printing Co., 41 Neb. 127, 59 N. W. 362, 24 L. R. A. 702, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670; In re Bill Providing That Eight Hours Shall Constitute a Day's Labor, 21 Colo. 29, 39 Pac. 328; City of Cleveland v. Const. Co., 67 Ohio St. 197, 65 N. E. 885, 59 L. R. A. 775, 93 Am. St. Rep. 670; Fiske v. People, 188 Ill. 206, 58 N. E. 985, 52 L. R. A. 291; State v. McNally, 48 La. Ann. 1450, 21 South. 27, 36 L. R. A. 533. And a similar municipal ordinance was held invalid; Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 24 Pac. 737, 9 L. R. A. 482, 20 Am. St. Rep. 226; City of Seattle v. Smyth, 22 Wash. 327, 60 Pac. 1120, 79 Am. St. Rep. 939.

By act of congress of August 1, 1892, the employment of all laborers and mechanics employed by the United States, the District of Columbia or by any contractor upon any of the public works of the United States or the District of Columbia is limited to eight hours in any one calendar day, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. A violation of this act is made punishable by fine and imprisonment or both. The act was upheld; Ellis v. U. S., 206 U. S. 246, 27 Sup. Ct. 600, 51 L. Ed. 1047, 11 Ann. Cas. 589. A statute somewhat similar was passed June 19, 1912. A similar statute of Kansas was held not to infringe the freedom to contract, nor deny the equal protection of the laws; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 24 Sup. Ct. 124, 48 L. Ed. 148, affirming State v. Atkin, 64 Kan. 174, 67 Pac. 519, 97 Am. St. Rep. 343. A statute limiting to eight hours a day's work for men in underground mines, or in the smelting, refining or reduction of metals, is constitutional; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780, affirming State v. Holden, 14 Utah 71, 46 Pac. 756, 37 L. R. A. 103; contra, In re Bill Providing that Eight Hours shall Constitute a Day's Labor, 21 Colo. 29, 39 Pac. 328.

The emergency which permits days of more than eight hours' work is something more than contemplated emergencies necessarily inhering in the work; U. S. v. Garbish, 222 U. S. 257, 32 Sup. Ct. 77, 56 L. Ed. 190. See LABOR LAWS.

EIGNE. A corruption of the French word ainé. Eldest or first-born.

It is frequently used in our old law-books; bastard eigne signifies an elder bastard when spoken of two children, one of whom was born before the marriage of his parents and the other after; the latter is called mulier puisne. Littleton, sect. 399.

EINETIUS. In English Law. The oldest; the first-born. Spelman, Gloss.

EIRE, or EYRE. In English Law. A journey. See EYRE.

EISNE. The senior; the oldest son. Spelled, also, eigne, einsne, aisne, eign. Termes de la Ley; 1 Kelham.

EISNETIA, EINETIA (Lat.). The share of the oldest son. The portion acquired by primogeniture. Termes de la Ley; Co. Litt. 166 b; Cowell.

EITHER. May be used in the sense of each. Chidester v. Ry. Co., 59 Ill. 87.

EJECTION. Turning out of possession. 3 Bla. Com. 199. See EJECTMENT.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ (Lat.). A writ of which lay for a guardian to recover the land or person of his ward, or both, where he had been deprived of the possession of them. Fitzh. N. B. 139, L.; Co. Litt. 199.

EJECTIONE FIRMÆ (Lat. ejectment from a farm). This writ lay where lands or tenements were let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or a stranger ejected or ousted the lessee of his term. The plaintiff, if he prevailed, recovered the term with damages. Hence Blackstone calls this a mixed action, somewhat between real and personal; for therein are two things recovered, as well restitution of the "term of years," as damages for the ouster or wrong. This writ is the original foundation of the action of ejectment. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 199; Fitzh. N. B. 220, F, G; Gibson, Eject. 3; Stearn, Real Act. 53, 400.

EJECTMENT (Lat. e, out of, jacere, to throw, cast). A form of action by which possessory titles to corporeal hereditaments may be tried and possession obtained.

A form of action which lies to regain the possession of real property, with damages for the unlawful detention.

In its origin, during the reign of Edw. III., this action was an action of trespass which lay for a tenant for years, to recover damages against a person who had ousted him of his possession without right. To the judgment for damages the courts soon added a judgment for possession, upon which the plaintiff became entitled to a writ of possession. The action of de ejectione firmæ (q. v.), was framed to meet the case of the termor, and just at the close of the middle ages it was held that under it he could recover his term. As to its history see 2 Poll. & Maitl. 105. As the disadvantages of real actions as a means of recovering land for the benefit of the real owner from the possession of one who held them without title became a serious obstacle to their use, this form of action was taken advantage of by Ch. J. Rolle to accomplish the same result.

In the original action, the plaintiff had been obliged to prove a lease from the person shown to have title, an entry under the lease, and an ouster by some third person. The modified action as sanctioned by Rolle was brought by a fictitious person as lessee against another fictitious person (the casual ejector) alleged to have committed the ouster. Service was made upon the tenant in possession, with a notice annexed from the casual ejector to appear and defend. If the tenant failed to do this, judgment was given by default and the claimant put in possession. If he did appear, he was allowed to defend only by entering into the consent rule, by which he confessed the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster to have been made, leaving only the title in.

question. The tenant by a subsequent statute was obliged, under heavy penalties, to give notice to his lesser of the pendency of the action.

The action has been superseded in England under the Common Law Procedure Act (1832 §§ 170-220) by a writ, in a prescribed form, addressed, on the claimant's part, to the person or persons in possession, by name, and generally "to all persons entitled to defend the possession" of the premises therein described; commanding such of them as deny the claimant's title to appear in court and defend the possession of the property. Not only the person to whom the writ is directed, but any other person (on filing an affidavit that he or his tenant is in possession, and obtaining the leave of the court or a judge), is allowed to appear and defend.

In England, since the Judicature Act, ejectment has given place to a new action for the recovery of land.

Ejectment has been materially modified in many of the states, though still retaining the name; but is retained in its original form in others, and in the United States courts for those states in which it existed when the circuit courts were organized. In some of the states it has never been in use. See 3 Bla. Com. 198.

The action lies for the recovery of corporeal hereditaments only; Carmalt v. Platt, 7 Watts (Pa.) 318; People v. Mauran, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 389; including a room in a house; White v. White, 16 N. J. L. 202, 31 Am. Dec. 232; upon which there may have been an entry and of which the sheriff can deliver possession to the plaintiff; Jackson v. Buel, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 298; Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 137; and not for incorporeal hereditaments; Den v. Craig, 15 N. J. L. 191; Parker v. Packing Co., 17 Or. 510, 21 Pac. 822, 5 L. R. A. 61; or rights of dower; Jackson v. Vanderheyden, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 167, 8 Am. Dec. 378; Jones v. Hollopeter, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 326; or a right of way; Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232; or a rent reserved; Van Rensselaer v. Hayes, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 477; or for an easement to use land for a public park; Canton Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 106 Md. 69, 66 Atl. 679, 67 Atl. 274, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129; or to put the public in possession of land appropriated for streets; Bay County v. Bradley, 39 Mich. 163, 33 Am. Rep. 367; City of Racine v. Crottsenberg, 61 Wis. 481, 21 N. W. 520, 50 Am. Rep. 149; or of an ocean beach; Trustees of the Freeholders and Commonalty of Southampton v. Betts, 163 N. Y. 454, 57 N. E. 762. Ejectment may be maintained for the possession of a street dedicated to the public use; City of Eureka v. Armstrong, 83 Cal. 623, 22 Pac. 928, 23 Pac. 1085; City and County of San Francisco v. Grote, 120 Cal. 59, 52 Pac. 127, 41 L. R. A. 335, 65 Am. St. Rep. 155. So in Village of Lee v. Harris, 206 Ill. 428, 69 N. E. 230, 99 Am. St. Rep. 176; French v. Robb, 67 N. J. L. 260, 51 Atl. 509, 57 L. R. A. 956, 91 Am. St. Rep. 433; City of Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119 (Gil. 24). It is said that the right to the possession, use and control of highways is primarily in the state, and that the state, having by express grants vested in the cities and villages of the state the possession, use and control of their streets and alleys, the right of possession, use and control is regarded as a legal and not a mere equitable right, and that in that view, no reason exists why the action of ejectment may not be maintained, though the city or village had not the legal title; Village of Lee v. Harris, 206 Ill. 428, 69 N. E. 230, 99 Am. St. Rep. 176; and see City of Cleveland v. R. Co., 93 Fed. 113 (reversed on other grounds in City of Cleveland v. R. Co., 147 Fed. 171, 77 C. C. A. 467, holding that ejectment will lie by a city for the recovery of possession of its streets, though the effect of the dedication was to give the city only an easement.

One is liable in ejectment for the projection of his roof over another's land; Murphy v. Bolger, 60 Vt. 723, 15 Atl. 365, 1 L. R. A. 309; contra, Rasch v. Noth, 99 Wis. 285, 74 N. W. 820, 40 L. R. A. 577, 67 Am. St. Rep. 588; or for the encroachment of the foundations of a building on the land of another, though entirely below the surface; Wachstein v. Christopher, 128 Ga. 229, 57 S. E. 511, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917, 119 Am. St. Rep. 381; or to secure the removal of wires strung through the air over one's property, though the supports are on adjoining land; Butler v. Tel. Co., 186 N. Y. 486, 79 N. E. 716, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 920, 116 Am. St. Rep. 563, 9 Ann. Cas. 858.

It may be brought upon a right to an estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or for years, if only there be a right of entry and possession in the plaintiff; McMillan's Lessee v. Robbins, 5 Ohio, 28; Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 443; Miller v. Shackelford, 3 Dana (Ky.) 289; Middleton v. Johns, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 129; Batterton v. Oakum, 17 Ill. 288; *Sears v. A railroad company which has condemned lands for railroad purposes has a sufficient title to sustain an action; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. Ry. Co. v. Peet, 152 Pa. 488, 25 Atl. 612, 19 L. R. A. 467.

Plaintiff in ejectment may recover as against a mere trespasser, on proof of his former possession only, without regard to his title; Green v. Jordan, 83 Ala. 220, 3 South. 513, 3 Am. St. Rep. 711; Wilson v. Fine, 38 Fed. 789; Nolan v. Pelham, 77 Ga. 262, 2 S. E. 639; Ratcliff v. Iron Works Co., 87 Ky. 559, 10 S. W. 365; Parker v. Ry. Co., 71 Tex. 132, 8 S. The real plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title; King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 404, 18 Sup. Ct. 925, 43 L. Ed. 214; and cannot rely on the weakness of the defendant's; 1 East 246; Lane v. Reynard, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 65; Boardman v. Bartlett, 6 Vt. 631; Den v. Sinnickson, 9 N. J. L. 149; *Winton v. Co-tenants need not join as against a mere disseisor; Smith v. Starkweather, 5 Day (Conn.) 207; Chesround v. Cunningham, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 82; Craig v. Taylor, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 457; but mere tenants in common may; Hicks v. Rogers, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 165, 2 L. Ed. 583; Innis v. Crawford, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 241; Camp v. Homesley, 33 N. C. 211. It may be maintained by the wife against the husband to recover her separate real estate; Crater v. Crater, 118 Ind. 521, 21 N. E. 290, 10 Am. St. Rep. 161.

A court of law will not uphold or enforce an equitable title to land as a defence to an action of ejectment; Johnson v. Christian, 128 U. S. 374, 9 Sup. Ct. 87, 32 L. Ed. 412; Doe v. Aiken, 31 Fed. 393; contra, Brolaskey v. McClain, 61 Pa. 146; but see, Brame v. Swain, 111 N. C. 542, 15 S. E. 938; Hamilton v. Williford, 90 Ga. 210, 15 S. E. 753. In Pennsylvania, ejectment lies on an equitable title and is the full equivalent of a bill in equity; Winpenny v. Winpenny, 92 Pa. 440.

Where a defendant has entered a disclaimer of title and possession, he cannot defend his possession as agent of his wife without first showing a title in her; Duncan v. Sherman, 121 Pa. 520, 15 Atl. 565.

Where a defendant in ejectment repudiates a tenancy and claims a title in fee, he dispenses with the necessity of notice to quit; McGinnis v. Fernandes, 126 Ill. 228, 19 N. E. 44; Simpson v. Applegate, 75 Cal. 342, 17 Pac. 237.

Plaintiff in ejectment in proving title need not go further back than the common source of title, where the defendant claims under the same person; Johnson v. Cobb, 29 S. C. 372, 7 S. E. 601; Luen v. Wilson, 85 Ky. 503, 3 S. W. 911; Laidley v. Land Co., 30 W. Va. 505, 4 S. E. 705; Bialock v. Newhill, 78 Ga. 245, 1 S. E. 383; Drake v. Happ, 92 Mich. 580, 52 N. W. 1023.

In case title is denied, it cannot be proved by merely producing a deed, but when such a deed is produced from a grantor who was in possession, or where possession was taken and held under such deed, and the premises in the deed are clearly identified, then a prima facie title is shown; Hartley v. Ferrell, 9 Fla. 374; McFarlane v. Ray, 14 Mich. 465; Hall v. Kellogg, 16 Mich. 135; Cottrell v. Pickering, 32 Utah 62, 88 Pac. 696, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue; Zeigler v. Fisher's Heirs, 3 Pa. 365; King v. Kent's Heirs, 29 Ala. 542.

The judgment is that the plaintiff recover his term and damages; Battin v. Bigelow, Pet. O. C. 452, Fed. Cas. No. 1,108; Congrega- tional Soc. in Newport v. Walker, 18 Vt. 600; Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 481; Carroll v. Carroll, 16 How. (U. S.) 275, 14 L. Ed. 936; or damages merely where the term expires during suit; Jackson v. Davenport, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 295.

Where the fictitious form is abolished, however, the possession of the land generally is recovered, and the recovery may be of part of what the demandant claims; Treon's Lessee v. Emerick, 6 Ohio 391; Thornton's Lessee v. Edwards, 1 H. & McH. (Md.) 158; Vrooman v. Weed, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 330; Lenoir v. South, 32 N. C. 237; Little v. Bishop, 9 B. Mour. (Ky.) 240; Loard v. Philips, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 566; Messick v. Thomas, 84 Va. 891, 6 S. E. 482.

The damages are, regularly, nominal merely; and in such case an action of trespass for mesne profits lies to recover the actual damages; Baron v. Abeel, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 481, 3 Am. Dec. 515; Shipley v. Alexander, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 84, 5 Am. Dec. 421; Miller v. Melchor, 35 N. C. 439; Davis v. Doe, 25 Miss. 445; Saunders v. Lee, 101 N. C. 3, 7 S. E. 590; Gooch v. Botts, 110 Mo. 419, 20 S. W. 192; Roach v. Heffernan, 65 Vt. 485, 27 Atl. 71. See TRESPASS FOR MESNE PROFITS; ADVERSE POSSESSION.

In some states, however, full damages may be assessed by the jury in the original action; Congregational Soc. in Newport v. Walker, 18 Vt. 600; Livingston v. Tanner, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 481; Jenkins v. Means, 59 Ga. 55; Emrich v. Ireland, 55 Miss. 390; Whissenhunt v. Jones, 78 N. C. 361; and the verdict is conclusive as to the damages; Mills v. Fletcher, 100 Cal. 142, 34 Pac. 637.

For the history of ejectment, see 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. Hist. 611.

EJECTUM. That which is thrown up by the sea. Warder v. La Belle Creole, 1 Pet. Adm. Dec. 43, Fed. Cas. No. 17,165. See JETSAM.

EJERCITORIA. In Spanish Law. The action which lies against the owner of a vessel for debts contracted by the master, or contracts entered into by him, for the purpose of repairing, rigging, and victualling the same.

EJUSDEM GENERIS (Lat.). Of the same kind.

In the construction of laws, wills, and other instruments, general words following an enumeration of specific things are usually restricted to things of the same kind (ejusdem generis) as those specifically enumerated.

So, in the construction of wills, when certain articles are enumerated, the term goods is to be restricted to those ejusdem generis. Bacon, Abr. Legacies, B; Minor's Ex'x v. Dabney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 191; 2 Atk. 113; 3 id. 61. See INTERPRETATION; ET CÆTERA.

ELDER BRETHREN. A distinguished body of men, elected as masters of Trinity House, an institution incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII., charged with numerous important duties relating to the marine, such as the superintendence of lighthouses. Mozl. & W. Dict.; 2 Steph. Com. 502. The full title of the corporation is Elder Brethren of the Holy and Undivided Trinity. It consists of a master, deputy master, a certain number of acting elder brethren, and of honorary elder brethren, with an unlimited number of younger brethren, the master and honorary elder brethren being chosen on account of eminent social position, and are elected by the court of elder brethren. The deputy master and elder brethren are chosen from such of the younger brethren as have been commanders in the navy four years previously, or have served as master in the merchant service on foreign voyages for at least four years. The younger brethren are chosen from officers of the navy or the merchant shipping service who possess certain qualifications. Their action is subject to an appeal to the Board of Trade. Two of the elder brethren assist the court of admiralty at the hearing of every suit for collision, and occasionally in suits for salvage. Their duty is to guide the court by advice only; though influential, their opinion is not legally binding on the judges.

ELDEST. He or she who has the greatest age.

The eldest son of a man is his first-born, the primo-genitus; L. R. 2 App. Cas. 698; L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 171. See PRIMOGENITURE.

ELECTED. In its ordinary signification this word carries with it the idea of a vote, generally popular, sometimes more restricted, and cannot be held the synonym of any other mode of filling a position. State v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 121; Magruder v. Swann, 25 Md. 214.

ELECTION. Choice; selection. The selection of one person from a specified class to discharge certain duties in a state, corporation, or society.

The word, in its ordinary signification, carries the idea of a vote, and cannot be held the synonym of any other mode of filling a position; State v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 111. See People v. Molitor, 23 Mich. 341; APPOINTMENT. Election has often been construed to mean the act of casting and receiving the ballots,—the actual time of voting, not the date of the certificate of election. State v. Tucker, 54 Ala. 205.

Both houses of congress, and parliamentary bodies in general, claim to be the sole judges of the election of their own members. This right seems to be derived from the declaration of rights, delivered by the commons to the king in 1604. Brown, Law Dict.

In the United States this power is vested in congress and the state legislatures by the federal and state constitutions, and chancellor Kent considers that "there is no other body known to the constitution to which such power might safely be trusted. It is requisite to preserve a pure and genuine representation, and to control the evils of irregular, corrupt, and tumultuous elections; and as each house acts in these cases in a judicial character, its decisions, like the decisions of any other court of justice, ought to be regulated by known principles of law, and strictly adhered to for the sake of uniformity and certainty;" 1 Com. 235. On the other hand, experience of the temptation to defeated members, which makes contests, in reliance (unfortunately too often well-founded) upon the irresponsibility of party majorities, leads Mr. Justice Miller to remark that: "This provision . . . seems, from the experience of the past, to have been one of those principles adopted from the English house of commons which has not worked well with our institutions, and which the house of commons itself has been obliged to abandon. Contested elections are now, by the law of England, tried before the judiciary, and the judgment of the court is conclusive upon the subject. It is conceded on all hands that justice is in this way more nearly administered with accuracy than it was under the former system. Both in that country and in this, under the former method, the result of a contested election has been very generally forecast by a knowledge of the relations of the parties contesting to the political majority or minority of the house in which the contest is carried on. As this is a constitutional provision, however, there exists no power in the legislature, without an amendment of that instrument, to refer these contested cases to the judiciary. The increasing number of contested election cases arising out of frauds supposed to be perpetrated at the elections themselves, the investigation of which is always difficult, and the uncertainty of a fair and impartial decision . . . render it doubtful whether the entire provision on this subject is of any value." Miller, Const. 193.

Much may be said in support of the views of each of these learned commentators, and there is a possible middle ground practicable under existing constitutional conditions, which might be suggested. That would be to provide for a judicial determination of the contest in the first instance, reserving to the legislative body the final decision only on exception or appeal under such limitations as would preserve and emphasize the judicial character of the proceeding. This would, on the one hand, preserve the absolute independence of the legislature as one of three co-ordinate branches of the government,—a basic principle, it may be remarked, of American and not of English governmental policy,—and at the same time add to the difficulty and probably lessen the frequency of partisan decisions, contrived in the comparative secrecy of committee rooms and consummated by the mere brute force of a majority.

Election of Public Officers. The right to vote is not a natural one but is derived from constitutions and statutes; it is not a privilege protected by the Fourteenth Amendment; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 163, 22 L. Ed. 627. Each state determines for itself the qualifications of its voters, and the United States adopts the state law upon the subject as the rule in federal elections in accordance with Section 2, article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "the house of representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states, and the electors in each state shall have the qualifications required for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature."

The power of the state governments, however, to prescribe the qualifications of electors is limited by the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution which provides "that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This provision renders void all provisions of a state constitution or a state law which come in conflict with it or with any act of congress passed to enforce it; McCrary, Elections 2; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 663, 4 Sup. Ct. 152, 28 L. Ed. 274. In the territories the right to vote is regulated by congress.

The right to vote, if once given by a state constitution, cannot be impaired or taken away by legislation. But the legislature can regulate the right to vote in a reasonable way by prescribing questions to be propounded to voters to test their qualifications; State v. Lean, 9 Wis. 279; or by requiring them to swear to support the Constitution of the United States, or by requiring registration. But regulations must not in any way impair the right to vote, and hence it has been held that an act prohibiting from voting those who, having been drafted into the military service and duly notified, had failed to report for duty, was void; McCafferty v. Guyer, 59 Pa. 109. An act requiring the voter to declare under oath that he is not guilty of any crime and has not voluntarily borne arms against the United States has also been held void; Rison v. Farr, 24 Ark. 161, 87 Am. Dec. 52. But see Randolph v. Good, 3 W. Va. 551. The right to vote can, however, be limited to male citizens or extended to females, but only upon the same terms and conditions as are applied to males; U. S. v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459; Minor v. Happersett, 53 Mo. 58; Wheeler v. Brady, 15 Kan. 26; Lyman v. Martin, 2 Utah, 136. Different qualifications for persons to vote upon the question of licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors, from those prescribed in a state constitution for electors of public officers, may be prescribed by a legislative act; Willis v. Kalmbach, 109 Va. 475, 64 S. E. 342, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009; but the legislature may not prescribe additional qualifications for voters to those fixed in the constitution; Johnson v. Grand Forks County, 16 N. D. 363, 113 N. W. 1071, 125 Am. St. Rep. 662.

The qualifications of voters in the different states are usually citizenship, residence for a given period, age (21 years), sometimes payment of taxes, ownership of land, and education, and mental capacity. See GRANDFATHER CLAUSE.

As to woman suffrage, see that title.

See CITIZEN; RESIDENCE; NATURALIZATION; DOMICIL.

Elections must be held at the time and place required by law. Legislative or constitutional provisions on this question are mandatory; Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. 403; Opinion of the Judges, 30 Conn. 591; and votes cast by soldiers in the field, outside of the state, under a statute permitting it, are not valid, when the constitution requires a citizen to vote at his place of residence. In the absence of any constitutional provision a statute providing that soldiers in service may vote is valid; Morrison v. Springer, 15 Ia. 304.

A soldier making his permanent residence at a soldiers' home does not thereby acquire a right to vote in the precinct where the institution is situated; Powell v. Spackman, 7 Idaho 692, 65 Pac. 503, 54 L. R. A. 378.

If polls are moved to a place not authorized, the election becomes void; Melvin's Case, 68 Pa. 333; if the polls are not kept open as required by law, the election will be set aside, if enough votes were thereby excluded to change or render doubtful the result; Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 82; Melvin's Case, 68 Pa. 333; but see State v. Smith, 4 Wash. 661, 30 Pac. 1064; but it is doubtful whether a few minutes' delay in opening the polls will avoid an election; 5 Eng. El. Cas. 387; 4 id. 378. Closing polls too soon; Cleland v. Porter, 74 Ill. 76, 24 Am. Rep. 273; or during the dinner hour will not vitiate the election; Fry v. Booth, 19 Ohio St. 25. But the casting of enough votes after the proper hour for closing to change the result will; Contested Election of Locust Ward, 4 Pa. L. J. 341. See 3 Cong. El. Cas. 564.

Generally speaking, notice is essential to the validity of an election; McCrary, Elect. 87; and all qualified voters who absent themselves from an election duly called are presumed to assent to the expressed will of the majority of those voting, even though only a minority of those entitled to vote really do vote; Walker v. Oswald, 68 Md. 146, 11 Atl. 711; but formalities or even the absence of notice may be dispensed with, where there has been an actual election by the people; Dishon v. Smith, 10 Ia. 212. See Seymour v. Tacoma, 6 Wash. 427, 33 Pac. 1059; Woodward v. Sanitary Dist., 99 Cal. 554, 34 Pac. 239; but it would seem that, if by a default of notice, enough voters were deprived of a chance to vote, to change the result, the election would be void; McCrary, Elect. 88. The fact that an order providing for an election of the board of education was passed by less than a quorum of the board, does not affect the validity of the election, where it is held at the time provided by statute and there is no statute provision requiring the order to be made; Ackerman v. Haenck, 147 Ill. 514, 35 N. E. 381. In California, in a much considered case, it was held that voters must take notice of general elections prescribed by law, and in such cases provisions of the laws as to notice are merely directory; but that in elections to fill vacancies, the requirements as to notice must be fully complied with; People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49, 70 Am. Dec. 754. In this case it was further held that, without statutory regulations, no election can be held. See also People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 409; Com. v. Smith, 132 Mass. 289; City of Lafayette v. State, 69 Ind. 218; Jones v. Gridley, 20 Kan. 584; Bolton v. Good, 41 N. J. L. 296;

People v. Crissey, 91 N. Y. 616. An election to fill a vacancy cannot be held where such vacancy did not occur long enough before the election to enable due notice to be given; Beal v. Ray, 17 Ind. 554; People v. Martin, 12 Cal. 409. A failure to give more than three days' notice may not be fatal to the election, if there was full knowledge thereof and a full vote; State v. Carroll, 17 R. I. 591, 24 Atl. 835.

Slight irregularities in the manner of conducting elections, if not fraudulent, will not avoid an election; Paine, Elect. 502. For instance, the presence of one of the candidates in the room where the election was held, and the fact that he intermeddled with the ballots, was held not to vitiate the poll, there not appearing to have been any actual fraud; Bright, Elect. Cas. 268. Irregularities which do not tend to affect results, will not defeat the will of the majority; Juker v. Com., 20 Pa. 493. Where a special election was not called by legal authority, the fact that the people voted for the several candidates, will not render the election valid; People v. Palmer, 91 Mich. 283, 51 N. W. 999.

A majority of voters is necessary to pass a constitutional amendment, by a popular vote, but it will be presumed that the number of those who voted is the number of the qualified voters; 22 Alb. L. J. 147; see as to the latter point, St. Joseph Township v. Rogers, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 644, 21 L. Ed. 328. But there may be a constitutional or statutory method prescribed for ascertaining a majority, in which case the presumption stated does not apply. Thus, in Delaware, a majority to determine whether a constitutional convention shall be called is to be ascertained by the highest vote cast at any one of the last three preceding elections; Const. 1831.

As to whether, when the person receiving the highest number of votes is ineligible, the person receiving the next highest number of votes is thereby elected: In England it is held that the second highest is elected only when it is affirmatively shown that the voters for the candidate highest in votes had such actual knowledge of his ineligibility that they must be taken to have thrown away their votes wilfully; L. R. 3 Q. B. 629; so in People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 508. But in other cases this distinction has not been regarded, and it has been held that the election is void; Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145; Sublett v. Bedwell, 47 Miss. 266, 12 Am. Rep. 338; People v. Molitor, 23 Mich. 341; State v. Bell, 169 Ind. 61, 82 N. E. 69, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013, 124 Am. St. Rep. 203. The better opinion is stated by Cooley (Const. Lim.) and Dillon (Mun. Corp.) to be in accordance with this view. This rule was followed in Rhode Island in the presidential election of 1876; In re Corliss, 16 Am. L. Reg. 15, with a note by Judge Mitchell. It was therein also held that the ineligibility at the time of election cannot be removed by a subsequent resignation of the office which constituted the ineligibility.

Where a candidate who receives the highest number of votes dies on election day, that candidate for the same office who receives the next highest number of votes is not elected; State v. Speidel, 62 Ohio St. 156, 56 N. E. 871.

Where there is a tie vote and one of the candidates refuses to participate in the drawing prescribed by statute, the office cannot thereby be declared vacant, and an appointment to fill such alleged vacancy is invalid; Com. v. Meanor, 167 Pa. 292, 31 Atl. 552.

The legislative precedents as to the effect of ineligibility are not uniform. See Sublett v. Bedwell, 47 Miss. 266, 12 Am. Rep. 338; People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 505.

An act providing for the registration of voters, either local or general in its operation, is within the legislative power and constitutional; Cowan v. Prowse, 93 Ky. 156, 19 S. W. 407.

The election laws of the United States of 1870 and 1871, for supervising the election of representatives, now repealed, were constitutional; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. Ed. 717.

A wager upon the result of an election, being contrary to public policy, is void; Bunn v. Riker, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 426, 4 Am. Dec. 292; Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670; Reynolds v. McKinney, 4 Kan. 94, 89 Am. Dec. 602. All contracts tending to corrupt elections are also void; Nichols v. Mudgett, 32 Vt. 546. In Pennsylvania and other states one betting on the result of an election is disfranchised as a voter thereat.

See CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Election Officers. Canvassing officers and return judges are ministerial officers only; they exercise no judicial or discretionary function; Cooley, Const. Lim. 783; State v. Steers, 44 Mo. 223; Morgan v. Quackenbush, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 72; Clark v. Board of Examiners of Hampden County, 126 Mass. 282. It is said they may judge whether the returns are in due form; People v. Head, 25 Ill. 328. The acts of such officer, within the scope of his authority, are presumed to be correct; Littell v. Robbins, 1 Bartl. 138. In some states, canvassing officers have the power to revise the returns, hear testimony, and reject illegal votes; it is so in Texas, Alabama, Louisiana, and Florida; McCrary, Elect. 67. Where election officers have enforced an erroneous view as to the qualifications of voters, whereby legal voters are not permitted to vote, an election may be set aside, especially if it appear that such votes would have changed or rendered doubtful the result of the election; Bright, Elect. Cas. 455; McCrary, Elect. 68. A canvassing board which has counted a vote and declared the result, is functus officio. It cannot make a recount; Bowen v. Hixon, 45 Mo. 340; Hadley v. City of Albany, 33 N. Y. 603, 88 Am. Dec. 412; State v. Donnewirth, 21 Ohio St. 216.

It is a general rule that the errors of a returning officer shall not prejudice the rights of innocent voters; Cl. & H. 329; (see Behrensmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591, 26 N. E. 704; Ackerman v. Haenck, 147 Ill. 514, 35 N. E. 381); as where it was the duty of the officer to return the votes sealed and he returned them unsealed, it was held that in the absence of any suspicion of fraud the return was good. Also where a state prescribed a certain form of certificate to be executed by the election officer, it is sufficient if the certificate is substantially in that form, and if an election officer insert by accident the wrong name in his return of the persons voted for, the mistake may be corrected; Cl. & H. Elect. Cas. 229, 369.

But it has also been held that where a statute requires the election officer to place on each ballot the number corresponding with the number of the voter, the failure so to number will deprive the voter of his rights; Ledbetter v. Hall, 62 Mo. 422; West v. Ross, 53 Mo. 350. All regulations intended to secure the purity of elections are of vital importance and must be enforced to the letter; Jones v. State, 1 Kan. 273, 279; Gilleland v. Schuyler, 9 Kan. 569. Regulations which affect the time and place of the election and the legal qualifications of the voters are usually matters of substance, while those relating to the recording and return of the votes received and the mode and manner of conducting the details of the election are directory.

A statute requiring an official act, for public purposes, to be done by a given day, is directory only; People v. Allen, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 486. A representative in the legislature cannot be deprived of his seat by the failure of mere election officers to make the return required by law to the secretary of state; see opinion of the judges in Maine; Me. Laws, 1880, p. 225, where many election questions are considered fully. Mere irregularity on the part of election officers, or their omission to observe some merely directory provision of the law, will not vitiate the poll; Anderson v. Winfree, 85 Ky. 597, 4 S. W. 351, 11 S. W. 307; nor is an election invalid because the election officers de facto were disqualified; Quinn v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 439, 35 N. W. 263; State v. Goowin, 69 Tex. 55, 5 S. W. 678; so also irregularities which do not tend to affect results are not allowed to defeat the will of the majority, which must be respected, even when irregularly expressed; Lane v. Cary, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 540; Juker v. Com., 20 Pa. 493; Morris v. Vanlaningham, 11 Kan. 269; Ranney v. Brooks, 20 Mo. 107; People v. Bates, 11 Mich. 362, 83 Am. Dec. 745; McKinney v. O'Connor, 26 Tex. 5; Keller v. Chapman, 34 Cal. 635; Bright Elect. Cas. 448, 449, 450.

By the laws of some states separate boxes are kept at the voting polls for the reception of ballots for different officers, and the question has arisen whether a ballot dropped into the wrong box can be counted. There is some conflict of authority on this point, but it has been held by the supreme court of Michigan that a voter cannot be deprived of his vote by the mistake or fraud of an officer in depositing it in the wrong box, if the intention of a voter can be ascertained with reasonable certainty; and for the same reason a ballot should not be rejected because put in the wrong box by the honest mistake of the voter himself; People v. Bates, 11 Mich. 362, 83 Am. Dec. 745.

An election officer who wilfully and corruptly refuses to any qualified citizen the right to vote or to register is liable in damages to the person injured; Ashby v. White, 1 Sm. L. Cas. (7th ed.) 455; 2 Ld. Raym. 958; Bernier v. Russell, 89 Ill. 60. Equity will not interpose to protect the right to vote, it being a mere political right; Shoemaker v. City of Des Moines, 129 Ia. 244, 105 N. W. 520, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382. In England and in most of the states proof of a malicious or a corrupt purpose on the part of the officer is necessary; Weckerly v. Geyer, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 35; but in Massachusetts it is not necessary to show malice, and this rule has been followed in Ohio and Wisconsin. But even in Massachusetts the officer is not liable if he acted under a mistake into which he was led by the conduct of the plaintiff; Lincoln v. Hapgood, 11 Mass. 350; Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544. See Jenkins v. Waldron, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 114, 6 Am. Dec. 359; State v. Smith, 18 N. H. 91; State v. Robb, 17 Ind. 536.

Exemplary damages may be recovered if the refusal was wilful, corrupt, and fraudulent; Elbin v. Wilson, 33 Md. 135. Equity may upon the relation of the Attorney General, the Governor and the state committee chairman, restrain by injunction election officials from committing illegal and fraudulent acts, though the acts charged, if committed, constitute criminal offences; People v. Tool, 35 Colo. 225, 86 Pac. 224, 229, 231, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 117 Am. St. Rep. 198.

The jurisdiction to hear and determine election cases, though by common law in courts having ordinary common-law jurisdiction, is generally regulated by special statutes in most of the states.

Where a court can reach a conclusion as to the actual legal vote cast at a precinct, on a contest of an election, it can give effect to it notwithstanding the election officers may have been guilty of misconduct; Lucky v. Police Jury, 46 La. Ann. 679, 15 South. 89.

Ballots. Voting by ballots is by a ticket or ball and secrecy is an essential part of this manner of voting; State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. 94; Brislin v. Cleary, 26 Minn. 107, 1 N. W. 825; L. R. 10 C. P. 753; therefore a statute which provides for numbering ballots is repugnant to a constitutional provision that elections shall be by ballot; Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 89, 10 Am. Rep. 97; contra, State v. Connor, 86 Tex. 133, 23 S. W. 1103; People v. Bidelman, 69 Hun 596, 23 N. Y. Supp. 954; Ex parte Owens, 148 Ala. 402, 42 South. 676, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 888, 121 Am. St. Rep. 67; unnumbered ballots are not void although the omission to number them is a misdemeanor; Montgomery v. Henry, 144 Ala. 629, 39 South. 507, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656, 6 Ann. Cas. 965.

Ballots are frequently deposited which do not clearly indicate the voter's intention; for instance, by misspelling the name of a candidate, etc. The rule in such cases is thus stated in Cooley, Const. Lim. 611: "We think evidence of such facts as may be called the circumstances surrounding the election,—such as, who were the candidates brought forward by the nominating conventions; whether other persons of the same name resided in the district from which the officer was to be chosen; and if so, whether they were eligible or had been named for the office; if the ballot was printed imperfectly, how it came to be so printed, and the like,—is admissible for the purpose of showing that an imperfect ballot was intended for a particular candidate, unless the name is so different that to thus apply it would be to contradict the ballot itself, or unless the ballot is so defective that it fails to show any intention whatever, in which case it is inadmissible." See on this point, Attorney-General v. Ely, 4 Wis. 430; People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 64, 84 Am. Dec. 242. The case in People v. Tisdale, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 65, which is contra, was overruled in People v. Cicott, 18 Mich. 283, 97 Am. Dec. 141, and the rule above laid down by Judge Cooley approved and followed. Thus votes for "E. M. Braxton," "Elliot Braxton," and "Braxton" have been counted for Elliot M. Braxton in the 42d Congress. See McCrary, Elect. 296. Ballots cast for "D. M. Carpenter," "M. D. Carpenter," "M. I. Carpenter," and "Carpenter" were counted for Mathew H. Carpenter; Attorney-General v. Ely, 4 Wis. 430. Ballots for "Judge Ferguson" were counted for Fennor Ferguson; 1 Bartl. 267. Ballots cast for "E. Clark" and "Clark" were counted for E. E. Clark; those cast for "W. E. Robso," "Robertson," "Robers," and "Robin—" were counted for W. E. Robinson. Where the only candidates for an office were Caleb Gumm and Joel D. Hubbard, votes for "J. D. Huba," "J. D. Hubba," "J. D. Hub," and also one for "Huber," and one for "D. Huber," are properly counted for Hubbard; Gumm v. Hubbard, 97 Mo. 311, 11 S. W. 61, 10 Am. St.

Rep. 312. See opinion of judges of supreme court of Maine, printed in Maine Laws, 1880, App. p. 225.

A ballot containing the names of two candidates for the same office is bad as to both, but is not thereby vitiated as to other names of candidates on the same ballot; Attorney-General v. Ely, 4 Wis. 420; State v. Foxworthy, 29 Neb. 341, 45 N. W. 632; where a ballot contains the names of three persons for the same office, and there is only one vacancy to be filled, it should be rejected; Montgomery v. O'Dell, 67 Hun 169, 22 N. Y. Supp. 412.

Where there are statutory provisions as to the marking of ballots, the paper on which they are printed, etc., a ballot not complying with the law should not be received; the direction is mandatory; Com. v. Woelper, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 29, 8 Am. Dec. 628; Parvin v. Wimberg, 130 Ind. 561, 30 N. E. 790, 15 L. R. A. 775, 30 Am. St. Rep. 254; but see People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 492, 60 Am. Dec. 769, where the law required white paper without any marks, and blue-tinted paper, ruled, was used, and the ballot declared legal; and where the law required the marking of the ballots with ink, if otherwise regular and marked with a pencil, they were counted; State v. Russell, 34 Neb. 116, 51 N. W. 465, 15 L. R. A. 740, 33 Am. St. Rep. 625. In Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 398, the court held, in this connection, that as to those things over which the voter has control, provisions as to the appearance of ballots are mandatory; and as to those things that are not under his control, such provisions are directory. Ballots on which a printed name is erased and another name written in its place are valid; People v. Saxton, 22 N. Y. 309, 78 Am. Dec. 191; Fenton v. Scott, 17 Or. 189, 20 Pac. 95, 11 Am. St. Rep. 801; but see State v. McElroy, 44 La. Ann. 796, 11 South. 133, 16 L. R. A. 278, 32 Am. St. Rep. 355.

Where a law provides that the voter may insert in the blank space provided therefor any name not already on the ballot, it was held that such insertion might be made by the use of a "sticker" as well as by writing the name of the candidate; De Walt v. Bartley, 146 Pa. 529, 24 Atl. 185, 15 L. R. A. 771, 28 Am. St. Rep. 814.

The fact that some of the ballots cast at an election were marked, and thereby rendered void by the election law, does not invalidate the ballots that were regular; People v. Bidelman, 69 Hun 596, 23 N. Y. Supp. 954.

Australian Ballot. This system, the leading features of which have now been adopted in many of the states, is the first important gift to civilization from the continent of Australasia. It revives the secret ballot in the time of Cicero, under the Gabinian Law. It originated in South Australia soon after the beginning of the present century as the result of the efforts of Mr. Francis S. Dutton, and thence passed from state to state in Australasia, then to the mother country in Europe, afterward to Canada, and eastward to continental countries, and finally westward again to the United States. It has been said that a somewhat similar system had been in vogue in England in Maryport for many years before the modern system was introduced in Australasia. But the Australasian system seems to have been purely indigenous, and was developed without any copying or even knowledge of the system at Maryport.

The cardinal features of the system, as everywhere adopted, are an arrangement for polling by which compulsory secrecy of voting is secured and an official ballot printed and distributed by government authority containing the names of all candidates. The details of the system include methods by which candidates may be nominated, prescribing the number of persons necessary to nominate a candidate, forms in which the various party nominations and information for the voters shall be printed on the ballots, arrangements for small closets or rooms into which the voter can retire and mark his ballot in secret, regulations for allowing him to take into the closet with him when he so desires a person to assist him in marking his ballot, and regulations for the numbering and counting of the ballots. See Wigmore, Australian Ballot System.

The system now generally in vogue in the United States is in most cases not the Australian ballot pure and simple. One feature of that system is the enumeration of candidates for a particular office alphabetically and without designation of party name or emblem. This was adopted in Massachusetts. But in most states the plan, better adapted for the American states, is to use an official ballot, but, when many officers are voted for on a single ballot, to have the column of each party indicated by name or sign or both, and permit the voter to vote a "straight" ticket by a single mark for all officers voted for. This, in various forms, may be termed the American modification of the Australian ballot.

The novel features of this system of voting have given rise to much litigation, and a considerable body of law has already accumulated, which involves not so much new principles as the application of old ones to new conditions. It is, nevertheless, desirable to consider these decisions separately from those under the old system, as thereby a clearer impression is received, both of the system and the method of its enforcement, which is necessarily committed very largely to the courts, and, like cases of railroad receiverships, devolves upon the courts the exercise of functions often to some extent administrative as well as judicial.

It may be said without reserve that the courts have, as a rule, been true to the fundamental doctrines of the law of elections: to give effect to the intention of the voter, where it can be done without defeating the purpose of the legislation,—to enforce party rules with respect to nominations and test the integrity and fairness of those made by petition,—to disregard mere technical irregularities and hold valid elections carried on in good faith rather than to permit them to be defeated by the carelessness, ignorance, or fraud of officials,—to enforce rigidly the safeguards against bribery and intimidation, and the provisions to secure the secrecy of the ballot which lie at the foundation of the system.

For an extended discussion of the Australian ballot laws of England and some of the American states, see Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 101, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491, in which it is held that the system should be construed in subordination to the constitution and laws of the state wherein it is adopted.

Such laws have been held constitutional; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 101, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491; De Walt v. Bartley, 146 Pa. 529, 24 Atl. 185, 15 L. R. A. 771, 28 Am. St. Rep. 814; Attorney-General v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 58 N. W. 483, 25 L. R. A. 325; Ransom v. Black, 54 N. J. L. 446, 24 Atl. 489, 1021, 16 L. R. A. 769; Miner v. Olin, 159 Mass. 487, 34 N. E. 721; Slaymaker v. Phillips, 5 Wyo. 453, 40 Pac. 971, 42 Pac. 1049, 47 L. R. A. 842; Pearson v. Board of Sup'rs, 91 Va. 322, 21 S. E. 483. The objections taken will be found to include general ones and also features of particular statutes. The statute forbidding the counting of a ballot not officially stamped and marked with the initials of a judge of election is in conflict with the constitutional provision that all persons duly qualified are entitled to vote and that all elections shall be by ballot; Moyer v. Van De Vanter, 12 Wash. St. 377, 41 Pac. 60, 29 L. R. A. 670; 50 Am. St. Rep. 900. In Illinois the new ballot law was held to have repealed all other laws respecting voting on municipal affairs and ballots; Union County v. Ussery, 147 Ill. 204, 35 N. E. 618; but it is held to apply only to the election of officers and not to special elections to determine other matters, in Wisconsin; State v. City of Janesville, 90 Wis. 157, 62 N. W. 933; and Pennsylvania; Evans v. Willistown Township, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 395. A statutory provision that a local option election shall be conducted according to the rules provided for general elections requires that it shall be by ballot, where the constitution requires general elections to be so conducted; State v. Board of Canvassers, 78 S. C. 461, 59 S. E. 145, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850, 13 Ann. Cas. 1133.

Questions as to the regularity of nomination papers under the Australian ballot system are usually settled by the courts either under express statutory provisions or under their general jurisdiction when applicable. A number of such questions decided in reference to the then pending election are reported in Tilbrook's and Semmen's Nominations, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 660; Hendley v. Reeder, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 677.

Where conflicting nominations have each certain claims to superiority, if technical rules only are applied, the court will give weight to the fact that one candidate carried the district by a decisive majority. The desire of the court in such cases is to reach what is substantial; Tilbrook's and Semmen's Nominations, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 660. If, under the rules of the party, the county committee has power to fill vacancies and did not act, but only certain members of it residing within the representative district, such action is a clear violation of the party rules and the nomination by such irregular body is void; Stucker's Nomination, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 660. Where congressional conferees from one county of a congressional district were appointed in violation of the party rules, the conference in which they took part was not a regular body, and the nomination made by it was void; Klugh's Nomination, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 661. Nominations attended by fraud and the exercise of arbitrary power will not be upheld by the courts. A minority of delegates cannot nominate, and a faction may not arbitrarily select their meeting-place in defiance of a clear majority of the ward executive committee; Saunders' and Roberts' Nominations, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 661. Where persons who are not delegates are permitted upon the floor of a convention and the evidence justifies the conclusion that their presence was not harmless, the nomination is invalid; Boger's and Sterr's, Laubach's and Hessler's Nominations, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 662. A nomination paper which attempts to name presidential electors, representatives at large in congress, and other state officers, as well as candidates for separate congressional, senatorial, and representative districts, by a single paper is bad; Crow Anti-Combine Party Nomination Paper, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 665. A court will, not, however, in the exercise of its equitable powers, enjoin the printing of a certain column on the official ballot on a mere allegation that the nomination papers are defective, false, and fraudulent. Proof of such allegation must be made before the court will find it so as a fact; Hendley v. Reeder, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 677. Where an adequate remedy exists and a sufficient opportunity has been given to present to the court objections to a nomination paper, the court will not intervene by injunction in relief of a complainant who has failed to avail himself of such a remedy; Cassin v. Reeder, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 681.

Whenever an official ballot is provided for by statute the secretary of state will not decide which of two rival conventions of the same organization is the regular one, but all such nominations should be certified and left to the voters for their decision; State v. Allen, 43 Neb. 651, 62 N. W. 35; People v. District Court, 18 Colo. 26, 31 Pac. 339; Shields v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 164, 50 N. W. 105, 13 L. R. A. 760; Matter of Redmond, 5 Misc. 369, 25 N. Y. Supp. 381; nominations by a bolting convention are invalid; In re Nomination of Gibbons, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 194; in case of a tie vote in a nominating convention neither the candidates nor the election officers can determine the result by lot; Beck v. Board of Election Com'rs, 103 Mich. 192, 61 N. W. 346. Where the People's Independent party had been generally known as the "Populist Party," that name could not be adopted by a new political organization; Porter v. Flick, 60 Neb. 773, 84 N. W. 262.

The offence of falsely making or signing a nomination certificate must be charged in the words of the statute, being unknown at common law, and the want of criminal intent is no defence, and the voter must sign in person, or be present, and request it to be done; Com. v. Connelly, 163 Mass. 539, 40 N. E. 862.

As to defects in statement of names of candidates in nomination papers, see L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 596; L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 273; 12 id. 257; they are not invalidated by ordinary abbreviations of names; 10 N. S. Wales L. R. 59.

Provisions as to filling vacancies are not always mandatory, and after a fair election, an irregularity will not be permitted to invalidate it; Stackpole v. Hallahan, 16 Mont. 40, 40 Pac. 80, 28 L. R. A. 502.

For the form of ballots prescribed in a number of states, see Talcott v. Philbrick, 59 Conn. 472, 20 Atl. 436, 10 L. R. A. 150. For inserting names under the Australian ballot law in the official ballot, not legally entitled to insertion, see Bowers v. Smith, 35 Cent. L. J. 305.

Courts will not interfere with the discretion of the officer charged with the preparation of the official ballot, as to details; Woods v. State, 44 Neb. 430, 63 N. W. 23.

Prohibiting the printing of the name of a candidate in more than one column is constitutional; Todd v. Election Com'rs, 104 Mich. 474, 480, 62 N. W. 564, 64 N. W. 496, 29 L. R. A. 330; but where the act provides that names shall be grouped by parties, a candidate named by more than one party is entitled to have his name appear in the column of each; Williams v. Dalrymple, 132 Mo. 62, 33 S. W. 447; contra, Sawin v. Pease, 6 Wyo. 91, 42 Pac. 750.

A construction which makes the error of a single official disfranchise large bodies of voters must be avoided if the language is susceptible of any other; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 101, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491; and where, by the negligence of the officer, the name of a candidate and of the office is omitted from the ballot, the voter may write them, and his vote will be valid; People v. President, etc., of Wappingers Falls, 144 N. Y. 616, 39 N. E. 641.

The provision requiring the voter to make a cross with a stamp opposite each name voted for is mandatory; Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 661, 38 Pac. 447; Sego v. Stoddard, 136 Ind. 297, 36 N. E. 204, 22 L. R. A. 468; Curran v. Clayton, 86 Me. 42, 29 Atl. 930; Parvin v. Wimborg, 130 Ind. 561, 30 N. E. 790, 15 L. R. A. 775, 30 Am. St. Rep. 254; but in other states the courts are disposed to be more liberal and permit marking outside of the square if to the right of the name; In re Vote Marks, 17 R. I. 812, 21 Atl. 962; Weidknecht v. Hawk, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 41; Contested Election for Mayor of City of York, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 205; Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101, 41 Pac. 454, 29 L. R. A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68; Lynip v. Buckner, 22 Nev. 426, 41 Pac. 762, 30 L. R. A. 354; Vallier v. Brakke, 7 S. D. 343, 64 N. W. 180, 186; Parker v. Orr, 158 Ill. 609, 41 N. E. 1002, 30 L. R. A. 227; Houston v. Steele, 98 Ky. 596, 34 S. W. 6 (in which cases the subject of marks is fully considered). A provision for marking with ink is directory only, and pencil will answer; State v. Russell, 34 Neb. 116, 51 N. W. 465, 15 L. R. A. 740, 33 Am. St. Rep. 625; a blanket paster is not legal in Pennsylvania, but a single sticker may be used; Little Beaver Tp. School Directors' Election, 165 Pa. 233, 30 Atl. 955, 27 L. R. A. 234. As to what distinguishing marks on ballots will vitiate them see Parker v. Orr, 158 Ill. 609, 41 N. E. 1002, 30 L. R. A. 227; Zeis v. Passwater, 142 Ind. 375, 41 N. E. 796; Rutledge v. Crawford, 91 Cal. 526, 27 Pac. 779, 13 L. R. A. 761, 25 Am. St. Rep. 212; People v. Board of County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 29 N. E. 327, 14 L. R. A. 624; Hanscom v. State, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 638, 31 S. W. 547; and where by mistake "spoiled ballots" were counted the result was not thereby ascertained and the returns of the county clerk were prima facie evidence which should be considered by the court; Hendee v. Hayden, 42 Neb. 760, 60 N. W. 1034; voters are not confined to the names on the official ballot but may write other names thereon; Sanner v. Patton, 155 Ill. 553, 40 N. E. 290; signing a ballot invalidates it; Parker v. Orr, 158 Ill. 609, 41 N. E. 1002, 30 L. R. A. 227. The failure of a voter to retire to the booth to mark the ballot does not make the marking illegal if not wilful; Hall v. Schoenecke, 128 Mo. 661, 31 S. W. 97. In Michigan the supreme court have with much detail considered this subject and enumerate seven methods of marking which are defective by reason of their being in effect distinguishing marks; Attorney-General v. Glaser, 102 Mich. 396, 61 N. W. 648, 64 N. W. 828.

The provision that an officer or person designated by law may assist a voter physically or educationally unable to vote should be liberally construed; Pearson v. Board of Supervisors, 91 Va. 322, 21 S. E. 483; the voter is the sole judge of his disability; Beaver County Elections, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 227; contra, under the same statute; Election Instructions, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 1; the disability must be one contemplated by the statute and not drunkenness or ignorance; id.; nor that he left his glasses at home; State v. Gay, 59 Minn. 6, 60 N. W. 676, 50 Am. St. Rep. 389; a ballot is good if the voter asks assistance though he can read; Montgomery v. Oldham, 143 Ind. 34, 42 N. E. 474; where the voter is required to make oath, this is mandatory, and failure to take it invalidates the vote; Attorney-General v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 58 N. W. 483, 25 L. R. A. 325; but if no form of oath is prescribed any sufficient form of words will suffice; State v. Gay, 59 Minn. 6, 60 N. W. 676, 50 Am. St. Rep. 389; if the statute does not restrict the voter's choice of an assistant the election officers cannot do so; Beaver County Elections, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 227; but when the statute designates a particular officer, it is mandatory; Pearson v. Board of Supervisors, 91 Va. 322, 21 S. E. 483; and irregularities in the services of the voter's assistant, as having one where two were required, or if the assistant had received money from a candidate, will not invalidate the vote; Hanscom v. State, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 638, 31 S. W. 547; if the assistant prepares a ballot contrary to the direction of the voter, if fraudulently done, it will avoid the vote, but if it does not appear whether it was fraud of the assistant or mistake of the voter it will not be rejected; id.

When an interpreter was permitted by law but not asked for, the presence of one inside the railing, conversing with voters was held to vitiate the election; Attorney-General v. Stillson, 108 Mich. 419, 66 N. W. 388.

Irregularities in taking the ballot must be gross to defeat the election; L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 739; 7 Can. S. C. 247. When the statute declares a certain irregularity fatal courts will give effect to it, otherwise they will ignore such innocent irregularities as are free from fraud and have not interfered with a fair expression of the voter's will; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 101, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491.

Irregularities which have been held harmless, are: Where there were two voting places in a precinct entitled to one; Wildman v. Anderson, 17 Kan. 347; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 101, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491; where ballots were received by officers near a house appointed whose owner refused to permit its use; Preston v. Culbertson, 58 Cal. 198; errors or irregularities in printing; Allen v. Glynn, 17 Colo. 338, 29 Pac. 670, 15 L. R. A. 743, 31 Am. St. Rep. 304; Miller v. Pennoyer, 23 Or. 364, 31 Pac. 830; ballots improperly prepared by the officers and not "marked" ballots may be counted; People v. Wood, 148 N. Y. 142, 42 N. E. 536.

When candidates and voters have participated in an election and acquiesced in the result failure to give notice may be disregarded; Adsit v. Board of State Canvassers, 84 Mich. 420, 48 N. W. 31, 11 L. R. A. 534; and other irregularities may be so far acquiesced in by the defeated candidate that he will be disqualified to complain; L. R. 1 Q. B. 433; Allen v. Glynn, 17 Colo. 338, 29 Pac. 670, 15 L. R. A. 743, 31 Am. St. Rep. 304.

Contested Elections. At common law the right to an office was tried by a writ of quo warranto; in modern practice, an information in the nature of quo warranto is usual in the absence of a statute; McCrary, Elect. 196. See 3 Bla. Com. 263; 2 Jurist N. S. 114. An act for trying contested elections without a jury is not unconstitutional; Ewing v. Filley, 43 Pa. 389. An act providing for the appointment of an election commission with power over contests, by the legislature, is an invasion of the executive power and unconstitutional; Pratt v. Breckinridge, 112 Ky. 1, 65 S. W. 136, 66 S. W. 405. As to whether the declarations not under oath of illegal voters is evidence as to the votes cast by them, is doubtful, see State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 319; 1 Bartl. 19, 230; Gilleland v. Schuyler, 9 Kan. 569; People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 84 Am. Dec. 242. The ordinary rules of evidence apply to election cases; McCrary, Elect. 231; Paine, Elect. 824. A legal voter may refuse to testify for whom he voted, but he may waive this privilege; Kzeass' Case, 2 Pars. (Pa.) 580. It is competent for witnesses to testify that they were under age at the time of voting, and that their votes were cast for the candidate receiving the largest number; Crabb v. Orth, 133 Ind. 11, 32 N. E. 711. A voter who participates in an election which is not secret, although required by statute to be by ballot, does not waive his right to contest the result, as such waiver would be contrary to public policy; State v. Board of Canvassers, 78 S. C. 461, 59 S. E. 145, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850, 13 Ann. Cas. 1133.

In all contested elections, the tribunal will look beyond the certificate of the returning board; People v. Vail, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 12. See State v. Townsley, 56 Mo. 107.

In purging the poll of illegal votes, unless it be shown for whom the illegal votes were cast, they will be deducted from the total vote; In re Contested Elections of 1868, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 128.

Where the laws have been entirely disregarded by the election officers and the returns are utterly unworthy of credit, the entire poll will be thrown out, but legal votes, having been properly proved, may be counted; Bright. Elect. Cas. 493. "Nothing short of the impossibility of determining for whom the majority of votes were given ought to vacate an election;" Cl. & H. 504.

Where another than the person returned as elected is found to have received the highest number of legal votes given, he is entitled to the office; Varney v. Justice, 86 Ky. 596, 6 S. W. 457.

Primary Elections. After an election, the right of successful candidates to their offices is not affected by the unconstitutionality of the primary act under which they were nominated; People v. Strassheim, 240 Ill. 279, 88 N. E. 821, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135; such an act may not curtail, subvert or add to the constitutional qualifications of voters; id. Primary elections may be provided by statute for political parties which cast at least 10 per cent. of the vote at the last general election, and such statute does not deprive any person of the equal protection of the laws; State v. Felton, 77 Ohio St. 554, 84 N. E. 85, 12 Ann. Cas. 65. They are not within the meaning of a statute permitting the use of voting machines at all state, etc., elections, Line v. Board of Election Canvassers, 154 Mich. 329, 117 N. W. 730, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, 16 Ann. Cas. 248.

A law requiring the payment of a fee as a condition precedent to having a candidate's name printed on the official primary election ballot, except as may be reasonable for the services of an auditor for filing petition, is unconstitutional; Johnson v. Grand Forks County, 16 N. D. 363, 113 N. W. 1071, 125 Am. St. Rep. 662.

In 1868, jurisdiction over contested elections to the House of Commons was transferred to the Court of Common Pleas and is now vested in the High Court of Justice, the cases being heard by two judges. Their decision is certified to the Speaker of the House.

ELECTION OF RIGHTS OR REMEDIES.

The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. 2 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 1075.

A choice shown by an overt act between two inconsistent rights, either of which may be asserted at the will of the chooser alone. Bierce v. Hutchins, 205 U. S. 346, 27 Sup. Ct. 524, 51 L. Ed. 828.

Etymologically, election denotes choice, selection out of the number of those choosing. Thus, the election of a governor would be the choice of some individual from the body of the electors to perform the duties of governor. In common use, however, it has come to denote such a selection made by a distinctly defined body—as a board of aldermen, a corporation, or state—conducted in such a manner that each individual of the body choosing shall have an equal voice in the choice, but without regard to the question whether the person to be chosen is a member of the body or not. The word occurs in law frequently in such a sense, especially in governmental law and the law of corporations.

But the term has also acquired a more technical signification, in which it is oftener used as a legal term, which is substantially the choice of one of two rights or things, to each one of which the party choosing has equal right, but both of which he cannot have. This option occurs in fewer instances at law than in equity, and is in the former branch, in general, a question of practice.

At Law. In contracts, when a debtor is obliged in an alternative obligation to do one of two things, as to pay one hundred dollars or deliver one hundred bushels of wheat, he has the choice to do one or the other until the time of payment; he has not the choice, however, to pay a part in each. Pothier, Obl. part 2, c. 3, art. 6, no. 247; Smith v. Sanborn, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 59. Or, if a man sell or agree to deliver one of two articles, as a horse or an ox, he has the election till the time of delivery,—it being a rule that, "in case an election be given of two several things, always he which is the first agent, and which ought to do the first act, shall have the election;" Co. Litt. 145 a; McNitt v. Clark, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 465; Fleming v. Harrison's Devisees, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 171, 4 Am. Dec. 691. On the failure of the person who has the right to make his election in proper time, the right passes to the opposite party; Co. Litt. 145 a; Reid v. Smith, 1 Des. Ch. (S. C.) 460; Overbach v. Heermance, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 337, 14 Am. Dec. 546; Waggoner v. Cox, 40 Ohio St. 539; Corbin v. Fairbanks Co., 56 Vt. 538; Husson v. Oppenheimer, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 306; Marlor v. R. Co., 21 Fed. 383.

When one party renounces a contract the other party may elect to rescind at once, except so far as to sue upon it and recover for the breach, and he may immediately bring an action, without waiting for the time of performance to arrive or elapse (in such case he cannot treat the contract as subsisting for any other purpose); L. R. 7 Exch. 114; L. R. 16 Q. B. 460; Hocking v. Hamilton, 158 Pa. 107, 27 Atl. 836; Lovell v. Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 264, 4 Sup. Ct. 390, 28 L. Ed. 423; Dingley v. Oler, 11 Fed. 372; contra, as to a contract for the sale of land, Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384. See the cases collected, Ans. Cont. (8th ed.) 355, n. 1. It is a maxim of law that, an election once made and pleaded, the party is concluded; electio semel facta et placitum testatum non patitur regressum; Co. Litt. 146; Lawrence v. Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 241.

But an action for enforcing the benefits due under a contract conveying property in consideration of support does not preclude an action to rescind on subsequent breaches;

Gall v. Gall, 126 Wis. 390, 105 N. W. 953, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

In many cases of voidable contracts there is a right of election to affirm or disavow them, after the termination of the disability, the existence of which makes this contract voidable. So all contracts of an infant, except for necessities, may be avoided by him within a reasonable time after he comes of age, but they are voidable only, and he must elect not to be bound by them; Heath v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 251; Philpot v. Mfg. Co., 18 Neb. 54, 24 N. W. 428. See Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 300, 26 L. Ed. 87. And bringing suit is an election to rescind; Eaton v. Hill, 50 N. H. 235, 9 Am. Rep. 189; Pakas v. Racy, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 227. See INFANT.

Whenever, by law or contract, a party has laid before him a variety of steps, the taking of one of which excludes another, or the rest, he must choose between them. After his choice is made, and by words or acts expressed in a manner suited to the particular case, he cannot reverse it; he is said to have elected the one step, and waived the other; Bish. Cont. § 808.

Other cases in law arise; as in case of a person holding land by two inconsistent titles; 1 Jenk. Cent. Cas. 27; dower in a piece of land and that piece for which it was exchanged; 3 Leon 271. See Sugd. Pow. 498.

In Equity. A choice which a party is compelled to make between the acceptance of a benefit under a written instrument, and the retention of some property already his own, which is attempted to be disposed of, in favor of a third party, by virtue of the same paper. The doctrine of election pre-supposes a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party who has a right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other; 1 Swanst. 394; 3 Woodd. Lect. 491; 2 Rop. Leg. 480; Snell, Pr. Eq. 237.

The doctrine of election rests upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, and means, as the term is ordinarily used, that where two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims are presented to the choice of a party, by a person who manifests the clear intention that he should not enjoy both, then he must accept or reject one or the other; and so, in other words, that one cannot take a benefit under an instrument and then repudiate it; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 695, 10 Sup. Ct. 354, 33 L. Ed. 696.

Where an express and positive election is required, there is no claim, either at law or in equity, to but one of the objects between which election is to be made; but in many cases there is apparent, from the whole of an instrument, the intention that the party to be benefited shall be benefited on certain conditions. In such cases, equity will require the party to elect; Bisph. Eq. sec. 295.

Where a testator gives money or land to A, and by the same will gives something of A's to B, A must elect either to give effect to the will by allowing B to have the property which the testator intended should go to him, or if he chooses to disregard the will and retain his own property, he must make good the value of the gift to the disappointed beneficiary; Bisph. Eq. sec. 295. This doctrine is principally applied to cases of wills; but it is applicable also to voluntary deeds, to contracts for value resting upon articles, and to contracts completely executed by conveyance and assignment. This is a case of implied election. An express election is where a condition is annexed to a gift, a compliance with which is distinctly made one of the terms by which alone the gift can be enjoyed. In a case of express condition the result of a non-compliance is a forfeiture; whereas in elections growing out of an implied duty, the person who declines to make good the gift does not absolutely lose the benefit which is bestowed upon him, but is compelled only to give up so much of it as will amount to compensation for the disappointed beneficiary; Bisph. Eq. sec. 296.

Where a testator purports to give property to A which in fact belongs to B, and at the same time out of his own property confers benefits on B, the literal construction and application of the will would allow B to keep his property to the disappointment of A and also to take the benefits given him by the will. In such circumstances, however, B is not allowed to take the full benefit given him by the will unless he is prepared to carry into effect the whole of the testator's dispositions; 1 Swan. 359, 394. If he elects to take under the will, he is bound and may be ordered to convey his own property to A; 1 Ves. 514; 1 Swan. 409, 420. If he elects to take against the will and keep his own property, and disappoints A, then he cannot take any benefits under the will without compensating A to the extent of the value of the property as to which A is disappointed; 5 Ch. D. 163; 4 Bro. C. C. 21.

The question whether an election is required occurs most frequently in case of devises; "because deeds being generally matters of contract, the contract is not to be interpreted otherwise than as the consideration which is expressed requires;" L. R. 8 Ch. 578; but it extends to deeds; 1 Swanst. 400; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1075, n.; and it has been held to apply to "voluntary deeds, to cases of contracts for valuable consideration resting in articles, to contracts for value completely executed by conveyance and assignments"; L. R. 8 Ch. 578, where the authorities are collected. The doctrine also applies to powers of appointment; L. R. 9 Eq. 519; 22 Ch. D. 555; 34 id. 160.

In the case, not strictly of election, but often so treated, of two distinct gifts of a testator's own property, one onerous and the other not, it is the general rule that the donee may take one and reject the other, unless it appear that it was the testator's intention that the option should not exist; 22 Ch. D. 573, 577; and where a gift is made by a deed of which the consideration is partly invalid by reason of the disability of the parties, the parts of the deed are read together and the burden is treated as the consideration for the benefit; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 263. Where a married woman made a valid appointment by will to her husband under a power, and also bequeathed personal property (not her separate estate) to another person to which the power did not extend, the husband was not put to his election, but took both under the power and jure mariti, as to the property ineffectually bequeathed; 9 Ves. 369.

There must be a clear intention by the testator to give that which is not his property; Scott v. Depeyster, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 532; L. R. 7 Eq. 291. And if the testator has some interest in the thing disposed, the presumption that he intended to dispose only of his interest must be overruled in order to make a case of election; 6 Dow. 149, 179; 1 Ves. 515; and evidence is not admissible to enlarge the devise so as to include property belonging to another; McDonald v. Shaw, 92 Ark. 15, 121 S. W. 935, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657.

The intention of the testator to put the devisee to his election must appear from the will itself; McDonald v. Shaw, 92 Ark. 15, 121 S. W. 935, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657; but surrounding circumstances may be shown by parol; Fitzhugh v. Hubbard, 41 Ark. 64; 30 Beav. 14. The time in which election may be exercised must be reasonable; 30 Beav. 235; Cooper v. Cooper's Ex'r, 77 Va. 198; 19 Ves. 663; Reaves v. Garrett's Adm'r, 34 Ala. 558; U. S. v. Duncan, 4 McLean 99, Fed. Cas. No. 15,002.

The doctrine applies to every species of property or interest, whether the donor does or does not know of his right to dispose of it; Wats. Comp. Eq. 177; cases of transactions involving property of the wife; 23 Beav. 457; Gregory v. Gates, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 83; satisfaction of dower; Fuller v. Yates, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 325; 2 Sch. & L. 452; 14 Sim. 258. The doctrine does not apply to creditors; 12 Ves. 354.

As to the right or duty of election by persons under disability, there is much apparent confusion in the cases both as to theory and practice. Story states the rule generally that married women, infants, and lunatics are not bound by election; 2 Eq. Jur. § 1097. The statement would seem too broad even before the great changes made in all matters affecting the property rights and powers of married women by recent legislation, and before the changes characterized as a "brand new invention of equity not fifty years old, and made exclusively for the benefit of married women under the old law—a breed which is rapidly becoming extinct;" Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 257. This writer considers the old and true doctrine of election to apply only to the acceptance of gifts under an instrument made by another, while the new doctrine involves the confirmation or repudiation of voidable instruments made by the person electing, who, in the cases referred to, is always a married woman. The rule, so far as there is one, has been stated thus:—Parties competent to make an election must usually be sui juris, but election may sometimes be made by a court of equity on behalf of infants and married women; Bisph. Eq. § 304; but this is really no rule and probably none can be exactly defined; the cases must be resorted to, and a large measure of judicial discretion has been exercised in dealing with them as they arose. In some it is held that a married woman may be permitted to elect; 4 Kay & J. 409; Van Steenwyck v. Washburn, 59 Wis. 483, 17 N. W. 289, 48 Am. Rep. 532; Kennedy v. Johnston, 65 Pa. 451, 3 Am. Rep. 650; in others that she cannot; 3 Myl. & Cr. 171; Lord Cairns in L. R. 7 H. L. 67; 9 Ch. D. 363; but it may be referred to a master to inquire what is best for her; 2 Ves. 60; L. R. 7 H. L. 67 (but in this case there were also infants). It was held by Lord Hatherly that she must elect; in 2 J. & H. 344 (which Brett says "led to the new departure"); followed in 28 Ch. D. 124; contra; by Sir George Jessel in 18 Ch. D. 531; followed by Chitty, L. J., in 27 Ch. D. 606. The decisions of Lord Hatherly and Sir George Jessel were referred to without disapproval by Lord Selborne, one in L. R. 8 Ch. 578, and the other in 8 App. Cas. 420. Finally in 31 Ch. D. 275, (reversing 28 Ch. Div. 124,) it was held that the wife would not be compelled to elect, but was entitled to retain both funds, on the ground that the settled fund had a restraint on anticipation. This case reviews the conflicting decisions and considers that they leave the question to be determined on principle. It is treated as deciding that but for the fact on which the case was put it was one for election; Snell, Pr. Eq. 247; and it assumed without discussion that election applied to married women, and thereby as Brett considers "sealed the triumph of the new election"; Lead. Cas. Mod. Eq. 257.

With regard to infants, the practice has varied very much, and the cases are collected in 1 Swanst. 413, note (c). The infant has been permitted to elect after coming of age in some cases; cas. t. Talbot 176; id. 130; 3 Bro. P. C. 173; in others an inquiry has been directed; 2 Sch. & Lef. 266; and this may be considered the usual practice; 1 Bro. P. C. 300; though the court has elected for them without reference; 26 L. J. N. S. Ch. 148; Addison v. Bowie, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 606; and the same practice is adopted when the persons to elect are unborn; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 260. See, generally, on this subject, Serrell, Equit. Doct. Elect. 184.

Persons not under disabilities are bound to elect; Prentice v. Janssen, 79 N. Y. 478. Positive acts of acceptance or renunciation are not indispensable, but the question is to be determined from the circumstances of each case as it arises; 21 Beav. 447; 1 McCl. 541; Tiernan v. Roland, 15 Pa. 429. And the election need not be made till all the circumstances are known; 2 V. & B. 222; 1 McCl. & Y. 560. See, generally, 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1075; 1 Swanst. 402, note; 2 Rep. Leg. 480; Bisph. Eq. 295.

A widow has a right, regulated by statute in the several states, to declare her election between the provisions in her favor under the will of her husband and her right of dower. When bound to elect she is entitled to full information and ascertainment of the values of the two interests, and she may file a bill in equity to obtain them; 2 Scribn. Dow. 497, and cases cited at large in note 1. The right must be exercised by the widow herself, being purely personal; Sherman v. Newton, 6 Gray (Mass.) 307; Hinton v. Hinton, 28 N. C. 274; and the rule is not subject to exception even if she is insane; Lewis v. Lewis, 29 N. C. 72; Collins v. Carman, 5 Md. 503. After the widow's death within forty days without election, her representatives could not make a renunciation of the will; Boone's Representatives v. Boone, 3 Har. & McH. (Md.) 95; Millikin v. Welliver, 37 Ohio St. 460; Eltzroth v. Binford, 71 Ind. 455; Appeal of Crozier, 90 Pa. 384, 35 Am. Rep. 666; and the right to a legacy in her favor vests in her executor; Flynn v. McDermott, 183 N. Y. 62, 75 N. E. 931, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 959, 110 Am. St. Rep. 687, 5 Ann. Cas. 81; and attacking a will on the ground of lack of testamentary capacity is not an election by the widow; id. For the statutory provisions on the subject see 2 Scribn. Dow. 505, notes.

There must be an intention to elect and knowledge of her rights so as to constitute a deliberate choice; Bradford v. Kent, 43 Pa. 474; and an election made under a mistake does not conclude her; 1 Bro. C. C. 445; 12 Ves. Jr. 136; Snelgrove v. Snelgrove, 4 Dessaus. (S. C.) 274; but if she is acquainted with the material facts the election will bind her even though she do not understand her legal rights; Light v. Light, 21 Pa. 407. But see McDaniel v. Douglas, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 220; Davis v. Davis, 11 Ohio St. 386. Nor is she concluded by an election procured by fraud; Smart v. Waterhouse, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 94; Morrison v. Morrison's Widow, 2 Dana (Ky.) 13. In some cases an election is implied, but so much difficulty is found to exist with respect to what constitutes an implied election that it will generally remain to be determined by the circumstances of each case. See 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 537, 570, and cases cited; Blunt v. Gee, 5 Call (Va.) 481; Upshaw v. Upshaw, 2 Hen. & Mun. (Va.) 381, 3 Am. Dec. 632; Reed v. Dickerman, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 146; Bradford v. Kent, 43 Pa. 474; Thompson's Lessee v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 480; Craig's Heirs v. Walthall, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 518. A widow's administrator cannot sell land originally belonging to her, where her husband by his will dealt with it as his, and she for nine years had elected to take under his will; Hoggard v. Jordan, 140 N. C. 610, 53 S. E. 220, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1065, 6 Ann. Cas. 332.

In many states, if deprived of the provision given in lieu of dower, the widow is entitled to demand her dower; 2 Scribn. Dow. 525; Thompson v. Egbert, 17 N. J. L. 459; if the deprivation be substantial though not total; Hastings v. Clifford, 32 Me. 132; or if a previous application for dower has been refused; Thompson v. McGaw, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 66; or the statutory period for demand has passed before she was advised of the failure of her provision; Hastings v. Clifford, 32 Me. 132; or she had previously elected to take under the will; Hone's Ex'rs v. Van Schaick, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 564. In taking a testamentary provision in lieu of dower the widow becomes a purchaser for a valuable consideration; 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 511, 570; 2 Scribn. Dow. 527; Warren v. Morris, 4 Del. Ch. 289.

In cases not covered by statute a widow may be required to elect upon general equitable principles. In the case last cited, she being also a legatee of one-third of the estate "according to law," was held to be put to her election, not under the statute but under the general doctrine of equity which is thus stated by Bates, Ch. "This doctrine precludes a party taking a benefit by deed or will from asserting any title or claim clearly inconsistent with the provisions of the instrument under which he takes—putting him to his election between the two. In its application to dower it is nowhere better stated than by our court of appeals in Kinsey v. Woodward, 3 Harr. (Del.) 464. 'In regard to dower it seems from all the cases to be an established rule that a court of equity will not compel the widow to make her election, unless it be shown by the express words of the testator, that the devise or bequest was given in lieu of satisfaction of dower; or unless it appears that such was the testator's intention, by clear and manifest implication arising from the fact that the dower is plainly inconsistent with the devise or bequest, and so repugnant to the will as to defeat its provisions. If both claims can stand consistently together, the widow is entitled to both, although the claim under the will may be much greater in value than her dower.'" 2 S. & L. 451; 3 Ves. Jr. 249; 1 Drew. 411; Dru. & War. 107; 3 Kay & J. 257; Adsit v. Adsit, 2 John. Ch. (N. Y.) 461, 7 Am. Dec. 539.

If a beneficiary elects to take against the will, the amount of compensation to be paid to a disappointed legatee must be ascertained as of the time of testator's death, and not the date of election; [1905] 1 Ch. 16.

Of Remedies. A choice between two or more means of redress for an injury or the punishment of a crime allowed by law.

The selection of one of several forms of action allowed by law.

The choice of remedies is a matter demanding practical judgment of what will, upon the whole, best secure the end to be attained. Thus, a remedy may be furnished by law or equity, and at law, in a variety of actions resembling each other in some particulars. Actually, however, the choice is greatly narrowed by statutory regulations in modern law, in most cases. See 1 Chit. Pl. 207-214.

Where a party has two inconsistent remedies, and brings suit on one with knowledge of the facts and his rights therein, he cannot thereafter sue on the other; A. Klipstein & Co. v. Grant, 141 Fed. 72, 72 C. C. A. 511. But it is held that where a wrong has been inflicted, and the party is doubtful which of two inconsistent remedies is the right one, he may pursue both until he recovers through one; Rankin v. Tygard, 198 Fed. 795. Supreme Court Equity Rule 25 provides that relief in a bill may be sought in alternative forms.

A person may often choose whether he will sue in tort or contract. If his goods are taken from him by fraud he may sue for the price in assumpsit, or bring an action of replevin or trover; Pike v. Bright, 29 Ala. 332; Watson v. Stever, 25 Mich. 386; Hudson v. Gilliland, 25 Ark. 100; Roberts v. Evans, 43 Cal. 380; Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277; Rogers v. Inhabitants of Greenbush, 57 Me. 441. But where a principal had recovered from a fraudulent agent for money had and received, it was held he could later sue the third party who had bought from the agent, in conversion; [1900] 1 K. B. 54; criticized in 16 L. Q. Rev. 160. And when two actions are pending at law or in equity between the same persons and for the same subject-matter, the plaintiff is usually compelled to elect which one he will maintain; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. R. Co., 32 N. J. Eq. 67; Hause v. Hause, 29 Minn. 252, 13 N. W. 43; McRae v. Singleton, 35 Ala. 297. But an election is not usually compelled between domestic and foreign suits; In re Bininger, 7 Blatchf. 159, Fed. Cas. No. 1,417; Wood v. Lake, 13 Wis. 94; and a foreclosure of a mortgage and a suit on the bond or note secured by it as well as actions to enforce admiralty liens and at the same time recover on the debt are also exceptions; Morgan v. Sherwood, 53 Ill. 171; Russell v. Alvarez, 5 Cal. 48; The Kalorama, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 204, 19 L. Ed. 941; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 199, 23 L. Ed. 829.

It may be laid down as a general rule that when a statute prescribes a new remedy the plaintiff has his election either to adopt such remedy or proceed at common law. Such statutory remedy is cumulative, unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication takes away the common-law remedy; Miles v. O'Hara, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 32; Booker's Ex'rs v. McRoberts, 1 Call (Va.) 243; Bear-Camp-River Co. v. Woodman, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 404; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Howard, 6

Har. & J. (Md.) 383; Coxe v. Robbins, 9 N. J. L. 384.

The commencement and trial of an action on a contract is not such an election of remedies as would estop plaintiff from suing on the notes; Fifield v. Edwards, 39 Mich. 267; Kingsbury v. Kettle, 90 Mich. 476, 51 N. W. 541.

Where a plaintiff has separate and concurrent remedies against a number of parties, he loses no rights by suing some and afterwards discontinuing his action; Bishop v. McGillis, 82 Wis. 120, 51 N. W. 1075. See Russell v. McCall, 141 N. Y. 437, 36 N. E. 498, 38 Am. St. Rep. 807. An unsatisfied judgment on a note will not bar an action on notes taken as collateral security; Black v. Reno, 59 Fed. 917.

By joining his wife in a suit for her legacy, a husband exercises his election to treat it as joint property; Wingate v. Parsons, 4 Del. Ch. 117.

After a suit in replevin has been discontinued before judgment without obtaining any benefit, because plaintiff has paid the value of the goods to satisfy his replevin bond, this suit does not constitute such an election of remedy as to stop him from claiming payment of the purchase price out of the assets of the purchaser's estate; Bolton Mines Co. v. Stokes, 82 Md. 50, 33 Atl. 491, 31 L. R. A. 789. Bringing trover for possession of goods by mistake will not preclude a subsequent action of assumpsit for their purchase price; Clark v. Heath, 101 Me. 530, 64 Atl. 913, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 144.

In Criminal Law. The choice or determination by a prosecuting officer, upon which of several charges, or counts, in an indictment he will proceed to trial.

No objection can be raised, either on demurrer or in arrest of judgment, though the defendant or defendants be charged in different counts of an indictment with different offences of the same kind. Indeed, on the face of the record, every count purports to be for a separate offence, and in misdemeanors it is the daily practice to receive evidence of several libels, several assaults, several acts of fraud, and the like, upon the same indictment. In cases of felony, the courts, in the exercise of a sound discretion, are accustomed to quash indictments containing several distinct charges, when it appears, before the defendant has pleaded and the jury are charged, that the inquiry is to include several crimes. When this circumstance is discovered during the progress of the trial, the prosecutor is usually called upon to select one felony, and to confine himself to that, unless the offences, though in law distinct, seem to constitute in fact but parts of one continuous transaction. Thus, if a prisoner is charged with receiving several articles, knowing them to have been stolen, and it is proved that they were received at separate times, the prosecutor may be put to his election; but if it is possible that all the goods may have been received at one time, he cannot be compelled to abandon any part of his accusation: 1 Mood. 146; 2 Mood. & R. 524. In another case, the defendant was charged in a single count with uttering twenty-two forged receipts, which were severally set out and purported to be signed by different persons, with intent to defraud the king. His counsel contended that the prosecutor ought to elect upon which of these receipts he would proceed, as amidst such a variety it would be almost impossible for the prisoner to conduct his defence. As, however, the indictment alleged that they were all uttered at one and the same time, and the proof corresponded with this allegation, the court refused to interfere: and all the judges subsequently held that a proper discretion had been exercised; 2 Leach 877; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 934. See 11 Cl. & F. 155; Harman v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 69; Burk v. State, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 426; People v. Rynders, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 426; Com. v. Bennett, 118 Mass. 443; Van Sickel v. People, 29 Mich. 61; State v. Mallon, 75 Mo. 355.

The state need not elect on which count of an indictment it will proceed to trial, where the several counts relate to the same transaction; State v. Houx, 109 Mo. 654, 19 S. W. 35, 32 Am. St. Rep. 686.

The artificial distinction between felonies and misdemeanors is, in most jurisdictions, obsolete, and in most states several distinct offences to which a similar punishment is attached may be joined. It usually rests with the court whether it will compel a prosecuting officer to elect which count to proceed on; State v. Hood, 51 Me. 363; Com. v. Sullivan, 104 Mass. 552; Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 571; State v. Green, 66 Mo. 632; Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 293. The election should be made before opening the case of the defence; Gilbert v. State, 65 Ga. 449.

ELECTION DISTRICT. A subdivision of territory, whether of state, county, or city, the boundaries of which are fixed by law, for convenience in local or general elections. Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. 403.

ELECTIONS IN CORPORATIONS. The power of election by corporations may apply either to corporate officers generally, or to the selection of new members to fill vacancies in those corporations, whose nature and composition require them to consist of members and not of holders of capital stock, as eleemosynary corporations. The election of members of a corporation of the former class is, in general, regulated by the charter, or other constituent law of the corporation, or by its by-laws, and their provisions must be strictly followed. In the absence of express regulations it is a general principle, that the power of election of new members, or when the number is limited, of supplying vacancies, is an inherent power necessarily implied in every corporation aggregate. It is said to result from the principle of self-preservation; 2 Kent 293; 1 Rolle, Abr. 513; 8 East 272.

If the right and power of election is not adequately prescribed by the charter, a corporation has power to make by-laws consistent with the charter, and not contrary to law, regulating the time and manner of elections and the qualifications of electors, and manner of proving the same; 3 Term 189; Com. v. Woelper, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 29, 8 Am. Dec. 628; Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 18 Atl. 990, 992, 7 L. R. A. 357, 360; and if there be no by-law established usage will be resorted to; Juker v. Com., 20 Pa. 484. In many states there are general statutes on this subject, and in such case they must be strictly followed; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 745.

Unless under express provision as to special meetings, or filling vacancies, elections of officers are held at regular meetings of the corporation. The time is nearly, if not always, regulated by statute, charter, or by-laws, and such cases as are found on the subject are not as to any general principle; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 701; the date cannot be changed by directors so as, by postponement of an annual election, to lengthen their terms; Mottu v. Primrose, 23 Md. 482; a business meeting of a benevolent corporation may be held on Sunday; People v. Benev. Society, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 357; and a charter provision requiring the choice of directors at an annual meeting was held to be directory and not exclusive; Hughes v. Parker, 20 N. H. 58.

The place of meeting for elections is also usually regulated by the law of the corporation itself, and if there be none, it should unquestionably be done at its usual and principal place of business, or where it exercises its corporate functions. This is for corporate purposes its domicile, (q. v.) and the term residence is also applied to corporations, as the place where its business is done; Bristol v. R. Co., 15 Ill. 436; Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Bank, 82 Ill. 493; while it is a citizen only of the state by which it was created; id. In the latter state only may constituent acts be done; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 588, 10 L. Ed. 274; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 459, 476, 20 L. Ed. 199; Hilles v. Parrish, 14 N. J. Eq. 380. See also Arms v. Conant, 36 Vt. 750; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McPherson, 35 Mo. 13, 86 Am. Dec. 128. Accordingly it has been held that votes and similar acts outside of the state creating it are void; Miller v. Ewer, 27 Me. 509, 46 Am. Dec. 619; even under a provision authorizing the calling of a first meeting at such a time or place as they think proper; id.; but the appointment in one state of a secretary, by the directors of a manufacturing corporation of another state, has been held valid; McCall v. Mfg. Co., 6 Conn. 428; and a corporation created by a concurrent legislation of two states may hold meetings for elections in either; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Mayer, 31 Ohio St. 317. In some states, as Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Colorado, the holding of such meetings is permitted outside of the state; and in the latter state it is held that the fact that the annual meeting was held outside of the state cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding; Humphreys v. Mooney, 5 Colo. 282. Under an authority to call special meetings on notice of time and place, they may be called by the president at a place other than the regular place of business; Corbett v. Woodward, 5 Sawy. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 3,223; and at such a meeting an election may be held if otherwise legal. Where no place is named in the charter, the directors may designate it, and officers elected at such meeting will be such, de facto; Com. v. Smith, 45 Pa. 59.

Meetings for the election of officers following the law of the corporation must be called by the person or persons designated for that purpose; Congregational Society of Bethany v. Sperry, 10 Conn. 200; Reilly v. Oglebay, 25 W. Va. 36; though it has been held that it need not always be by formal action or with strictness of procedure if it is done by their direction; Hardenburgh v. Bank, 3 N. J. Eq. 68; Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sortwell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 217; contra; Reilly v. Oglebay, 25 W. Va. 36; Goulding v. Clark, 34 N. H. 148; Third School District in Stoughton v. Atherton, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 105; they must be duly assembled; German Evangelical Congregation v. Pressler, 14 La. Ann. 799; whether of stockholders; Peirce v. Building Co., 9 La. 397, 29 Am. Dec. 448; or directors; Despatch Line of Packets v. Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203; Elliot v. Abbot, 12 N. H. 549, 37 Am. Dec. 227; Herrington v. District Tp. of Liston, 47 Ia. 11; upon due notice; 5 Burr. 2681; in accordance with charter or by-laws; Cogswell v. Bullock, 13 Allen (Mass.) 90; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; Stockholders of Shelby R. Co. v. R. Co., 12 Bush (Ky.) 62; and when there is no provision as to method, personal notice is proper; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; or according to general statute law, if there be such; In re Long Island R. Co., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 37, 32 Am. Dec. 429; but, though it is safer and better practice to give notice, in case of stated meetings for regular elections, notice is not required, but the members are charged with notice of them; Sampson v. Mill Corp., 36 Me. 78; 4 B. & C. 441; Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sanders, 36 N. H. 252; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 604, 27 Am. Dec. 104; while of special meetings there must always be notice; 2 H. L. Cas. 789; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128; Com. v. Guardians of Poor of Philadelphia, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 469; and the failure to notify a single member will avoid the proceedings, 5 Burr. 2681; 4 B. & C. 441; 4 A. & E. 538; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128; unless notice is waived by attendance, as, if all are present, each of them waives the want or irregularity of notice; Jones v. Turnpike Co., 7 Ind. 547; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 604, 27 Am. Dec. 104. Such waiver will not operate as against a positive direction of the charter; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 264; and when there is no provision as to notice it must be personal; Savings Bank of New Haven v. Davis, 8 Conn. 191; Wiggin v. First Freewill Baptist Church, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 301; Harding v. Vandewater, 40 Cal. 77.

As to what constitutes a quorum at elections, see MEETINGS; QUORUM.

As to all the details of the conduct of elections, the provisions of state statutes, charters, or by-laws, must be strictly pursued and will generally be found to cover the subject. Where a statute provided for three inspectors, it was held that two could act; In re Excelsior Fire Ins. Co., 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 8. The method of appointment prescribed must be strictly followed; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 604, 27 Am. Dec. 104; though in certain emergencies the corporations may appoint; Matter of Wheeler, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 361; and a candidate has been held not disqualified; Ex parte Willcocks, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 402, 17 Am. Dec. 525; but this is so contrary to well settled and judicious legal principles that it cannot be considered desirable. An election otherwise valid will not be avoided because inspectors were not sworn; In re Chenango County Mut. Ins. Co., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 635; or the oath taken not subscribed by them; Matter of Wheeler, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 361. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, their duties are ministerial, and they cannot act upon the challenge of a vote except to follow the transfer books; In re Long Island R. Co., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 37, 32 Am. Dec. 429; or put the challenged party on oath; id. note; or pass judicially upon proxies regular on their face; In re Election of Directors of St. Lawrence Steamboat Co., 44 N. J. L. 529; because not acknowledged or witnessed; In re Cecil, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 477; but this would be otherwise if, as is often the case, the charter requires witnesses. They may not reject votes once received; Hartt v. Harvey, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 321; nor go beyond the ballot to ascertain the intention of the voter; Loubat v. Le Roy, 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 16. Ballots in which only the initials of a candidate were inserted have been held sufficient when it was determined by a verdict who was intended thereby; People v. Seaman, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 409. If the statutes provide that only a certain number are to be chosen, ballots containing more names will not be counted; State v. Thompson, 27 Mo. 365;

2 Burr. 1020; votes for ineligible candidates were formerly held to be "thrown away;" 2 Burr. 1021 note; but it has been held in a later case that such votes will not give the election to a minority candidate unless the voters knew of the ineligibility; In re Election of Directors of St. Lawrence Steamboat Co., 44 N. J. L. 529.

There is no common-law right to vote by proxy, except in England in the House of Lords; 1 Bla. Com. 168; Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 623, 18 Atl. 919, 992, 7 L. R. A. 357, 360; and in public or municipal corporations, voting can only be done in person; 2 Kent 294; in private corporations, the right of voting by proxy is usually conferred by charter and the weight of authority is that, if not so conferred, it may be done by by-law; id. 295; Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 18 Atl. 919, 992, 7 L. R. A. 357, 360; People v. Crossley, 69 Ill. 195; Moraw, Corp. § 486; contra; People v. Twaddell, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 427; Taylor v. Griswold, 14 N. J. L. 222, 27 Am. Dec. 33. A proxy may be revoked, even if given for a valuable consideration, if about to be used fraudulently; Reed v. Bank, 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 337; and voting by proxy in fraud or violation of the charter may be restrained by injunction; Campbell v. Poultney, Ellicott & Co., 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 94, 26 Am. Dec. 559. A certificate of election is not essential; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 604, 27 Am. Dec. 104; but it is, when valid on its face, prima facie evidence of election; Hartt v. Harvey, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 321; but a court on quo warranto, may go behind it; People v. Vail, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 12.

It is probable that at common law each stockholder is entitled to but one vote without respect to the number of shares held. In public and municipal corporations undoubtedly each member has but one vote, and it is said in connection with the statement of this principle: "This rule has been applied to stockholders in a private corporation, and it has been held that such a shareholder has but one vote; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 608. But this writer, after adverting to the almost universal practice of providing by constitution, statute, or charter for a vote to each share of stock adds, "at the present day it is probable that no court, even in the absence of such provision, would uphold a rule which disregards the number of shares which the shareholder holds in the corporation;" id. And after a reference to the same common-law rule it is said: "But there are good reasons for holding that this rule has no application to ordinary joint stock business corporations of the present day;" Moraw, Corp. § 476. Where the charter declared that the by-laws may make provision for the conduct of elections, it was held that a corporation might enact a by-law giving to stockholders a vote for each share of stock; Com. v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 18 Atl. 990, 992, 7 L. R. A. 357, 360.

See MEETINGS; PROXY; QUORUM; CUMULATIVE VOTING.

ELECTOR. One who has the right to make choice of public officers; one who has a right to vote. See Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107, (Gil. 81). See PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

One who exercises the right of election in equity. The term is sometimes used in this sense. Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 257.

In the German Empire the name was given to those great princes who had the right to elect the emperor or king. The office of elector in some instances became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions as, elector of Saxony.

ELECTORAL COLLEGE. A name given to the presidential electors, when met to vote for president and vice-president of the United States, by analogy to the college of cardinals, which elects the pope, or the body which formerly selected the German emperor. It is, according to the more general usage, applied to the electors chosen by a single state, but is also used to designate those chosen throughout the United States.

This term has no strict legal or technical meaning, and being unknown to the constitution and laws of the United States, its use is purely colloquial. Accordingly the term is not clearly defined, and it is employed by approved writers in both the senses stated, though more frequently when reference is made to the entire body of electors the plural is employed, as, "the expectations of the public . . . (have) been so completely frustrated as in the practical operation of the system, so far as relates to the independence of the electors in the electoral colleges;" 2 Sto. Const. § 1463; ". . . would be chosen as electors, and would, after mature deliberation in their respective colleges," etc.; 1 Hare, Am. Const. L. 219; "the electoral colleges have sunk so low"; id. 221. So in speaking of the electors the phrase "state colleges" is used by Stevens, Sources of the Constitution of the U. S. 163, note. Following this view is the following definition: A name informally given to the electors of a single state when met to vote for president and vice-president of the United States, and sometimes to the whole body of electors. Cent. Dict.

On the other hand, the other use is well sustained by authority, and we find this definition: The body of electors chosen by the people to elect their president. Encyc. Dict. This is supported by Webster and Worcester as well as some authorities on constitutional law. "The presidential electors chosen as therein directed, constitute what is commonly called the 'electoral college';" Black, Const. L. 86; and again, "by an electoral college appointed or elected in the several states"; id. "In case the electoral college fails to choose a vice-president, the power devolves on the senate to make the selection from the two candidates having the highest number of votes." 1 Calhoun's Works, 175. See PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION. A commission created by an act of congress of January 29, 1877, to decide certain questions arising out of the presidential election of November, 1876, in which Hayes and Wheeler had been candidates of the republican party and Tilden and Hendricks of the democratic party. The election was very close, and depended on the electoral votes of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana. It was feared that there would be much trouble at the final counting of the votes by the president of the senate according to the plan laid down in the Constitution. The republicans had a majority in the senate and the democrats had a majority in the house of representatives. A resolution was adopted by congress for the appointment of a committee of seven members by the speaker to act in conjunction with a similar committee that might be appointed by the senate to prepare a report and plan for the creation of a tribunal to count the electoral votes whose authority no one would question and whose decision all would accept as final. The joint committee thus appointed reported a bill providing for a commission of fifteen members, to be composed of five members from each house appointed viva voce, with four associate justices of the supreme court, which latter would select another of the justices of the supreme court, the entire commission to be presided over by the associate justice longest in commission. This body has since been known as the Electoral Commission.

Justices Clifford, Miller, Field, and Strong were named in the act as members, and they chose as the fifth justice Justice Bradley. The other members were Senators Bayard, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Morton, and Thurman, and Representatives Abbott, Garfield, Hoar, Hunton, and Payne.

The commission began its sessions February 1, and completed its work March 2, 1877. Various questions came before it in regard to the electoral vote of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, as to which of two state returns was valid, and as to the eligibility of certain of the presidential electors. The most important decision of the commission and the one which has caused most comment and criticism was to the effect that the regular returns from a state must be accepted, and that the commission had no power to go behind these returns; or, as the commission itself expressed it, "that it is not competent under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the president of the senate in the presence of the two houses, to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the state of Florida in and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the Board of State Canvassers of said state prior to the time required for the performance of their duties, had been appointed electors, or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the legislature or of the executive of Florida subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day are inadmissible for any such purpose." 2 Curtis, Const. Hist. of U. S., 419.

The result of the controversy over the election of 1876 was the passage, after long and earnest consideration, of the Act of Feb. 3, 1887, to regulate the counting of the electoral votes for president and vice-president. U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 525. See PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS; PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES; 38 Am. L. Rev. 1.

ELECTRIC COMPANIES. Such companies, although not public corporations in the sense that the term is applied to municipal corporations; Croswell Elec. § 20; and being unable without statutory authority to claim an exemption of property from the ordinary mechanic's lien; Badger Lumber Co. v. Power Co., 48 Kan. 182, 29 Pac. 476, 15 L. R. A. 652, 30 Am. Electric Co.*, 16 Mont. 1, 39 Pac. 912, 50 Am. St. Rep. 468; but not where a pole shut off free access to a store; Tiffany & Co. v. Illuminating Co., 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 280. The same general rule may be applied to rural highways; Palmer v. Electric Co., 158 N. Y. 231, 52 N. E. 1092, 43 L. R. A. 672; contra, Haverford Electric Light Co. v. Hart, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 369. Charter authority to such a company to enter upon any public street of a city for the purpose of its business is held to include the right to lay conduits beneath the sidewalks; Allegheny County Light Co. v. Booth, 216 Pa. 564, 66 Atl. 72, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404.

Implied Powers of the Municipality. The right of a municipality to light the streets is generally conceded as a part of the police power and while usually enumerated in the charters, its omission would not deprive the city of such right, whether by electricity or other means; City of Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214; Mauldin v. City Council of Greenville, 33 S. C. 1, 11 S. E. 434, 8 L. R. A. 291; *State v. St. Rep. 388; Hequembourg v. City of Dunkirk, 49 Hun 550, 2 N. Y. Supp. 447. The contrary view of such implied powers was taken in Spaulding v. Inhabitants of Peabody, 153 Mass. 129, 26 N. E. 421, 10 L. R. A. 397, where the court decided that the existing statute giving towns the right to maintain street lamps and to raise money by taxation for such purpose did not carry with it the right to maintain the more costly electric light plant, and that to authorize such a purchase an express statute must be passed, thus settling a question raised but not decided in Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L. R. A. 487. The Massachusetts case was followed in Posey v. Town of North Birmingham, 154 Ala. 511, 45 South. 663, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711.

Commercial Lighting by the Municipality. Where the right of maintaining an electric light plant has been conferred upon towns by statute, it has been usually held to apply as well to private property as to public highways; Thompson-Houston Electric Co.

v. City of Newton, 42 Fed. 723; City of Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214; but where it has been only implied from existing statutes the implication will not extend to a commercial use; Mauldin v. City Council of Greenville, 33 S. C. 1, 11 S. E. 434, 8 L. R. A. 291; Rushville Gas Co. v. City of Rushville, 121 Ind. 212, 23 N. E. 72, 6 L. R. A. 315, 16 Am. St. Rep. 388. Statutes conferring such rights are constitutional; Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L. R. A. 487; Linn v. Chambersburg Borough, 160 Pa. 511, 28 Atl. 842, 25 L. R. A. 217; Hequembourg v. City of Dunkirk, 49 Hun 550, 2 N. Y. Supp. 447; State v. Allen, 178 Mo. 555, 77 S. W. 868; Mitchell v. City of Negaunee, 113 Mich. 359, 71 N. W. 646, 38 L. R. A. 157, 67 Am. St. Rep. 468; Fawcett v. Mt. Airy, 134 N. C. 125, 45 S. E. 1029, 63 L. R. A. 870, 101 Am. St. Rep. 825.

In so far as municipal corporations are engaged in the discharge of the powers and duties imposed upon them by the legislature as governmental agencies of the state, they are not liable for breach of duty by their officers; in that respect the officers are the agents of the state, although selected by the municipality. When acting in their ministerial or corporate character in the management of property used for their own benefit or profit, discharging powers and duties voluntarily assumed for their own advantage, they are liable to an action to persons injured by the negligence of their servants, agents and officers; and it is immaterial whether such servant, agent or officer be a corporation or an individual; City of Owensboro v. Knox's Adm'r, 116 Ky. 451, 76 S. W. 191; Emery v. Philadelphia, 208 Pa. 492, 57 Atl. 977; Twist v. City of Rochester, 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131; City of Emporia v. Burns, 67 Kan. 523, 73 Pac. 94; Moffitt v. Asheville, 103 N. C. 237, 9 S. E. 695, 14 Am. St. Rep. 810; Fisher v. City of New Bern, 140 N. C. 506, 53 S. E. 342, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 111 Am. St. Rep. 857, where a commission was established by the legislature to have charge of the electric light, water and sewer systems of a city. It was held that, though one of the purposes of the company in the construction of the electric light plant was the illumination of the streets (which possibly might be considered a governmental function), yet the selling the power for profit to shops, residences, etc., would place such a corporation upon the same footing as private individuals engaged in the same business. The city was held responsible for the negligence of the commission in leaving a live, broken electric light wire on a pole in a much used street, where one stepped upon it and was killed. And to the same effect that a city is liable in the exercise of its business powers, see Davoust v. City of Alameda, 149 Cal.

69, 84 Pac. 760, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 847; Esberg Cigar Co. v. City of Portland, 34 Or. 282, 55 Pac. 961, 43 L. R. A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651; City of Henderson v. Young, 119 Ky. 224, 83 S. W. 583, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1152; Twist v. City of Rochester, 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131; Bullmaster v. City of St. Joseph, 70 Mo. App. 60.

It has been held that the duty of a city to see that its highways are in a safe condition does not extend to the inspection of the insulation of wires owned by a private corporation, and that recovery cannot be had from the city for a death caused by a hanging wire charged by the defective insulation of a wire belonging to an electric company; Fox v. Village of Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 75 N. E. 1116, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474. But see, to the contrary, Gladdon v. Borough of Duncannon, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 81, where a borough, manufacturing electricity for the use of its inhabitants, was held not to become thereby an electric light company, so as to be liable under an act providing for the recovery of damage to trees by such companies.

As to Rights and Privileges. A municipality may grant a franchise to an electric light company to use its streets without making such right an exclusive one; Crowder v. Town of Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 28 N. E. 94, 13 L. R. A. 647; Hanson v. Electric Light Co., 86 Ia. 722, 48 N. W. 1005, 53 N. W. 84; but it must have legislative authority to grant such franchise; Brush Electric Light Co. v. Electric Light Co., 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 340; Grand Rapids E. L. & P. Co. v. Gas Co., 33 Fed. 659; and in Iowa it must be submitted to a vote of qualified electors; Hanson v. Electric Light Co., 86 Ia. 722, 48 N. W. 1005, 53 N. W. 84; City of Keokuk v. Electric Co., 90 Ia. 67, 57 N. W. 689. It may confer the right on one company to use poles erected by another company; Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sands, 95 Mich. 551, 55 N. W. 452, 20 L. R. A. 411; and may fix the compensation to the latter for their use; Toledo Electric St. Ry. Co. v. Power Co., 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 531; but unless the limit of such use is fixed and the manner of stringing the wires prescribed such a permission is unreasonable and void; Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co. v. Sands, 95 Mich. 551, 55 N. W. 452, 20 L. R. A. 411; and a company will be enjoined from use of another's poles without permission from the city, the court, or the other company; Hauss Electric Lighting Power Co. v. Electric Co., 23 Wkly. Law Bul. 137. A contract with a gas company to light the streets with gas was held not to deprive the city of the power to contract with another company to furnish electric lights for the same purpose; Parkersburg Gas Co. v. Parkersburg, 30 W. Va. 435, 4 S. E. 650; Saginaw Gas-Light Co. v. City of Saginaw, 28 Fed. 529. The right of the city to grant franchises for electric lighting carries with it the right to purchase or operate a plant even if there be an existing organized corporation and the city violates no contract by so doing; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. City of Newton, 42 Fed. 723. As a rule, however, the statutes provide for the purchase of an existing plant by the municipality and for arbitration in case of disagreement as to the price. In Massachusetts an existing company is not compelled to sell its property to the town; Citizens' Gas Light Co. v. Wakefield, 161 Mass. 432, 37 N. E. 444, 31 L. R. A. 457.

Conflicting Electrical Companies. Where a telegraph and an electric light company had each obtained a franchise for the use of the same street, it was held that the company which first obtained the franchise was entitled to priority, and the other company must so adjust its wires as to prevent danger from juxtaposition or interference with the business of the first company; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Light Co., 46 Mo. App. 120; and that where the street was already occupied by the telegraph company the electric light company would be enjoined from placing its wires so near as to interfere with the transmission of messages; id. In the case of a telephone and an electric light company, both having valid franchises, the telephone company was refused an injunction against the latter company on the ground that they had first occupied the streets, but on streets not occupied by either company, the electric light company was enjoined from using the same side of the street for lights and from stringing wires within such a distance as to injure the service of the telephone company; Nebraska Telephone Co. v. Gas & Electric Light Co., 27 Neb. 284, 43 N. W. 126; 12 Ont. 571; Paris Electric Light & Ry. Co. v. Telegraph & Telephone Co. (Tex.) 27 S. W. 902. If two electric light companies have the use of the same street, the first to occupy them has the prior right, and the second company will be restrained from stringing its wires so near as to interfere with the business of the first company or cause danger to the public; Consolidated Electric Light Co. v. Electric Light & Gas Co., 94 Ala. 372, 10 South. 440 (where the decision was based rather on the ground that such juxtaposition of the wires was dangerous to public safety). An electric light corporation, contracting to light a building, must exercise the highest degree of care in the installation of its wires and fixtures, and is liable for injuries sustained by a person handling in the usual way an ordinary incandescent light bulb; Alexander v. Light Co., 209 Pa. 571, 58 Atl. 1068, 67 L. R. A. 475; to the same effect, Gilbert v. Electric Co., 93 Minn. 99, 100 N. W. 653, 106 Am. St. Rep. 430; Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Letson, 135 Fed. 969, 68 C.

C. A. 453; Southern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Evans, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 116 S. W. 418; such a company must use reasonable care to prevent a secondary current from being charged with a high voltage current; Witmer v. Electric Light & Power Co., 187 N. Y. 572, 80 N. E. 1122; and is bound to see that its fixtures are securely attached; Fish v. Electric Light & Power Co., 189 N. Y. 336, 82 N. E. 150, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226; and to keep the wires properly insulated; Griffin v. Light Co., 164 Mass. 492, 41 N. E. 675, 32 L. R. A. 400, 49 Am. St. Rep. 477. The test of the liability of a company is whether injury to persons might reasonably be anticipated; Guinn v. Telephone Co., 72 N. J. L. 276, 62 Atl. 412, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988, 111 Am. St. Rep. 668. Where the apparatus is installed by other parties, the company has been held bound to make a reasonable inspection of it before furnishing current; Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. v. Electric Co., 71 N. J. L. 430, 58 Atl. 1082; but they are held not liable for defective apparatus where other persons did the work of wiring; Harter v. Power Co., 124 Ia. 500, 100 N. W. 508; Brunelle v. Light Corp., 188 Mass. 493, 74 N. E. 676; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Electric Co., 16 Colo. App. 86, 63 Pac. 949; Minneapolis General Electric Co. v. Cronon, 186 Fed. 651, 92 C. C. A. 345, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816. A city ordinance requiring all splices or joints on electric wires to be perfectly insulated is a contract with every inhabitant fixing a standard of duty, failure to observe which will constitute negligence; Clements v. Light Co., 44 La. Ann. 692, 11 South. 51, 16 L. R. A. 43, 32 Am. St. Rep. 348.

The liability extends to trespassers; Nelson v. Lighting & Water Co., 75 Conn. 548, 54 Atl. 303; Newark Electric Light & Power Co. v. Garden, 78 Fed. 74, 23 C. C. A. 649, 37 L. R. A. 725; Lynchburg Telephone Co. v. Booker, 103 Va. 595, 50 S. E. 148; contra, Augusta Ry. Co. v. Andrews, 89 Ga. 653, 16 S. E. 203; McCaughna v. Electric Co., 129 Mich. 407, 89 N. W. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 441; Stark v. Traction & Lighting Co., 141 Mich. 575, 104 N. W. 1100, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822; Cumberland Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 116 Ky. 554, 76 S. W. 394, 77 S. W. 718, 63 L. R. A. 469, 105 Am. St. Rep. 229; Minneapolis General Electric Co. v. Cronon, 186 Fed. 651, 92 C. C. A. 345, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816.

Equity, at the suit of a state, will enjoin an electric railway company from permitting the escape of electricity into the ground, injuring municipal water pipes; Dayton v. Ry. Co., 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 736. One who discharges electricity into the earth is liable for damages caused by the current just as if he had discharged a stream of water. Where a railway company did so under order of the Board of Trade and used the best known system, it was not responsible for the injury; [1893] 2 Ch. 186.

Equity cannot prescribe by injunction a particular system of circuit or negative return of the electric current to be used by an electric railway company, although it is shown that the system in use results in continuous injury to the water pipes of a water company; but it will act by injunction upon the continuance of the injury, leaving it to the discretion of the company to prevent it. In this case it appeared that the railway company's system could not entirely prevent electrolysis, but that it was suggesting other means which would practically prevent serious injury. The court enjoined the continuance of the injury, but left the defendant free to adopt the proper system within a reasonable time; Peoria Waterworks Co. v. R. Co., 181 Fed. 990 (C. C. Ill.), per Sanborn, C. J.

ELECTROCUTION. A method of punishment of death inflicted by causing to pass through the body of the convicted person a current of electricity of sufficient force and continuance to cause death. See 1 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 663.

It was enacted in New York in 1888, in Ohio in 1896, and in Pennsylvania in 1913, and in one or two other states.

Punishment by electrocution is not within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits the infliction of unusual and cruel punishments; and while the infliction of the death penalty by a new agency is unusual, the adoption of such an agency which is not a certainly prolonged or extreme procedure is not violative of this constitutional provision; People v. Durston, 119 N. Y. 569, 24 N. E. 6, 7 L. R. A. 715, 16 Am. St. Rep. 859.

This act of New York is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States when applied to a convict who committed the crime after the act took effect; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519. See Ex parte Mirzan, 119 U. S. 584, 7 Sup. Ct. 341, 30 L. Ed. 513.

ELECTROLYSIS. See ELECTRICAL COMPANIES.

ELEEMOSYNARIUS (Lat.). An almoner. There was formerly a lord almoner to the kings of England, whose duties are described in Fleta, lib. 2, cap. 23. A chief officer who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses. Cowell.

ELEEMOSYNARY CORPORATIONS. Such private corporations as are instituted for purposes of charity, their object being the distribution of the bounty of the founder of them to such persons as he directed. Of this kind are hospitals for the relief of the impotent, indigent, sick, and deaf or dumb; Ang. & A. Corp. § 39; American Asylum at Hartford v. Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112; McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 407; 1 Ld. Raym. 5; 2 Term 346. The nature of eleemosynary corporations is discussed in the Dartmouth College case. They are in no sense ecclesiastical corporations as understood in the classification of Blackstone. Marshall, C. J., said, in distinguishing the college from a public corporation employed for the purposes of government, that it was in fact a private eleemosynary institution endowed with capacity to take property for objects unconnected with government, whose funds were bestowed by individuals on the faith of the charter—none the less so because for public education; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 630, 4 L. Ed. 629. And in the same case, Story, J., discussed at length the nature of these corporations, defining them as “such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms and bounty of the founder in such manner as he has directed”; and then, after pointing out the division of corporations into public and private, he goes on to explain that eleemosynary corporations are private corporations although dedicated to general charity, and that the argument that because the charity is public, the corporation is public, “manifestly confounds the popular with the strictly legal sense of the terms.” He also calls attention to the fact that “to all eleemosynary corporations a visitatorial power attaches as a necessary incident.” See VISITATION.

In the same opinion it is said that a private eleemosynary corporation, when created by the charter of the crown, is subject to no other control of the crown unless power be reserved for that purpose, and this he characterizes as “one of the most stubborn and well-settled doctrines of the common law”; but nevertheless such corporations, like all others, are subject to the general law of the land. See, also, Society for Propagation of Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 464, 5 L. Ed. 662; 1 Bla. Com. 471.

“In the English law corporations are divided into ecclesiastical and lay; and lay corporations are again divided into eleemosynary and civil. It is doubtful how far clear conceptions of the law are promoted by keeping in mind these divisions. They seem, for us at least, to have an historical, rather than a practical, value. In a country where the church is totally disassociated from the state, there is little room for a division of corporations into ecclesiastical and lay; and while charitable corporations have many features which distinguish them from other private corporations, as will hereafter appear, it is very seldom that the word ‘civil’ is used in our American books of reports in order to distinguish corporations other than charitable.”

ELEGIT (Lat. eligere, to choose). A writ of execution directed to the sheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's land and all his goods, beasts of the plough only excepted.

The sheriff, on the receipt of the writ, holds an inquest to ascertain the value of the lands and goods he has seized, and then they are delivered to the plaintiff, who retains them until the whole debt and damages have been paid and satisfied. During that term he is called tenant by eligit; Co. Litt. 289. See Pow. Mort.; Wats. Sheriff 206; 1 C. B. N. S. 568; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 113; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 122.

The name was given because the plaintiff has his choice to accept either this writ or a fi. fa.

By statute, in England, the sheriff is to deliver the whole estate instead of the half; see 3 Bla. Com. 418; and by act of 1883 it no longer extends to goods. The writ is still in use in the United States, to some extent, and with somewhat different modifications in the various states adopting it; 4 Kent 431, 436; McCance v. Taylor, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 580; Morris v. Ellis, 3 Ala. 560.

ELEMENTS. A term popularly applied to fire, air, earth and water, anciently supposed to be the four simple bodies of which the world was composed. Encyc. Dict. Often applied in a particular sense to wind and water, as “the fury of the elements.” Cent. Dict. It has been said that “damages by the elements,” and “damages by the act of God,” are convertible expressions; Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 416, 95 Am. Dec. 115.

ELEVATED RAILWAYS. See RAILROADS.

ELEVATOR. A building containing one or more mechanical elevators, especially a warehouse for the storage of grain; a hoisting apparatus; a lift; a car or cage for lifting and lowering passengers or freight in a hoistway. Cent. Dict.

A landlord who runs an elevator for the use of his tenants and their visitors thereby becomes a common carrier; Goodsell v. Taylor, 41 Minn. 207, 42 N. W. 873, 4 L. R. A. 673, 16 Am. St. Rep. 700; Morgan v. Saks, 143 Ala. 139, 38 South. 848; Mitchell v. Marker, 62 Fed. 139, 10 C. C. A. 306, 25 L. R. A. 33; Edwards v. Burke, 36 Wash. 107, 78 Pac. 610; Lee v. Knapp & Co., 155 Mo. 610, 56 S. W. 458; Fox v. Philadelphia, 203 Pa. 127, 57 Atl. 356, 65 L. R. A. 214; Oberfelder v. Doran, 26 Neb. 118, 41 N. W. 1094, 18 Am. St. Rep. 771; Walsh v. Cullen, 235 Ill. 91, 85 N. E. 223, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 911. He is charged with the highest degree of care which human foresight can suggest, both as to the machinery and the conduct of his servants; Marker v. Mitchell, 54 Fed. 637; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 595, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175. That such a carrier of passengers is not an insurer, but is required to exercise the highest degree of care; Mitchell v. Marker, 62 Fed. 139, 10 C. C. A. 306, 25 L. R. A. 33;

Tousey v. Roberts, 114 N. Y. 312, 21 N. E. 399, 11 Am. St. Rep. 655; Edwards v. Burke, 36 Wash. 107, 78 Pac. 610. Other cases do not subject him to the same responsibility as common carriers; Edwards v. Building Co., 27 R. 1. 248, 61 Atl. 646, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 114 Am. St. Rep. 37, 8 Ann. Cas. 974; Griffen v. Manice, 166 N. Y. 197, 59 N. E. 925, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630; Seaver v. Bradley, 179 Mass. 329, 60 N. E. 795, 88 Am. St. Rep. 384.

Where the owner is in the habit of permitting a person to accompany freight on an elevator, he owes him the duty of a carrier; Orcutt v. Building Co., 201 Mo. 424, 99 S. W. 1062, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929. Where a municipal ordinance imposed upon owners of elevators the duty to employ competent persons, the owner of an apartment house was held liable for injuries to the child of his tenant, who, finding the elevator unguarded, attempted to run it; Shellabarger v. Fisher, 143 Fed. 937, 75 C. C. A. 9, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250. A hotel-keeper owes the same duty to persons visiting his guests, and, in general, to all persons lawfully in the hotel and in the elevator, as to his guests; McCracken v. Meyers, 75 N. J. L. 935, 68 Atl. 805, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290, citing Siggins v. McGill, 72 N. J. L. 263, 62 Atl. 411, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 316, 111 Am. St. Rep. 666.

The right of any person to ride on an elevator is held to be based on the implied invitation which the owner is deemed to have extended to all who have business on his premises; such owner must see that the premises are in a reasonable, safe, condition; the measure of duty is reasonable care and prudence; Griffen v. Manice, 166 N. Y. 197, 59 N. E. 925, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630; Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204, 96 N. W. 29.

A hotel-keeper is not bound to the same degree of care with respect to his employes as to his guests in operating his elevator. His duty as to them is ascertained by the general rules governing the relation of master and servant. In Illinois, where the proprietor of an elevator is held to be a carrier of passengers; Hodges v. Percival, 132 Ill. 53, 23 N. E. 423; Springer v. Ford, 189 Ill. 430, 59 N. E. 953, 52 L. R. A. 930, 82 Am. St. Rep. 464; Beidler v. Branshaw, 200 Ill. 425, 65 N. E. 1086; Masonic Fraternity Temple Ass'n v. Collins, 210 Ill. 482, 71 N. E. 396; yet where a waitress was injured on a hotel elevator, the proprietor was held not to owe her the duty of a common carrier; Walsh v. Cullen, 235 Ill. 91, 85 N. E. 223, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 911. To the same effect, Sievers v. Lumber Co., 151 Ind. 642, 50 N. E. 877, 52 N. E. 399; McDonough v. Lanpher, 55 Minn. 501, 57 N. W. 152, 43 Am. St. Rep. 541.

The owner of an office building has been held not to owe the duty of keeping closed the doors to the elevator wells in respect to one who enters the building seeking information about one not a tenant of or employed in it, since he is a mere licensee; Stanwood v. Clancey, 106 Me. 72, 75 Atl. 293; Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 31 N. E. 128, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463; as such he goes into the building at his own risk and is bound to take the premises as he finds them; Beehler v. Daniels, 18 R. I. 503, 29 Atl. 6, 27 L. R. A. 512, 49 Am. St. Rep. 790; Faurot v. Grocery Co., 21 Okl. 104, 95 Pac. 463, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136; Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269, 33 N. E. 1028, 39 Am. St. Rep. 261. This rule was applied where a policeman, in the exercise of his duty to protect the property of an express company from strikers, was killed from falling down an elevator shaft; Casey v. Adams, 234 Ill. 350, 84 N. E. 933, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 776, 123 Am. St. Rep. 105; and also where a fireman entered a building for the purpose of protecting property therein from fire and was injured while using an elevator in such building; Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 32 N. E. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588, 36 Am. St. Rep. 376; and where the wife of the janitor of a building used the elevator for the purpose of showing a tenant therein the roof; Billows v. Moors, 162 Mass. 42, 37 N. E. 750.

As to licensees by invitation or affirmative consent, it is held that the owner of an elevator owes the duty of exercising ordinary care; Muench v. Heinemann, 119 Wis. 441, 96 N. W. 800. Thus a child, who with the knowledge or implied consent of an elevator operator, rides on the top of the car, is held not a trespasser; Davis' Adm'r v. Trust Co., 127 Ky. 800, 106 S. W. 843, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402. As to licensees by permission or on mere sufferance, the owner owes no duty except to refrain from acts of actual negligence; Muench v. Heinemann, 119 Wis. 441, 96 N. W. 800; Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269, 33 N. E. 1028, 39 Am. St. Rep. 261; Amerine v. Porteous, 105 Mich. 347, 63 N. W. 300; McCarvell v. Sawyer, 173 Mass. 540, 54 N. E. 259, 73 Am. St. Rep. 318; McManus v. Thing, 194 Mass. 362, 80 N. E. 487; Leavitt v. Shoe Co., 69 N. H. 597, 45 Atl. 558. Where one has been forbidden to use the elevator and sustains an injury, he cannot recover; Ferguson v. Truax, 132 Wis. 478, 110 N. W. 395, 111 N. W. 657, 112 N. W. 513, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 1092.

An elevator should have constant care and inspection; Bier v. Mfg. Co., 130 Pa. 446, 18 Atl. 637; McGuigan v. Beatty, 186 Pa. 329, 40 Atl. 490; that the machinery was oiled once a week and the elevator looked at by a fellow servant does not fulfil the requirement that it should be inspected regularly; Swenson v. R. Co., 78 App. Div. 379, 80 N. Y. Supp. 281; or where it has been inspected two weeks before an accident, and a defect overlooked; Corn Products Refining Co. v.

King, 168 Fed. 892, 94 C. C. A. 304; or where an accident was caused by the breaking of a shaft, the defective condition of which might have been discovered by inspection; Reinhardt v. Lard Co., 74 N. J. L. 9, 64 Atl. 990. But one is not liable for an accident to an employé if he regularly employs a competent firm to inspect the elevator; Young v. Stable Co., 193 N. Y. 188, 86 N. E. 15, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592, 127 Am. St. Rep. 939. In case of a casualty, it is not enough to show that the elevator is one of a kind in ordinary use; McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Burandt, 136 Ill. 170, 26 N. E. 588. But the absence of safety appliances is said not to be conclusive evidence of negligence; Shattuck v. Rand, 142 Mass. 83, 7 N. E. 43. An elevator is not supposed to be a place of danger, to be approached with great caution; Ziemann v. Mfg. Co., 90 Wis. 497, 63 N. W. 1021; but when the door is opened a passenger may enter it without stopping to make a special examination; Tousey v. Roberts, 114 N. Y. 312, 21 N. E. 399, 11 Am. St. Rep. 655.

See 9 L. R. A. 640, note; Mitchell v. Mark-er, 62 Fed. 139, 10 C. C. A. 306, 25 L. R. A. 33; Webb, Elevators.

The business of handling grain in elevators is of such a nature as to subject it to regulations which would be entirely unjustifiable if applied to a purely private business. Because the business is of a quasi-public nature, even the owner of a country elevator, who buys for himself alone and is his own grader and weighmaster, may be required to secure a license from the state; State v. W. W. Cargill Co., 77 Minn. 223, 79 N. W. 962; W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 402, 21 Sup. Ct. 423, 45 L. Ed. 619. For the same reason the legislature may make a weighmaster's certificate prima facie evidence of what is stated therein; Vega Steamship Co. v. Elevator Co., 75 Minn. 308, 77 N. W. 973, 43 L. R. A. 843, 74 Am. St. Rep. 484.

As to grain in a grain elevator, see CONFUSION OF GOODS.

ELIGIBILITY. The constitution of the United States provides that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either house. The acceptance by a member of congress of a commission as a volunteer in the army vacates his seat; Cl. & H. 122, 395, 637. But by a decision of the second comptroller of the treasury, of Feb. 24, 1894, it was held that there was no incompatibility of office between that of a member of the house of representatives and the military office held by an officer of the United States army on the retired list, and that he was entitled to pay for both offices. A centennial commissioner holds an office of trust or profit under the United States, and is thereby ineligible as a presidential elector; In re Corliss, 11 R. I. 638, 23 Am. Rep. 538. A state cannot by statute provide that certain state officers are ineligible to a federal office; Turney v. Marshall, 1 Bartl. 167; Trumbull's Election, 1 Bartl. 619.

Duelling has been made in some states a disqualification for office; see DUELLING. In Kentucky, it was held that the doing of any of the prohibited acts was a disqualification for office without a previous conviction; Cochran v. Jones, 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 22; but this opinion has been questioned in a note to that case. See McCrary, Elect. 189.

An alien cannot, even in the absence of any provision forbidding it, hold an office; State v. Van Beek, 87 Ia. 569, 54 N. W. 525, 19 L. R. A. 622, 43 Am. St. Rep. 397. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 748, n.; but he may be elected to an office; State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 489; State v. Trumpf, 50 Wis. 103, 5 N. W. 876, 6 N. W. 512. And members elect of congress, who were ineligible on account of participation in the rebellion, have been admitted to a seat, their disqualification having been subsequently removed; McCrary, Elect. 193.

The word eligibility, used in connection with an office, where there are no explanatory words indicating that it is used with reference to the time of election, refers to the qualification to hold the office rather than to be elected; Bradfield v. Avery, 16 Idaho 769, 102 Pac. 687, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1228; Hoy v. State, 168 Ind. 506, 81 N. E. 509, 11 Ann. Cas. 944.

As to the effect of the ineligibility of the candidate having the highest number of votes, see ELECTION.

ELIGIBLE. This term relates to the capacity of holding as well as that of being elected to an office; Carson v. McPhetridge, 15 Ind. 327. See Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 117; State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 566; State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497.

ELISORS. Two persons appointed by the court to return a jury when the sheriff and coroner have been challenged as incompetent, either because they are parties to the suit, or are related to either party. 3 Bla. Com. 354; Allen v. Com., 12 S. W. 582, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 555; or because they are partial: 5 Bac. Abr. 318; 3 East 141; Fortesc. de Laudibus LL. 53; Alc. & Nap. 113; or interested: Tidd, Prac. 723, 780; People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 54 Pac. 830; State v. Hultz, 106 Mo. 41, 16 S. W. 940; Harriman v. State, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 270. They return the writ of venire directed to them with a panel of the jurors' names, and their return is final and no challenge is allowed to the array. But a party may have his challenge to the poll; Co. Litt. 158 a.

Elisors may be appointed to serve process other than that of returning a jury; Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 239, 28 Pac. 341. An attachment may be directed to elisors against the coroners for not attaching a disobedient sheriff who has not brought the defendant into court; 2 Wm. Bla. 911; 2 id. 1218; Tidd, Prac. 314; or for not returning an execution; People v. Palmer, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 32; but such appointment will be refused where it is a matter of mere service of process; 10 Moore 266.

Authority to appoint elisors need not be given by statute; Wilson v. Roach, 4 Cal. 362; though the legislature may authorize the governor to appoint officers with the powers of sheriff to enforce liquor laws; Gilmore v. Penobscot County, 107 Me. 345, 78 Atl. 454.

Elisors were named by the prothonotary and appointed by the court; Barnes 465; named by plaintiff and approved by prothonotary; 2 Wm. Bla. 911; or named by the master in the King's Bench, or prothonotary in the Common Pleas; Tidd, Prac. 151.

A sheriff is incompetent if he is part of a defendant corporation, in which case elisors will be appointed; 1 Ir. L. Rec. O. S. 281; but where the sheriff and coroner were members of a corporation defending another similar suit against the same plaintiff, elisors were not appointed; Jackson v. Rathbone, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 296.

Elisors are usually two clerks of the court or residents of the county, and are sworn; 3 Bla. Com. 354; Fortesc. de Laud. LL. 53; but a person residing in a county other than that in which the defendant resides may be appointed under peculiar circumstances; Anonymous, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 102; so may one who has served under the sheriff as bailiff to the petit jury in other causes; State v. Bodly, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 355; and only one need be appointed to serve a summons; Reed v. Moffatt, 62 Ill. 300; and he need not be sworn; id.

Notice of the appointment of elisors must be given to the opposite party; 1 Stra. 235.

The appointment by a judge having competent jurisdiction is presumed to be proper; Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 520; or by a clerk to serve a writ of replevin; Beach v. Schmultz, 20 Ill. 185. If it is irregular, a motion to quash the levy should be made in the court to which the writ is returnable; Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 520. It rests in the discretion of the trial judge and will not be disturbed unless arbitrary and unjust; State v. Hultz, 106 Mo. 41, 16 S. W. 940. A venire for a grand jury was directed to elisors, the sheriff being disqualified, and not to the coroner; held legal; State v. Zeller, 83 N. J. L. 666, 85 Atl. 237.

Absence of the coroner from the parish when the sheriff is a party to the suit will not warrant the appointment of an elisor; Whitehead v. Brigham, 1 La. Ann. 317. A new sheriff will not be awarded process, though he be impartial, if it has already been given to elisors; Co. Litt. 158 a; contra, Anonymous, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 102.

An elisor may be appointed to take charge of a jury retiring to deliberate upon a verdict, when both sheriff and coroner are disqualified or unable to act; People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 54 Pac. 830; People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049, 40 L. R. A. 269.

By act of parliament elisors have free access to jurors' books in Ireland; Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland 1084.

See Umfreville, Lex Coronatoria 237, 241; Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland 480; Woodward, Coroners in Pennsylvania 140, 233.

ELKINS' ACT. See RATES.

ELL. A measure of length.

In old English the word signifies arm, which sense it still retains in the word elbow. Nature has no standard of measure. The cubit, the ell, the span, palm, hand, finger (being taken from the individual who uses them), are variable measures. So of the foot, pace, mile, or mille passuum. See Report on Weights and Measures, by the secretary of state of the United States, Feb. 22, 1821.

ELLENBOROUGH'S ACT. An English statute (43 Geo. III. c. 58) punishing offenses against the person. See ABORTION.

ELOGIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A will or testament.

ELOIGNE (Fr. éloigner, to remove to a distance). In Practice. A return to a writ of replevin, when the chattels have been removed out of the way of the sheriff.

ELONGATA. The return made by the sheriff to a writ of replevin, when the goods have been removed to places unknown to him. See, for the form of this return, Wats. Sheriff, Appx. c. 18, s. 3, p. 454; 3 Bla. Com. 148.

On this return the plaintiff is entitled to a capias in withernam. See WITHERNAM; Wats. Sheriff 300, 301. The word éloigné is sometimes used as synonymous with elongata.

ELONGATUS. The sheriff's return to a writ de homine replegiando, q. v.

ELOPEMENT. The departure of a married woman from her husband and dwelling with an adulterer. Cowell; Tomlin.

To constitute elopement the wife must not only leave the husband, but go beyond his actual control. For if she abandon the husband, and go and live in adultery in a house belonging to him, it is said not to be an elopement; Cogswell v. Tibbetts, 3 N. H. 42; 1 Rolle, Abr. 680.

When a wife elopes the husband is no longer liable for her support, and is not bound to pay debts of her contracting, when the separation is notorious; and whoever gives her credit does so, under these circumstances, at his peril; Hunter v. Boucher, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 289; 6 Term 603; McCutchen v. McGahay, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 281, 6 Am. Dec. 373; Bull. N. P. 135.

It has been said that the word has no legal sense; 2 W. Bla. 1080; but it is frequently used, as is here shown, with a precisely defined meaning. An action may be maintained by the husband, against a third person, for enticing away his wife, where nothing in the nature of criminal conversation is alleged. See Schoul. Hus. & W. 64; ALIENATION OF AFFECTION; ENTICE.

ELSEWHERE. In another place.

Where one devises all his land in A, B, and C, three distinct towns, and elsewhere, and had lands of much greater value than those in A, B, and C, in another county, the lands in the other county were decreed to pass by the word "elsewhere"; and by Lord Chancellor King, assisted by Raymond, C. J., and other judges, the word "elsewhere" was adjudged to be the same as if the testator had said he devised all his lands in the three towns particularly mentioned, or in any other place whatever. 3 P. Wms. 56. See, also, Chanc. Prec. 202; 1 Vern. 4, n.; Cowp. 360, 808; 5 Bro. P. C. 496; 1 East 456.

As to the effect of the word "elsewhere" in the case of lands not purchased at the time of making the will, see 3 Atk. 254; 2 Ventr. 351. The words "or elsewhere" have been held not to include lands in another state; Atkinson v. Schilman, 60 Fla. 39, 53 South. 844, 66 South. 274. As to the construction of the words "or elsewhere" in shipping articles, see Brown v. Jones, 2 Gall. 477, Fed. Cas. No. 2,017.

ELUVIONES. Spring-tides.

EMANCIPATION. An act by which a person who was once in the power or under the control of another is rendered free.

This is of importance mainly in relation to the emancipation of minors from the parental control. See 3 Term 355; 8 id. 479; Varney v. Young, 11 Vt. 258; Tillotson v. McCrillis, id. 477; Haugh, Ketcham & Co. Iron Works v. Duncan, 2 Ind. App. 264, 28 N. E. 334; Trapnell v. Conklyn, 37 W. Va. 242, 16 S. E. 570, 38 Am. St. Rep. 30. See Cooper, Justin. 441, 480; Cowperthwaite v. Jones, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 57, 1 L. Ed. 287; Ferrière, Dict. de Jurisp. Emancipation; MANUMISSION.

An infant husband is entitled to his own wages, so far as necessary for the support of himself and family, even though he married without his father's consent; Com. v. Graham, 157 Mass. 73, 31 N. E. 706, 16 L. R. A. 578, 34 Am. St. Rep. 255. Where children contract for, collect, and use their own earnings, emancipation is to be inferred; Geringer v. Heinlein, 29 Wkly. Law Bul. 339; and so when they become of age, no other facts being shown; Baldwin v. Worcester, 66 Vt. 54, 28 Atl. 633.

The desertion of children by their father emancipates them; Thompson v. Ry. Co., 104 Fed. 845, where, in an action by the father as next of kin for the death of the child, it was held that there could be no recovery as by reason of the emancipation the father had no right to the earnings. See also for other authorities note in Wilson v. McMillan, 62 Ga. 16, 35 Am. Rep. 117; Rodg. Dom. Rel. § 467. This presumption of emancipation from desertion has been termed "the presumption of necessity." Schoul. Dom. Rel. § 267.

EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION. See BONDAGE.

EMBARGO. A proclamation or order of state, usually issued in time of war or threatened hostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all the ports of such state, until further order. The William King, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 148, 4 L. Ed. 206.

A civil embargo is the act of a state detaining the ships of its own citizens in port, which amounts to an interdiction of commerce, accompanied, as it usually is, by a closing of its ports to foreign vessels. A hostile embargo is a detention, as before mentioned, of foreign vessels and property which may be in the ports of the wronged state. The detention is by way of reprisal (q. v.) and is thus distinguished from a detention of foreign vessels upon other grounds. If hostile embargo is followed by war, the vessels detained are confiscated. The term embargo is sometimes applied to the detention of foreign merchant vessels after the outbreak of war. It had been customary for belligerents to allow enemy vessels in their ports at the outbreak of hostilities to depart freely, and this custom finds a limited expression in the Convention Relative to the Status of Enemy Merchant Ships at the Outbreak of Hostilities, adopted at the Hague Convention of 1907, which provides that it is desirable that such vessels be allowed to depart freely.

The detention of ships by an embargo is such an injury to the owner as to entitle him to recover on a policy of insurance against "arrests or detentions." And whether the embargo be legally or illegally laid, the injury to the owner is the same, and the insurer is equally liable for the loss occasioned by it. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 12, s. 5; 1 Kent 60; 1 Bell, Dict. 517.

An embargo detaining a vessel at the port of departure, or in the course of the voyage, does not of itself work a dissolution of a charter-party, or of the contract with the seamen. It is only a temporary restraint imposed by authority for legitimate political purposes, which suspends for a time the performance of such contracts, and leaves the rights of parties untouched; 1 Bell, Dict. 517.

EMBASSAGE or EMBASSY. The message or commission given by a sovereign or state to a minister called an "ambassador," empowered to treat or communicate with another sovereign or state; also the establishment of an ambassador. Black, L. Dict.

EMBEZZLEMENT. The fraudulent appropriation to one's own use of the money or goods entrusted to one's care by another. Fagnan v. Knox, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 41.

The fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted or to whose hands it has lawfully come; it is distinguished from larceny in the fact that the original taking of the property was lawful or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking. Moore v. U. S., 160 U. S. 268, 16 Sup. Ct. 294, 40 L. Ed. 422. See Gru v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 23 Sup. Ct. 98, 47 L. Ed. 130; People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 19, 36 Pac. 506.

The principles of the common law not being found adequate to protect general owners against the fraudulent conversion of property by persons standing in certain fiduciary relations to those who were the subject of their peculations, certain statutes have been enacted, as well in England as in this country, creating new criminal offences and annexing to them their proper punishments. The general object of these statutes doubtless was to define and embrace, as criminal offences punishable by law, certain cases where, although the moral guilt was quite as great as in larceny, yet the technical objection arising from the fact of a possession lawfully acquired by the party screened him from punishment. Com. v. Stearns, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 345; Com. v. Simpson, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 142. See State v. Wolff, 34 La. Ann. 1153.

In order to constitute embezzlement, it must distinctly appear that the party acted with felonious intent, and made an intentionally wrong disposal, indicating a design to cheat and deceive the owner. A mere failure to pay over money intrusted to such party as agent for investment is not sufficient, if this intent is not plainly apparent; People v. Hurst, 62 Mich. 276, 28 N. W. 838. The money appropriated need not have been intrusted to the accused by the owner; it is sufficient if it were intrusted to the employer of the accused and appropriated by the latter; Com. v. Clifford, 96 Ky. 4, 27 S. W. 811; and that the money was taken without any attempt at concealment is no defence to the charge of embezzlement; People v. Connelly, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 858, 38 Pac. 42. There must be a relation of special trust in regard to the article appropriated, and it must be by virtue of such trust that the servant has access to, or control or possession of, it; Colip v. State, 153 Ind. 584, 55 N. E. 739, 74 Am. St. Rep. 322; followed in State v. Winstandley, 155 Ind. 290, 58 N. E. 71. Whether the lack of authority to receive the money in the first instance will necessarily defeat a prosecution for embezzlement is a subject much discussed. The better view seems to be that if, by virtue of his employment, the money came into his possession, its embezzlement is within the meaning of the statute; Ker v. State, 110 Ill. 629, 51 Am. Rep. 706; Smith v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 117, 109 S. W. 118, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531, 15 Ann. Cas. 435; McAleer v. State, 46 Neb. 116, 64 N. W. 358; State v. Costin, 89 N. C. 511; State v. Jennings, 98 Mo. 493, 11 S. W. 980;

but some cases hold that, if there was no authority to receive the money, its conversion will not constitute embezzlement; Brady v. State, 21 Tex. App. 659, 1 S. W. 462; State v. Johnson, 49 Ia. 141.

Embezzlement being a statutory offence, reference must be had to the statutes of the jurisdiction for the classes of persons and property affected by them. It has been held that there may be embezzlement of bank bills; Com. v. King, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 284; municipal bonds; Bork v. People, 91 N. Y. 5; State v. White, 66 Wis. 343, 28 N. W. 202; grain; State v. Stoller, 38 Ia. 321; an animal; Washington v. State, 72 Ala. 272; commercial securities; State v. Orwig, 24 Ia. 102; [1891] 1 Q. B. 112; and of a mortgage; Com. v. Concannon, 5 Allen (Mass.) 502; and by public officers, placed in a fiduciary relation as such; Com. v. Tuckerman, 10 Gray (Mass.) 173; People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54. See Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 108; People v. Dalton, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 581; Com. v. Morrissey, 86 Pa. 416; State v. Munch, 22 Minn. 67; Lewis v. Kendall, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 59; State v. King, 81 Ia. 587, 47 N. W. 775; State v. Noland, 111 Mo. 473, 19 S. W. 715. Where one withdraws from the money drawer of a cash register money that he had deposited a moment before without registering, he is guilty of embezzlement; Com. v. Ryan, 155 Mass. 523, 30 N. E. 364, 15 L. R. A. 317, 31 Am. St. Rep. 560. Where an attorney collects money for his client, he acts as agent and attorney, and in either case, if he appropriate the money collected to his own use with the intention of depriving the owner of the same, he is guilty of embezzlement; People v. Converse, 74 Mich. 478, 42 N. W. 70, 16 Am. St. Rep. 648. In a prosecution for the embezzlement of money held by defendant as bailee, it is immaterial that it was deposited in a bank for a time, so that the money actually converted was not the identical bills delivered to the bailee; Com. v. Mead, 160 Mass. 319, 35 N. E. 1125.

A taking is requisite to constitute a larceny, and embezzlement is in substance and essentially a larceny, aggravated rather than palliated by the violation of a trust or contract, instead of being, like larceny, a trespass. The administration of the common law has been not a little embarrassed in discriminating between the two offences. But they are so far distinct in their character that, under an indictment charging merely a larceny, evidence of embezzlement is not sufficient to authorize a conviction; and in cases of embezzlement the proper mode is to allege sufficient matter in the indictment to apprise the defendant that the charge is for embezzlement. And it is often no less difficult to distinguish this crime from a mere breach of trust. Although the statutes declare that a party shall be deemed to have committed the crime of simple larceny, yet

It is a larceny of a peculiar character, and must be set forth in its distinctive character; Com. v. Wyman, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 247; Com. v. Simpson, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 138; Com. v. King, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 284; Kribs v. People, 82 Ill. 425; State v. Newton, 26 Ohio St. 265.

The word embezzle implies a fraudulent intent, and the addition of the word fraudulently is mere surplusage; Reeves v. State, 95 Ala. 31, 11 South. 158; U. S. v. Lancaster, 2 McLean 431, Fed. Cas. No. 15,556; State v. Wolff, 34 La. Ann. 1153; State v. Trolson, 21 Nev. 419, 32 Pac. 930; State v. Combs, 47 Kan. 136, 27 Pac. 818.

When money is embezzled, the owner has a right to settle as for an implied contract, and such settlement is no bar to a criminal prosecution; Fagnan v. Knox, 66 N. Y. 526; State v. Noland, 111 Mo. 473, 19 S. W. 715.

A partner is not guilty of embezzlement in appropriating the funds of the firm to his own use; Gary v. Masonic Aid Ass'n, 87 Ia. 25, 53 N. W. 1086. See Napoleon v. State, 3 Tex. App. 522; 12 Cox, C. C. 96.

When an embezzlement of a part of the cargo takes place on board of a ship, either from the fault, fraud, connivance, or negligence of any of the crew, they are bound to contribute to the reparation of the loss, in proportion to their wages. So too the embezzlement of property saved is a bar to salvage. When the embezzlement is fixed on any individual, he is solely responsible; when it is made by the crew, or some of the crew, but the particular offender is unknown, and, from the circumstances of the case, strong presumptions of guilt apply to the whole crew, all must contribute. The presumption of innocence is always in favor of the crew; and the guilt of the parties must be established beyond all reasonable doubt before they can be required to contribute; Spurr v. Pearson, 1 Mas. 104, Fed. Cas. No. 13,268; 4 B. & P. 347; Lewis v. Davis, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 17; Dane, Abr. Index; Wesk. Ins. 194; 3 Kent 151. See Pars. Sh. & Adm.

A prima facie case of embezzlement is made out, sufficient to warrant the surrender of one in extradition proceedings, when it was shown that a check was delivered to him with instructions to draw the money from the bank and take it to a railway station to be forwarded to another city, and that he subsequently converted the same to his own use; Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 23 Sup. Ct. 98, 47 L. Ed. 130.

Stringent provisions are made by several acts of congress against the embezzlement of arms, munitions, and habiliments of war, property stored in public storehouses, letters, precious metals, and coins from the mint.

EMBLEMENTS (Fr. emblem, or emblaver, to sow with corn. The profits of the land sown). The right of a tenant to take and carry away, after his tenancy has ended, such annual products of the land as have resulted from his own care and labor. The term is also applied to the crops themselves. Co. Litt. 55 b; 4 H. & J. 139; 3 B. & Ald. 118; Reiff v. Reiff, 64 Pa. 134.

It is a privilege allowed to tenants for life, at will, or from year to year, because of the uncertainty of their estates and to encourage husbandry. If, however, the tenancy is for years, and its duration depends upon no contingency, a tenant when he sows a crop must know whether his term will continue long enough for him to reap it, and is not permitted to re-enter and cut it after his term has ended; 4 Bingh. 202; Whitmarsh v. Cutting, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 361; Debow v. Colfax, 10 N. J. L. 128; Gossett v. Drydale, 48 Mo. App. 430. Whenever a tenancy, other than at sufferance, is from the first of uncertain duration and is unexpectedly terminated without fault of the tenant, he is entitled to emblements; Gardner v. Lanford, 86 Ala. 508, 5 South. 879.

This privilege extends to cases where a lease has been unexpectedly terminated by the act of God or the law; that is, by some unforeseen event which happens without the tenant's agency; as, if a lease is made to husband and wife so long as they continue in that relation, and they are afterwards divorced by a legal sentence, the husband will be entitled to emblements; Oland's case, 5 Co. 116 b; or where the lessee of a tenant for life has growing crops unharvested at the time of the latter's death, he is entitled to them; Bradley v. Bailey, 56 Conn. 374, 15 Atl. 746, 1 L. R. A. 427, 7 Am. St. Rep. 316; Edghill v. Mankey, 79 Neb. 347, 112 N. W. 570, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 688; Hoagland v. Crum, 113 Ill. 365, 55 Am. Rep. 424. A similar result will follow if the landlord, having the power, terminates the tenancy by notice to quit; Cro. Eliz. 460; but not where, under the terms of the lease, the landlord re-enters and takes possession because the tenant fails to pay rent; Gregg v. Boyd, 69 Hun 588, 23 N. Y. Supp. 918. See other cases of uncertain duration, Stewart v. Doughty, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 112; 8 Viner, Abr. 364. But it is otherwise if the tenancy is determined by an act of the tenant which works a forfeiture; as if, being a woman, she has a lease for a term of years provided she remains so long single, and she terminates it by marrying; 2 B. & Ald. 470; Lane v. King, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 584, 24 Am. Dec. 105. A landlord who re-enters for a forfeiture takes the emblements; 7 Bingh. 154. Where a tenant wrongfully retains possession of land after his term has expired, crops planted by him so long as they remain unsevered, belong to the landlord; Kleimann v. Geiselmann, 45 Mo. App. 505. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

All such crops as in the ordinary course of things return the labor and expense bestowed upon them within the current year become the subject of emblements,—consisting of grain, peas, beans, hemp, flax, and annual roots, such as parsnips, carrots, turnips, and potatoes as well as the artificial grasses, which are usually renewed like other crops. But such things as are of spontaneous growth, as roots and trees not annual, and the fruit on such trees, although ripe, and grass growing, even if ready to cut, or a second crop of clover, although the first crop taken before the end of the term did not repay the expense of cultivation, do not fall within the description of emblements; Cro. Car. 515; Cro. Eliz. 463; Whitmarsh v. Cutting, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 361; Co. Litt. 55 b; Tayl. Landl. & T. § 534; Woodf. Landl. & T. 750.

But although a tenant for years may not be entitled to emblements as such, yet by the custom of the country, in particular districts, he may be allowed to enter and reap a crop which he has sown, after his lease has expired; Dougl. 201; 16 East 71; 7 Bingh. 465. The parties to a lease may, of course, regulate all such matters by an express stipulation; but in the absence of such stipulation it is to be understood that every demise is open to explanation by the general usage of the country where the land lies, in respect to all matters about which the lease is silent; and every person is supposed to be cognizant of this custom and to contract in reference to it; Stultz v. Dickey, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 285, 6 Am. Dec. 411. The rights of tenants, therefore, with regard to the away-going crop, will differ in different sections of the country; thus, in Pennsylvania and New Jersey a tenant is held to be entitled to the grain sown in the autumn before the expiration of his lease, and coming to maturity in the following summer; Mitch. R. P. 24; Clark v. Harvey, 54 Pa. 142; Hudson v. Porter, 13 Conn. 59; Howell v. Schenck, 24 N. J. L. 89; while in Delaware the same custom is said to prevail with respect to wheat, but not as to oats; Templeman v. Biddle, 1 Harr. (Del.) 522; and trespass will lie against one who interferes with the land to the injury of the outgoing tenant; Clark v. Banks, 6 Houst. (Del.) 584.

Of a similar nature would be the tenant's right to remove the manure made upon the farm during the last year of the tenancy. Good husbandry requires that it should either be used by the tenant on the farm, or left by him for the use of his successor; and such is the general rule on the subject in England as well as in this country; Middlebrook v. Corwin, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 169; Goodrich v. Jones, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 142. A different rule has been laid down in North Carolina; 2 Ired. 326; but it is clearly at variance with the whole current of American authorities upon this point. See MANURE. Straw, however, is incidental to the crop to which it belongs, and may be removed in all cases where the crop may be; Fobes v. Shattuck, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; Craig v. Dale, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 509, 37 Am. Dec. 477.

There are sometimes, also, mutual privileges, in the nature of emblements, which are founded on the common usage of the neighborhood where there is no express agreement to the contrary, applicable to both outgoing and incoming tenants. Thus, the outgoing tenant may by custom be entitled to the privilege of retaining possession of the land on which his away-going crops are sown, with the use of the barns and stables for housing and carrying them away; while the incoming tenant has the privilege of entering during the continuance of the old tenancy for the purposes of ploughing and manuring the land. But, independently of any custom, every tenant who is entitled to emblements has a right of ingress, egress, and regress to cut and carry them away, and the same privilege will belong to his vendee,—neither of them, however, having any exclusive right of possession. See Wintermute v. Light, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 278; Tayl. Landl. & T. § 543; Woodf. Landl. & T. 754; LANDLORD AND TENANT; AWAY-GOING CROP; GROWING CROPS.

EMBRACEOR. He who, when a matter is on trial between party and party, comes to the bar with one of the parties, and, having received some reward so to do, speaks in the case or privily labors the jury, or stands there to survey or overlook them, thereby to put them in fear and doubt of the matter. But persons learned in the law may speak in a cause for their clients. Co. Litt. 369; Termes de la Ley.

EMBRACERY. An attempt to corrupt or influence a jury, or any way incline them to be more favorable to one side than to the other, by money, promises, threats, or persuasions, whether the juror on whom such attempt is made give any verdict or not, or whether the verdict be true or false. Hawk. Pl. Cr. 259; Co. Litt. 157 b, 369 a; 11 Mod. 111, 118; Gibbs v. Dewey, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 503; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 389; State v. Sales, 2 Nev. 268; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.) 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143; State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57, 30 Am. Dec. 450.

Such an attempt is a misdemeanor at common law; Cl. Cr. L. 326.

See JURY.

EMENDA (Lat.) Amends. That which is given in reparation or satisfaction for a trespass committed; or, among the Saxons, a compensation for a crime. Spelman, Gloss.

EMENDALS. In English Law. This ancient word is said to be used in the accounts of the Inner Temple, where so much in emendals at the foot of an account signifies so much in bank, or stock, for the supply of emergencies. Cunningham, Law Dict. But Spelman says it is what is contributed for the reparation of losses. Cowell.

EMENDATIO PANIS ET CERVISIÆ.

The power of supervising and correcting the weights and measures of bread and ale. Cowell.

EMERGENCY. An unforeseen occurrence or condition. See ACCIDENT.

EMIGRANT. One who quits his country for any lawful reason, with a design to settle elsewhere, and who takes his family and property, if he has any, with him. Vattel, b. 1, c. 19, § 224. See McIlvaine v. Cox, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 302, 2 L. Ed. 279.

EMIGRANT AGENT. As used in a Georgia statute taxing emigrant agents, a person engaged in hiring laborers in a state to be employed beyond its limits. Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 21 Sup. Ct. 128, 45 L. Ed. 186, affirming 110 Ga. 584, 35 S. E. 699, 50 L. R. A. 685. See EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES.

EMIGRATION. The act of removing from one place to another.

It is sometimes used in the same sense as expatriation; but there is some difference in the signification. Expatriation is the act of abandoning one's country; while emigration is, perhaps not strictly, applied to the act of removing from one part of the country to another. See 2 Kent 34, 44; EXPATRIATION.

EMINENCE. A title of honor given to cardinals.

EMINENT DOMAIN. The superior right of property subsisting in a sovereignty, by which private property may in certain cases be taken or its use controlled for the public benefit, without regard to the wishes of the owner.

The power to take private property for public use. West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 536, 12 L. Ed. 535.

The right of every government to appropriate otherwise than by taxation and its police authority (which are distinct powers), private property for public use. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 584.

History and Nature of the Power. The phrase "eminent domain" appears to have originated with Grotius, who carefully describes its nature; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 3, n.; Mills, Em. Dom. § 5; 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L. 945. The power is a universal one and as old as political society, and the American constitutions do not change its scope or nature but simply embody it, as described by Grotius, in positive, fundamental law.

The language of Grotius is: "We have elsewhere said, that the property of subjects is under the eminent domain of the state; so that the state, or he who acts for it, may use, and even alienate and destroy such property; not only in case of extreme necessity, in which even private persons have a right over the property of others; but for ends of public utility, to which ends those who founded civil society must be supposed to have intended that private ends should give way. But it is to be added, that when this is done, the state is bound to make good the loss to those who lose their property; and to this public purpose, among others, he who has suffered the loss must, if need be, contribute." Grotius, Bel. ac Pac. lib. iii. c. 20. In the last clause quoted there seems to be an expression thus early of the doctrine which commonly forms a part of later legislation in the exercise of the right of eminent domain of the assessment of benefits on the person whose property is taken.

The term used by Grotius has been objected to by other writers, as, for example Bynkershoek, who prefers the terms imperium eminentis rather than dominium eminentis, considering the former as more accurately expressing the idea of supreme power. At the same time that he advocates the use of a terminology to give more emphatic expression to the sovereign nature and character of the power, this writer discusses the question whether it may be exercised only for necessity as he conceives Puffendorf to urge, or also on the ground of convenience or, to use the exact phrase of Grotius, utility. Bynkershoek considers either ground sufficient, but he also lays down the principle of requiring compensation not merely for a taking, but for "every loss which private persons bear for the common necessity or utility," thus anticipating the doctrine not recognized by writers of his time, but accepted by modern constitution makers, under the name of consequential damages for injury to, as well the direct loss occasioned by, the taking private property. Quest. Jur. Pub. lib. ii. c. 15. Puffendorf also criticises the term employed by Grotius. He divides the term control (potestas) into dominium as used in respect to what is one's own, and imperium, with respect to what belongs to others. Accordingly he would consider that imperium eminentis is more accurate than dominium eminentis; De Jure Naturæ et Gentium, lib. i. c. 1. s. 19. So Heinneccius says: "We confess that this use of the word is not quite apt, for the conception of dominium and that of imperium are different things; it is the latter and not the former which belongs to rulers," but he adds, that as there is no doubt about the absolute right, it is useless to condemn the word when once it has been accepted; Elem. Jur. Nat. et Gent. lib. ii. c. 8, s. 168.

All these writers agree that the power is exercised as an attribute of sovereignty, and in this conclusion there is a general concurrence. Vattel says: "In political society everything must give way to the common good; and if even the person of the citizens is subject to this rule, their property cannot be excepted. The state cannot live, or continue to administer public affairs in the most advantageous manner, if it have not the power, on occasion, to dispose of every kind of property under its control. It should be presumed that when the nation takes possession of a country, property in specific things is given up to individuals only upon this reservation." So it was said by the U. S. Supreme Court: "The power to take private property for public use, generally termed the right of eminent domain, belongs to every independent government. It is an incident of sovereignty, and as said in Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206, requires no constitutional recognition;" Field, J., U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 518, 3 Sup. Ct. 346, 27 L. Ed. 1015.

Blackstone rests the doctrine upon necessity, and considers the recognized right to compensation as evidence of the great regard of the law for private property; while the good of the individual must yield to that of the community, the legislature alone may interpose to compel the individual to acquiesce, but such interposition is not arbitrary but only upon full indemnification and equivalent for the injury thereby sustained. The nature of the transaction he states thus: "All that the legislature does, is to oblige the owner to alienate his possessions for a reasonable price; and even this is an exertion of power which the legislature indulges with caution, and which nothing but the legislature can perform." 1 Sharsw. Ill. Com. 139, n. 13.

This statement by Blackstone of English law is to be borne in mind hereafter in considering the nature and origin of the right to compensation. Here we have the right defined with the same limitation which, as will be seen, is sometimes claimed to rest solely on express provisions of written constitutions. And the force of this statement is strengthened not weakened, by the observation of Buller, J., that there were many cases in which an injury is suffered by individuals for which there is no right of action, as in a case of the destruction of private property in time of war for the public defence; id.; 4 Term 794; 3 Wils. 461; 6 Taunt. 29.

Notwithstanding this recognition of the nature of the power the subject of eminent domain as understood in the United States is practically eliminated from English law and the title itself is usually not to be found in digests or text books of that country. "That there is no eminent domain in English jurisprudence," says a recent writer on the subject, "is because the power is included, and the obligation to compensate lost, in the absolutism of parliament." "The only technical term approximating to eminent domain, is compulsory power, as used in acts enabling municipal and other corporations to take property for their use. The multiplication of such acts led to the enactment of several general laws, notably the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (q. v.), which is a complete code. This act or one of the others of a similar class, as the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, is incorporated by reference in the various special acts;" Rand. Em. Dom. § 7.

It follows of necessity that English decisions do not apply to the vast number of constitutional questions constantly arising in this country, though the adherence of English legislation to the same great principle of compensation necessarily results in producing a body of law in England covering most of the questions which are adjudicated in our own country respecting the construction and application of statutes under which the power is exercised.

The subject is treated at length in 6 Halsbury, Laws of England 1, under the title of Compulsory Purchase of Land, where (p. 12) it is pointed out that the earliest act appears to be one for supplying Gloucester with water in 1541-42, called "The Bill for the Conduytees at Gloucester"; and that there was a similar act in 1543-44 for rebuilding London after the Great Fire.

Different theories are advanced as to the precise nature of the power, and it has been defined to be the right retained by the people or government over the estate of individuals, to reclaim the same for public use,—a kind of reserved right or estate remaining in the sovereign as paramount to the individual title. This conception of the right was at one time very generally accepted. The result of this view is to consider the right, theoretically at least, as so much of the original proprietorship retained by the sovereign power in granting lands or franchises to individuals or corporations, wherever the common-law theory of original proprietorship prevails. An argument by analogy in support of this view is derived from the able examination and explanation of the origin of the jus publicum in Com. v. Alger. 7 Cush. (Mass.) 90. See, also, remarks of Daniell, J., in West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 533, 12 L. Ed. 535. Perhaps no better statement of this doctrine is to be found than this: "The highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity, giving a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state whenever the public good requires it." Beekman v. R. Co., 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 73, 22 Am. Dec. 679; or, "The true theory and principle of the matter is, that the legislature resume dominion over the property, and having resumed it, instead of using it by their agents, to effect the intended public good, and to avoid entanglement in the common business of life, they revert it in other individuals or corporations to be used by them in such manner as to effect, directly or indirectly, or incidentally, as the case may be, the public good intended." Todd v. Austin, 34 Conn. 78; see also Harding v. Goodlett, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 41, 24 Am. Dec. 546; Heyward v. City of New York, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 486; In re Union El. R. Co., 113 N. Y. 275, 21 N. E. 81; Biddle v. Hussman, 23 Mo. 597.

But this theory of resumption of original proprietorship is disapproved by the most authoritative writers, and with reason; the weight of authority and of argument are both against it. In this country the right is exercised by two governments, each sovereign, operating on the same property; the federal power can, upon no hypothesis, be based upon original grant in the older states, nor perhaps the state power, in the new states; a new sovereignty by acquiring territorial rights succeeds to this right over property, of which the original grant was from the prior one; property may be appropriated a second time after the power has been already exercised and, upon the theory under consideration, necessarily exhausted; personal property is subject to the right, although the doctrine of reserved right cannot apply to it, while the reversion of the state will supply no argument, as it applies equally to personal property in which the state never had any title; and any paramount or reserved right could be granted, but this right never can; Sholl v. Coal Co., 118 Ill. 427, 10 N. E. 199, 59 Am. Rep. 379; New York, H. & N. R. Co. v. R. Co., 36 Conn. 196. All these considerations are inconsistent with the theory suggested and seem to leave no alternative but to recognize the right as an attribute of sovereignty and in no sense an interest or estate. See Lewis, Em. Dom. § 3; Rand. Em. Dom. § 3; Noll v. R. Co., 32 Ia. 66; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451; Bloodgood v. R. Co., 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 57, 31 Am. Dec. 313; 2 Redf. Railw. 229.

It is an inherent power which belongs to the states and was not surrendered to the United States, and it is untouched by any provision of the federal constitution. It extends to tangible and intangible property, to a chose in action, a charter or any kind of contract, as well as to land and movables. It is not limited by the inhibition against impairing the obligation of contracts. The obligation of a contract is not impaired by being taken under eminent domain if compensation be made. Every contract between the state and the individual or between individuals is subject to this law; City of Cincinnati v. R. Co., 223 U. S. 390, 32 Sup. Ct. 267, 56 L. Ed. 481.

One of the inalienable rights of sovereignty; Hollister v. State, 9 Ida. 8, 71 Pac. 541; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 28 Kan. 453; Woodmere Cemetery v. Roulo, 104 Mich. 595, 62 N. Ct. 374, 33 L. Ed. 740, cited in Adams v. Henderson, 168 U. S. 574, 18 Sup. Ct. 179, 42 L. Ed. 584.

"Acts done in the exercise of governmental powers and not directly encroaching upon private property, though their consequences may be to impair its use, are universally held not to be a taking" within the fifth amendment; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. Ed. 336; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S. 390, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523. So of the change of location of gas pipes under a municipal regulation enacted for the public safety under the police power; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S. 395, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523; and an ordinance requiring a railroad company to lower its tunnel under the Chicago river to afford increased depth of water for navigation; West Chicago Street Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 201 U. S. 506, 26 Sup. Ct. 518, 50 L. Ed. 845; so of an order of the secretary of war requiring a bridge over a navigable river to be raised in aid of navigation; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S. 364, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523.

This right is distinguished from public domain, which is property owned absolutely by the state in the same manner as an individual holds his property; 19 (No. 37) Am. Jur. 121; 2 Kent 339; Corporation of Memphis v. Overton, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 389; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 540, 12 L. Ed. 535; termed by Cooley "the ordinary domain of the state"; Const. Lim. 642.

The right of eminent domain is not to be confounded with cases in which there exists a sovereign right to take or destroy private property without making compensation. The familiar case of taxation is readily distinguished. An owner is not entitled to compensation for damage or loss to property taken or destroyed during war. As to the distinction between the war power and eminent domain see 13 Am. L. Reg. 265, 337, 401; Mills, Em. Dom. § 3. So property may be taken under a controlling necessity, or to prevent the spread of a fire; 12 Co. 63; Keller v. City of Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 614, 32 Am. Rep. 613; McDonald v. City of Red Wing, 13 Minn. 38 (Gil. 25); Mayor, etc., of New York v. Lord, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 126; Amer. Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248.

In trespass for destruction of goods, destroyed by the blowing up a building to prevent the spread of fire in a city, ordered by defendant as Mayor of New York, the common-law plea of necessity is good in justification and it need not be averred that the defendant was a resident of or owner of property, in the city, or that his own property was in danger; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420. And similarly are treated proceedings under the police power, to abate a nuisance (q. v.); Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53 (in which Shaw, C. J., draws the distinction between the police power and eminent domain); Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438; or by restraining the owner of land from making a noxious use of it; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. R. Co., 105 Ill. 388, 44 Am. Rep. 799; or by removing sand, etc., from beaches; Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 55; compelling railroads to erect cattle guards; Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; or holding them responsible for damages by fire (q. v.) from locomotives; Rodemacher v. R. Co., 41 Ia. 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; compelling riparian owners to keep up a levee; Boulogny v. Dormenon, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 455; or changing the course of a river; Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536; or as a forfeiture for violation of law; State v. Snow, 3 R. I. 64; People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 330; Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287; Guillotte v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 432.

The Right of Compensation. Though not included in the definitions of the power as usually given, the necessity for compensation is recognized by the most authoritative writers as an incident to the right, an original element of its existence, and not a superimposed limitation.

Accordingly eminent domain is said with more precision to be the right of the nation or the state, or of those to whom the power has been lawfully delegated, to condemn private property to public use, and to appropriate the ownership and possession of such property for such use, upon paying to the owner a due compensation, to be ascertained according to law; Black, Const. L. 350.

So far as the federal constitution is concerned, a state may authorize the taking possession of property for a public use, prior to any payment therefor, or even the determination of the amount of compensation, provided adequate provision is made for such compensation; Williams v. Parker, 188 U. S. 491, 23 Sup. Ct. 440, 47 L. Ed. 559.

Nearly if not all of the American constitutions provide for compensation. Professor Thayer states that "now (1895) only three constitutions, New Hampshire, North Carolina, and Virginia are without a clause expressly requiring compensation." The provisions of the several then constitutions are given in Randolph, Em. Dom. 401 to 416, and Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 14 to 52 (the latter including the prior as well as the last state constitutions). Nichols, Em. Dom. (1909) gives the provisions of twenty-seven state constitutions requiring prepayment; § 267. In one of these states a statute providing that possession might be taken after the money was paid into court and before the amount of the compensation was ascertained was held unconstitutional on the ground that the owner was entitled to hold the land until he received the money; Steinhart v. Superior Court, 137 Cal. 575, 70 Pac. 629, 59 L. R. A. 404, 92 Am. St. Rep. 183.

With respect to compensation, Kent says: "This principle, in American constitutional jurisprudence, is founded in natural equity, and is laid down by jurists as an acknowledged principle of universal law;" 2 Com. 339.

It would seem to be the most satisfactory conclusion both upon reason and authority that neither the right of the state to take nor the right of the individual to compensation required a constitutional assertion. The right to take private property for public use does not depend on constitutional provisions, but is an attribute of sovereignty; Sinnickson v. Johnson, 17 N. J. L. 129, 34 Am. Dec. 184; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451; it (the right) exists, and the only limitation upon its exercise is that imposed by the state or federal constitution; Wilson v. R. Co., 5 Del. Ch. 524.

So also the right to compensation is an incident to the exercise of the power, inseparably connected with it; Sinnickson v. Johnson, 17 N. J. L. 129, 34 Am. Dec. 184; "this is an affirmation of a great doctrine established by the common law for the protection of private property;" 2 Story, Const. § 1790; "the obligation attaches to the exercise of the power, though it is not provided for by the state constitution, or that of the United States had not enjoined it;" Bonaparte v. R. Co., Baldw. C. C. 220, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617. "If by the assertion that this right existed at common law independent of the declaration of rights, is meant that compensation in such case is required by a plain dictate of natural justice, it must be conceded. The bill of rights declares a great principle; the particular law prescribes a practical rule by which the remedy for the violation of right is to be sought and afforded;" Shaw, C. J., in Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 475. In New Hampshire, although the constitution did not contain an express provision requiring compensation, "yet it has been construed by the courts, in view of the spirit and tenor of the whole instrument, as prohibiting such taking without compensation; and it is understood to be the settled law of the state, that the legislature cannot constitutionally authorize such taking without compensation;" Eaton v. R. R., 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147. It is a condition precedent to its exercise under a statute that it make reasonable provision for compensation to the owner of the property taken; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 16 Sup. Ct. 43, 40 L. Ed. 188; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526.

There are dicta which countenance the opinion that compensation is not of the essence of eminent domain, that the usual constitutional clause is restrictive, not declaratory, so that, were it omitted, the state could properly take property without paying for it; Rand. Em. Dom. § 226, citing Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206; U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 3 Sup. Ct. 346, 27 L. Ed. 1015; Clark v. Town of Saybrook, 21 Conn. 313; Wilson v. R. Co., 5 Del. Ch. 524; In re Furman St., 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590, 647. In one of these cases the language used is "the provision found in the federal and state constitutions for just compensation for property taken is no part of the power itself, but merely a limitation upon the use of it, a condition upon which it may be exercised;" U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 3 Sup. Ct. 346, 27 L. Ed. 1015.

One of the text writers on the subject takes this view; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 10; and argues it with great earnestness, treating it as the same question discussed by Sedgwick and Cooley and referred to supra under the title Constitutional (q. v.), whether there are limitations of legislative power other than those contained in the constitutions, federal and state. The real question involved in the relation of compensation to eminent domain is a different one. It is not whether the sovereign powers of government exercised by American state legislatures are subject to undefined limitations not embodied in the written constitution, but what is the sovereign power which we term eminent domain, as recognized and exercised by governments long before written constitutions were known. It is true that some courts in discussing this subject have fallen into the same confusion of ideas, but the distinction none the less exists and should be borne in mind. Is it the right to take private property arbitrarily, or only to take it on making compensation? Lewis thinks "the question has lost most of its practical interest from the fact that all states except one (North Carolina), now have an express limitation in their organic law touching the exercise of this power." It is submitted, however, that the precise definition and true limitation of so autocratic a governmental power can never become a matter of indifference. So long as one state constitution is silent on the subject of compensation it remains a practical question in American constitutional law and the existence of a reserved power to amend or abolish any existing constitution, coupled with the prevalent tendency to attack and impair the right to private property, must necessarily keep it such, independently of the theoretical interest in maintaining correct definitions of the inherent rights of sovereignty.

Suggestions in the line of the cases cited by Randolph and the views expressed by Lewis, led to practical results in but few cases:—In South Carolina land was taken for roads without compensation; Lindsay v. Street Com'rs, 2 Bay (S. C.) 38; State v. Dawson, 3 Hill (S. C.) 100; but in New York, taking wild land without compensation was held unconstitutional; Wallace v. Karlenowefski, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 118. In New Jersey and Pennsylvania, the subject rested on a statutory rather than a constitutional basis, because the grants by the proprietors included an extra allowance for roads; Simmons v. City of Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 619; Workman v. Mifflin, 30 Pa. 362; and this was held compensation; East Union Tp. v. Comrey, 100 Pa. 362. See Wagner v. Salzburg Tp., 132 Pa. 636, 19 Atl. 294. Under the New Jersey constitution, land might be taken for highways without compensation until otherwise directed by the legislature. In Louisiana land on the Mississippi River can be taken without compensation for the construction of a public levee under the old French law, and this applies to the land of a citizen of another state, provided he receive the same measure of right as citizens of Louisiana in regard to their property similarly situated; Eldridge v. Trezevant, 160 U. S. 452, 16 Sup. Ct. 345, 40 L. Ed. 490.

Mr. James B. Thayer (Cases, Const. L. 953) discusses this subject in a very interesting note and reaches the somewhat metaphysical conclusion that the right to compensation is not a component part of the right to take, though it arises at the same time and the latter cannot exist without it, the two being compared to shadow and substance.

He argues that the right of the state springs from the necessity of government, while the obligation to reimburse stands upon the natural rights of the individual. "These two, therefore, have not the same origin; they do not come, for instance, from any implied contract between the state and the individual, that the former shall have the property, if it will make compensation; the right is no mere right of pre-emption, and it has no condition of compensation annexed to it, either precedent or subsequent. But there is a right to take, and attached to it, as an incident, an obligation to make compensation; this latter, morally speaking, follows the other, indeed, like a shadow, but it is yet distinct from it, and flows from another source." From this he argues that for the taking the citizen cannot complain; if recompense is not made, the duty of the sovereign is violated and the individual "has an eternal claim against the state, which can never be blotted out except only by satisfaction; but this claim is for compensation, and not for his former property," and, "in the absence of constitutional provisions," the loss "must be regarded as damnum absque injuria."

The distinction between this theory and the doctrine that the right to compensation is an inherent attribute rather than a subsequent limitation of the original right would seem to be rather ingenious than practical. The citations in the same note from the civilians show clearly that, in their view, compensation was essential, and even in the states whose organic law was, at the time of the decision, either silent or contained merely a general declaration as to private rights the necessity of compensation has been recognized; Rand. Em. Dom. § 227, citing Bristol v. New Chester, 3 N. H. 524; In re Mt. Washington Road Co., 35 N. H. 134; Harness v. Canal Co., 1 Md. Ch. 248; Bonaparte v. R. Co., Baldw. C. C. 205, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617; Johnston v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 550; Staton v. R. Co., 111 N. C. 278, 16 S. E. 181, 17 L. R. A. 838; Ex parte Martin, 13 Ark. 198, 58 Am. Dec. 321; see also Monongahela Nav. Co. v. U. S., 148 U. S. 312, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, 37 L. Ed. 463; Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 475. The mistaken idea that the fifth amendment of the constitution of the U. S., applied to the states, seems to have contributed to this opinion in some cases; Gardner v. Village of Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Scudder v. Falls Co., 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756. "The true doctrine is, in the writer's opinion," says the author last cited, "that which requires the payment of compensation whether it be expressly enjoined or not. The modern concept of a constitutional state as realized in the United States has no room for spoliation of the individual." The same view is supported in Mills, Em. Dom. § 1.

Whatever view may be taken of the general doctrine of the law on this subject the necessity of compensation is firmly imbedded in American constitutional law.

It may be considered settled that the exercise of the right is not justifiable, where the statute fails to provide compensation; and the courts will, in general, substantially declare such an act unconstitutional; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 16 Sup. Ct. 43, 40 L. Ed. 188; Richmond v. Telegraph Co., 174 U. S. 761, 19 Sup. Ct. 778, 43 L. Ed. 1162; U. S. v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 485, 23 Sup. Ct. 349, 47 L. Such an act is, however, said not to be so far void as not to warrant the acquisition of the property by purchase; Carbon Coal & Min. Co. v. Drake, 26 Kan. 345. This compensation must be in money; Com. v. Peters, 2 Mass. 125; Vanhorne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 304, 1 L. Ed. 391; Murphy v. De Grott, 44 Cal. 51; *Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. In constitutional construction the words "just," "ample," "full," "adequate," "due," etc., prefixed to the word "compensation," has been said to lend no appreciable additional weight; Rand. Em. Dom. § 223; but much stress has often been put upon it by courts. The word "just" in the fifth amendment excludes the taking into account as an element in the compensation any supposed benefit that the owner may receive in common with all from the public uses to which his private property is appropriated and leaves it to stand as a declaration that no private property shall be appropriated to public uses unless a full and exact equivalent for it be returned to the owner; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. U. S., 148 U. S. 326, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, 37 L. Ed. 463. The word "just" is not used as an antithesis of unjust, but "evidently to intensify the meaning of the word compensation;" Virginia & T. R. Co. v. Henry, 8 Nev. 165; it means recompense "all circumstances considered;" McIntire v. State, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 384, "to save the owner from suffering in his property or estate . . . as far as compensation in money can go;" Bangor & P. R. Co. v. McComb, 60 Me. 290; "making the owner good by an equivalent in money;" Bigelow v. R. Co., 27 Wis. 478.

The Federal Power. All lands held by private owners everywhere within the geographical limits of the United States are subject to the authority of the general government to take them for such objects as are germane to the execution of the powers granted to it; Cherokee Nation v. R. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 10 Sup. Ct. 965, 34 L. Ed. 295. The federal government exercises its own right of eminent domain subject to the constitutional limitations requiring compensation; it does not proceed under the right of the state and the measure of compensation in each case may be different; Town of Nahant v. U. S., 136 Fed. 273, 70 C. C. A. 641, 69 L. R. A. 723, modified in U. S. v. Town of Nahant, 153 Fed. 520, 82 C. C. A. 470; Alexander v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cl. 383; Burt v. Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 356, 8 Am. Rep. 339; the consent of the state is not necessary for the condemnation, but only for the transfer of jurisdiction; People v. Humphrey, 23 Mich. 471, 9 Am. Rep. 94. It has the right in territory acquired either by purchase or conquest; People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373.

The right of eminent domain is one of the powers of the federal government essential to its independent existence and perpetuity. Among the purposes for which it is exercised are the acquisition of lands for forts, armories, arsenals, navy yards, light-houses, custom-houses, post-offices, court-houses, and other public uses. The right may be exercised within the states without application to them for permission to exercise it; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; the fact that the power has not been exercised adversely does not disprove its existence, nor does the fact that in some instances the states have condemned lands for the use of the general government; id. It is a right belonging to a sovereignty to take private property for its own public uses but not for those of another; hence the power of the United States must be complete in itself, it can neither be enlarged nor diminished, nor can the manner of its exercise be regulated by the state whose consent is not a condition precedent to its enjoyment; id.

Originally the method of proceeding was usually for the state to condemn lands for the United States when needed by the latter; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590; U. S. v. Dump-lin Island, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229; Burt v. Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 356, 8 Am. Rep. 339; and the power has been delegated by the state to the United States within a comparatively recent period; In re Certain Land in Lawrence, 119 Fed. 453; but this method is not only unnecessary, but is not based on correct principles, since the absolute and unqualified power belongs to the federal government, and that method has been disapproved; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550; In re Appointment of U. S. Com'rs, 96 N. Y. 227. When the taking of property is authorized by congress, the proceedings are carried on under federal law; Town of Nahant v. U. S., 136 Fed. 273, 70 C. C. A. 641, 69 L. R. A. 723.

The United States cannot take state property devoted to a public use and the loss of which would interfere with the performance of its duties by the state. It was on this principle that the right to tax a state judicial officer upon his salary was denied to the United States; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 113, 20 L. Ed. 122; but the United States may acquire an easement in the property of a state which does not interfere with its ordinary use, as by the placing of telegraph poles, under a federal authority, upon state roads; City of St. Louis v. Telegraph Co., 148 U. S. 92, 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 37 L. Ed. 380; City of Richmond v. Telegraph

It has been said that a necessity of the federal government would override the right of the state to the occupancy of property for public use—that what was devoted to a local public use might be taken for a higher national use; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662, 723, 9 L. Ed. 573; and it was said by Bradley, J., that “if it is necessary that the United States government should have an eminent domain still higher than that of the state, in order that it may fully carry out the objects and purposes of the constitution, then it has it”; Stockton v. R. Co., 32 Fed. 9; it has paramount authority in the matter of taking any property within its borders for those public uses which are within the constitutional reservations to the general government; U. S. v. City of Tiffin, 190 Fed. 279; and in the Northern Securities Case it was said that state legislation, even if in the exercise of its unquestioned power, must yield, in case of conflict, to the supremacy of the United States constitution and the acts of congress passed pursuant to it; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679. As to the nature and extent of power of condemnation of the United States, see note, 70 C. C. A. 653.

On the other hand, the state cannot condemn land held by the United States and used for public purposes; U. S. v. Chicago, 7 How. (U. S.) 185, 12 L. Ed. 660; nor can a territory; Pratt v. Brown, 3 Wis. 603. With respect to land not used for public purposes of which the United States is considered as a private proprietor, it has been held that such land might be taken; Hendricks v. Johnson, 6 Port. (Ala.) 472; U. S. v. R. Bridge Co., 6 McLean 517, Fed. Cas. No. 16,114, approved by a dictum in U. S. v. Chicago, 7 How. (U. S.) 185, 12 L. Ed. 660, and apparently disapproved in Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, 6 Sup. Ct. 670, 29 L. Ed. 845, where Gray, J. suggests that the question, will, when raised, require careful consideration. When the state has ceded land to the federal government it has lost its jurisdiction entirely; Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 525, 5 Sup. Ct. 995, 29 L. Ed. 264; U. S. v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 14,867; People v. Godfrey, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 225; Mitchell v. Tibbetts, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 298; Sinks v. Reese, 19 Ohio St. 306, 2 Am. Rep. 397; and hence the state cannot condemn land within the ceded district; U. S. v. Ames, 1 Woodb. & M. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 14,441; In re Opinion of the Justices, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 580. But when land has been acquired by the United States without the consent of the state, the state retains its jurisdiction and may act with respect to it, so far as it does not interfere with the use of the property by the United States; Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 525, 5 Sup.

Ct. 995, 29 L. Ed. 264; but whether in the exercise of this jurisdiction there is included the power of condemnation remains an open question; Nichols, Em. Dom. § 25.

The state may condemn for another public use the land of an interstate railroad chartered by congress if it does not interfere with its operation; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 3 Fed. 106; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 3 Fed. 702; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 29 Fed. 728.

A federal court may require proceedings to condemn a crossing over a railroad, in the hand of a receiver appointed by it, to be brought within its jurisdiction; Buckhannon & N. R. Co. v. Davis, 135 Fed. 707, 68 C. C. A. 345; and when the owner of the land and the party seeking to condemn it are citizens of the same state, the condemnation proceedings may be begun in, or removed to, the federal court; Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206; Madisonville Traction Co. v. Min. Co., 196 U. S. 239, 25 Sup. Ct. 251, 49 L. Ed. 462; Kansas City v. Hennegan, 152 Fed. 249; Deepwater R. Co. v. Lumber Co., 152 Fed. 824; but it must follow the procedure of the state statute; East Tennessee, Va. & Ga. R. Co. v. Telegraph Co., 112 U. S. 306, 5 Sup. Ct. 168, 28 L. Ed. 746; Broadmoor Land Co. v. Curr, 142 Fed. 421, 73 C. C. A. 537.

This right exists in the District of Columbia, the territories, and lands within the United States acquired through cession; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170.

The power of eminent domain in the general government as exercised for local purposes in the District of Columbia is the same as that exercised by a state within its own territory; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170; there and in the territories it exists in all cases in which a similar power could be exercised by the states; First Nat. Bank v. County of Yankton, 101 U. S. 129, 25 L. Ed. 1046. It is among the powers derived by the territorial governments immediately from the United States; Swan v. Williams, 2 Mich. 427; Oury v. Goodwin, 3 Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 376; Newcomb v. Smith, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 71.

Within the states the United States has the right of eminent domain for federal purposes; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; Cherokee Nation v. Ry. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 10 Sup. Ct. 965, 34 L. Ed. 295. This power has been exercised to condemn land for military posts; U. S. v. Chicago, 7 How. (U. S.) 185, 12 L. Ed. 660; fortification; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229; navigation work; King v. U. S., 59 Fed. 9; light-house and coast survey purposes; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590; Chappell v. U. S., 160 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 397, 40 L. Ed. 510; the construction of interstate railroads; Calif.

formia v. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150; water supply; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550; post-office; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; Burt v. Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 356, 8 Am. Rep. 339; a national cemetery at Gettysburg; U. S. v. Ry. Co., 160 U. S. 668, 16 Sup. Ct. 427, 40 L. Ed. 576. The weight of authority is in favor of the exercise of the right by the United States directly when property is required for federal purposes and not through the right of eminent domain of the state; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550; In re Appointment of United States Commissioners, 96 N. Y. 227; though the latter method is upheld in some cases; U. S. v. Duimplin Island, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; Burt v. Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 356, 8 Am. Rep. 339; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590; but it is held that the United States may delegate to a tribunal created under the laws of the state the power to fix and determine the amount of compensation to be paid by the federal government for private property taken by it in the exercise of the right of eminent domain; U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 3 Sup. Ct. 346, 27 L. Ed. 1015. The United States circuit court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings instituted by the United States to appropriate land for a post-office; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449. In this case there was no act of congress relating to the subject except the appropriation of money, and a direction to the secretary of the treasury to purchase a site, and the jurisdiction was objected to. The supreme court held that the proceedings were a suit at law and cognizable under the general provisions of the judiciary act. As to the federal right, see Chattaroi Ry. Co. v. Kinner, 14 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 30; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449. The state cannot condemn for the United States and bind the latter as to compensation; People v. Humphrey, 23 Mich. 471, 9 Am. Rep. 94, in which the whole subject of the exercise of this right by state and federal governments was considered by Cooley, J. Proceedings may be in the United States courts, or in state courts, in the name of the United States, and state practice should be followed; In re Appointment of United States Commissioners, 96 N. Y. 227; Jones v. U. S., 48 Wis. 385, 4 N. W. 519; U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 3 Sup. Ct. 346, 27 L. Ed. 1015; or may by act of congress be made to follow some state statute; Darlington v. U. S., 82 Pa. 382, 22 Am. Rep. 766.

Public uses of the federal government have been held to be public uses of the state; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550.

Proceedings under state laws for condemnation of lands, involving the ascertainment by judicial proceedings of the value of property to be paid as compensation, may be removed to the United States court; Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 124 U. S. 197, 8 Sup. Ct.

460, 31 L. Ed. 415; Sugar Creek, P. B. & P. C. R. Co. v. McKell, 75 Fed. 34; if they take the form of a proceeding before the courts; Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206; the preliminary proceedings are in the nature of an inquest and not a "suit," but when transferred into the state court by appeal it becomes one; id.; Hastings Lumber Co. v. Garland, 115 Fed. 18, 52 C. C. A. 609. As to removal of such proceedings, see 25 Am. L. Reg. 183.

The Power of the States. The right of eminent domain is also an attribute or part of the sovereignty of the states, and is by them exercised for a great and constantly increasing variety of purposes, some of which are for governmental uses either of the state at large or of local municipal bodies, or by private persons or corporations authorized to exercise some function of such public character, technically known as a public use.

It is also true that a state cannot condemn property within its borders for the use of another state; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; and a state statute is constitutional which forbids a riparian owner from diverting the water of a river for the use of a city in another state; Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 560; but a statute of one state authorizing condemnation of a water supply for use in a canal in another state was sustained on the ground that the work was also of great benefit to the former state; In re Townsend, 39 N. Y. 171.

When the right of eminent domain is conferred upon private persons or corporations the right is termed by some writers the delegated power of eminent domain; 4 Thomp. Corp. ch. cxxii.; and such person or corporation is the agent of the state for its exercise.

Delegation of Power. The power may be delegated; Brayton v. City of Fall River, 124 Mass. 95; but it can only be exercised by a private individual or corporation by express legislative authority; Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Koochiching Co., 97 Minn. 429, 107 N. W. 405, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638, 7 Ann. Cas. 1182; it may be conferred upon a municipality for laying out and establishing streets; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Fayetteville, 75 Ark. 534, 87 S. W. 1174 (but it is not implied from a mere grant of authority to establish new streets; Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Mayor, etc., of Union Point, 119 Ga. 809, 47 S. E. 183); constructing drains; Hutchins v. Drainage Dist., 217 Ill. 561, 75 N. E. 354; establishing water works; In re Petition of Board of Water Com'rs of Village of White Plains, 176 N. Y. 239, 68 N. E. 348; Dallas v. Hallock, 44 Or. 246, 75 Pac. 204; laying out parks and parkways; City of Memphis v. Hastings, 113 Tenn. 142, 86 S. W. 609, 69 L. R. A. 750 (but a municipal corporation cannot exercise the right beyond its corporate limit without express legisladiver authority; City of Puyallup v. Lacey, 43 Wash. 110, 86 Pac. 215; a railroad company for obtaining gravel and other material; Hopkins v. R. Co., 97 Ga. 107, 25 S. E. 452; for building bridges and approaches thereto; Southern I. & M. Bridge Co. v. Stone, 174 Mo. 1, 73 S. W. 453, 63 L. R. A. 301; and tunnels; McEwan v. R. Co., 72 N. J. L. 419, 60 Atl. 1130. Railroad companies may acquire a title in fee simple if the legislature authorizes it to do so; Challiss v. R. Co., 16 Kans. 117. A de facto railroad corporation may exercise the right inasmuch as its legal existence can only be questioned by the state in a direct proceeding for that purpose; Reisner v. Strong, 24 Kans. 410.

Strictly speaking it is not accurate to say that the state delegates a right of sovereignty, of which it cannot divest itself, hence it is more exact to speak of it as exercising the power through an agent. While corporations are usually selected for such agency, it may be and sometimes is conferred upon individuals; Young v. Buckingham, 5 Ohio 485; Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591; Calking v. Baldwin, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 667, 21 Am. Dec. 168; Moran v. Ross, 79 Cal. 159, 21 Pac. 833; and where incorporation and a franchise were granted to an individual "and associates" it was held that he need not associate any one with him; Day v. Stetson, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 365. It has also been held that an individual as purchaser of a railroad and franchises at the foreclosure sale acquired the right to condemn lands; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860. In one case it is said that a statute neither did nor could confer this right "upon private persons, but only corporations organized for public purposes can be clothed with such privileges;" Finney v. Somerville, 80 Pa. 59; but this expression, so far as it concerns the power of the legislature, was obiter; and a case often cited with this only decides that under a general act, then under construction, the power could not be exercised by individuals, because there was no provision of law for its exercise by individuals; Coe v. R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 372, 75 Am. Dec. 518.

The exercise of the power by such agencies is governed in the main by the same principles and limitations as when it is directly exerted by the federal or state government, and the exceptions to this rule readily disclose themselves in the consideration of the natural divisions of the subject. When its exercise by a private corporation is authorized it has been termed not a franchise but a means to the enjoyment of corporate franchises; Coe v. R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 372, 75 Am. Dec. 518; but the contrary view was expressed by Bradley, J., in California v. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150; "a power conferred upon certain corporations, which is not possessed by the citizens generally, and which is in derogation of their rights, so nearly resembles a franchise as to justify its treatment" under that title; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5587. The use of the term franchise is not defined, by those who most use it, with sufficient precision to be conclusive against either view. It is as much a franchise, if one at all, if exercised by an individual as a corporation, though the writer quoted seems to overlook the possibility of this. It is, however, a grant of power or privilege from the sovereign to the citizen or subject, to do what would but for the grant be unlawful, and it undoubtedly does come within the usually accepted definition of the word franchise (q. v.). As is true with respect to franchises generally, the grant of the power is never presumed unless the intent to part with it is clearly expressed; id. § 5588; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 240; Appeal of Pennsylvania R. Co., 93 Pa. 150; Butler v. Mayor, etc., of Thomasville, 74 Ga. 570; Schmidt v. Densmore, 42 Mo. 225; Chamberlain v. Steam Cordage Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 43, 2 Atl. 775; and its exercise by the state may determine a preceding contract made by the state without impairing the obligation of such contract, the right itself being always reserved by implication, if not expressly; Tait's Ex'r v. Central Lunatic Asylum, 84 Va. 271, 4 S. E. 697.

It is no objection to a grant of the power to a corporation that the latter is seeking to effect its own private gain; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5589; for that is said to be merely compensation for the risk assumed for the benefit of the public; Concord R. R. v. Greeley, 17 N. H. 47. When unrestrained by constitutional provision, the discretion of the legislature in selecting agents through whom the power is to be exercised is absolute. In a state whose constitution prohibits its exercise by foreign corporations they cannot of course act unless domesticated in the state; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Foltz, 52 Fed. 627; but otherwise they may do so; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Welsh, 143 N. Y. 411, 38 N. E. 378, 43 Am. St. Rep. 734; New York & E. R. Co. v. Young, 33 Pa. 175; Dodge v. City of Council Bluffs, 57 Ia. 560, 10 N. W. 886; but a constitutional incapacity cannot be avoided by acting through a domestic corporation; Koenig v. R. Co., 27 Neb. 699, 43 N. W. 423 (see State v. Scott, 22 Neb. 628, 36 N. W. 121); though by consolidating with a domestic corporation it may exercise the power; Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 Mich. 456, 11 N. W. 271; In re St. Paul & N. P. R. Co., 36 Minn. 85, 30 N. W. 432; as thereby the consolidated company becomes a corporation of the state; Trester v. R. Co., 33 Neb. 171, 49 N. W. 1110.

Foreign Corporations. A state cannot confer upon any corporation, public, quasi public or private, the power to exercise the right of eminent domain outside of its own limits; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Telegraph

Co., 121 Fed. 276, 58 C. C. A. 198; Chestatee Pyrites Co. v. Mining Co., 119 Ga. 354, 46 S. E. 422; 100 Am. St. Rep. 174; Helena Power Co. v. Spratt, 35 Mont. 108, 88 Pac. 773, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, 10 Ann. Cas. 1055; Duke v. Cable Co., 71 S. C. 93, 50 S. E. 675; but the fact that a corporation duly organized under the law of the state is subsidiary to a foreign corporation does not affect its right to exercise such power; Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Cable Co., 111 Fed. 842, 49 C. C. A. 663. A domesticated foreign corporation may, in the absence of constitutional prohibition, be authorized by statute to exercise the power within a state; Columbus Water Works Co. v. Long, 121 Ala. 245, 25 South. 702; Illinois State Trust Co. v. R. Co., 208 Ill. 419, 70 N. E. 357; Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. v. Stone, 174 Mo. 1, 73 S. W. 453, 63 L. R. A. 301; In re New York & N. H. Co. (In re Marks) 53 Hun 633, 6 N. Y. Supp. 105; Abbott v. Railroad, 145 Mass. 450, 15 N. E. 91; New York & Erie R. Co. v. Young, 33 Pa. 175; or the district of Alaska; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Telephone & Telegraph Co., 121 Fed. 276, 58 C. C. A. 198.

Statutes conferring the power of eminent domain are to be construed strictly; Godard v. Ry. Co., 202 Ill. 362, 66 N. E. 1066; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Walker, 100 Va. 69, 40 S. E. 633, 914; State v. Superior Court for Chelan County, 36 Wash. 381, 78 Pac. 1011; City of Puyallup v. Lacey, 43 Wash. 110, 86 Pac. 215; aliter, Petersburg School Dist. v. Peterson, 14 N. D. 344, 103 N. W. 756.

The power can only be delegated for a public use; People v. R. Co., 2 McCarty, Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 345; a statute authorizing a telegraph company to construct, maintain, and operate its lines over and along any military or post road of the United States does not confer authority to condemn a right of way over private property; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. R. Co., 195 U. S. 540, 25 Sup. Ct. 133, 49 L. Ed. 312, 1 Ann. Cas. 517; land may be taken for a private road if it is open to the public; County of Madera v. Granite Co., 139 Cal. 128, 72 Pac. 915; the laying out of private roads may be authorized; Dickinson Township Road, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 34; contra, Beaudrot v. Murphy, 53 S. C. 118, 30 S. E. 825; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 534.

How the Question of Public Use is Determined. It is well settled that the power exists only in cases where the public exigency demands its exercise. See remarks of Woodbury, J., and cases cited by him in West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 545, 12 L. Ed. 535. But the practice of all the states and of the federal government, since this decision, in condemning land for purposes of public convenience but not necessity, has been so frequent that the legislative control over the necessity and the particular location is almost universally conceded. Mills, Em. Dom. § 11; Nichols, Em. Dom. ch. liii. In a proceeding to condemn land, the term "necessary" does not mean that it is indispensable or imperative, but only that it is convenient and useful; and if an improvement is useful, and a convenience and benefit to the public sufficient to warrant the expense in making it, then it is necessary; Com'rs of Parks and Boulevards of City of Detroit v. Moesta, 91 Mich. 149, 51 N. W. 903; but it is no ground for a right to take land that its resources could be utilized at a much less expense than the land already owned; Spring Valley Water Works v. San Mateo Water Works, 64 Cal. 123, 28 Pac. 447. In 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5593, in concluding a discussion of the various theories as to what uses are public uses, the author says: "But it is a sound conclusion that the use must be a public use in the sense that it is open to such members of the public as may choose to use it upon the performance of reasonable or proper conditions; or in the sense of satisfying a great public want or exigency. On the other hand, where the public use is not compulsory, but is optional with the private corporation seeking the condemnation, it is not a public use." In U. S. v. Ry. Co., 160 U. S. 668, 16 Sup. Ct. 427, 40 L. Ed. 576, it was said: "The constitution provides that private property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation. These words are a limitation, the same in effect as 'You shall not exercise this power except for public use.'"

The legislature cannot so determine that the use is public as to make its determination conclusive on the courts, and the existence of a public use in any class of cases is a question for the courts; Tyler v. Beach, 44 Vt. 648, 8 Am. Rep. 398; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 534; McQuillen v. Hatton, 42 Ohio St. 202; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & Iron Co., 37 Md. 537; Consolidated Channel Co. v. R. Co., 51 Cal. 269; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 311.

The Missouri constitution provides, as do those of Colorado, Mississippi, and Washington, that it shall be a judicial question whether the use contemplated is public, and that question will be determined without the aid of a jury; City of Savannah v. Hancock, 91 Mo. 54, 3 S. W. 215.

The Massachusetts Bill of Rights uses the term "public exigency" and the existence of one was said by Shaw, C. J., to be made by implication a prerequisite; Harback v. City of Boston, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 295. There is a similar provision in Maine, and in both states the rule making the necessity a legislative question is followed as in other states; Lynch v. Forbes, 161 Mass. 302, 37 N. E. 437, 42 Am. St. Rep. 402; Hayford v. City of Bangor, 102 Me. 340, 66 Atl. 731, 11 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 940. The Michigan constitution requires the necessity of all takings, except by the state, to be determined by a jury, and in Wisconsin a similar provision applies to condemnation by municipal corporations.

The presumption is in favor of the public character of a use declared so by the legislature; Appeal of Edgewood R. Co., 79 Pa. 257; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 534; and unless it is clear that it is not possible for the use to be public, the courts cannot interfere; Mills, Em. Dom. § 10.

In an early case it was said that in general the question whether a particular structure, as a bridge, or a lock, canal, or road, is for the public use, is a question for the legislature, and it may be presumed to have been decided by them; Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 475; citing Com. v. Breed, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 463; but in a later case when this position was broadly urged, it was held to be obviously untenable, and that, where the power was exercised, it necessarily involved an inquiry into the rightful authority of the legislature under the organic law, and that the legislature had no power to determine finally upon the extent of its authority over private rights; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray (Mass.) 417. In this case what is probably the true doctrine was stated, that it is the duty of the courts to make all reasonable presumptions in favor of the validity of the legislative act. But this is simply the application to this particular subject of the general presumption of the constitutionality of legislative acts.

This right of the courts to determine the question of public use was maintained in In re Niagara Falls & W. Ry. Co., 108 N. Y. 375, 15 N. E. 429; but if the court determine the matter in question to be a public use, their power is exhausted and the extent to which property shall be taken for it is wholly in the legislative discretion; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170. Whether the necessity exists for taking the property is a legislative question; Lynch v. Forbes, 161 Mass. 302, 37 N. E. 437, 42 Am. St. Rep. 402.

The grant of the right is a determination on the part of the legislature that the object is necessary; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. R. Co., 31 N. J. Eq. 475; and of this it is the judge; Tracy, etc., v. R. Co., 80 Ky. 259; In re Application of Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 109, 50 Am. Rep. 636; North Missouri R. Co. v. Gott, 25 Mo. 540; and parties cannot be heard on the question of necessity; Holt v. City Council of Somerville, 127 Mass. 408. If it is a public use there is no restraint on legislative discretion and the judicial function is gone; Mills, Em. Dom. § 11. If the use is certainly public courts will not interfere; only, when there is an attempt to evade the law and procure condemnation for private uses will courts declare it void; Mills, Em. Dom. § 11; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. R. Co., 17 W. Va. 812. The fact that a railroad has located its line across certain land, is prima facie proof that it is necessary for it to take that land for the use of its road; O'Hare v. R. Co., 139 Ill. 151, 28 N. E. 923. Whether the land is reasonably required is a question of fact to be determined by the court or jury, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff; Spring Valley Water Works v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 28 Pac. 681.

It has been held that when under the constitution a federal question arises, the supreme court will determine the law without reference to state decisions; Ohio Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. (U. S.) 432, 14 L. Ed. 997. See Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 678, 21 L. Ed. 382; People v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480. But in determining what is a taking of property, the federal courts will accept the definition of the word property by the state court, where it is clearly settled; Pumpelly v. Canal Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 166, 20 L. Ed. 557; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. R. Co., 147 U. S. 248, 13 Sup. Ct. 299, 37 L. Ed. 155; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 224; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497, 19 L. Ed. 984; even following reversals by the latter; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black. (U. S.) 599, 17 L. Ed. 261; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 291, 8 L. Ed. 402; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 678, 21 L. Ed. 382.

What is a Public Use. There has not been and probably never will be a satisfactory comprehensive definition of the term "public use." There is a fundamental difficulty in framing one, arising from the double meaning of the word "use." It may be either employment or advantage, and courts have divided in resting their efforts at a definition upon either one or the other of these terms. The subject is discussed at length and the cases examined in Nichols, Em. Dom. §§ 206-211, and the conclusion of this author is that neither view as based upon the words mentioned, is entirely satisfactory or sufficiently broad to justify taking land for all the purposes for which it has been permitted.

Property taken for public use need not be taken by the public as a body into its direct possession, but for public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or purposes productive of general benefit or great advantage to the community; Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221. It is not necessary that the entire community, or any considerable portion of it, should participate in an improvement to constitute a public use; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray (Mass.) 417; County Court of St. Louis County v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175; it may be limited to the inhabitants of a small locality; but the benefit must be in common, not to particular persons or estates; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229. See Mills, Em. Dom. § 12. If a considerable number will be benefited the use is public; Riche v. Water Co., 75 Me. 91; Ross v. Davis, 97 Ind. 79; as a school available for use by a portion of the community taxed to pay for the property taken; Williams v. School Dist., 33 Vt. 271.

The legislature determines the number of people to be benefited to make the use public; Aldridge v. R. Co., 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 199, 23 Am. Dec. 307; but the incidental benefit of additional facilities for business, etc., will not make use public; In re Eureka Basin Warehouse & Mfg. Co. of Long Island, 96 N. Y. 42.

It was formerly considered that a public use must be for material needs, and not mere æsthetic gratification; Nichols, Em. Dom. § 232, citing Rynk. Jur. Pub. Hb. il. c. 15; Boston & R. Mill Dam Corp. v. Newman, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 467, 480, 23 Am. Dec. 662; Town of Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 587; but this doctrine has been practically abandoned; Nichols, Em. Dom. § 232; Attorney General v. Williams, 174 Mass. 476, 55 N. E. 77, 47 L. R. A. 314.

As to the condemnation of land to facilitate mining operations there is a conflict of decisions. In some of the states the courts have refused to permit it; Amador Queen Min. Co. v. Dewitt, 73 Cal. 482, 15 Pac. 74; Appeal of Waddell, 84 Pa. 90; Woodruff v. Min. Co., 18 Fed. 753; while in others they have considered it justifiable on the ground of public utility; Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419; Overman Silver Min. Co. v. Coreoran, 15 Nev. 147; and the owner of a mine may have land condemned for a railroad for the transportation of the products of his mine to the nearest thoroughfare by rail or water, provided such a railway shall be free to all who wish to use it; Hays v. Risher, 32 Pa. 169; Hibernia Underground R. Co. v. De Camp, 47 N. J. L. 518, 4 Atl. 318, 54 Am. Rep. 197; New Central Coal Co. v. Coal & Iron Co., 37 Md. 537; Colorado E. R. Co. v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 294; and this latter provision will be implied from the statute authorizing the condemnation; Phillips v. Watson, 63 Ia. 28, 18 N. W. 659; but it has been held that a mine-owner cannot condemn land solely for the transportation of his own products; Appeal of Stewart, 56 Pa. 413; Appeal of McCandless, 70 Pa. 210; Sholl v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221. In the last case it was urged that it was against public policy to allow such great agencies as streams capable of propelling machinery to go to waste, and that to utilize such power, even for the erection of private mills, promotes the wealth of the state and is of incidental benefit to the people. But although courts have recognized this right to a certain extent; Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 500, 21 L. Ed. 133, it has been with reluctance and it will not now probably be sustained; Mills, Em. Dom. § 15; it has been doubted; Powers v. Bears, 12 Wis. 213, 78 Am. But the company is entitled to compensation under such circumstances and its right is considered property; Hook v. R. Co., 133 Mo. 314, 34 S. W. 549; New York & L. B. R. Co. v. Capner, 49 N. J. L. 555, 9 Atl. 781; Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Jackson County, 45 Kan. 716, 26 Pac. 394; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Highway Com'rs of Town of Mattoon, 161 Ill. 247, 43 N. N. R. R. Co. v. City of Louisville, 131 Ky. 108, 114 S. W. 743, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1213.

It is not a public use to provide for fencing a large tract of land subject to floods which carried off the fences; Scuffletown Fence Co. v. McAllister, 12 Bush (Ky.) 312; or to acquire swamp land and build docks, warehouses, factories, etc.; In re Eureka Basin Warehouse & Mfg. Co., 96 N. Y. 42; or to settle private controversies concerning title by transferring the land of one to another; Vanhorne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 304, 1 L. Ed. 391; Lessee of Pickering v. Ratty, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 511. The latter cases arose under legislation to settle titles and adjust controversies in Pennsylvania under the Connecticut grant.

It is settled that the legislature cannot authorize the taking of property for a private use, but the decisions conflict as to the case of private ways, or roads laid out under statutes existing in many states. By many courts they are held unconstitutional as being a private use; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Ia. 540; Richards v. Wolf, 82 Ia. 358, 47 N. W. 1044, 31 Am. St. Rep. 501; Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 455, 13 Am. Rep. 399; Dickey v. Tension, 27 Mo. 373; Crear v. Crossly, 40 Ill. 175; but in others such roads are held to be a public use, and the word private is construed as a word of classification and not technical or describing the use; Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241, 91 Am. Dec. 577; Monterey County v. Cushing, 83 Cal. 507, 23 Pac. 700; In re Hickman, 4 Harring. (Del.) 580; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 311; Shaver v. Starrett, 4 Ohio St. 494; Denham v. County Com'rs of Bristol, 108 Mass. 202; Appeal of Waddell, 84 Pa. 90; In re Killbuck Private Road, 77 Pa. 39; Perrine v. Farr, 22 N. J. L. 356.

The doctrine as to taking under this power for the assistance of private enterprise is thus stated: "The power of eminent domain cannot be constitutionally employed to enable individuals to cultivate their land or carry on their business to better advantage even if the prosperity of the community will be enhanced by their success; but when the public welfare depends upon an undertaking which cannot succeed without taking rights in private land, the courts will allow such taking, especially if it is sanctioned by usage contemporary with the adoption of the constitution." Nichols, Em. Dom. 274; People v. Township Board of Salem, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400; Citizens' Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 455; Allen v. Inhabitants of Jay, 60 Me. 127, 11 Am. Rep. 185.

"The taking by a state of the private property of one person without the owner's consent for the private use of another is not due process of law and is a violation of the fourteenth article of amendment of the constitution of the United States." An act authorizing a board of transportation to require a railroad corporation to grant to private persons a location on the right of way of a railroad for the purpose of erecting a third elevator is invalid; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 17 Sup. Ct. 130, 41 L. Ed. 489. The prohibition is against taking without due process of law. So at the same term the court say: "There is no specific prohibition of the Federal Constitution which acts upon the states with regard to their taking private property for any but a public use;" Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369.

What is a public use, for which private property may be taken by due process of law, depends upon the particular facts and circumstances connected with the particular subject-matter. See notes on this subject in which the cases are collected; 91 Am. Dec. 585.

What may be taken. Every kind of property may be taken under this power. It "is attribute of sovereignty, and whatever exists in any form, whether tangible or intangible, may be subjected to the exercise of its power, and may be seized and appropriated to public uses when necessity demands it." Lewis, Em. Dom. § 262; Metropolitan City Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 87 Ill. 317, 324; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Kenney, 39 Ala. 307; *New York, H. & N. R. Co. v. R. The general rule to be gathered from all the authorities, considered together, is, that a legislative grant of power to condemn property, expressed in general terms, confers on the grantee power to take all kinds of property except property already devoted to public use and necessary for the exercise of such use; 27 Cent. L. J. 207; it makes no difference whether corporeal property, as land, or incorporeal, as a franchise, is to be affected; Bloodgood v. R. Co., 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 51; Bonaparte v. R. Co., 1 Baldw. In a proceeding by a railroad company to condemn for terminal warehouses the land of a steamboat company, the test whether the defendant held its land for such use as to exempt it from condemnation was said to be not what the defendant "does or may choose to do, but what under the law it must do, and whether a public trust is impressed upon it. It does not so hold its property impressed with a trust for the public use unless its charter puts that character upon it and so that it cannot be shaken off;" *In re New York, L. & W. Ry. The same general principles are applied to cases where a municipal corporation attempts to condemn railroad property; if the property is not necessary to the new use and the latter is destructive of the old one it is not permitted to be taken; *Baltimore & O. A market house has been condemned for a railway terminal station, reached by an elevated railroad, and its approaches; *Twelfth-St. Market Co. v. R. Where the power in a charter to condemn lands is limited so as to exclude land or property of any other corporation existing under the law of the state, this restriction was not confined to lands of corporations existing at the passage of the act, but applies to those thereafter incorporated; and another corporation which acquired lands after the first corporation had filed a survey thereof according to the requirements of the laws, but before any petition for the appointment of commissioners had been presented, could claim exemption from condemnation under the limitations; *In re American Transp. & Nav. See review of cases on this general subject, of the taking of a franchise; 27 Cent. L. J. 207, 231; and as to corporate property; 14 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 41, n.

Claims of citizens against a foreign power may be taken by the national government for the purpose of adjusting its relations with such power; Meade v. U. S., 2 Ct. of Cl. 224; and a claim for damages to land by reason of an unlawful entry may be taken and adjusted in a proceeding to take the land itself; *Morris Canal & Banking Co. v. It has been held that money cannot be taken; Field, J., Burnett v. City of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 518; contra, Cary Library v. Bliss, 151 Mass. 364, 25 N. E. 92, 7 L. R. Wickerman*, 44 Mo. 484; and without any such limitation; Sharswood, J., in Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 152, 3 Am. Rep. 615, who says that "the public necessity which gives rise to it prevents its being restrained by any limitations as to either subject or occasion." "Such," the opinion continues, "would be the case of a pressing and immediate necessity, as in the event of invasion by a public enemy, or some great public calamity, as famine or pestilence, contribution could be levied on banks, corporations, or individuals."

Buildings on land condemned are parts of the realty and pass with the land, and the owner must be paid for them in full, and being so paid cannot recover from the company damages for the removal of them; Forney v. R. Co., 23 Neb. 465, 36 N. W. 806; nor can the owner remove them; Finn v. Gas & Water Co., 99 Pa. 640. See, generally, as to structures, 3 Am. R. R. & Corp. Cas. 181, n.

An act for the extinguishment of irredeemable ground rents was held not to be an exercise of the right of eminent domain and therefore unconstitutional; Appeal of Palair-et, 67 Pa. 479, 5 Am. Rep. 450. Generally a city may not condemn property beyond its territorial limits; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Peters (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Crosby v. Hanover, 36 N. H. 404; or a corporation in a different state from that of its incorporation; Saunders v. Imp. Co., 58 Fed. 133; but there are exceptions to the rule as in case of a city which may condemn property beyond its orders where the necessity exists, as for a park; Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602, 7 N. W. 180; St. Louis County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175; a sewer; City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601; *Maywood Co. v. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642.

Reversion on abandonment and change of public use. Where land is taken for one purpose, it reverts to the owner if that use is abandoned; Miller v. R. Co., 43 Ind. App. 540, 88 N. E. 102; Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 9 L. Ed. 333; Kimball v. City of Kenosha, 4 Wis. 321; Newton v. M'fg's Ry. Co., 115 Fed. 781, 53 C. C. A. 599; *Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. St. Rep. 680; but to constitute abandonment there must be intention to abandon as well as actual relinquishment; Canton Co. of Baltimore v. R. Co., 99 Md. 202, 57 Atl. 637; Corr v. Philadelphia, 212 Pa. 123, 61 Atl. 808; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Clapp, 201 Ill. 418, 66 N. E. 223; and the expression of an intention not to abandon is not conclusive, but is to be considered with other evidence of action and conduct; id. It has been held that the legislature may change the use to another of the same nature; Chase v. Mfg. Co., 4 Cush. (Mass.) 152; Eldridge v. City of Binghamton, 120 N. Y. 309, 24 N. E. 462; Malone v. City of Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 643; but it is probably the better opinion that compensation must be given for another or additional burden; State v. Laverack, 34 N.

J. L. 201; Lahr v. Ry. Co., 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 528; Wagner v. Ry. Co., 104 N. Y. 665, 10 N. E. 535; Wead v. R. Co., 64 Vt. 52, 24 Atl. 361; *Lostutter v. In some cases payment for the damage caused by the change of use is sufficient; Lucas v. Power Co., 92 Neb. 550, 138 N. W. 761.

Indirect or consequential damages. The principle that a right of compensation exists wherever private property is taken for public use does not extend to the case of one whose property is indirectly damaged by the lawful use of property already belonging to the public. For example, it was held that an adjoining or abutting owner was not entitled to compensation for damages resulting from the change of a grade of a street; 4 Term 794; Proctor v. Stone, 158 Mass. 564, 33 N. E. 704; Brooks v. Improvement Co., 82 Me. 1, 19 Atl. 87, 7 L. R. A. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 459; Rauenstein v. R. Co., 136 N. Y. 528, 32 N. E. 1047, 18 L. R. A. 768. Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 418, was the leading American case, and gave rise to a statute to remedy the wrong suggested by it. In Pennsylvania the doctrine of these cases was followed in a case in which Gibson, C. J., expressed regret that such injustice was remediless; O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. 187 (a case referred to by the same court as of a class intended to be remedied by the constitution of 1874; O'Brien v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 589, 24 Atl. 1047, 30 Am. St. Rep. 832). These and the other authorities were reviewed by the United States Supreme Court, and the same conclusion reached as being "well settled both in England and in this country;" Smith v. Corporation of Washington, 20 How. (U. S.) 135, 15 L. Ed. 858. Of the law at this period, it was said that the limitation of the term "taking" to an actual physical appropriation or divesting of title was "far too narrow to answer the purpose of justice;" Sedg. Const. L. (2d ed.) 456. See 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L. 1053, 1055; 2 Am. R. & Corp. Cas. 435, n. The law on this specific subject of change of grades became firmly settled, except as changed by constitutional or statutory enactments, but on the general subject of what constitutes a "taking" of property, it has since undergone very great changes, and the narrow rule of physical appropriation has ceased to afford a criterion of decision. An illustration of the tendency to treat this question liberally, rather than technically, is a decision that it is a "taking" of property to prohibit an owner of land on a boulevard from building, beyond a certain limit, on the front part of the lot; City of St. Louis v. Hill, 116 Mo. 527, 22 S. W. 861, 21 L. R. A. 226; City of Philadelphia v. Linnard, 97 Pa. 242; In re Chestnut Street, 118 Pa. 593, 12 Atl. 585. See Vander-

The older cases rested upon a narrow, the later ones upon a liberal, meaning of the word "property" in the constitutions. Of the latter, Eaton v. Railroad Co., 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147, is the leading case on the subject of the right to compensation where property is injured and not physically taken. Plaintiff's land was overflowed during a freshet as the result of the construction of the defendant's railroad. Damages for the land actually taken for the railroad had been paid as the result of condemnation proceedings. It was held that the right to use the land undisturbed really constituted the property in it, rather than the physical possession of the land itself, and that even if the land itself were the "property," a physical interference with it which abridged the right to use it was in fact a taking of the owner's property to that extent. The opinion of Smith, J., in this case is said to have contributed more than any other towards the change in the law extending the effect of the word taking; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 58. In the latter case, Miller, J., after referring to the decisions that there is no remedy for a consequential injury from the improvements of roads, streets, rivers, etc., said: "But we are of opinion that the decisions referred to have gone to the uttermost limit of sound judicial construction in favor of this principle, and, in some cases, beyond it, and that it remains true that where real estate is actually invaded by superinduced additions of water, earth, sand or other material, or by having any artificial structure placed on it, so as to effectually destroy or impair its usefulness, it is a taking, within the meaning of the constitution, and that this proposition is not in conflict with the weight of judicial authority in this country, and certainly not with sound principle. Beyond this we do not go, and this case calls us to go no further." This was afterwards said by the court to be a case of "physical invasion of the real estate of the private owner, a practical ouster of his possession";

Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206.

The danger to which the occupants of the remaining land and the stock thereon will be exposed by the operation of a railway upon the land taken cannot be considered in assessing damages; Indianapolis Traction Co. v. Larrabee, 168 Ind. 237, 80 N. E. 413, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003, and note, 11 Ann. Cas. 695, on the general question of the danger to the owner of the property, or his family, or his live stock, as an element of damages. The conclusion is that the cases disagree too much to form a settled rule and they are collected, dealing with the subject from all points of view.

The interference with the rights of abutting owners by building an elevated railroad on a street was held a taking of private property for public use without compensation, to restrain which the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction; Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146. This case was decided by four judges against three dissenting, whose views were expressed by Earl, J., in an opinion much referred to, contending that it was a use of the street properly incident to its purpose as a public highway. An effort to secure a re-examination of the doctrine of this case resulted in its affirmation; Lahr v. Ry. Co., 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 528. In a subsequent case the New York court of appeals stated the law of that state to be that, although the abutting owner might have an injunction, and in the same proceeding recover full compensation for the permanent injury, he could not, in an action at law, recover permanent damages measured by the diminution in value of the property, but only such temporary damages as he had sustained at the time of commencing the action; Pond v. Ry. Co., 112 N. Y. 190, 19 N. E. 487, 8 Am. St. Rep. 734.

In a leading case the construction of an ordinary commercial railroad along a street in front of a lot without impairing ingress and egress, but resulting in the usual injuries to the lot from steam, smoke, dust, smells, interference with light and air, jarring the ground, etc., was held to be an appropriation of the street for what was not a proper street use, for which damages were recoverable, but limited to the injury resulting from the operation of the road in front of the lot, and not including any accruing from operating it on other parts of the street; Adams v. R. Co., 39 Minn. 286, 39 N. W. 629, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644.

The Maryland court of appeals, in reviewing the decisions on the subject, and particularly the New York cases, mentions as the only other cases holding that opinion, Crawford v. Village of Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 460; Adams v. R. Co., 39 Minn. 286, 39 N. W. 629, 1 L. R. A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644; Theobald v. Ry. Co., 66 Miss. 279, 6 South. 230, 4 L. R. A. 735, 14 Am. St. Rep. 564; and considers that its own decision in Mayor, etc., of Cumberland v. Willison, 50 Md. 148, 33 Am. Rep. 304, and O'Brien v. R. Co., 74 Md. 363, 22 Atl. 141, 13 L. R. A. 126, should be adhered to as being in accord with the decided weight of judicial opinion. The conclusion is thus stated: "The New York doctrine involves this inextricable dilemma, viz., if the grading of a street by a municipal corporation cuts off all access to a person's house, albeit his property is thereby destroyed and rendered valueless, it is not taken in the constitutional sense; but if a railroad company in lawfully constructing its road does precisely the same thing that the city did in grading a street, then the abutter's property is taken, though not physically entered upon at all. The structure is therefore a lawful one. But it does not destroy the street as a street, though it may cause the plaintiff greater inconvenience in gaining access to his lots than he encountered before it was built. But this and other injuries complained of are purely incidental and consequential, though the appellant, under the statutes of Maryland, is not without a remedy therefor; Garrett v. Ry. Co., 79 Md. 277, 29 Atl. 830, 24 L. R. A. 396.

The question what constitutes a taking, under the older constitutional provisions, was much considered with respect to the use of streets and highways by many other modern appliances, such as gas and water pipes, steam and electric railroads, and poles for telegraph, telephone, and electric light wires. In this class of cases, of which the elevated railroad cases have been used as an illustration, the question has turned on the consideration whether the proposed use was a legitimate incidental use of the street as such, and the tendency of the cases is in favor of a very liberal construction of the rights of the public, at least in streets of cities. In some states a distinction is made between city streets and country roads, and the public easement in the latter is much more restricted, and the rights of abutting owners to damages consequently more extended; Bloomfield & Rochester Nat. Gas Light Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386; Appeal of Sterling, 111 Pa. 35, 2 Atl. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 246; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Railway, 167 Pa. 62, 31 Atl. 468, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659; Kincaid v. Gas Co., 124 Ind. 577, 24 N. E. 1066, 8 L. R. A. 602, 19 Am. St. Rep. 113. See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

In a general view of the subject nothing more is practicable than a mere indication or illustration of the tendency of the decisions which must be resorted to and examined for application to a special case. City streets are legitimately used, from necessity, for sewers and drains; Cone v. City of Hartford, 28 Conn. 363; Leeds v. City of Richmond, 102 Ind. 372, 1 N. E. 711; Traphagen v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City, 29 N. J. Eq.

206; White v. Corporation of Yazoo City, 27 Miss. 357; water pipes; Crooke v. Water-Works Co., 29 Hun (N. Y.) 245; gas pipes, as a practical necessity, in cities, are not questioned but indirectly sanctioned; Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 161, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Tompkins v. Hodgson, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 146. See City of Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen (Mass.) 146, 160. As to steam railroads, from a great conflict of decisions (difficult if not impossible to reconcile), it would seem to be the best opinion that it is not a legitimate use of the street; see Rand. Em. Dom. § 405; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 111, with notes citing the cases at large; a horse railway is almost universally held to be a proper use of streets; Rand. Em. Dom. § 402; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 124; the only substantial dissent being in New York: Craig v. R. Co., 39 N. Y. 404; unless the fee is in the public; Keltinger v. R. Co., 50 N. Y. 206. See Cincinnati & Spring Grove Ave. St. Ry. Co. v. Village of Cumminsville, 14 Ohio St. 523; Hobart v. R. Co., 27 Wis. 194, 9 Am. Rep. 461. With respect to electric railways in cities, the doctrine of "the right of the public to use the streets by means of street cars" was said to be "now so thoroughly settled as to be no longer open to debate," and it was extended to the poles and wires of the new system; Halsey v. Ry. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 559; and see Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634, 48 N. W. 1007; Koch v. Ry. Co., 75 Md. 222, 23 Atl. 463, 15 L. R. A. 377; Farrell v. R. Railway, 167 Pa. 62, 31 Atl. 468, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659. See Rand. Em. Dom. § 403. Electric light poles are usually treated as proper, on the same basis as the older lamp posts; Johnson v. Electric Co., 54 Hun 469, 7 N. Y. Supp. 716; but not telegraph and telephone poles, according to the weight of authority; Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Irvine, 49 Fed. 113; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Williams, 86 Va. 696, 11 S. Ed. 380; though in some cases it is held otherwise, and of these the leading case considered the subject within the principle of Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 418; the opinion of the court and the dissenting one of two judges present the two views of the question very fully; Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7. See also Julia Bldg. Ass'n v. Tel. Co., 88 Mo. 258, 57 Am. Rep. 398.

In the cases relating to the use of streets and highways a great diversity of decision is occasioned by the distinctions drawn between the rights of an abutting owner who has the fee and one owning merely an easement of access over a street of which the soil belongs to the public. The question is further complicated by the varied application of the doctrine that an owner whose land was taken for a street or highway is presumed to anticipate the future uses to which it may be put both over and under the surface. The confusion of the decisions is well stated by a writer on the subject: "Laying aside constitutional and statutory declarations of liability for consequential injuries we find the following anticipations imputed to one whose land is affected by a street easement. In every state except Ohio he anticipates that he may be obliged to enter his house by a second-story window when the grade is raised, or by a ladder when the grade is lowered. In New York he does not foresee any improved method of transportation from the horse-car to the electric motor; but in Pennsylvania he anticipates all methods. The Massachusetts man seems to be the only one who has clearly anticipated the telegraph and telephone. Judged by results there is no working rule of general application deducible from a presumed anticipation of future use." Rand. Em. Dom. § 414.

In some states there are constitutional provisions covering this subject, sixteen of them requiring compensation when property is damaged by such proceedings generally, and three others when the delegated power of eminent domain is exercised by corporations. Under these provisions compensation is required for property "damaged" as well as "taken," and the former word is held to include all actual damages resulting from the exercise of the right of eminent domain which diminish the market value of private property; City of Omaha v. Kramer, 25 Neb. 489, 41 N. W. 295, 13 Am. St. Rep. 504; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 Pac. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; City of Atlanta v. Green, 67 Ga. 386; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Ayres, 106 Ill. 511; Hot Springs R. Co. v. Williamson, 45 Ark. 429.

The treatment by the courts of the subject of consequential damages is illustrated by the course of decisions under two constitutions of Illinois, by the supreme court of that state, which is very elaborately reviewed in a judgment of the supreme court of the United States. The constitution of 1848 prohibited the taking or application to public use of property without just compensation; and the rule adopted by the courts was that any physical injury to private property, by the erection, etc., of a public improvement, in or along a public highway, whereby its use was materially interrupted, was to be regarded as a taking, within the meaning of the constitution. The constitution of 1870 provided that private property should not be taken or damaged without just compensation, and upon this it was held that the property owner was protected against any substantial damage, though consequential, and that it did not require a trespass or actual physical invasion; Rigney v. City of Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; City of Chicago v. Bldg. Ass'n, 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 8 Sup. Ct. 820, 31 L. Ed. 638. In the judgment last cited Harlan, J., said: "We concur in that construction" and "we regard that case (Rigney v. City of Chicago, 102 Ill. 64) as conclusive of this question."

This constitution of Illinois was the first in which the word "damaged" was inserted, but in 1894 the supreme court of Colorado enumerated fourteen other states which had then adopted the word; City of Pueblo v. Strait, 20 Colo. 13, 36 Pac. 789, 24 L. R. A. 392, 46 Am. St. Rep. 273.

In awarding damages to one, a part of whose land is sought to be condemned for public use, for injury to his remaining land, injury to tracts not connected with, and held under different titles from, although adjoining, that from which the parts are taken, cannot be considered; Sharpe v. U. S., 112 Fed. 893, 50 C. C. A. 597, 57 L. R. A. 932, where Gray, J., upon careful examination of the question, says that it is right and proper to include the damages, in the shape of deterioration of value, to the residue of the tract, but that, to apply this rule, "regard is had to the integrity of the tract as a unitary holding" and, where the holding from which the part is taken is "of such a character that its integrity as an individual tract shall have been destroyed by the taking, depreciation in the value of the residue . . . may properly be considered allowable damages in adjusting the compensation to be given to the owner for the land taken. It is often difficult, when part of a tract is taken, to determine what is an independent tract, but the character of the holding, and the distinction between the residue of a tract, whose integrity is destroyed by the taking, and what are merely other parcels or holdings of the same owner, must be kept in mind." The case is accompanied in the last citation by a note in which the cases are examined and which concludes that "the general rule is that when property is so situated that it is used as a unit, and each part is dependent upon the other, the damages will not be limited in eminent domain to the particular piece taken, but will extend to the whole." Substantially this rule has been applied in a great variety of cases to both country and city property; Gorgas v. R. Co., 215 Pa. 501, 64 Atl. 680, 114 Am. St. Rep. 974; Jeffery v. Osborne, 145 Wis. 351, 129 N. W. 931; Union Traction Co. v. Pfeil, 39 Ind. App. 51, 78 N. E. 1052; St. Louis, Memphis & S. E. R. Co. v. Realty & Investment Co., 205 Mo. 167, 103 S. But this rule did not apply when a man owned one parcel in severalty and he and his wife the other in entirety, even if the two were used for a common purpose; Glendenning v. Stahley, 173 Ind. 674, 91 N. E. 234; and it has been held that the rule does not apply to parcels, not used as a whole for one purpose, when separated by highways; Baker v. R. Co., 236 Pa. 479, 84 Atl. 959; or to such parcels separated by a railroad; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Littler, 70 Kan. 556, 79 Pac. 114; or a stream of water; *St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. v. It is said that a municipal corporation can condemn the fee-simple title of land for streets, but only so as to acquire the absolute control for that purpose and not a proprietary right to sell or devote it to a private use; Fairchild v. City of St. Paul, 46 Minn. 540, 49 N. W. 325. When the fee is taken and the use ceases, the state may authorize a sale for other uses, but when only an easement, the land reverts; *Lewis, Em. The time when payment must be made varies according to the exact terms of the constitutional provision under which proceedings are taken. In the majority of states where there is no express provision it is held that compensation need not be concurrent in time with the taking, it is sufficient if an adequate and certain remedy is provided by which the owner may compel payment of damages; In re Appointment of U. S. Com'rs, 96 N. Y. 227; and this means reasonable legal certainty; Sage v. City of Brooklyn, 80 N. Y. 189; or if there is a definite provision or security for the payment of the compensation; Commissioners' Court of Loudes County v. Boure, 34 Ala. 461; *Cairo & F. R. Co. v. The same rule was formerly followed, in some states in which later constitutions provided for prior payment, or required compensation where none was provided for before, as Maryland; Compton v. Railroad, 3 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 386; Powers v. Armstrong, 19 Ga. 427; People v. R. Co., 3 Mich. 496; Prather v. R. Water Co., 75 Me. 91. It has been held that the state when acting directly may provide that title shall pass when the amount is ascertained, it being presumed that payment will be made by the state; Ballou v. Ballou, 78 N. Y. 325; but any such declaration in a statute is controlled by the constitution, and it was held in a New York case that payment must be prior to or concurrent with the taking; Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 196, 22 L. Ed. 612. In many state constitutions there is a distinction between the direct exercise of the power by the government and the delegated power conferred on private corporations. Under such a provision it was said that in both cases the sovereign power is coupled with the correlative duty; State v. City of Perth Amboy, 52 N. J. L. 132, 18 Atl. 670; but municipal corporations must settle first when exercising delegated power; id.; Loweree v. City of Newark, 38 N. J. L. 151. And it is said by a writer of authority, "the almost invariable, and certainly the just, course being to require payment to precede or accompany the act of appropriation;" 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 615. Generally, however, when the compensation is to be paid by the state or is a charge upon the funds of a municipality that is held sufficient; Haverhill Bridge Proprietors v. County Com'rs, 103 Mass. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 518; State v. McIver, 88 N. C. 686; Mayor, etc., of Pittsburgh v. Scott, 1 Pa. 309; In re Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Daugherty, 40 Ind. 33; Brock v. Hishen, 40 Wis. 674; Long v. Fuller, 68 Pa. 170; but if the available resources are shown to be insufficient an entry may be enjoined; Keene v. Borough of Bristol, 26 Pa. 46.

The fact that there is a limitation of the amount to be expended does not invalidate the law for taking property; U. S. v. Ry. Co., 160 U. S. 668, 16 Sup. Ct. 427, 40 L. Ed. 576.

When the title passes. It naturally follows that no title can be acquired under the proceedings until the compensation is paid or so secured as to be treated in law as the equivalent of payment. Accordingly when the title is permitted to vest before payment, it is said to be subject to a claim for compensation in the nature of a vendor's lien enforceable in equity; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 620, and note citing cases. And a sale or mortgage of the property could only be made subject to such prior right of the landowner, which is maintained by some courts on the theory of a lien, and by others on that of title remaining in the owner; id. § 621. In Pennsylvania, however, an extreme doctrine prevails; the appropriation is valid and effectual where compensation is paid or secured; Levering v. R. Co., 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 459; McClinton v. R. Co., 66 Pa. 404; Dimmick v. Brodhead, 75 Pa. 464; and title passes when the bond is approved by the court under the statute; Fries v. Mining Co., 85 Pa. 73; and remains vested even if the bond is found to be valueless; Wallace v. R. Co., 138 Pa. 168, 22 Atl. 95; and there is no lien for compensation; Appeal of Hoffman, 118 Pa. 512, 12 Atl. 57. By the act of location the corporation acquires a conditional title as against the land-owner, which becomes absolute upon making or securing compensation; Williamsport & N. B. R. Co. v. R. Co., 141 Pa. 407, 21 Atl. 645, 12 L. R. A. 220; as against third parties there is a valid location after entry made, lines run, map prepared, and a report made to the directors and adopted by them; Pittsburgh, V. & C. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 159 Pa. 331, 28 Atl. 155; but running a line, making a map, and a report to the directors, not acted on, did not confer title to the location to justify an injunction to restrain another company from taking the land for a railway, though the land was owned by the plaintiff company; Williamsport R. Co. v. R. Co., 141 Pa. 407, 21 Atl. 645, 12 L. R. A. 220.

If a land-owner, knowing that a railroad company has entered upon his land, and is engaged in constructing its road without having complied with a statute requiring either payment by agreement or proceedings to condemn, remains inactive and permits it to go on and expend large sums in the work, he cannot maintain either trespass or ejectment, and will be restricted to a suit for damages; Roberts v. R. Co., 158 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 756, 39 L. Ed. 873.

The actual cash market value, at the time, of property actually taken must be allowed; Burt v. Wigglesworth, 117 Mass. 302; Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Ring, 58 Mo. 491; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Parsons, 51 Kan. 408, 32 Pac. 1083; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 110 Ill. 414; Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206. It has been said that the true criterion of market value is the sum which the property would bring if sold at auction; conducted in the fairest possible way; Low

v. Railroad, 63 N. H. 557, 3 Atl. 739; but this is not the result of the best considered cases. "Market value means the fair value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell an article; not what could be obtained for it under peculiar circumstances; not its speculative value; not a value obtained from the necessity of another. Nor is it to be limited to that price which the property would bring when forced off at auction under the hammer;" Lawrence v. Boston, 119 Mass. 126; it is measured by the difference between what it would have sold for before the injury, and what it would have sold for as affected by it; Setzler v. R. Co., 112 Pa. 56, 4 Atl. 370; what would be accepted by one desiring but not obliged to sell and paid by one under no necessity of buying; Pittsburgh, V. & C. Ry. Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. 325, 8 Atl. 764; Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 381, 5 S. W. 792, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51; it is not to be measured by the interest or necessity of the particular owner; Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. v. Robinson, 95 Pa. 426; nor, on the other hand, by those of the appropriator; Montgomery County v. Bridge Co., 110 Pa. 54, 20 Atl. 407; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 88 Cal. 50, 25 Pac. 977, 11 L. R. A. 604; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Keith, 53 Ga. 178; Everett v. R. Co., 59 Ia. 243, 13 N. W. 109; when these principles are fairly applied due consideration may be given to auction value; Pittsburgh, V. & C. Ry. Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. 325, 8 Atl. 764; but its availability for other special purposes to which it is particularly adapted by reason of "its natural advantages, or its artificial improvements, or its intrinsic character," may be considered as an element of value; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 479, and cases cited; as, for railroad approaches to a large city; Webster v. R. Co., 116 Mo. 114, 22 S. W. 474; Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Ring, 58 Mo. 491; or for a bridge site; Young v. Harrison, 17 Ga. 30; Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 381, 5 S. W. 792, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51; or a mill site; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Ryan, 64 Miss. 404, 8 South. 173; so also its situation and surroundings for railroad purposes; Currie v. R. Co., 52 N. J. L. 391, 20 Atl. 56, 19 Am. St. Rep. 452; Cohen v. R. Co., 34 Kan. 158, 8 Pac. 138, 55 Am. Rep. 242; Johnson v. R. Co., 111 Ill. 413; or market-gardening; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 110 Ill. 414; or subdivision into village lots; Watson v. Ry. Co., 57 Wis. 332, 15 N. W. 468; South Park Com'rs v. Dunlevy, 91 Ill. 49; Cincinnati & S. Ry. Co. v. Longworth's Ex'rs, 30 Ohio St. 108; or in case of a pond, for ice or milling, there being no other one near; Trustees of College Point v. Dennett, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 217; or for warehouse purposes; Russell v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 210, 22 N. W. 379. When the water of a stream running through a farm was taken by a village for its waterworks, the owner was entitled to damages, not only for being deprived of the water for farm purposes, but also for being deprived of the opportunity to sell water rights to prospective purchasers of village lots plotted out for sale in a part of the farm; Bridgeman v. Village of Hardwick, 67 Vt. 653, 31 Atl. 33. The pollution of a stream so as to render it unfit for use in a paper mill, resulting from the opening of a railroad through the land, was a proper element to be considered in estimating the damages; Rudolph v. R. Co., 186 Pa. 541, 40 Atl. 1083, 47 L. R. A. 782. So its adaptability for the particular purpose for which the condemnation is sought may be shown, as islands well situated for boom purposes; Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206; or the bed of an old canal desired for a railroad; In re New York, L. & W. R. Co., 27 Hun (N. Y.) 116. But mere speculative opinions and considerations will be excluded from consideration; Gardner v. Brookline, 127 Mass. 358; Tide Water Canal Co. v. Archer, 9 G. & J. (Md.) 479; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Blake, 116 Ill. 163, 4 N. E. 488; Pittsburgh & W. R. Co. v. Patterson, 107 Pa. 461; Watson v. R. Co., 57 Wis. 332, 15 N. W. 468; New Jersey R. Co. v. Suydam, 17 N. J. L. 25.

Assessment of benefits on the remainder of a tract of which part is taken is prohibited by the constitution in some states, either generally, as in Iowa and Ohio, in favor of any corporation, as in Arkansas, Kansas, and South Carolina, or any other than municipal, as in California, North Dakota, and Washington. In the other states there is a diversity of decisions which have been thus classified, as: 1. Not considered. 2. Special benefit is set off against damages to the remainder but not against the value of the part taken. 3. General or special, as in the last class. 4. Special, against both damages to remainder and value of part taken. 5. General and special, as in the last class. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 465.

In the first class the benefit is excluded because compensation is held to be money; Brown v. Beatty, 34 Miss. 227, 241, 69 Am. Dec. 389; Board of Levee Com'rs for Yazoo-Mississippi Delta v. Harkleroads, 62 Miss. 807; Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Schweikart, 10 Cal. 178, 14 Pac. 329; Dulaney v. Nolan County, 85 Tex. 225, 20 S. W. 70; Jones v. R. Co., 30 Ga. 43; Paducah & M. R. Co. v. Stovall, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1. In some states the constitution prohibits the deduction of benefits; though in some of them it is permitted in favor of public corporations; Nichols, Em. Dom. § 278, where these states are enumerated.

The second rule which obtains has been justly criticised as illogical; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 467; but it rests upon the theory that for the part taken compensation in money is required, while for incidental damage the legislature may prescribe the rule of compensation. This was the doctrine laid down in Tennessee which, with several other states, adheres to it; Woodfolk v. R. Co., 2 Swan (Tenn.) 422; Robbins v. R. Co., 6 Wis. 636; Shipley v. R. Co., 34 Md. 336; Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Whalen, 11 Neb. 585, 10 N. W. 491; Chicago, K. & N. R. Co. v. Wiebe, 25 Neb. 542, 41 N. W. 297.

The third class rests upon the same idea of requiring compensation in money for the part taken, but treating the claim for damage to the remainder as consequential and properly subject to the set-off of all advantages; and in Kentucky, from which comes the leading case, a judgment was reversed for an instruction excluding general benefits; Henderson & N. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 17 B. Monr. (Ky.) 173, 66 Am. Dec. 148; City Council of Augusta v. Marks, 50 Ga. 612 (but see Young v. Harrison, 17 Ga. 30, in which a different doctrine was applied, which was passed without mention in Jones v. Wills Val. R. Co., 30 Ga. 43, which laid down the rule afterwards adhered to); Buffalo, B., B. & C. R. Co. v. Ferris, 26 Tex. 588; Tait v. Matthews, 33 Tex. 112; City of Paris v. Mason, 37 Tex. 447; Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Matthews, 60 Tex. 215; but see Bourgeois v. Mills, 60 Tex. 76; New Orleans Pac. Ry. Co. v. Gay, 31 La. Ann. 430.

The fourth rule allows special benefits against both the value of the part taken and damage to the remainder, because just compensation is construed to mean recompense for the net resulting injury, and excludes a share of the general advantage, because to allow it would be to distribute it unequally, charging those whose land is taken for that which the rest of the community enjoy without cost; Adden v. R. R., 55 N. H. 413, 20 Am. Rep. 220; Meacham v. R. Co., 4 Cush. (Mass.) 291; Clark v. City of Worcester, 125 Mass. 226; Cross v. Plymouth County, 125 Mass. 557; Trinity College v. City of Hartford, 32 Conn. 452; Gautier v. Board, 55 N. J. L. 88, 25 Atl. 322, 17 L. R. A. 785; Setzler v. R. Co., 112 Pa. 56, 4 Atl. 370 (which lays down the rule with great clearness not only on this point but in confining the consideration of inconvenience and advantage to the effect of both upon the market value); Freedle v. R. Co., 49 N. C. 89; Wyandotte, K. C. & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Waldo, 70 Mo. 629; Daugherty v. Brown, 91 Mo. 26, 3 S. W. 210; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Waldron, 11 Minn. 515, (Gil. 392), 88 Am. Dec. 100; Arbrush v. Town of Oakdale, 28 Minn. 61, 9 N. W. 30; Beekman v. Jackson County, 18 Or. 283, 22 Pac. 1074 (but see Putnam v. Douglas County, 6 Or. 328, 25 Am. Rep. 527). See L. R. 2 C. P. 638.

The last class permits all benefits to be set off against all damages of either kind, placing the rule on natural equity, and in a leading case (Young v. Harrison, 17 Ga. 30, afterwards apparently overruled as stated supra), it is argued that the term compensation comes from the civil law which so construes it. This rule is accepted by many courts which, among other reasons, hold that compensation does not mean money but includes any means of recompense; California Pac. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 46 Cal. 85; Whiteman's Ex'r v. R. Co., 2 Harr. (Del.) 514, 33 Am. Dec. 411; Kramer v. Ry. Co., 5 Ohio St. 140; Platt v. Pennsylvania Co., 43 Ohio St. 228, 1 N. E. 420 (before the constitution of 1851); Ross v. Davis, 97 Ind. 79; Rassier v. Grimmer, 130 Ind. 219, 23 N. E. 866, 29 N. E. 918; Greenville & C. R. Co. v. Partlow, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 428; White v. R. Co., 6 Rich. (S. C.) 47. See Bourgeois v. Mills, 60 Tex. 76. In New York this rule applies to cases where land is taken by the state and municipal corporations; Genet v. City of Brooklyn, 99 N. Y. 296, 1 N. E. 777; Eldridge v. City of Binghamton, 120 N. Y. 309, 24 N. E. 462; but in the case of private corporations the third rule seems to apply; Washington Cemetery v. R. Co., 68 N. Y. 591; Newman v. Ry. Co., 118 N. Y. 618, 23 N. E. 901, 7 L. R. A. 289; Bohm v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 576, 29 N. E. 802, 14 L. R. A. 344. See Heath v. Barmore, 50 N. Y. 302. In Illinois the cases prior to 1870 were under the fifth rule; Alton & S. R. Co. v. Carpenter, 14 Ill. 190; and since the constitution of that year and a subsequent statute it has been held that benefits were prohibited as against the value of land taken; Carpenter v. Jennings, 77 Ill. 250; that general benefits cannot be set off against either value or damage; Keittsburg & E. R. Co. v. Henry, 79 Ill. 290; and that special damage may be charged against the damage to the residue; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 470, where the cases are collected and analyzed.

The last rule enumerated seems to be approved by the federal courts; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Key, 3 Cra. C. C. 599, Fed. Cas. No. 2,649; Kennedy v. Indianapolis, 103 U. S. 599, 26 L. Ed. 550; and upon candid consideration it must be admitted that if benefits are to be allowed at all it is the only logical doctrine. This seems also to be the conclusion of the writer whose classification of the decisions is here given, and to whose discussion of the whole subject reference may profitably be made; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 471. The subject was considered in the United States Supreme Court at length by Gray, J., who held that in applying the law to the District of Columbia it was proper to "take into consideration, by way of lessening the whole or either part of the sum due him, any special and direct benefits, capable of present estimate and reasonable computation, caused by the establishment of the highway to the part not taken;" Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 966, 42 L. Ed. 270. This view also prevailed in In re City of New York, 190 N. Y. 350, 83 N. E. 299, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335; Taber v. R. Co., 28 R. I. 269, 67 Atl. 9.

Damage to property injured but not physically taken. A question of great importance arises either under the later constitutional provisions for compensation for injury as well as actual taking, or under the extension of the meaning of the word taking to include consequential damages, so called, when the injury to property is so great and permanent as practically to deprive the owner of all use and enjoyment of it.

In such cases the only remedy of the property owner, in the absence of legislation, is a common-law action, and for permanent or continuing injury trespass is totally inadequate, as is evidenced by the fact that to restrain it when continuous is a recognized ground of equitable interference. In many cases it is held that prospective damages cannot be recovered, and the property owner is thus put to the necessity of resorting to repeated actions, but when the trespass is the result of the exercise of a public use authorized by statute this remedy is not only unsatisfactory but illogical. Accordingly it is held in many cases that such damage being of a permanent nature there should be but one recovery for all damages past, present, and future; and it has been held that they may be allowed. An action on the case is the proper remedy in such cases, but the measure of damages applied is not uniform, though when the liberal rule referred to is adopted the payment vests in the defendant a right to maintain its works and operates as a bar to further suits. In some cases such an action has also been held to have the effect of statutory proceedings for the assessment of compensation; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 203, 8 N. E. 460, 59 Am. Rep. 341; Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Heiss, 141 Ill. 35, 31 N. E. 138, 33 Am. St. Rep. 273. This subject is, however, involved in great confusion, which should undoubtedly be removed by legislative enactments providing for the acquisition of the right to cause, and the assessment of compensation for, permanent injury to property whenever consequential damages are provided for by constitution or statute, or recognized by the courts. As to this subject, see discussions with copious citations of cases in Lewis, Em. Dom. § 624; Rand, Em. Dom. § 308; 26 Am. L. Reg. 281, 345.

Who are proper and necessary parties. The compensation must be paid to the true owner as on that the title depends; Hatch v. Mayor, 82 N. Y. 436; South Park Com'rs v. Todd, 112 Ill. 379; Searl v. School Dist., 133 U. S. 553, 10 Sup. Ct. 374, 33 L. Ed. 740; and if paid to the wrong person, it may be recovered from him by one having an interest; De Peyster v. Mali, 92 N. Y. 262; Sherwood v. City of Lafayette, 109 Ind. 411, 10 N. E. 89, 58 Am. Rep. 414; but if title is doubtful, it may be paid into court; Jones v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 70; In re Department of Parks, 73 N. Y. 560; and if afterwards paid out wrongly the person who paid it in is not liable; U. S. v. Dunnington, 146 U. S. 338, 13 Sup. Ct. 79, 36 L. Ed. 996.

The general principle is that the necessary parties to a proceeding, independent of statutory requirements, are all persons having an interest in the property taken, as proprietors, or such as is recognized by the law of the state as property; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 317. When the ownership is divided, each is entitled to his share, as life-tenant and remainderman; Miller v. City of Asheville, 112 N. C. 759, 16 S. E. 762; Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co. v. Weaver, 86 Mo. 473; dowress after admeasurement; Borough of York v. Welsh, 117 Pa. 174, 11 Atl. 390; but not before the dower is assigned; Todemier v. Aspinwall, 43 Ill. 401; and only as against the award when it is inchoate; Wheeler v. Kirtland, 27 N. J. Eq. 534. The interest of a tenant must be compensated; Frost v. Earnest, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 86; if the lease has actual value to him; Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212; sometimes separately; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schneider, 127 Ill. 144, 20 N. E. 41, 2 L. R. A. 422; and sometimes by apportionment of the entire amount; Edmands v. Boston, 108 Mass. 535.

When part of land under lease is taken, the lease is not terminated or the tenant discharged; Stubbings v. Village of Evanston, 136 Ill. 37, 26 N. E. 577, 11 L. R. A. 839, 29 Am. St. Rep. 300; but both he and the lessor are entitled to compensation for their respective losses; Patterson v. City of Boston, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 159; Foote v. City of Cincinnati, 11 Ohio 408, 38 Am. Dec. 737; Workman v. Mifflin, 30 Pa. 362; 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L. 968. See Rand. Em. Dom. § 304; Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212, with note on rights of tenants, etc., in such cases; 5 Am. R. R. & Corp. Cas. 208, note, as to grantor and grantee, and 29 Am. St. Rep. 304, note, as to leased premises. See also 29 Am. L. Rev. 351, as to the abatement of rent when leased premises are appropriated.

As to mortgagees the decisions lack both uniformity and consistency, and this result is largely due to the differing views taken of the position of a mortgagee before the law. As between the parties to the mortgage the award takes the place of the land and the lien attaches to it; Astor v. Miller, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 68; Gimbel v. Stolte, 59 Ind. 453; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Baker, 102 Mo. 560, 15 S. W. 64; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Slee, 123 Ill. 95, 13 N. E. 222; as to all rights and interests; Utter v. Richmond, 112 N. Y. 610, 20 N. E. 554. The damages should be apportioned by the jury between owner, lessee, mortgagee, etc.; Rentz v. Detroit, 48 Mich. 547, 12 N. W. 694, 911. In some cases the remainder of the land must be exhausted before the mortgagee can resort to the fund; Bank of Auburn v. Roberts, 44 N. Y. 192; or to the condemned land; Dodge v. R. Co., 20 Neb. 281, 29 N. W. 936; and the mortgagee, if not a party to the proceedings, may appropriate the fund; Sawyer v. Landers, 56 Ia. 422, 9 N. W. 341; Bright v. Platt, 32 N. J. Eq. 370; but when the land has been sold and bought in by the mortgagee he loses all claim to the fund and new proceedings must be taken to condemn his interest; Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 35 N. J. Eq. 379. As affecting the title of the appropriator who has been said to take no better title than an innocent purchaser for value; Severin v. Cole, 38 Ia. 463; and must protect himself against the claim of the mortgagee; Wooster v. R. Co., 57 Wis. 311, 15 N. W. 401; the more reasonable opinion would seem to be that the mortgagee is a necessary party; if in possession he certainly is; In re Parker, 36 N. H. 84; Ballard v. Ballard Vale Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 468; or after condition broken; Adams v. R. R. Co., 57 Vt. 248; in other cases to be bound he must have notice; Siman v. Rhoades, 24 Minn. 25; *Platt v. It has even been held that a mortgagee cannot move for consequential damages to mortgaged property when the mortgagor has without fraud settled with the company; Knoll v. Ry. Co., 121 Pa. 467, 15 Atl. 571, 1 L. R. A. 366.

Judgment liens may be divested by the proceedings, and the creditor need not be made a party; Watson v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 157, 162. This is the leading case and well states the reasons on which this settled principle is based. See also Gimbel v. Stolte, 59 Ind. 446; Bean v. Kulp, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 650; *Lewis, Em. Notice and procedure. It is a general rule that notice of proceedings must be given to the owner of property to be taken; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 363; Rand. Em. Dom. § 333; though a few cases hold contrary to the otherwise uniform course of decisions; Wilson v. R. Co., 5 Del. Ch. 524; George's Creek Coal & Iron Co. v. Coal Co., 40 Md. 425, 437; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hemphill, 35 Miss. 17; Johnson v. R. Co., 23 Ill. 202. In the Delaware case there was actual notice, though it was held that the act need not require it; in the Mississippi case the proceeding is considered as in rem, which is treated as actual notice, and the Illinois case is in effect though not expressly overruled in Wilson v. R. Co., 59 Ill. 273, and Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Smith, 78 Ill. 96. These cases have been termed "sporadic decisions," by which the current of authority is not disturbed; Rand. Em. Dom. § 333. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW. See also Lewis, Em. Dom. § 364; where the cases are cited, and, for other cases cited in support of the view that notice need not be required in the act; People v. The questions whether the property shall be taken and what compensation shall be paid need not be tried by a jury; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451; Whiteman's Ex'x v. R. Co., 2 Harr. (Del.) 514, 33 Am. Dec. 411; the constitution does not describe the mode or means by which compensation shall be ascertained; these therefore can only be prescribed by the legislature; Wilson v. R. Co., 5 Del. Ch. 524; under the constitution of the United States, a jury is not necessary; U. S. v. Engerman, 46 Fed. 176; and it cannot be demanded as a matter of right; State v. Lyle, 100 N. C. 497, 6 S. E. 379; Backus v. Lebanon, 11 N. H. 19, 35 Am. Dec. 466; Morris v. Heppenheimer, 54 N. J. L. 268, 23 Atl. 664.

It was recently held that due process of law is furnished and equal protection of the law given in such proceedings when the course pursued for the assessment and collection of taxes is that customarily provided in the state, for then the party charged has an opportunity to be heard; Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369; and where by state law a burden is imposed upon property for the public use, "whether it be for the whole state or some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed, in the ordinary courts of justice with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, however obnoxious it may be to other objections;" id.

EMISSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. The act by which any matter whatever is thrown from the body: thus, it is usual to say, emission of urine, emission of semen, etc.

Emission is not necessary in the commission of a rape to complete the offence; 1 Hale, P. C. 628; 4 C. & P. 249; 9 id. 31; Rodgers v. State, 30 Tex. App. 510, 17 S. W. 1077; Territory v. Edie, 6 N. M. 555, 30 Pac. 851; State v. Dalton, 106 Mo. 463, 17 S. W. 700; [1891] 2 Q. B. 149. It is, however, essential in sodomy; 12 Co. 36; People v. Hodgkin, 94 Mich. 27, 53 N. W. 794, 34 Am. St. Rep. 321. But see Com. v. Thomas, 1 Va. Cas. 307. As to adultery, see that title.

EMIT. To put out; to send forth.

The tenth section of the first article of the constitution contains various prohibitions, among which is the following: "No state shall emit bills of credit." To emit bills of credit is to issue paper intended to circulate through the community for its ordinary purposes, as money, which paper is redeemable at a future day. Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 432, 7 L. Ed. 903; Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 257, 9 L. Ed. 709; Ramsey v. Cox, 28 Ark. 369; Linn v. Bank, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 87, 25 Am. Dec. 71; Story, Const. § 1358. See BILLS OF CREDIT.

EMMENAGOGUES. In Medical Jurisprudence. The name of a class of medicines which are believed to have the power of favoring the discharge of the menses. These are "savine (see Juniperus Sabina), black hellebore, aloes, gamboge, rue, madder, stinking goosefoot (Chenopodium olidum), gin, parsley (and its active principle, apiol), per- manganate of potassium, cantharides, and borax, and for the most part substances which, in large doses, act as drastic purgatives or stimulating diuretics." They are sometimes used for the criminal purpose of producing abortion (q. v.). They always endanger the life of the woman. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 316; Dunglison, Med. Dict.; Parr, Med. Dict.; 3 Pa.; & P. Med. Jur. 88; Taylor's Med. Jur. 184.

EMOLUMENT. The profit arising from office or employment; that which is received as a compensation for services, or which is annexed to the possession of office as salary, fees, and perquisites; advantage; gain, public or private. Webster. It imports any perquisite, advantage, profit or gain arising from the possession of an office. Apple v. Crawford County, 105 Pa. 303, 51 Am. Rep. 205. See Peeling v. County of York, 113 Pa. 108, 5 Atl. 67.

EMOTIONAL INSANITY. See INSANITY.

EMPANEL. See IMPANEL; JURY.

EMPEROR. This word is synonymous with the Latin imperator; they are both derived from the verb imperare. Literally, it signifies he who commands.

EMPHYTEUSIS. In Civil Law. The name of a contract, in the nature of a perpetual lease, by which the owner of an uncultivated piece of land granted it to another, either in perpetuity or for a long time, on condition that he should improve it, by building on, planting, or cultivating it, and should pay for it an annual rent, with a right to the grantee to alienate it, or transmit it by descent to his heirs, and under a condition that the grantor should never re-enter as long as the rent should be paid to him by the grantee or his assignus. Inst. 3, 25, 3; 18 Toul-lier, n. 144.

EMPHYTEUTA. The grantee under a contract of emphyteusis or emphyteosis. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Hallam, c. ii. p. 1.

EMPIRE (Lat. Imperium). Supreme power in governing; imperial power; dominion; sovereignty.

The country, region, or union of states or territories under the dominion of an emperor. Cent. Dict.

It was in the sense of the first of these definitions that Chief Justice Marshall is said to have at one time used the phrase "the American Empire." See Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 279, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088.

It is used on a tablet over the door of the old Friends' Library at Philadelphia: "The Fourth Year of the Empire."

EMPLAZAMIENTO. In Spanish Law. The citation given to a person by order of the judge, and ordering him to appear before his tribunal on a given day and hour.

EMPLOYÉ or EMPLOYEE. A term of rather broad signification for one who is employed, whether his duties are within or without the walls of the building in which the chief officer usually transacts his business. Mallory v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 257; Stone v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 260. It is not usually applied to higher officers of corporations or to domestic servants, but to clerks, workmen, and laborers, collectively.

Strictly and etymologically, it means "a person employed," but in practice, in the French language, it ordinarily is used to signify a person in some official employment, and as generally used with us, though perhaps not confined to any official employment, it is understood to mean some permanent employment or position. It may be any one who renders service to another; Watson v. Mfg. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 588; and has been extended so far as to embrace attorney and counsel; Gurney v. Ry. Co., 58 N. Y. 358. The servant of a contractor for carrying mail is an employé of the department of the post-office; U. S. v. Belew, 2 Brock. 280, Fed. Cas. No. 14,563; also one who received five per cent. of the cost for superintending the erection of a warehouse was held an employé; Moore v. Heaney, 14 Md. 558. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

EMPLOYED. The act of doing a thing, and the being under contract or orders to do it. U. S. v. Morris, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 464, 475, 10 L. Ed. 543; U. S. v. The Catherine, 2 Paine 721, Fed. Cas. No. 14,755.

Where persons were employed "in and about the works," it was held that although their work as miners was at the bottom of a mine, the term covered them as employés until they arrived safely at the top, even although they discharged themselves; 2 C. P. Div. 397.

EMPLOYERS AND WORKMEN ACT. The English statute of 38 and 39 Vict. c. 90, regulating the jurisdiction of certain courts over disputes between masters and employés. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS. The English act, 1880, gives to all workmen, except domestic or menial servants and seamen, a right of action if injured by reason of the defective condition of machinery, etc., if the defect was attributable to the negligence of the employer or his agent; to the negligence of his superintendent or one to whom he has given authority over the workman; to some act or omission by a fellow workman in obedience to the employer's by-laws, or to the particular instruction of one placed in authority over him; or to a fellow workman in charge of any railroad signal, locomotive or train. The act abolishes the fellow servant rule, but not the contributory negligence rule. The employer may set up the defence that the workman knew of the defect but did not complain. A contract not to claim compensation under the act is lawful; Griffiths v. Earl of Dudley, 9 Q. B. D. 357.

The act of congress of June 11, 1906, was declared unconstitutional in the Employers' Liability Case (Howard v. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 52 L. Ed. 297, Harlan, Holmes, Moody, and Lurton, JJ., dissenting. The act of April 22, 1908, as amended April 5, 1910, provides for the liability of common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce to their employees injured in such commerce, or in case of death gives a right of action to their personal representatives for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee, and if none, then of such employee's parents, and if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee. There shall be only one recovery for the same injury; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 33 Sup. Ct. 703, 57 L. Ed. —. It does away with the fellow servant rule, the contributory negligence rule, except that damages shall be diminished in proportion to the amount of contributory negligence attributable to the employee, and the rule that an employee is held to have assumed the risk of his employment in any case where the violation, by the carrier, of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee. Acceptance of relief, such as railway relief, is no bar to an action though agreed to, but simply reduces the damages pro tanto.

The following cases define what is interstate commerce within the act. In Johnson v. Great Northern R. R. Co., 178 Fed. 643, 102 C. C. A. 89 (8th Cir.), it was held that an employee charged with the duty of coupling cars and airbrake pipes upon cars standing upon a switch track, some of which cars were engaged in interstate commerce, was himself employed in interstate commerce. In Zikos v. Navigation Co., 179 Fed. 893 (C. C., E. D. Wash.), it was held that a section hand, while driving a spike on the track of a railroad over which both interstate and intrastate commerce moved, was employed in interstate commerce. In Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Colasurdo, 192 Fed. 901, 113 C. C. A. 379 (2d Cir.), where the plaintiff was injured while repairing an interstate road over which interstate commerce and freight, and cars and engines engaged in interstate commerce were constantly passing, he was considered as being engaged in interstate commerce. In Pedersen v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 537, 117 C. C. A. 33 (3d Cir.), the plaintiff was an iron worker on a bridge on which an additional track was being placed. In getting rivets for the bridge he went upon the main east-bound track of the road, where he was struck and injured by a local, intrastate train coming from the other direction; and it was held that neither by operating such local train, nor by building an additional track or bridge, nor by sending the man for the rivets, was the carrier engaged in interstate commerce; nor was the plaintiff, by helping to build such bridge or by going upon a track which the company was not using in interstate commerce employed by such carrier in such commerce. The case was reversed in Pedersen v. R. Co., 229 U. S. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. 648, 57 L. Ed. 1125, Holmes, Lamar and Lurton, JJ., dissenting. The court held there was evidence to sustain a finding that at the time of the injury the defendant was engaged, and the plaintiff was employed by it, in interstate commerce. In Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Porter, 207 Fed. 311 (C. C. A., 6th Cir.) a truckman employed by the railroad to wheel interstate freight from a warehouse into a car to be transported in interstate commerce was held to be engaged in such commerce.

An action cannot be maintained under section 1 of the above act where the complainant neither alleges nor pleads facts showing that defendant is a common carrier; Shade v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 206 Fed. 353 (D. C., W. D. Wash.). Where a train of cars was hauled by a switch engine over certain tracks and switches from one part of the railroad yard to another, that they might be classified, inspected, and assembled, they were not engaged in interstate commerce; U. S. v. R. Co., 205 Fed. 428 (D. C., W. D. N. Y.). A workman, killed while employed by a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce in repairing a bridge on a line over which such commerce was carried on, was held to be employed in interstate commerce; Thomson v. R. Co., 205 Fed. 203.

A locomotive fireman in the employment of an interstate railroad, who was ordered to report at a station to be transported with others to another station to relieve the crew of an interstate train, and who, when approaching the station over a crossing, was struck and killed through the negligence of other servants of the company also operating an interstate train, was within the act; Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 196 Fed. 336, 116 C. C. A. 156 (9th Cir.). So of one injured when employed in repair shops connected with an interstate track, in repairing a car used indiscriminately in both interstate and intrastate commerce, but which was at the time engaged in interstate commerce; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Maerkl, 198 Fed. 1, 117 C. C. A. 237 (9th Cir.). The judgment in the Pedersen Case, supra, will doubtless affect some of these decisions in lower courts.

The following cases were held not within act: Bennett v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 578 (D. C., E. D. Pa.), where an employee was killed while riding to his home by permission on one of the company's trains, but who was not at the time, and, so far as appeared, had not just previously been, employed in interstate commerce, was not within the act; Heimbach v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 579 (D. C., E. D. Pa.); where an employee, who was injured while repairing a car of another company which had reached the end of its run, been unloaded, and was lying at a station awaiting orders, was not within the act; Feaster v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 580 (D. C., E. D. Pa.); and where an extra conductor, directed, on reporting for work, to ride to another point within the same state for service on a work train, and who was injured while proceeding to his train, was not at the time employed in interstate commerce; Taylor v. So. R. Co., 178 Fed. 380 (C. C., N. D. Ga.), where a member of a bridge gang who was injured while repairing a bridge forming a most necessary part of the track of a railroad used for both interstate and intrastate commerce, was not within the act.

A fireman on a switch engine which was ordinarily employed in interstate commerce, though mingled with intrastate commerce, was held engaged in interstate commerce; Behrens v. R. Co., 192 Fed. 581 (D. C., E. D. La.). Where a railroad brakeman was injured while engaged in making a flying switch to set out a car transported wholly in intrastate traffic, though it was part of a train carrying both interstate and intrastate freight, his injury did not occur while engaged in interstate commerce; Van Brimmer v. Ry. Co., 190 Fed. 394 (C. C., E. D. Tex.). The causal negligence of a co-employee may be that of one not engaged in interstate commerce: In re Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44.

A Workman's Compensation Act was passed in England in 1897. It provides that in certain trades and works the employer shall be liable to compensate any workman injured by an accident in the course of his employment, whether the employer or any of his subordinates had been guilty of negligence or had committed any breach of duty or not. This act was repealed in 1906, by an act which provides for compensation for injury from any accident in the course of employment unless attributable to the serious or willful misconduct of the workman, but this exception does not extend to injury resulting in death or serious and permanent disablement. Compensation can also be claimed by one who has suffered from certain specified "industrial diseases"; on the event of his death, his dependants may claim. The utmost amount recoverable is one pound a week during total incapacity to work or three hundred pounds in case of death. Contributory negligence is no defence, nor the voluntary assumption of a known risk, nor the negligence of a fellow servant. Where a principal has engaged a contractor for the work, the act makes the principal liable for compensation although there is no direct relation between him and the injured workman.

A workman injured in the course of his employment has three different modes of procedure open to him: He may sue for damages at common law; he may sue for damages under the Employers' Liability Act of 1880; or he may claim compensation under the Workman's Compensation Act of 1906. Under the Act of 1906, disputed questions are settled by arbitration in the County Courts. See Odgers C. L. 554.

Workmen's Compensation Acts were passed in 1911 in New Jersey, California, Wisconsin, Kansas and Nevada, and in 1912 in Illinois, Michigan, Arizona, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. Under such acts the employer is liable for the compensations to injured workmen. The only negligence recognized on the part of either the employer or the employee, speaking generally, is that of willful negligence. If the employer is guilty of such he is penalized; if the employee is, then his compensation is denied or reduced. The amount of the compensation is determined with a maximum and minimum limit by specified schedules of compensation and graded on a basis of a certain percentage of the loss or impairment of the injured worker's average weekly wage. Jury trials are largely eliminated and the compensation to which the injured worker is entitled under the act is determined by a board of arbitration, a judge of some court or a board of awards created as specified by the act.

Workmen's Industrial Insurance Acts were passed in 1911 in Washington, in 1912 in Massachusetts, Maryland and Ohio, and in 1913 in West Virginia.

The injured workman's claim under a state insurance act is against a fund created by contributions paid by employers, employees and the state or by any of them, in the form of an insurance premium which is collected by the taxing power of the state through the exercise of its police power. The employer's liability to his employees for personal injuries occurring in the course of their employment is discharged when he has paid the premium as provided by the act. The right of trial by jury is entirely eliminated in such cases, excepting the case where the employee is denied compensation of any kind, and in that case he may sue the board of administration created by the act and have his case tried before a jury as heretofore, but cannot sue his employer. No negligence is recognized excepting willful negligence on the part of either. The compensation is paid in installments based upon a certain percentage—usually 50 to 60 per cent—of the impairment of wages caused by the injury. The act usually fixes the length of time that such compensation may run, and also a maximum and minimum total compensation. In the enactment of these statutes the state exercises its police power for the protection of the peace, safety and general welfare of the public.

The following states have by statute abrogated the fellow servant rule either generally or in particular industries: Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Wisconsin.

In the following states the rule is modified: California, Mississippi, Maryland, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Utah, Virginia.

See MASTER AND SERVANT; NEGLIGENCE; DEATH; WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS.

Compensation Acts were passed by congress May 30, 1908, March 4, 1911, and March 11, 1912, providing that artisans or laborers engaged in any of the government manufacturing establishments, arsenals or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor or fortification work, or in hazardous employment or construction work in the reclamation of arid lands or the management or control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission, or in any hazardous work under the Bureau of Mines or Forestry Service shall receive compensation from the government for injuries sustained in the course of their employment, and if the employee should die by reason of such injury then his widow or children under sixteen, or a dependent parent shall be entitled to receive as compensation the same pay for one year as if he continued to be employed, unless if only injured he sooner be able to resume work.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCY. A municipal ordinance licensing and regulating employment agencies is a valid exercise of the police power; People v. Warden of City Prison of City, 183 N. Y. 223, 76 N. E. 11, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 859, 5 Ann. Cas. 325; Price v. People, 193 Ill. 114, 61 N. E. 844, 55 L. R. A. 588, 86 Am. St. Rep. 306. The Illinois act was held void because forbidding a free employment agency to furnish help to persons whose employees were on a strike or locked out, or to refuse them access to the names of applicants for service, whilst allowing this privilege to other employers; Mathews v. People, 202 Ill. 389, 67 N. E. 28, 63 L. R. A. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241.

EMPRÉSTITO. In Spanish Law. A loan. Something lent to the borrower at his request. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 18, l. 70.

EMPTIO, EMPTOR (Lat. emere, to buy). Emptio, a buying. Emptor, a buyer. Emptio et venditio, buying and selling.

In Roman Law. The name of a contract of sale. Du Cange; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

EN AUTRE DROIT (Fr.). In the right of another.

EN DECLARATION DE SIMULATION.

A form of action used in Louisiana. It is one of revendication (q. v.), and has for its object to have the contract declared judicially a simulation and a nullity; Erwin v. Bank, 5 La. Ann. 1; Edwards v. Ballard, 20 La. Ann. 169.

EN DEMEURE (Fr.). In default. Used in Louisiana. Bryan v. Cox, 3 Mart. La. (N. S.) 574.

EN OWEL MAIN (L. Fr.). In equal hand. The word owel occurs also in the phrase owelty of partition. See 1 Washb. R. P. 427.
